"SEE IT NOW"

AFRICA - PART I

April 23, 1956

AFRICA - PART II

May 17, 1956

"SEE IT NOW"

AFRICA - PART I

April 23, 1956

AFRICA - PART II

May 17, 1956

5b—See It Now—"Report From Africa"

As part of its effort to acquaint Americans with the peoples and problems of seemingly remote parts of the world, See It Now this year offered a two part program entitled, "Report From Africa."

Part I, presented on April 23, covered six countries which are barely known here: Gold Coast, Liberia, Kenya, Belgian Congo, Union of South Africa and Rhodesia.

The emerging theme of the first installment was the rise of native populations to challenge the historic rule of the white man in each of the countries surveyed.

The New York Times said, "...what Mr. Murrow achieved was to make the countries of Africa come alive in human terms, to instill in his audience a realization that man has innate dignity no matter what his geographical location. It would be hard to conceive of a more constructive use of the home screen."

For its second broadcast on Africa, presented on May 17, See It Now concentrated on the people and problems of the northern part of the continent, encompassing Algeria, Libya, the Belgian Congo, Egypt, the Sudan, Ethiopia and Uganda.

Here the complex and fiery issues of colonialism, emerging nationalism and oil diplomacy in the Middle East provided the dominant themes. Included in the show were interviews with some of the leading political figures of each of the countries; dramatic scenes of popular movements as reflected in street rallies and mob violence, and surveys of the economic development of the area. This aspect of See It Now's Africa coverage gave valuable insight into the background of the deep Middle East controversies which have exploded with such tragic force in recent months.

The Billboard described "Report From Africa," Part II as "a Report from Africa

4/23/56
5/17/56

vivid, illuminating survey. Cities and countries on the Dark Continent suddenly snapped into place, and their leaders and political struggles took on flesh and blood meaning."

For its remarkable effort to throw light on the countries and problems of the Dark Continent for the American people, CBS Television submits See It Now's—"Report From Africa" for consideration by the George Foster Peabody Board of Judges.

Promotion of International Understanding

TELEVISION CATEGORY 5

5a—See It Now

The Secret Life of Danny Kaye: December 2, 1956, 5:00-6:30 pm EST

5b—See It Now

Coverage of the Middle East Crisis:

Egypt-Israel: March 13, 1956, 8:30-10:00 pm EST

Report From Africa: Part I April 23, 1956, 10:00-11:00 pm EST

Part II May 17, 1956, 10:00-11:00 pm EDT

Suez: October 7, 1956, 5:00-6:00 pm EDT

Edward R. Murrow Reports From Israel:

November 13-14, 1956, 11:15- 11:30 pm EST

SIN

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow and Mr. Friendly

from: Mr. L. Grossman

January 10, 1957

This booklet accompanied the TVRs of your programs which were submitted for George Foster Peabody Awards.

Larry Grossman

SIN
Cioffi, Lou

MAY 18, 1956

LOU CIOFFI
COLBROSYS
PARIS

MURROW SAYS AIRMAILING FRANCE SCRIPT AFRICA SHOW STOP GENERAL REACTION APPEARS FAVORABLE ALTHOUGH NO REPEAT NO CONSIDERABLE PUBLIC RESPONSE.

REGARDS

BURKE

202-550-43

Church, Ronald J.
SIN

May 18, 1956

Dear Professor Church:

Thank you very much indeed for your gracious letter of May 3rd. You are, of course, entirely correct in what you write. I should have said, "...imports and exports arrive and leave at Accra by surf boats..." The manganese mistake was sheer stupidity. I knew of the error about the planting of rubber trees, and in fact had changed the line which was lost and was not in the final film.

However, all of these mistakes were mere negligence, and I write many thanks for chastising us so gently. We shall try to exercise more care in the future.

Sincerely yours,

Professor Ronald J. Harrison Church
Department of Geography
University of Wisconsin
Madison 6, Wisconsin

rh

UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN
MADISON 6

DEPARTMENT OF GEOGRAPHY

May 3, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o "See It Now"
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

As a visiting English professor, currently lecturing here on Africa South of the Sahara, I was naturally interested to see your program "See It Now" on Channel 27 here on Monday the 23rd of April.

It has been suggested to me by colleagues here that I ought to write to you, because I noticed three rather considerable mistakes. In speaking of the Gold Coast you suggested that overseas trade had to be handled mainly by the surf boats at Accra. But the deep water harbor at Takoradi has carried most of the overseas trade ever since 1928. It currently handles well over 90% of the overseas trade. Secondly, you mentioned that manganese mining was a recent development in the Gold Coast. In fact, it has been mined on a large scale ever since 1916. Again, in speaking of the Firestone Rubber Plantations in Liberia you suggested that rubber planting was first done in Liberia in 1926. Firestone started that year, but rubber was planted as early as 1907 by the Liberian Rubber Company.

May I say how much I enjoyed the program and the shots you had, and how much I look forward to the next viewing.

Very sincerely yours,

R. J. Harrison Church

Ronald J. Harrison Church

RHC:clo

ed---

Sorry...this was home in another jacket...

[redacted]

We'rs guilty as charged on all counts...here are the quibbling explanations...

Item---We say "...Whether it be Cocos or Manganese, all of the Gold Coast exports and imports leave by way of its fleet of surf boats..." We should have said Accra instead of Gold Coast, and would have been right.

Item---Managnese has been mined on a large scale since 1916. We say..."Recently, the Gold Coast has been mining another new item for export---manganese." That is stretching it a bit.

Item---Rubber trees were planted as early as 1907 by the Liberian Rubber Company. This one we caught ourselves and recorded a new line for that got lost in the shuffle and was [redacted] not cut in. We handled it by saying that "rubber trees in quantity" and so on, which was correct. What we said on the air was ..."Rubber trees were first brought to Liberia in 1926 by the Firestone Rubber Company."

Hatch, Robert
SIN

May 18, 1956

Dear Mr. Hatch:

I don't think I have anything to say about Miss Langman's well written review of SEE IT NOW that would be of particular interest to your readers. I liked it.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Robert Hatch
Literary Editor
The Nation
333 Sixth Avenue
New York 14, New York

rh

THE Nation

May 15, 1956

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I think you will want to read Anne Langman's discussion of your first Africa program, in the enclosed issue. If you care to comment on it, our readers would be most interested.

Sincerely yours,

Robert Hatch

Literary Editor

Mr. Edward Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Mr. Murrow: Anne Langman is a friend of Mr. Friendly and asks if you would answer this personally.

RH

Mansfield, Sen Mike
SIN

May 8, 1956

Dear Senator Mike:

With the greatest of pleasure will I send you the second report on Africa just as soon as it is ready.

I send you my best salute, and apply to you my favorite quotation from Carl Sandburg, "What is wrong with the country ain't you."

As ever yours,

Senator Mike Mansfield
Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C.

rh

Fold SIN

WALTER F. GEORGE, GA., CHAIRMAN
THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, R. I.
J. W. FULBRIGHT, ARK.
JOHN SPARKMAN, ALA.
HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, MINN.
MIKE MANSFIELD, MONT.
ALBEN W. BARKLEY, KY.
WAYNE MORSE, OREG.
ALEXANDER WILEY, WIS.
H. ALEXANDER SMITH, N. J.
BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER, IOWA
WILLIAM LANGER, N. DAK.
WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND, CALIF.
GEORGE D. AIKEN, VT.
HOMER E. CAPEHART, IND.

CARL MARCY, CHIEF OF STAFF
C. C. O'DAY, CLERK

United States Senate

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

May 4, 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
"See It Now"
CBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear ~~Mr. Murrow~~ Ed:

The CBS office here in Washington is going to send me the first part of your "Report from Africa" which was on TV recently, and I would like to request at this time that you send me a copy of the second part of this report which is scheduled to be broadcast on May 17.

I am very interested in securing a copy of this report and will appreciate your courtesy in sending the same to me when it becomes available.

With best personal wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

Mike Mansfield

Moxon, R. J.
S I N

May 17, 1956

Dear Mr. Moxon:

I am begging you to forgive my delay in answering your letter of March 22nd. The pressure of work in connection with editing such a mass of film was considerable. The picture sequence to which you referred was, of course, eliminated from the film.

The reaction to our report, and specifically the material dealing with the Gold Coast, was most enthusiastic.

Permit me to thank you again for your help in connection with Louis Armstrong's coming to the Gold Coast. I hope for great things from his visit.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. R. J. Moxon
P. O. Box 745
Accra

rh

In case of reply the number and date of this letter should be quoted.

My Ref. No. OF.75/5.

Your Ref. No.

Department of Information Services
P.O. Box 745, Accra.

22nd March, 1956.

PERSONAL.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

First of all, I would like to say how much we enjoyed having your delightful team of people here during January. They were most pleasant guests to have and extremely easy to work with. I do hope from your point of view that the visit was a success as I am sure it must have been. Secondly, I want to thank you very much indeed for the fascinating book which I received the other day. It is a most interesting technique and very pleasant to read.

The final sequence of material from the Gold Coast was despatched yesterday by Pan American Airways and should be with you tomorrow. Unfortunately, it was not possible for us at the last minute to obtain permission to film inside the Assembly Chamber but I hope that the exteriors will be of some limited use to you. It is concerning one of these shots that I am writing now, and this can easily be identified from the enclosed newspaper clipping. This shows Mr. Kojo Botsio (left) and Mr. A. Inkumsah (right) approaching the Assembly Chamber. According to the Continuity Sheet I have seen, the same sort of shot must be included in the material which by now you will have received. As it happens, Mr. Botsio, who is the Minister of State here is upset that this particular picture should have been published at all. The practice of holding hands is a very common one in the Gold Coast much in the same way as in other countries people link arms, but Mr. Botsio is aware of the sort of misinterpretation which could be put on this gesture in countries which are not familiar with West African customs. Indeed, if you have read Richard Wright's book "Black Power" you may recall that he himself was thoroughly misguided in this respect. It would therefore be much appreciated if you would avoid using this particular shot in the programme you are preparing. At least it would avoid considerable embarrassment between this Department and the Minister. I think you will understand that just at the present time people in the Gold Coast are a little sensitive concerning customs which could be misunderstood overseas.

We here very much hope that it may be possible one day for us to see the film your team have made during the past months in Africa. Covering the very wide field that it does, it is bound to tell a fascinating story and one which will certainly achieve an extremely wide showing.

With all good wishes and kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

(R. J. MOXON)

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, 22,
NEW YORK.

THE new Minister of Housing, Mr. A. E. Inkumsah (right) arriving at the Assembly yesterday with the Minister of State, Mr. Kojo Botsio.

Walker, W. A. R.
SIN

EDWARD R. MURROW

May 11, 1956

Dear Mr. Walker:

Thank you for your letter of May 1st. We have now heard from Accra that all arrangements are in hand for Louis Armstrong's visit.

We are grateful for your cooperation.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. W. A. R. Walker
Gold Coast Liaison Officer
The Gold Coast Liaison Office
506 Dupont Circle Building
Washington 6, D.C.

rh
cc: Mr. Friendly plus correspondence

"SEE ON NOW"

REPORT ON SUEZ

October 7, 1956

Suez
October 7, 1956

5b—See It Now—"Suez"

Soon after Egypt's General Abdul Gamal Nasser seized control of the Suez Canal in a move which threatened to engulf the entire world in war, See It Now's cameras, under the supervision of Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly, returned to the Middle East to give the American people an up-to-date report on the latest developments in that area.

In "Suez," broadcast on the CBS Television Network on Sunday, October 7 from 5-6 pm, Mr. Murrow and his camera crew took their American viewers on a tour of the vital canal, pointing out first-hand its importance to the rest of the world and the difficulty of keeping traffic running smoothly through this lifeline to Europe.

The program focused on the controversy then raging over control of the Canal through special interviews with General Nasser and British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd.

It gave a clear, timely picture not only of the issues dividing the nations of the world on the Middle East but also of the future significance of the Canal crisis to the peace and prosperity of people everywhere.

The New York Times called See It Now's "Suez" "an illuminating and revealing documentary report."

As such CBS Television nominates it for the consideration of the Board of Judges of the George Foster Peabody Awards.

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

SEE Friendly

F. 511

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Merle Jones

cc: Messrs. Murrow
Mickleson

From Fred Friendly

Station

October 4, 1956

Dear Merle:

I called Charles Oppenheimer this morning and congratulated him on his department's "security" in being able to keep See It Now's forthcoming "Report on Suez" such a well-kept secret. I told him that if Ed and I were ever going to mount an invasion of an enemy country, we would hire his department to keep it out of the press. Charlie said he wouldn't take any of the credit for this and it was his superiors who prevented him from having the necessary manpower to do the job right.

This note or desire is not being written because Murrow and/or Friendly require the personal notoriety of publicity. It is just that See It Now's chief function these days is to serve the company's public service obligations and we ought to be telling people that, at great expense to the company, Murrow and a couple of dozen colleagues have put together a comprehensive study on one of the most vital problems facing the world today. It just doesn't make any sense to do a show like this unless CBS toots its own horn and gathers the proper audience for it.

I feel that I would be remiss in my duties as a subordinate of yours if I did not call this matter to your attention.

Kendrick SIX

Le 5 1550

CBS RADIO NEWS GA PLS

TWX ACRD-25/NM1528/TD93

LONDON 19 19 1251P

PS CBSINC

NEWYORK

BURKE FOR FRIENDLY EDEN TODAY X UNEQUIVOCALLY REFUSES SIN SUEZ INTERVIEW STOP WHAT NEXT QUERY REGARDS

KENDRICK

QD 747A EST SEPT 19TH 1956

S L N
McCardle, Carl

URGENT

OCTOBER 5, 1956

MR. CARL McCARDLE
ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR PUBLIC AFFAIRS
UNITED STATE DELEGATION
UNITED NATIONS
NEW YORK

PLEASE THANK THE SECRETARY FOR CONSIDERING OUR INVITATION TO APPEAR ON SUEZ SHOW STOP SINCE ENTIRE PROGRAM IS ON FILM WE ARE FORCED TO LOCK IT UP TODAY STOP SORRY HIS COMMITMENTS PREVENTED HIS APPEARANCE STOP HOPE YOU AND HE WILL HAVE OPPORTUNITY VIEW PROGRAM WHICH GOES FIVE TO SIX PM SUNDAY OCTOBER SEVEN. REGARDS AND THANKS.

ED MURROW

52-043

McCardle, Carl
SIN

RECEIVED
1956 OCT -4 PM 3:10
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU023 GOVT PD

WUX WASHINGTON DC OCT 4 1154AME

EDWARD R MURROW

THANK YOU VERY MUCH FOR LETTING US HAVE A COPY OF YOUR SCRIPT. IT WAS CHARACTERISTICALLY GENEROUS ON YOUR PART. FOR VARIOUS REASONS, NOTABLY THE FACT THAT HE HAS TO GO OT THE UNITED NATIONS FOR THE OPENING OF THE SUEZ DISCUSSION, THE SECRETARY WILL NOT BE ABLE TO APPEAR ON THIS PROGRAM. HE APPRECIATES YOUR INVITATION. AS EVER

CARL W MCCARDLE ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE FOR PUBLIC AFFAIRS

1225P..

"SEE IT NOW"

REPORT FROM ISRAEL

PART I

Interview with Ben-Gurion

November 13, 1956

Israel – 11/13-14/56

5b—See It Now—"Special Reports from Israel"

At the outbreak of war between Israel and Egypt in November, Edward R. Murrow flew to Israel with a See It Now camera crew to film and record on-the-spot reports of the happenings in that crucial area.

In two special broadcasts carried on CBS Television November 13 and 14 Mr. Murrow interviewed Premier David Ben-Gurion for the Israeli leader's first hand explanation of the reasons for his nation's sudden invasion of Egypt. In the second report Maj. Gen. Moshe Dayan, Chief-of-Staff of the Israeli Army, gave an informative summary of the Sinai campaign and of Israel's present military condition.

The New York Times said of these reports, "...they are giving viewers a feeling for the situation as it affects those on the scene."

For its timely efforts to give the American people a broad understanding of the latest developments in one of the most vital areas of the world, CBS Television submits See It Now as a candidate for a George Foster Peabody Award in International Understanding.

Promotion of International Understanding

TELEVISION CATEGORY 5

5a—See It Now

The Secret Life of Danny Kaye: December 2, 1956, 5:00-6:30 pm EST

5b—See It Now

Coverage of the Middle East Crisis:

Egypt-Israel: March 13, 1956, 8:30-10:00 pm EST

Report From Africa: Part I April 23, 1956, 10:00-11:00 pm EST

Part II May 17, 1956, 10:00-11:00 pm EDT

Suez: October 7, 1956, 5:00-6:00 pm EDT

Edward R. Murrow Reports From Israel:

November 13-14, 1956, 11:15- 11:30 pm EST

SIM

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow and Mr. Friendly

from: Mr. L. Grossman

January 10, 1957

This booklet accompanied the TVRs of your programs which were submitted for George Foster Peabody Awards.

Larry Grossman

Edell, Ethel
5 I

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION
711 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

November 14, 1956

Mr. Ed Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Last night's interview with Ben Gurion of Israel has endeared you further in the hearts of many listeners. Not only did my guests sit in complete silence listening to this magnificent talk between you and Ben Gurion, but when I arrived at the office this morning, we had continued the discussion with my associates here at Columbia, who unanimously agreed that it was most enlightening.

Let's hope for peace and your continued appearance on the networks.

Your ardent fan,

Ethel Edell

Ethel Edell

EE:evm

Sir

11/13/52

Mr. Murrow
FYI

ATT:

ATT: NATL, CITY AND TV EDS.

CBS TELEVISION BROADCAST AN EXCLUSIVE FILMED INTERVIEW WITH ISRAELI PRIME MINISTER DAVID BEN-GURION BY CBS NEWSMAN EDWARD R. MURROW TONITE (TUESDAY, NOV. 13) FROM 11:15 TO 11:30 PM, EST. AN EDITED VERSION WAS HEARD ON CBS RADIO TONITE FROM 10:05 TO 10:15 PM, EST.

A FULL TRANSCRIPT OF THE FILMED INTERVIEW, GRANTED TO MURROW IN ISRAEL YESTERDAY AND FLOWN OVERNITE TO NEW YORK, FOLLOWS;

MURROW: GOOD EVENING, MR. PRIME MINISTER.

BEN-GURION: GOOD EVENING, MR. MURROW.

MURROW: WE ARE A LITTLE LATE IN ARRIVING BECAUSE WE WERE SHOOTING FILM OF SOME OF YOUR TROOPS OVER ON THE SYRIAN FRONTIER WHEN WE HEARD YOU WOULD RECEIVE US TONIGHT. IT'S VERY NICE TO SEE YOU AGAIN, SIR.

BEN-GURION: I AM PLEASED TO SEE YOU.

MURROW: I REALIZE THAT YOUR TIME IS LIMITED SO IF YOU WILL AGREE, I WOULD LIKE TO ASK YOU THE FIRST QUESTION FIRST.

BEN-GURION: YES.

MURROW: WHY DID ISRAEL ATTACK EGYPT AT THIS TIME?

BEN-GURION: WELL, I GIVE YOU BRIEFLY THE SEQUENCE OF EVENTS. IT WILL BE EASILY UNDERSTOOD. WHEN OUR STATE WAS PROCLAIMED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE DECISION OF UNITED NATIONS, THE SAME DAY WE WERE INVADED BY SIX ARAB ARMIES. THOUGH AT THAT TIME IT LOOKED INCREDIBLE, THEY WERE DEFEATED BY OUR YOUNG ARMY ALTHOUGH WE WERE ONLY ONE AGAINST FORTY. SINCE THEN, THE ARAB RULERS CONSTANTLY THREATENED US WITH A SECOND WAR EXTERMINATION. THE TENSION BECAME ALMOST UNBEARABLE IN THE LAST TWO YEARS. WHEN THE EGYPTIAN DICTATOR, GAMAL ABDEL NASSER, ORGANIZED GANGS OF ASSASINS WHICH HE CALLED FEDAYEEN AND SENT THEM INTO OUR COUNTRY TO KILL PEOPLE IN THE FIELDS, IN THEIR HOMES, ON THE ROADS, HE WAS ENCOURAGED TO DO THAT WHEN HE SAW THAT HE COULD DEFY THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE SECURITY COUNCIL WHICH DECIDED FIVE YEARS AGO THAT THEY CANNOT PROHIBIT JEWISH SHIPPING IN THE SUEZ.

THE EGYPTIAN DICTATOR, GAMAL ABDEL NASSER, ORGANIZED GANGS OF ASSASINS WHICH HE CALLED FEDAYEEN AND SENT THEM INTO OUR COUNTRY TO KILL PEOPLE IN THE FIELDS, IN THEIR HOMES, ON THE ROADS, HE WAS ENCOURAGED TO DO THAT WHEN HE SAW THAT HE COULD DEFY THE UNITED NATIONS AND THE SECURITY COUNCIL WHICH DECIDED FIVE YEARS AGO THAT THEY CANNOT PROHIBIT JEWISH SHIPPING IN THE SUEZ. AND HE DID PROHIBIT AND NOBODY SAID A WORD AGAINST HIM, AND HE WAS NEVER BLAMED, NEITHER IN THE ASSEMBLY NOR BY SUCH PEACE-LOVING PEOPLE AS MR. NEHRU. DURING THE SUEZ CANAL CRISIS WHEN THE PROBLEM OF SUEZ WAS TAKEN AGAIN TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL, THE GANGSTERS WERE STOPPED FOR A TIME BUT AS SOON AS THE SECURITY COUNCIL WAS OVER, HE RENEWED THESE ATTACKS BY THESE ASSASSINS AND THEN THE ELECTIONS IN JORDAN WHICH EGYPTIAN MONEY PLAYED A BIG ROLE BROUGHT A PRO-EGYPTIAN MAJORITY. AND HE CONCLUDED A TREATY BETWEEN EGYPT, JORDAN AND SYRIA TO FIGHT AGAINST ISRAEL. AND WE HAD, IN ORDER TO SURVIVE, TO TAKE ACTION TO DESTROY THE NESTS OF THESE ASSASSINS IN THEIR BASES IN SINAI, AND WE SUCCEEDED IN DOING IT WITHIN FOUR DAYS.

MURROW: WELL SIR, DO YOU FEEL THAT, AS A RESULT OF THE ACTIVITIES OF THE LAST TWO WEEKS, THE PROSPECTS OF PEACE BETWEEN EGYPT AND ISRAEL HAVE INCREASED?

BEN-GURION: I WILL TELL YOU IF THE INTERNATIONAL FORCE AS IT WAS DECIDED BY THE ASSEMBLY WOULD RREALLY BE SENT TO THE AREA OF THE CANAL TO GUARANTEE THEM FREEDO OF NAVIGATION FOR ALL NATIONS, INCLUDING ISRAEL, AND IF THE ASSEMBLY WOULD TAKE SERIOUSLY THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS AND SEE TO IT THAT ALL MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS MUST LIVE IN PEACE AND ESPECIALLY IF UNITY WILL BE RESTORED BETWEEN FREE WORLD AND AMERICA, EUROPEAN FREE COUNTRIES AND OTHERS WILL WORK TOGETHER IN CONFORMITY WITH THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS, I SEE PROSPECTS OF PEACE IN THIS AREA.

MURROW: THE UNITED NATIONS HAS DETERMINED THAT, IN THIS INSTANCE, ISRAEL WAS THE AGGRESSOR. WOULD YOU LIKE TO TALK ABOUT THAT A LITTLE MORE, SIR?

BEN-GURION: WELL, AGGRESSION CAN BE A PROCESS OF DAILY OCCURRENCES WHICH DON'T MAKE A BIG IMPRESSION WHICH THEY DON'T MAKE NEWS. IT IS VIOLATION OF ARMISTICE AGREEMENT. IT IS DEFIANCE OF THE CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS. IT IS SENDING ASSASSINS TO KILL ONLY A FEW PEOPLE AT A TIME BUT DOING IT ALMOST EVERY DAY. IT IS THREATENING YOUR NEIGHBOR. IT IS CONCLUDING MILITARY ALLIANCES WITH THE PURPOSE OF MAKING WAR. IT IS SENDING ARMIES NEAR YOUR BORDER. IT IS ACCUMMULATING ARMS. WELL, I AM --- I THINK THIS IS THE WORST AGGRESSION BECAUSE IT IS NOT IMMEDIATELY PERCEIVED BUT IT WORKS SLOWLY BUT SURELY. IT ENDANGERS THE EXISTENCE OF YOUR NEIGHBOR AND IF YOUR NEIGHBOR DOESN'T TAKE CARE AND CANNOT HIT BACK, THEN HE IS LOST AND HE IS FINISHED.

MURROW: WELL SIR, WHAT ABOUT YOUR OTHER NEIGHBORS? YOU HAVE, FOR THE TIME BEING, TAKEN CARE OF THE EGYPTIAN THREAT. ON THIS ARMISTIC DAY, NOVEMBER ELEVENTH, DO YOU FEEL THERE IS A REAL POSSIBILITY OF ACHIEVING PEACE IN THIS AREA?

BEN-GURION: WELL, I AM SURE THAT THE TIME WILL COME WHEN WE WILL COOPERATE WITH THEM FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE ENTIRE AREA BECAUSE WE HAVE SOMETHING WHICH WE CAN OFFER THEM. THEY HAVE SOMETHING WHICH THEY CAN OFFER US. BUT THE FIRST BEGINNING IN MY VIEW MUST BE PEACE WITH THE EGYPTIANS, AND PEACE WITH EGYPT CAN BE

BEN-GURION: WELL, I AM SURE THAT THE TIME WILL COME WHEN WE WILL COOPERATE WITH THEM FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE ENTIRE AREA BECAUSE WE HAVE SOMETHING WHICH WE CAN OFFER THEM. THEY HAVE SOMETHING WHICH THEY CAN OFFER US. BUT THE FIRST BEGINNING IN MY VIEW MUST BE PEACE WITH THE EGYPTIANS, AND PEACE WITH EGYPT CAN BE OBTAINED WHEN THERE WILL BE A LIBERAL, DEMOCRATIC, RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT WHO WILL CARE FOR EGYPTIAN PEOPLE AND WILL NOT BE THE SLAVE OF A FOREIGN POWER.

MURROW: YOU TOLD ME THE LAST TIME I WAS HERE THAT THE MOST DIFFICULT DECISION YOU HAVE EVER HAD TO MAKE WAS TO DECLARE THE STATE OF ISRAEL. IS THAT STILL TRUE?

BEN-GURION: CERTAINLY IT IS TRUE. BUT I THINK ALSO IT WAS NOT ONLY THE MOST DIFFICULT DECISION. IT WAS ALSO THE MOST IMPORTANT DECISION IN OUR HISTORY FOR THE LAST 1800 YEARS.

MURROW: IT MUST HAVE BEEN DIFFICUT FOR YOU TO DECIDE TO ANNOUNCE THAT YOU WOULD WITHDRAW YOUR FORCES FROM SINAI IN THE EVENT A UNITED NATIONS FORCE IS, IN FACT, CREATED?

BEN-GURION: IT IS NOT ---IT WAS NOT SO DIFFICULT WHEN I HAD THE ASSURANCES, AS I UNDERSTOOD IT, BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES THAT INTERNATIONAL FORCE WILL BE PLACED IN THE ZONE OF THE CANAL AND WILL NOT ALLOW THE RETURN OF THE ASSASSINS INTO THE DESERT OF SINAI TO CONTINUE THEIR MURDEROUS ATTACK.

MURROW: YOU SPOKE A MOMENT AGO ABOUT EGYPT BEING TURNED OVER TO THE CONTROL OF A FOREIGN POWER. YOU MEANT RUSSIA, OF COURSE?

BEN-GURION: WELL, I PREFER NOT TO MENTION THE COUNTRY.

MURROW: WELL, LET US PUT IT ANOTHER WAY. IS IT NOT POSSIBLE THAT YOUR OTHER NEIGHBORING ARAB STATES MAY COME MORE AND MORE UNDER THE CONTROL OF A SIMILAR POWER?

BEN-GURION: IF EGYPT WILL BE ABANDONED AND WILL NOT BE FREED FROM ITS PRESENT DICTATORSHIP, THERE IS A DANGER THAT OTHER COUNTRIES WILL HAVE TO FOLLOW SUIT AND WILL ALSO BECOME VICTIMS OF THE SAME KIND OF FOREIGN RULE.

MURROW: TO WHAT EXTENT HAS THE REMOVAL OF THE IMMEDIATE THREAT OF EGYPT EASED YOUR MILITARY PROBLEM HERE IN ISRAEL?

BEN-GURION: WELL, THE DESTRUCTION OF THE BASES OF THE ASSASSIN GANGS MADE MUCH EASIER OUR LIVES -- AT LEAST ON ONE PART OF THE COUNTRY -- IN THE SOUTH -- OUR SETTLEMENTS IN THE SOUTH NOW CAN WORK FREELY, CAN MOVE FREELY, AND ARE NOT AFRAID THEY WILL BE SHOT FROM BEHIND A ROCK.

MURROW: BUT THE THREAT STILL REMAINS ON YOUR OTHER FRONTIERS. DOES IT NOT?

BEN-GURION: OF COURSE IT REMAINS BUT THE ROOT STILL LIES IN EGYPT. IT IS STILL EGYPTIAN DICTATORS WHICH DIRECTS ATTACKS FROM OTHER COUNTRIES.

MURROW: WHAT DO YOU FEEL ABOUT REPORTS OF THE BUILD-UP OF AIR POWER IN NEIGHBORING ARAB STATES, MR. PRIME MNISTER?

BEN-GURION: WELL, I CANNOT GIVE YOU INFORMATION WHICH I CONSIDER VERIFIED. I HEAR ALL THESE RUMORS. THERE MUST BE SOMETHING IN THEM. THERE MAY BE SOME EXAGGERATION, BECAUSE I DON'T BELIEVE THAT THE SYRIANS CAN ABSORB SO MANY ARMAMENTS. EVEN THE EGYPTIANS COULDN'T DO IT, BUT REALLY I CANNOT TELL YOU WHAT IS GOING ON IN

FROM OTHER COUNTRIES.

MURROW: WHAT DO YOU FEEL ABOUT REPORTS OF THE BUILD-UP OF AIR POWER IN NEIGHBORING ARAB STATES, MR. PRIME MNISTER?

BEN-GURION: WELL, I CANNOT GIVE YOU INFORMATION WHICH I CONSIDER VERIFIED. I HEAR ALL THESE RUMORS. THERE MUST BE SOMETHING IN THEM. THERE MAY BE SOME EXAGGERATION, BECAUSE I DON'T BELIEVE THAT THE SYRIANS CAN ABSORB SO MANY ARMAMENTS. EVEN THE EGYPTIANS COULDN'T DO IT, BUT REALLY I CANNOT TELL YOU WHAT IS GOING ON IN THEIR FRONTIERS. I AM NOT IN THEIR CONFIDENCE...I MUST TELL YOU THAT.

MURROW: WELL, MR. PRIME MINISTER, DID YOUR ARMY FUNCTION IN THIS CRISIS AS YOU EXPECTED IT TO?

BEN-GURION: WELL NOT...NOT JUST AS I EXPECTED BUT A LITTLE BETTER.

MURROW: WOULD IT BE TRUE TO GUESS THAT RUSSIAN INFLUENCE, AS A RESULT OF THESE EVENTS, HAS INCREASED IN THE ARAB WORLD?

BEN-GURION: I THINK THAT RUSSIAN INFLUENCE INCREASED AS A RESULT OF WHAT HAPPENED IN HUNGARY --- WHAT THEY DID IN HUNGARY.

MURROW: WHY IS THAT?

BEN-GURION: BECAUSE THE ARABS, THEY HAVE GREAT RESPECT FOR PEOPLE WHO ARE USING FORCE. BUT I PREFER NOT TO DISCUSS RUSSIA.

MURROW: VERY GOOD. AND I TAKE IT THAT IT IS MUCH TOO EARLY FOR YOU TO DISCUSS WHAT WILL BE DONE ABOUT GAZA OR DETAILS OF THAT SORT?

BEN-GURION: NO, I WILL TELL YOU THE...EVERYTHING DEPENDS ON ONE THING...WHETHER THE ASSEMBLY-- AND ESPECIALLY THE LEADING FREE PEOPLES IN THE ASSEMBLY -- PREFER TO SAVE THE REGIME OF THE FASCIST DICTATOR IN EGYPT OR THEY WANT TO SAVE THE PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST. THEY MUST CHOOSE BETWEEN THESE TWO.

MURROW: WELL, MR. PRIME MINISTER, THIS IS THE FIRST TIME SINCE THIS CRISIS THAT YOU HAVE SPOKEN BY WAY OF FILM TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE. WHAT WOULD YOU LIKE TO SAY TO THEM AT THIS POINT?

BEN-GURION: AT THIS POINT I WOULD SAY TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO PRESERVE THE UNITY OF THE FREE WORLD AND TO STRUGGLE FOR TWO THINGS WHICH ARE TIED TOGETHER--JUSTICE AND PEACE, AS YOUR PRESIDENT RIGHTLY SAID I THINK ABOUT TWO WEEKS AGO. BECAUSE YOU CAN HAVE NO PEACE WITHOUT JUSTICE...NOR JUSTICE WITHOUT PEACE. THEY MUST GO TOGETHER AND IF YOU WILL STRIVE FOR THESE THINGS--FOR UNITY OF THE FREE WORLD AND FOR JUSTICE AND PEACE--I HOPE YOU WILL BE ABLE TO ACHIEVE IT.

MURROW: I TAKE IT YOU FEEL THAT THE UNITY OF THE FREE WORLD IS IN SOME DANGER NOW?

BEN-GURION: I'M AFRAID IT IS AND IT DEPENDS NOW ON AMERICA TO RESTORE THAT UNITY.

MURROW: WELL, I KNOW YOU TOO WELL TO ASK YOU TO GIVE AMERICAN ANY COUNSEL OR GUIDANCE AS TO WHAT IT SHOULD DO.

BEN-GURION: NO, I WOULDN'T PRESUME TO DO THAT.

MURROW: DO YOU FEEL THAT THERE DOES IN FACT--IF THE UNITY OF THE FREE WORLD IS RESTORED--THAT THERE IS, IN REAL FACT, A CHANCE FOR PEACE IN THIS AREA?

BEN-GURION: WELL NOT...NOT JUST AS I EXPECTED BUT A LITTLE BETTER.

MURROW: WOULD IT BE TRUE TO GUESS THAT RUSSIAN INFLUENCE, AS A RESULT OF THESE EVENTS, HAS INCREASED IN THE ARAB WORLD?

BEN-GURION: I THINK THAT RUSSIAN INFLUENCE INCREASED AS A RESULT OF WHAT HAPPENED IN HUNGARY --- WHAT THEY DID IN HUNGARY.

MURROW: WHY IS THAT?

BEN-GURION: BECAUSE THE ARABS, THEY HAVE GREAT RESPECT FOR PEOPLE WHO ARE USING FORCE. BUT I PREFER NOT TO DISCUSS RUSSIA.

MURROW: VERY GOOD. AND I TAKE IT THAT IT IS MUCH TOO EARLY FOR YOU TO DISCUSS WHAT WILL BE DONE ABOUT GAZA OR DETAILS OF THAT SORT?

BEN-GURION: NO, I WILL TELL YOU THE...EVERYTHING DEPENDS ON ONE THING...WHETHER THE ASSEMBLY-- AND ESPECIALLY THE LEADING FREE PEOPLES IN THE ASSEMBLY -- PREFER TO SAVE THE REGIME OF THE FASCIST DICTATOR IN EGYPT OR THEY WANT TO SAVE THE PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST. THEY MUST CHOOSE BETWEEN THESE TWO.

MURROW: WELL, MR. PRIME MINISTER, THIS IS THE FIRST TIME SINCE THIS CRISIS THAT YOU HAVE SPOKEN BY WAY OF FILM TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE. WHAT WOULD YOU LIKE TO SAY TO THEM AT THIS POINT?

BEN-GURION: AT THIS POINT I WOULD SAY TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO PRESERVE THE UNITY OF THE FREE WORLD AND TO STRUGGLE FOR TWO THINGS WHICH ARE TIED TOGETHER--JUSTICE AND PEACE, AS YOUR PRESIDENT RIGHTLY SAID I THINK ABOUT TWO WEEKS AGO. BECAUSE YOU CAN HAVE NO PEACE WITHOUT JUSTICE...NOR JUSTICE WITHOUT PEACE. THEY MUST GO TOGETHER AND IF YOU WILL STRIVE FOR THESE THINGS--FOR UNITY OF THE FREE WORLD AND FOR JUSTICE AND PEACE--I HOPE YOU WILL BE ABLE TO ACHIEVE IT.

MURROW: I TAKE IT YOU FEEL THAT THE UNITY OF THE FREE WORLD IS IN SOME DANGER NOW?

BEN-GURION: I'M AFRAID IT IS AND IT DEPENDS NOW ON AMERICA TO RESTORE THAT UNITY.

MURROW: WELL, I KNOW YOU TOO WELL TO ASK YOU TO GIVE AMERICAN ANY COUNSEL OR GUIDANCE AS TO WHAT IT SHOULD DO.

BEN-GURION: NO, I WOULDN'T PRESUME TO DO THAT.

MURROW: DO YOU FEEL THAT THERE DOES IN FACT--IF THE UNITY OF THE FREE WORLD IS RESTORED--THAT THERE IS, IN REAL FACT, A CHANCE FOR PEACE IN THIS AREA?

BEN-GURION: THEN THERE IS CERTAINLY A CHANCE OF PEACE IN THIS AREA BUT NOT ONLY THIS AREA BECAUSE I AM AFRAID THAT IF PEACE WILL NOT BE ESTABLISHED IN THIS AREA, I AM NOT QUITE SURE WHETHER THERE WILL BE PEACE IN THW WORLD.

MURROW: THEN YOU WOULD AGREE WITH SOMETHING JAN MASARYK ONCE SAID, THAT IN A WORLD WHERE THERE IS NO SECURITY FOR LITTLE NATIONS, THERE IS NO SECURITY FOR BIG NATIONS.

BEN-GURION: ABSOLUTELY...AND IT'S QUITE TRUE. THIS I SAID YESTERDAY TO YOUR AMBASSADOR, AND I HOPE HE TRANSMITTED IT TO THE NECESSARY PLACE.

ED. NOTE: PICTURES WERE DELIVERED BY HAND EARLER TODAY.

CBS TELEVISION PRESS INFORMATION, N.Y.

"SEE IT NOW"

REPORT FROM ISRAEL

PART II

Interviews with Ein Gev, Weizman and Dayan

November 14, 1956

E

O

OPR MURROW-DAVAL TALK--

LA 348 OK

LA 348 V OK M

THIS IS LA348 GA

THI THIS CBS IN NY. JIM KANET KANE THERE

THIS IS KANE

THE FOLLOWING WAS PUNCHED OUT ON A NEWSPAPER MACHINE DOWN IN TV PRESS INFO, JIM, SO YOU WILL UNDERSTAND SOME O F THE CRAZY PUNCTUATIONS WHICH WILL APPEAR ON UR MACHINE...

11/14. '56

CBS-TV2...

SDN
11/14/56

ATTENTION: NATIONAL: CITY & TV EDITORS.

THE SECOND PART OF "REPORT FROM ISRAEL:" SPECIAL PROGRAMS FEATURING EXLUSIVE FILMED COMMENTARY AND INTERVIEWS BY CBS NEWS REPORTER EDWARD R. MURROW: WAS BROADCAST TONITE 1:WEDNESDAY NOV. 14: OVER THE CBS TELEVISION NETWORK FROM 11:15 TO 11:30 PM: EST. THE SPECIAL SHOW WAS CONDUCTED BY CBS NEWSMAN DOUGLAS EDWARDS.

MURROW TURNED HIS CAMERAS TONITE TO THE SEA OF GALILEE: ON THE SYRIAN AND JORDANIAN FRONTIERS. ANALYZING ISRAEL,S MILITARY CAMPAIGN STATUS: HE FILMED EXCLUSIVE TALKS WITH ISRAELI CHIEF OF STAFF MOISH DAYAN AND COLONEL OZAR WEIZMAN OF THE ISRAELI AIR FORCE.

THE INTERVIEWS WERE BROADCAST ON CBS RADIO TONITE FROM 10:05 TO 10:15 PM: EST.

A TRANSCRIPT OF THE TWO INTERVIEWS FOLLOWS:

MURROW-DAYAN TALK--

MURROW: WELL: GENERAL DAYAN: THIS CAMPAIGN HAVING BEEN FOUGHT AND WON: TO WHAT EXTENT HAS THIS CONTRIBUTED TO ISRAEL,S MILITARY SECURITY:

DAYAN: I THINK THAT: FOR THE TIME BEING: YOU ARE TALKING ABOUT THE MIDDLE EAST WITHOUT PERTAINING TO RUSSIA OR ANY EXTERNAL PART. FOR THE MIDDLE EAST: FOR THE TIME BEING: I THINK YOU HAVE SECURED THE PEACE ... FOR THE TIME BEING. BECAUSE IF THE EGYPTIAN TROOPS ARE BACK IN EGYPT INSTEAD OF CONCENTRATING HERE: AND IF THEY LOSE DIRECT CONTACT WITH THE OTHER ARAB COUNTRIES WHICH SHOULD BE UNDER THEIR DEMANDS: AND PART OF THEIR MILITARY MACHINE WAS BROKEN: AIR AND ARMOR AND INFANTRY ... I THINK THEY ARE SIMPLY NOT IN A POSITION NOW BEING THERE TO START A WAR. OF COURSE: THE QUESTION IS WHAT THE FUTURE WILL BE. CAN IT REBUILD ITS ARMY AND IF THEY BE GIVEN BACK THE SINAI PENINSULA ... THEY CAN AGAIN ... WE CAN FIND OURSELF AGAIN IN -- LET,S SAY MONTHS OR IN YEARS -- IN THE POSITION THAT WE WERE BEFORE.

... FOR THE TIME BEING. BECAUSE IF THE EGYPTIAN TROOPS ARE BACK IN EGYPT INSTEAD OF CONCENTRATING HERE, AND IF THEY LOSE DIRECT CONTACT WITH THE OTHER ARAB COUNTRIES WHICH SHOULD BE UNDER THEIR DEMANDS, AND PART OF THEIR MILITARY MACHINE WAS BROKEN, AIR AND ARMOR AND INFANTRY ... I THINK THEY ARE SIMPLY NOT IN A POSITION NOW BEING THERE TO START A WAR. OF COURSE, THE QUESTION IS WHAT THE FUTURE WILL BE. CAN IT REBUILD ITS ARMY AND IF THEY BE GIVEN BACK THE SINAI PENINSULA ... THEY CAN AGAIN ... WE CAN FIND OURSELF AGAIN IN -- LET,S SAY MONTHS OR IN YEARS -- IN THE POSITION THAT WE WERE BEFORE.

MURROW: WELL SIR, I HAVE A FEELING FROM THE CAPTURED EGYPTIAN EQUIPMENT THAT I HAVE LOOKED AT, THAT THEY WERE ADEQUATELY EQUIPPED. IS THAT CORRECT?

DAYAN: OF WHAT WE SAW THERE IN SINAI, I THINK THEY WERE QUITE WELL EQUIPPED FOR DESERT WARFARE. THEY DIDN,T HAVE THEIR HEAVY THINGS WHICH I THINK ANYHOW SHOULD NOT BE USED THERE - AND, OF COURSE, AFTER THE FRANCO-BRITISH AIR FORCE CAME IN, THEY DIDN,T HAVE ENOUGH AIR SUPPORT. BUT ON THE GROUND, I THINK THEY HAD QUITE ENOUGH AND GOOD MATERIALS FOR DESERT WARFARE.

MURROW: WHEN WE WERE TALKING LAST FEBRUARY, GENERAL, YOU SAID THAT ISRAEL THEN NEEDED BASICALLY THREE THINGS - ARMOR, GUNS AND AIRCRAFT. DOES THAT STILL REMAIN THE CASE?

DAYAN: I AM AFRAID IT,S STILL THE CASE AND THAT AS LONG AS WE ARE IN A DANGER OF A WAR -- AND YOU PROBABLY SAW THE COMMAND ORDERS THAT THE EGYPTIAN COMMANDER GAVE HIS TROOPS -- THAT THEIR MAIN AIM IS TO LIQUIDATE ISRAEL. AS LONG AS WE ARE IN THIS POSITION, WE HAVE TO TRY TO BE STRONG AND ... IN ORDER TO BE STRONG ... WE SHOULD HAVE MODERN AIRCRAFT AND MODERN TANKS.

MURROW: WELL NOW, SIR, STRICTLY FROM A MILITARY POINT OF VIEW, DOES THIS ACTION THAT YOU HAVE COMPLETED MAKE PEACE MORE POSSIBLE?

DAYAN: I THINK ... THAT THOSE ELEMENTS AMONG THE ARABS ARABS WHO REALIZED BEFORE ... THAT THE RIGHT WAY WITH ISRAEL -- THE SOLUTION IS A PEACEFUL ONE AND NOT BY FIGHTING -- ARE PROBABLY STRONGER NOW WITH THEIR CASE. AND THEY CAN TELL THE OTHERS, NOW, "WHERE HAVE WE GOT TO NOW?" OF COURSE, I KNOW ... AND PROBABLY YOU KNOW TOO ... THAT THE SOLUTION IS NOT WITHIN THE MIDDLE EASTERN COUNTRIES BUT WITH THE MAIN POWERS ...

MURROW: ARE YOU CONCERNED AT ALL ABOUT THE BUILDUP ACROSS THE WAY WITH JORDAN AND SYRIA AND THE POSSIBLE INTERVENTION THERE?

DAYAN: WELL, OF COURSE, THERE IS SUCH A POSSIBILITY, AND I THINK IF THERE WILL BE A RUSSIAN INTERVENTION ... THEN IT IS UP TO THE

MURROW⅛ ARE YOU CONCERNED AT ALL ABOUT THE BUILDUP ACROSS THE WAY WITH JORDAN AND SYRIA AND THE POSSIBLE INTERVENTION THERE⅝

DAYAN⅛ WELL⅞ OF COURSE⅞ THERE IS SUCH A POSSIBILITY⅞ AND I THINK IF THERE WILL BE A RUSSIAN INTERVENTION ... THEN IT IS UP TO THE UNITED STATES. I DON,T THINK THAT ANYONE HERE CAN MEET THAT DANGER. 4

½PORTION OF INTERVIEW IS OMITTED WHERE DAYAN DESCRIBED ISRAELI MILITARY TACTICS IN CUTTING EGYPT,S MAIN LINE OF COMMUNICATION NEAR ELOISH AS THE CAMPAIGN,S DECISIVE OPERATION ON WALL-MAP.¾

MURROW⅛ TELL ME¼ YOU HAVE HAD MANY EXERCISES BEFORE WITH MOBILIZATION AND YOUR MOBILIZATION IS REPUTED TO BE THE BEST IN THE WORLD. DID IT WORK THIS TIME AS YOU EXPECTED IT TO⅝

DAYAN⅛ IT WORKED LIKE WE EXPECTED. IT WORKED IN THE TIME-TABLE LIKE WE EXPECTED⅞ THOUGH OF COURSE THERE WERE FAULTS THAT WE SHOULD TAKE CARE OF IN THE FUTURE.

MURROW⅛ WELL SIR⅞ YOU SPENT MORE TIME IN EDUCATION AND IN DOCTRINATION THAN ANY OTHER ARMY. DO YOU HAVE A FEELING THAT THIS PAID OFF IN THIS BRIEF CAMPAIGN

/JIM - KILL THIS LAST GRAF STARTED "MURROW.. WELL SIR, YOU SPNXXX SPENT MORE TIME" NOT USED TO NES NEWSPAPERS/

MURROW⅛ WELL⅞ SIR⅞ I HAD A FEELING IN TALKING WITH THESE TROOPS OF YOURS -- WHICH I HAD AN OPPORTUNITY TO DO FOR ABOUT A WEEK NOW -- THAT MOST OF THEM ARE NOT IMBUED WITH THE MARTIAL SPIRIT⅞ AND WHAT THEY WOULD LIKE TO DO IS TAKE OFF THEIR UNIFORMS AND GO HOME. IS THAT TRUE⅝

DAYAN⅛ AND HOW¼ AND HOW¼ AND I HOPE WE SHALL LET THEM DO IT WITHIN A SHORT TIME. IF NOT ALL OF THEM⅞ THEN MOST OF THEM ... THE WAR WAS VERY SHORT ... SHALL NOT HAVE TO STAY IN UNIFORM MUCH AFTER THE WAR.

½END OF INTERVIEW¾

MURROW-WEIZMAN TALK--

MURROW 1/8 COLONEL WEIZMAN 7/8 THE LAST TIME I WAS OUT HERE YOU WERE A LITTLE WORRIED ABOUT THOSE MIGS AND ILLIUSHINS 1/2 BOMBERS 3/4 IN EGYPT.

WEIZMAN 1/8 YES 7/8 MR. MURROW 7/8 BUT I DON,T THINK WE ARE WORRIED ANY MORE.

MURROW 1/8 WELL 7/8 ARE YOU WORRIED AT ALL ABOUT THOSE THAT ARE OVER IN JORDAN AND SYRIA 5/8

WEIZMAN 1/8 I WON,T SAY WE ARE WORRIED. WE ARE A BIT CONCERNED.

MURROW 1/8 HOW DID YOUR MYSTERES PERFORM 5/8

WEIZMAN 1/8 VERY NICELY.

MURROW 1/8 AND YOU ACCOUNT FOR THE MYSTERES, PERFORMANCE BY THE QUALITY OF AIRCRAFT OR THE QUALITY OF THE PILOT 5/8

WEIZMAN 1/8 I WOULD SAY MOSTLY PILOT,S EFFICIENCY AND ALSO SUPERIORITY IN A FEW OTHER THINGS. WHEN YOU TALK ABOUT FIGHTER AIRCRAFT YOU NEVER HAVE THE PERFECT FIGHTER AIRCRAFT ... SOME OF THE MIGS ARE BETTER BUT I WOULD SAY FIFTY PERCENT OF IT WAS DEFINITELY THE PILOT.

MURROW 1/8 WHAT HAPPENED IN THIS OPERATION THAT YOU DIDN,T EXPECT 5/8

WEIZMAN 1/8 WELL 7/8 ONE OF THE THINGS THAT SURPRISED ME WAS THE LACK OF ACTION ON THE ENEMY,S SIDE. I WAS EXPECTING THE ENEMY TO BE UP-AND-ABOUT THE FOLLOWING DAY 7/8 AFTER WE DROPPED OUR PARA-TROOPERS. AND THERE WAS HARDLY ANY ACTION AFTER 24 HOURS 7/8 AND THEN AFTER 48 HOURS 7/8 THERE WAS SOME ACTION ... BUT NOT AS MUCH AS WE EXPECTED.

[illegible] ...

[illegible] IS NOT WITHIN THE MIDDLE EASTERN COUNTRIES BUT WITH THE MAIN POWERS ...

WEIZMAN[1] WELL[7] ONE OF THE THINGS THAT SURPRISED ME WAS THE LACK OF ACTION ON THE ENEMY,S SIDE. I WAS EXPECTING THE ENEMY TO BE UP-AND-ABOUT THE FOLLOWING DAY[7] AFTER WE DROPPED OUR PARA-TROOPERS. AND THERE WAS HARDLY ANY ACTION AFTER 24 HOURS[7] AND THEN AFTER 48 HOURS[7] THERE WAS SOME ACTION ... BUT NOT AS MUCH AS WE EXPECTED.

MURROW[1] LET ME SEE ... YOU HAD TWO DAYS BEFORE THE FRENCH AND BRITISH INTERVENED. YOU HAD THE WHOLE EGYPTIAN AIR FORCE AGAINST YOU. AND IN THE LAST FEW DAYS[7] THEIR BOMBING TOOK THE PRESSURE OFF YOU. DIDN,T IT[5]

WEIZMAN[1] ACTUALLY[7] IT WAS TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY THAT WE EXPECTED MUCH MORE THAN MYSTERE ACTIVITY AND DIDN,T GET AS MUCH AS WE EXPECTED ... ON WEDNESDAY MUCH MORE THAN ON TUESDAY. THAT,S WHEN WE SHOT DOWN THE MIGS ... BUT LESS THAN WE EXPECTED.

MURROW[1] HOW DO YOU ACCOUNT FOR THAT[5]

WEIZMAN[1] PERHAPS LACK OF PREPAREDNESS ... PERHAPS SURPRISE. I THINK LACK OF PREPAREDNESS.

MURROW[1] HOW WERE YOUR LOSSES[5]

WEIZMAN[1] WE DIDN,T LOSE ANY TO AIR COMBAT -- JUST TO ANTI-AIRCRAFT GUNS -- AND THAT,S NOT MANY.

MURROW[1] DO YOU HAVE ANY SOLID INFORMATION ON HOW MANY AIRCRAFT GOT AWAY FROM EGYPT - TO NEIGHBORING COUNTRIES[5]

WEIZMAN[1] WE DON,T HAVE ANY DEFINITE INFORMATION AS YET[7] BUT WE KNOW THAT SOME OF THEM DID GET THROUGH.

MURROW[1] I SUPPOSE THE BIGGEST SINGLE OPERATION YOU HAD WAS COVER FOR PARATROOPERS BATTALION[7] WASN,T IT[5]

WEIZMAN[1] THAT WAS ONE OF THE GREAT THINGS WE HAD TO DO ... BECAUSE THE PARATROOP BATTALION WAS DROPPED ABOUT THIRTY-FIVE MILES FROM THE NEAREST ENEMY AIR FIELD ... WE HAD TO WATCH IT FOR 34 HOURS BEFORE IT COULD PROPERLY BE PROTECTED.

MURROW[1] COL. WEIZMAN[7] WHAT LESSONS DID YOU LEARN OUT OF THIS[5]

WEIZMAN[1] WITH AIR SUPERIORITY[7] A SMALL COUNTRY LIKE OURS COULD

MURROW 1/8 COL. WEIZMAN 7/8 WHAT LESSONS DID YOU LEARN OUT OF THIS 5/8

WEIZMAN 1/8 WITH AIR SUPERIORITY 7/8 A SMALL COUNTRY LIKE OURS COULD BE DEFENDED. A WELL-TRAINED 7/8 RELATIVELY STRONG AIR FORCE CAN BE WELL PROTECTED AGAINST TERRIFIC ODDS. THEREFORE 7/8 WE ARE --- WE ARE GOING TO BUILD UP --- WE WANT TO BUILD UP -- EVEN A STRONGER AND BIGGER AIR FORCE THAN WHAT WE HAVE TODAY.

MURROW 1/8 BUT YOU STILL MAINTAIN YOU WANT PRIMARILY A DEFENSIVE AIR FORCE 5/8

WEIZMAN 1/8 OH YES -- WE THINK THAT MYSTERES ... HAVE PROVED TO BE A TERRIFIC DEFENSIVE WEAPON FOR A SMALL COUNTRY LIKE OURS.

MURROW 1/8 ONE OF YOUR PIPER CUBS WENT DOWN AND PICKED UP A SQUADRON COMMANDER IN THE PENINSULA 5/8

WEIZMAN 1/8 YES 7/8 ONE OF MY BEST SQUADRON COMMANDERS WAS SHOT DOWN BY FLAK WAY DOWN SOUTH AND HE WAS PICKED UP IN FIVE HOURS. HE WAS PICKED UP BY A PIPER CUB AND FLOWN BACK TO CAMP.

MURROW 1/8 I WAS TOLD THAT THE PIPER CUB PILOT CAME DOWN AND SLID BY AND ASKED HIM HIS NAME 5/8

WEIZMAN 1/8 HE WASN,T SURE ... THE MAN ON THE GROUND WASN,T FOOLING HIM. HE STUCK HIS HEAD OUT OF THE WINDOW AND SAID 1/8 "ARE YOU SO AND SO 5/8" AND THE MAN SAID 1/8 "YES 1/4 I AM SO AND SO." SO HE LANDED 7/8 PICKED HIM UP AND OFF HE WENT.

END OF INTERVIEW.

IN THE FIRST PART OF "REPORT FROM ISRAEL 7/8" MURROW LAST NIGHT 1/2 TUESDAY 7/8 NOV. 13 3/4 INTERVIEWED ISRAELI PRIME MINISTER DAVID BEN-GURION ON FILM EXCLUSIVELY FOR THE CBS TELEVISION AND CBS RADIO NETWORKS.

CBS TELEVISION PRESS INFORMATION 7/8 NEW YORK.

MURROW¹⁸ COL. WEIZMAN⁷⁸ WHAT LESSONS DID YOU LEARN OUT OF THIS⁵⁸

CORRECTIONS¹⁸

LEAD GRAF SHOULD READ¹⁸ ... SPECIAL "SEE IT NOW" PROGRAMS FEATURING EXCLUSIVE..."

NINTH GRAF FROM WEIZMAN INTERVIEW,S END SHOULD READ ..."HAD TO WATCH IT FOR 48 HOURS..."

SEVENTH GRAF FROM WEIZMAN INTERVIEW,S END SHOULD READ..."A SMALL COUNTRY LIKE OURS COULD BE DEFENDED. WITH A RELATIVELY STRONG AIR FORCE⁷⁸ THE COUNTRY CAN BE WELL PROTECTED AGAINST TERRIFIC ODDS..."

JAMS JAMES.. PHIL COHAN IS HERE NOW DO YOU HAVE ANY INQUIRIES AND HOW IS IT A FOINE IRISHR L XX IRISHER LIKE URSELF AINT FGXX FIGHTING IN ISRAEL

GA

CMON DAMMIT ITS GITTIN LATE HERE

EVERYTHING,S FINE TRANSCRIPT OKAY I,.M FIGHTING THIS TELETYPE MACHINE WHICH IS ENOUGH FOR ME

WELL DO YOU WANNA SIGN OFF U BALDHEADED OLE IRISHER

KEEVIN

THANK YOU JAMES AND A HAPPY MOISH TO YOU GOOD NIGHT

BYE JIM WE GOIN HOME

M

"SEE IT NOW"

REVOLUTION IN THE NAVY

November 18, 1956

Bradshaw D.A.R
1

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADA

IN REPLY
PLEASE QUOTE No.

Royal Military College of Canada

Kingston, Ont.,

19 November, 1956

Mr. Ed Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
New York, New York.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I was fortunate enough to see your television programme "See It Now" on Sunday, 18 November, at 5 p.m. E.S.T., the subject of which was "Revolution in the Navy".

I was very impressed with the remarks of Admiral Rickover concerning education. These remarks were most interesting to me as Commandant of the Royal Military College of Canada, where future officers of the regular forces of Canada are given a four-year university-level course in the Arts or Sciences, or Engineering.

If possible, I would like to obtain a copy of Admiral Rickover's remarks made during his interview with you. Would you be good enough to advise me if I may have a copy? If you are not able to forward a copy to me, could you let me know where I could address a letter to Admiral Rickover in order to get a copy from him. I would like to make his remarks available to our cadets. } ~~Will~~ sent

Yours sincerely,

D.A.R. Bradshaw

(D.A.R. Bradshaw) Air Commodore
Commandant

Burke, Adm. Arleigh
SIN

June 28, 1956

Dear Admiral Burke:

Belatedly, permit me to say my thanks for your gracious cooperation in launching the television report on the new Navy. The quality of the film we shot was excellent, and we shall now labor diligently to make the rest of the report measure up to the beginning.

Sincerely yours,

Admiral Arleigh Burke
Chief of Naval Operations
Washington, D.C.

rh

CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS

25 June 1956

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It was kind of you to take time out from your busy schedule to listen to the expoundings of this sailor. It was a most pleasant experience for me.

Your efforts to put together a pictorial representation of this new Navy of ours will be of far ranging importance. The opportunity for such a portrayal is welcomed wholeheartedly by the Navy.

It will be a pleasure to assist you in any way possible in the coming months.

Most sincerely,

Arleigh Burke

ARLEIGH BURKE

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS "See It Now"
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Murrow

8-6-56
Please date

The United States Navy realizes the need for the Public to be fully informed of its various activities within the limits of necessary security for the national welfare. Current directives place upon the Commanding Officers of ships and shore activities the responsibility for the security of this information. For this reason and to prevent involuntary violations of the National Espionage Act, you are asked to agree to the following conditions:

AGREEMENT

1. That I will govern my movements and actions in accordance with instructions of the Navy Department and the requests of the Commanding Officer of the ship or activity to which I am attached.

2. That I will not disclose any classified information to any unauthorized person either when serving with Naval units or after termination of such service.

3. That, if requested, I will clear with one of the following as appropriate all statements and material prepared on the basis of my observations for dissemination to the public:

   (a) Commanding Officer of the ship or activity concerned.
   (b) Office of Information, Department of the Navy, Washington 25, D. C.
   (c) Commander, Western Sea Frontier, Federal Office Building, San Francisco, California.
   (d) Commander-in-Chief, U.S. Pacific Fleet, Naval Base, Pearl Harbor, T. H.

4. That upon termination or revocation of this authority, I will surrender any letter of authorization issued me (in accordance with paragraph one) to the Commanding Officer of the ship or activity (or his designated representative) for return to the Chief of Naval Operations (Op-21).

L. D. KELLY, JR., LT, USN
Witnessing Officer

USS NAUTILUS (SSN571)
Ship or Activity Concerned

EDWARD R. MURROW
Name

"SEE IT NOW"
CBS
485 Madison Ave.,
New York 22, New York
Organization

Business Address

ORIGINAL TO CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS (OP-21)
COPY FOR SECRETARY OF THE NAVY (OFFICE OF INFORMATION)
COPY TO COMMANDING OFFICER CONCERNED.
COPY TO BE RETAINED BY CIVILIAN CONCERNED.

OPNAV FORM-5720-2 (12-51)

C-30888

Sin
USS albacore

April 25, 1956

Gentlemen:

Thank you so much for the hospitality and cooperation which you extended our camera crew last Thursday and Friday. Thanks to your patience and spirit they were able to film some very effective sequences for our future program on the Navy.

If the American public gets a vivid picture of the high speed and the maneuvrability of your great ship, it will be because of your understanding attitude.

Sincerely yours,

The Members of the Crew
USS ALBACORE
FPO
New York

rh

The Members of the Crew
USS Albacore
FPO
NY

Gentlemen:

Thank you so much for the hospitality and cooperation which you extended our camera crew last Thursday and Friday. Thanks to your patience and spirit they were able to film some very effective sequences for our future program on the Navy.

[redacted]
If the American public gets a vivid picture of the high speed and the maneuvrability of your great ship it will be because of your understanding attitude.

Sincerely yours,

Edward R. Murrow

note to Murrow - Arthur Morse has thanked the skipper and skipper thought a letter to the crew would be appreciated.

April 25, 1956

Gentlemen:

Thank you so much for the hospitality and cooperation which you extended our camera crew last Thursday and Friday. Thanks to your patience and spirit they were able to film some very effective sequences for our future program on the Navy.

If the American public gets a vivid picture of the high speed and the maneuvrability of your great ship, it will be because of your understanding attitude.

Sincerely yours,

The Members of the Crew
USS ALBACORE
FPO
New York

rh

SIN
Wilhide C.R.
Lt Cmdr

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY
OFFICE OF INFORMATION
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

IN REPLY REFER TO

24 May 1956

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o See It Now
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

During my recent conversation with you and Mr. Friendly, you indicated that you would like to see and hear the presentation which was given to Congress concerning the Navy's ship building program. I have contacted Captain J. S. McCain, USN, and he is most anxious to have you see it.

As you can imagine, we have been fairly busy down here recently but I should like to make this proposal. Captain McCain and I would prefer to give you the presentation some evening after your regular 7:45 P.M. newscast. This would enable us to carry out our day's work, catch a plane about five o'clock and be at CBS - or any other location you may desire - give you the presentation and catch a late plane back to Washington the same night.

If this meets with your approval, may I suggest any evening the week of June 11-15. It occurred to me that these dates might be most appropriate since your interview with Admiral Burke is scheduled for the following Tuesday.

In connection with your visit to the Saratoga, it now appears that you and Admiral Burke, and possibly myself, will be lifted by helicopter from Floyd Bennett Field to the Saratoga which will be off Ambrose Lightship, the morning of June 19th. As soon as I have definite arrangements completed I will so advise you.

I shall await your desires before I make any other preparations.

Sincerely,

Buck Wilhide

C. R. Wilhide
Lieutenant Commander, USN

Copy to: Mr. Fred Friendly

"SEE IT NOW"

THE SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE

December 2, 1956

"Secret Life of Danny Kaye" 12/2/56

5a—See It Now—"The Secret Life of Danny Kaye"

For an hour-and-a-half on Sunday afternoon December 2 the American people were treated to an extraordinary demonstration of international good-will. They saw highlights of Danny Kaye's brilliant international tour on behalf of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund. They followed along with See It Now cameras as Danny Kaye sang, danced, mimicked and clowned his way through eleven countries and 50,000 miles, proving that youngsters are the same all over and that national boundaries and rivalries all are dissolved in the delightful society of children.

See It Now's "The Secret Life of Danny Kaye" was a lesson in international understanding which few who saw it could ever forget. From polio stricken children in Italy to leprosy sufferers in Nigeria, Danny Kaye brought smiles to them all with his brilliant clowning and tremendous heart. Simply and eloquently he put across the crucial point—that the world will be a much better place in the future if the suffering children of today are given love, understanding and help through UNICEF.

Not only did the people of America see this great lesson in international understanding, but the people of the world saw it as well. For the See It Now Danny Kaye film has been shown on television networks in 25 countries throughout the world from Australia to Yugoslavia—the first time in history that so many could see one program in so many different parts of the globe.

Harriet Van Horne said in the New York World-Telegram And Sun, "In months to come ("The Secret Life of Danny Kaye") will probably win all the awards, scrolls and citations there are. It will deserve every last one of them . . . what we'll long remember is Danny Kaye opening his arms and heart to the children of the world."

CBS Television submits that See It Now's "The Secret Life of Danny Kaye," which has been a major force in stimulating an informed public opinion about the work of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, represents an outstanding contribution to international understanding and deserves the consideration of the Board of Judges of the George Foster Peabody Awards.

Promotion of International Understanding

TELEVISION CATEGORY 5

5a—See It Now

The Secret Life of Danny Kaye: December 2, 1956, 5:00-6:30 pm EST

5b—See It Now

Coverage of the Middle East Crisis:

Egypt-Israel: March 13, 1956, 8:30-10:00 pm EST

Report From Africa: Part I April 23, 1956, 10:00-11:00 pm EST

Part II May 17, 1956, 10:00-11:00 pm EDT

Suez: October 7, 1956, 5:00-6:00 pm EDT

Edward R. Murrow Reports From Israel:

November 13-14, 1956, 11:15- 11:30 pm EST

SIN

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Murrow and Mr. Friendly

from: Mr. L. Grossman

January 10, 1957

This booklet accompanied the TVRs of your programs which were submitted for George Foster Peabody Awards.

Larry Grossman

February 6, 1957

Dear Abe:

I regret to report that while we still don't have the final figures, it nevertheless seems quite clear that the costs for THE SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE substantially exceeded the payments made by Pan American and Shulton (approximately $82,875). The costs totaled about $157,500, and thus we obviously won't be able to make an additional payment to UNICEF. Rubbell Robinson is considering the rerunning of the program, however, and we have told him that you could probably be helpful in finding a sponsor for it. I am not clear as to the impact of our contractual obligations to Pan American and others on this matter and in any case, I think this matter is in Mr. Robinson's jurisdiction.

UNICEF has advised us that the film has been shown to date in the following countries:

Australia	Russia
Austria	Sweden
Brazil	Italy
Belgium	Germany
Canada	Monaco
Denmark	Saar
France	Switzerland
Luxembourg	Yugoslavia
Netherlands	Mexico
Gt. Britain	Lebanon
Philippines	Israel
Thailand	India
Venezuela

They inform us that further showings are not presently anticipated in other countries but that it has been exhibited twice in Yugoslavia, Australia and Mexico. It seems impossible to estimate the audience coverage with any degree of accuracy. All broadcasting of the program outside of the United States was arranged by UNICEF in their own behalf.

As I am sure you know, both Fred and I very much appreciate the time you gave in helping to bring off what seems to have been a very worthwhile effort.

Cordially yours,

Mr. Abe Lastfogel
William Morris Agency
1740 Broadway
New York 19, New York

fc

bc: Hubbell Robinson
Fred Friendly

D R A F T -- February 6, 1957 -- for Mr. Murrow's signature.

Dear Abe:

I regret to report that while we still don't have the final figures, it nevertheless seems quite clear that the costs for THE SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE [redacted] substantially exceeded the payments made by Pan American and Shulton (approximately $113,750) for [redacted] the [redacted] costs, [redacted] and thus we obviously won't be able to make an additional payment to UNICEF. Hubbell Robinson is considering the rerunning of the program, however, and we have told him that you could probably be helpful in finding a sponsor for it. I am not clear as to the impact of our contractual obligations to Pan American and others on this matter and in any case, I think this matter is in Mr. Robinson's jurisdiction.

UNICEF has advised us that the film has been shown to date in the following countries:

Australia	Russia
Austria	Sweden
Brazil	Italy
Belgium	Germany
Canada	Monaco
Denmark	Saar
France	Switzerland
Luxembourg	Yugoslavia
Netherlands	Mexico
Gt. Britain	Lebanon
Philippines	Israel
Thailand	India
Venezuela

They inform us that further showings are not presently anticipated in other countries but that it has been exhibited twice in Yugoslavia, Australia and Mexico. It seems impossible to estimate the audience coverage with any degree of accuracy. All broadcasting of the program outside of the United States was arranged by UNICEF in their own behalf.

As I am sure you know, both Fred and I very much appreciate the time you gave in helping to bring off what seems to have been a very worthwhile effort.

Cordially yours,

F. T.

blind copy to Hubbell Robinson

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Seward

from: Paul A. Rosen

February 4, 1957

In response to your memorandum of January 25, 1957, regarding the SEE IT NOW - Danny Kaye program, please be advised as follows:

1) According to the reports I have from the Accounting Department, the total net dollar program payments to CBS Television from Pan American and Shulton for the subject program was $113,750.53. There may be a slight adjustment in this figure due to possible changes in time billing. —?

Reinhart to supply further info on income and costs, until this is received figures in this memo should be ignored. WR 2/5

Time and Talent.

2) The approximate cost of production (inclusive of the normal charge against this broadcast of one tenth of SEE IT NOW's annual overhead) was $157,629.93. Once again, this figure is subject to adjustment since the Accounting Department does not have final analysis. It is my belief that this figure is reasonably accurate.

Accordingly, we show a loss on this program at this time of $43,879.40.

3) According toUNICEF the countries in which the film has been shown to date are as follows:

Australia	Russia
Austria	Sweden
Brazil	Italy
Belgium	Germany
Canada	Monaco
Denmark	Saar
France	Switzerland
Luxembourg	Yugoslavia
Netherlands	Mexico
Gt. Britain	Lebanon
Philippines	Israel
Thailand	India
Venezuela

There are no further countries where showings are presently anticipated, but in Yugoslavia, Australia and Mexico the film has been exhibited twice. It is an impossibility to even estimate with any sort of accuracy the audience coverage.

4) All broadcasting of this program outside of the United States has been arranged for by UNICEF in their own behalf.

PAR:jr

P. A. R.

203

TO.....

FROM.....

Mr. Rosen is not in today. His secretary will mention it to him first thing tomorrow and believes he could get the information together for you some time tomorrow.

p.l.
1-28-57

CBS RADIO

Office Communication

to: Mr. Rosen

from: Mr. Seward

January 25, 1957

PL
Please ask Mr Rosen & try to have items 1 & 2 for me by 1/29 and to give me as much information as he has on 3 & 4 whenever time.
1/26

RE: THE SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE

The information I requested of you today is as follows:

1. The price paid by Pan American and Shulton for the broadcast of the show.

2. A statement of the costs incurred that are to be recouped by CBS before computing profits to UNICEF.

3. The countries in which the film was shown and those scheduled to show it in the near future. Is it possible to get the extent of coverage in each country?

4. Will all broadcasting outside of the United States be on a non-commercial basis on behalf of UNICEF?

J.M.S.

1137

Stephenson, B. S.

January 9, 1957

Dear Bert:

Belated thanks for your gracious note about the Danny Kaye program. You are as usual a gracious, thoughtful, and much beloved friend and neighbor.

As ever yours,

Mr. Bertram S. Stephenson
Pawling
New York

rh

BERTRAM S. STEPHENSON
PAWLING, N. Y.

Dec. 4, 1956.

Dear Ed:- I don't want to let the occasion pass without a hearty pat on the back for the Danny Kaye documentary Sunday. It was magnificent! We were delighted - would not have wearied had it been twice as long. Its preparation involved a deal of work, but most assuredly you must feel that all your planning and difficulties paid off. Congratulations. It was better than scoring a hole-in-one.

Sincerely. Bert.

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

F. 506

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Edward R. Murrow

From Fred Friendly

Station

January 8, 1957

CONFIDENTIAL

There is one unfinished piece of business on THE SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE that I think ought to be resolved before you go to California this weekend, because I am sure we will both see Kaye and Lastfogel, and they will want to know the answer to this question: Specificially what does UNICEF get.

1. The cost of the Kaye show, as a specific unit, is $95,804.98 (this includes a sum not over $2,500 already paid to UNICEF). I think it is a final figure with a possible exception of some of the print costs which should not amount to any more than $500.

2. In addition to this figure, there is the SIN overhead figure which is amortized at the approximate rate of $54,000 a show.

3. At this point, there should be listed the revenue that CBS figures they received from Shulton and Pan American. I don't know what Shulton paid and I am not sure how the Pan American total was amortized. The Sales Department will have to fill in this amount.

4. It is our agreement with Kaye and Lastfogel that whatever profit is forthcoming from this operation will be paid to UNICEF. Perhaps there will be no profit, but I certainly think that careful consideration should be given to the prospect of making a contribution of some kind to UNICEF.

5. We have already paid UNICEF $2,500 which was to reimburse them for expenses they had incurred in the Kaye expedition, and this sum appears in CBS's cost of the show (Item 1.). In addition to this, Murrow has made a sizeable personal contribution to UNICEF and Friendly has made a considerably smaller one.

6. I imagine that Mr. Lastfogel is going to ask for the exact cost of the show and possibly a breakdown. Is it within our prerogative to show it to him?

I expect you will want to send this note along to Management and whatever other information they may require is, of course, available. The only other additional question I think Kaye is going to ask is about the possibility of a re-run in the future. I think we ought to be prepared to discuss this with him if there is any interest in it.

F. F.

hlt

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

F. 559

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Mr. Murrow

From Mr. Friendly

Station

December 11, 1956

We will have the estimates of the costs of the Kaye show within the next two or three days, and I see no reason why this information can't be given to Lastfogel. I am, however, in need of guidance as to what we should tell him about the Shulton -- Pan American deal which is, of course, wrapped up in the whole plan for '57. Obviously what Lastfogel is getting at is the kind of contribution CBS is going to make to UNICEF.

Let me know what you think.

F.F.

FWF/nf

att: letter from Mr. Lastfogel

NEW YORK BEVERLY HILLS CHICAGO LONDON PARIS

ESTABLISHED 1898

WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY
INC.
1740 BROADWAY
NEW YORK 19, N.Y.
TELEPHONE JUDSON 6-5100

EXECUTIVE OFFICES

December 6, 1956

Mr. Fred W. Friendly
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York N.Y.

Dear Fred: RE: THE SECRET LIFE OF DANNY KAYE

Confirming our telephone conversation of yesterday, I am awaiting the following information from you:

1. The price paid by Pan American and Shulton for the broadcast of the show last Sunday.

2. A statement of the costs incurred that are to be recouped by CBS before computing profits to UNICEF.

3. The countries in which the film was shown last Sunday and those scheduled to show it in the near future. Is it possible to get the extent of coverage in each country?

We assume that all broadcasting outside of the United States was and will be broadcast on a non-commercial basis on behalf of UNICEF. I would appreciate your confirmation of this.

Danny will be looking forward to receiving the 16 mm copy of the program, as well as the other film shot.

Let me again convey to you and Ed my congratulations on accomplishing a most outstanding job. The net results end up in everything we could hope for.

Kindest personal regards,

Sincerely,

Abe Lastfogel

Abe Lastfogel

NEW YORK BEVERLY HILLS CHICAGO LONDON PARIS

ESTABLISHED 1898

WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY
INC.
1740 BROADWAY
NEW YORK 19, N.Y.
TELEPHONE JUDSON 6-5100

EXECUTIVE OFFICES

HR

Forward

January 8, 1957

Mr. Fred Friendly
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York N.Y.

Dear Fred:

Tried to reach you by phone but was unsuccessful.

I am still waiting to receive the statements in connection with the Danny Kaye film, as per my letter of December 6th.

I also want to talk to you about the possibility of repeating the show on a prime night time spot. I think we can find a sponsor for it, and probably get a sizable amount of money for Unicef.

Looking forward to seeing you, and with kindest regards,

Sincerely,

Abe Lastfogel

Abe Lastfogel

May 4, 1956

Dear Mr. Lastfogel:

This is in reply to your letter of April 30 and our telephone conversation.

There is no disagreement on the matter of choice of sponsorship. It will require the approval of Ed Murrow and Danny Kaye. As for the final editing, Murrow and Friendly obviously cannot be asked to abdicate this responsibility which has been theirs since SEE IT NOW started five years ago, but as we told Danny he certainly has veto power on anything that displeases him and it will not be in the show. We want him to work with us editing the show and the final production will be something we all approve. It is also acknowledged that after the original telecast all future use of this material will have to have the agreement and approval of Danny Kaye and Murrow-Friendly.

As for the possibility for commercial sponsorship, Murrow and I would be less than candid if we did not restate what we originally told Kaye, what I told you on the phone the week of his departure and what is included in our letter of agreement, that in order to give this undertaking the largest possible audience and number of stations, the proper commercial sponsor will be necessary.

Murrow and I certainly want to continue our invitation to meet with you and Danny upon his return so that we can discuss all the avenues by which we can make this project the success I'm sure all of us want it to be.

Sincerely,

Fred W. Friendly

Mr. Abe Lastfogel
William Morris Agency
1740 Broadway
New York, N.Y.

cc: Mr. Murrow
FWF/fjf

"SEE IT NOW"

CONVERSATION WITH CHOU-EN-LAI

December 31, 1956

Interview Burma 12/21/56

QUESTIONS FOR PREMIER CHOU EN-LAI

1. WHAT IS THE PURPOSE OF YOUR PRESENT VISIT TO BURMA?

2. YOU HAVE BEEN QUOTED AS SUGGESTING THAT A POST OF SOME IMPORTANCE MIGHT BE FOUND FOR GENERALISSIMO CHIANG KAI-SHEK IN YOUR ADMINISTRATION. DO YOU VIEW THIS AS A POSSIBLE SOLUTION OF THE FORMOSA QUESTION?

3. DO YOU SEE ANY REAL PROSPECT OF AN AGREED SETTLEMENT OF THE FORMOSA QUESTION?

4. WHAT IS THE BASIS OF THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CHINA REGARDING THE RELEASE OF AMERICAN PRISONERS NOW HELD BY CHINA?

5. WHAT HAS BEEN THE EFFECT OF COLLECTIVIZATION ON AGRICULTURE? IS IT CHANGING TECHNIQUES, METHODS OF CULTIVATION, EQUIPMENT, ETC.

6. IN RUSSIA, COLLECTIVIZATION BROUGHT IMPROVEMENTS IN AGRICULTURAL PROCESSES. IS IT DOING SO IN CHINA?

7. IS CHINA PAYING TOO HIGH A PRICE FOR ITS PROGRAM OF INDUSTRIALIZATION?

8. DO YOU BELIEVE THAT THERE ARE DIFFERENT ROADS LEADING TO MARXISM?

9. WOULD YOU CARE TO COMMENT ON RECENT EVENTS IN HUNGARY?

10. WOULD YOU CARE TO SAY ANYTHING ABOUT THE POSSIBILITY OF THE PROSPECT OF "TWO CHINAS"?

11. HOW DO YOU REGARD THE RELATIONSHIP OF YOUR GOVERNMENT WITH THE OVERSEAS CHINESE. SHOULD THEY BE ASSIMILATED IN THE COUNTRY OF THEIR ADOPTION, OR SHOULD THEY BE CONFIRMED AS CHINESE CITIZENS?

12. IS CHINA PAYING THE SOVIET UNION FOR ITS ARMS IMPORTS, AND IF SO, HOW?

13. WOULD CHINA FAVOR ADDING INDIA AS A PERMANENT MEMBER OF THE UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL?

14. WHAT HAS CHINA'S ATTITUDE BEEN TOWARD TITOISM FROM 1946 to 1955?

15. WHY DID CHINA ENDORSE THE GOMULKA REGIME IN POLAND?

16. DOES CHINA FEAR A REVIVAL IN RUSSIAN INTEREST IN SINKIANG?

17. WHAT DOES THE PRIME MINISTER UNDERSTAND TO BE THE PRINCIPAL AMERICAN OBJECTION TO THE ADMISSION OF HIS GOVERNMENT INTO THE UNITED NATIONS?

18. DOES THE PRIME MINISTER BELIEVE THAT THERE IS IN ANY SENSE COMPETITION BETWEEN INDIA AND CHINA FOR THE LEADERSHIP OF ASIA?

19. GREAT BRITAIN RECOGNIZED THE PEIPING REGIME. WHEN WILL CHINA SEND AN AMBASSADOR TO LONDON? WHAT BENEFITS HAS BRITAIN ENJOYED FROM ITS POLICY OF RECOGNITION?

20. DOES CHINA ASPIRE ONE DAY TO OBTAIN SOVEREIGNTY OVER HONG KONG?

21. HOW DOES THE PRIME MINISTER VIEW FUTURE RELATIONS BETWEEN HIS GOVERNMENT AND THAT OF JAPAN?

22. IS THE PRIME MINISTER CONTENT WITH THE SITUATION AS IT NOW EXISTS IN KOREA?

23. DOES THE PRIME MINISTER BELIEVE THAT DIRECT TALKS BETWEEN HIMSELF AND PRESIDENT EISENHOWER MIGHT BE FRUITFUL?

24. DOES HE BELIEVE THAT THE TALKS BETWEEN HIMSELF AND NEHRU, AND SUBSEQUENTLY BETWEEN NEHRU AND EISENHOWER MAY PRODUCE A BETTER WORKING RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE THREE COUNTRIES?

25. IF CHINA WERE TO BE ADMITTED TO MEMBERSHIP IN THE UNITED NATIONS, WOULD SHE SUBMIT TO THAT BODY OUTSTANDING TERRITORIAL DISPUTES INCLUDING THE ONE WITH BURMA?

26. DOES THE PRIME MINISTER BELIEVE THAT ULTIMATE ARMED COLLISION BETWEEN THE COMMUNIST WORLD AND THE FREE WORLD IS INEVITABLE? AND IF HE BELIEVES THIS CAN BE AVERTED, HOW CAN IT BE DONE?

Prisoners — Sure about Sin Chung?

Confirm with India?

QUESTIONS FOR CHOU EN-LAI

I. Domestic

1. What has been the effect of collectivization on agriculture? Is it changing techniques, methods of cultivation, equipment, quality of seeds used? Chinese farming already is almost at a maximum of intensiveness; how then can collectivization increase its output? Taking a longer look at the future, how can China's limited land resources provide food enough for China's rapidly growing population? (Background of the questions is that so far collectivization appears to be chiefly political in motivation, to bring peasants under central control. In Russia collectivization did bring improvements in agriculturural processes. Is it doing so in China?)

2. China's insistence on making much of its heavy industrial equipment at home seems to disregard the good market there is abroad for consumer g oods and raw materials, and the cheapness of foreign industrial equipment. Would it not be better, economically, to buy this equipment abroad, and is not China paying too high a price for its program of industrializing China?

3. China has recently promised to introduce a relaxation of its rules against differences from the accepted Communist doctrines. Is this relaxation to be limitedonly to certain intellectual individuals or small groups? Could Chinese Communist controls survive if it were permitted to rank and file party members and non-party members? Has the increased freedom of thought brought any changes in Communist thinking among Chinese leaders? In Democracies we believe in the right and the function of the opposition, as it keeps our thinking flexible in the face of change. Can Chinese Communism go to this length? How far does the new freedom of academic and political thinking go? Approval has recently been given to the study of Western ideas. Suppose a Chinese economist, on studying United States conditions, came to the view that our expanding economy was now firmly established without great danger from depression, would he be allowed to publish this view? Where? How widely could it be read?

II Foreign Policy

1. If the Formosan question could be settled, trade embargoes removed, China's membership in the UN accepted and China abandoned any desire to set up Communist regimes in non-Communist Asian countries, what obstacles would there be to good relations with the United States?

2. Is Communist China able to weigh the proposal of setting up two Chinas, with Nationalist China withdrawing from the off-shore islands, , and with the Taiwanese gradually taking over the government of the Island?

3. Should overseas Chinese be assimilated in the countries of their adoption, or should they be confirmed as Chinese citizens? Chinese poli y in this respect has been modified? How consistently? To what extent?

4. If trade embargoes were to be abandoned, what would China have to sell to the USA? To what extent are Chinese exports already assigned to meet credits already obtained. How much trade does China believe it can do with Japan under the changed conditions of the two countries? Is China willing to continue importing steadily large quantities of rice and cotton from Burma, India and Ceylon, or are its imports from them sproadic with political implications?

5. Is China paying the Soviet Union for its arms imports? How?

6. Would China favor adding India as permanent member of the United Nations Security Council?

7. What has China's attitude been to Titoism--as from '46 to '55? Was Chinese endorsement of Gomulka regime in Poland given because China believes in there being different roads to communism? Has China ever discussed this question with the Jugoslavs? Has Tito ever been invited to Peiping? Will he be? (China endorsed Gomulka, but also endorsed the Kadar repression of revolution. Presumably China gives it blessing to anything Moscow does in Eastern Europe and expects Russia to keep hands off of what China does in Asia.)

III Sinkiang and Outer Mongolia

1. Does China fear a revival of Russian interest in Sinkiang? Does it expect to extend its own influence in Outer Mongolia? At least culturally? Is it satisfied with the cultural relations with the Mongolian Republic? In Sinkiang, now 90 percent non-Chinese, a large program of settling Chinese residents is under way. How large a percentage of Chinese population is expected in 10 years?

IV Miscellaneous.

1. Why does China protest so loudly against SEATO, in view of its obvious military weakness?

2. China is now engaged in a dispute with Burma over the possession of outlying territory and has ousted the Burmese from it. If China entered the UN would it expect to submit such a question to the agencies of the UN for arbitration and conciliation?

3. China has recently sent a commercial mission to Brazil. Does it expect to develop its trade in South America?

4. Is China willing to use its influence on North Vietnam to restrain it from pressuring South Vietnam in the interest of peace?

5. Does China like to see Russia extending large credits to non-Communist countries in Asia? Would it not prefer having Russia enlarge its credits to China?

6. Great Britain recognized the Peiping regime. When will China send an ambassador to London? What benefits has Britain enjoyed from its policy of recognition?

7. Does China aspire one day to obtain sovereignty over HongKong?

Here is a situation about which questions might be asked, if any candor is allowed. The Asian pie has been cut between Russia and China. We don't know the terms or how well they sit. But it seems clear that China has in its orbit: Korea, Vietnam and Vietminh, Cambodia, Laos, Singapore & Malaya, ~~in Siam and Thailand~~. Russia is ahead in Indonesia. (How does China like that?) Russia is ahead in Japan, in fact stole a march by starting peace negotiations. (How does China like that, in view of the fact that potentially Japan has more to add to China in goods and markets for raw materials than any other country?) Russia has Outer Mongolia and China Sinkiang. But China is actively competing with Russia in Outer Mongolia, along cultrual lines, and Russia is still a big influence in Singkiang. Russia is ahead in Burma. The two, Russia and China, appear to regard India as belonging to both. China has Tibet and wants Nepal.

Do the talks with Nehru, and between Nehru and Eisenhower, suggest a possibility that one day India, China and the United States might come to a better working b asis?

84 Hing Fat St., Apt. 15B
Hong Kong
May 26, 1960

Mr. John Day
Vice President-News
CBS News
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Boss:

A few items which I feel are of interest or concern to you:

First, regarding my recent trip following Chou En-lai around Burma, India and Nepal. Although my success on circuits was disappointing, the trip was extremely valuable for me. It gave me my first personal contacts with some of the top leaders of Red China, and a better acquaintance with the countries I visited. It wasn't until the last two days of the trip that the Chinese Communists decided to become friendly with the Western correspondents on the tour--but during that time Chou En-lai himself opened conversations with me on three different occasions, and Foreign Minister Chen Yi once. Although nothing of great significance was exchanged during these chats, I was the only Western Correspondent Chou singled out during the trip, and was the only one Chen Yi spoke with at all. I reported the Chen Yi conversation in a World Tonighter after I got back to Hong Kong.

Our Bangkok stringer, Tavisak Viryasiri, proved as useful in Burma as in Thailand--a real fabulous little guy. He successfully crashed every event in Rangoon barred to correspondents. The only time he was suspected was at the Chinese Embassy reception in Rangoon. He got around that one by answering a security guard's questions in Siamese--and while the guard was trying to figure out what was said, Tavisak went ahead and got his pictures.

Between my previous contacts in Burma and Tavisak's we got exceptional treatment from the government. Unfortunately, this did not prevent failure of my attempts to get a successful circuit out, or in getting Chou En-lai to appear on FACE THE NATION. I am convinced that a circuit can be worked out of Rangoon through Hong Kong, Tokyo or London. If anyone goes back down there for anything, I will give a detailed report.

I think I could have raised enough hell to have gotten a better circuit while I was there, but didn't for fear it would have detracted from the pressure I was putting on in an attempt to get an answer from Chou En-lai about the FACE THE NATION show. Regarding this latter, when U Nu decided he would not be able to make a direct approach to Chou in our behalf, the Burmese Foreign Office sent a formal note to the Chinese Embassy pointing out that a representative of CBS was in Rangoon awaiting a decision of the Premier. No answer came, so the Burmese prodded them on it. The final answer: "There is no indication there will be an affirmative reply."

Later, Art Bonner and I together took a letter to the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi renewing the request. We received no answer.

Now about the current situation in Red China. Since April first the Chinese Reds have been stepping up their anti-American propaganda, which is amazing in view of the fact that they have kept it at a near fever pitch ever since the early summer of 1958. The recent anti-American demonstrations in China have now involved about fifty million people.

There are good reasons to believe that Red China is having some serious internal problems at the moment, particularly caused by a shortage of food. The Nationalists claim their intelligence reports tell of some anti-Communist rioting on parts of the mainland. I have not been able to varify this latter, but from situations that I do know about, I would say it is a distinct possibility.

In view of this, it could be that the anti-American demonstrations are in part at least designed as a diversion from trouble on the home front. They might also be aimed at demonstrating, in some strange manner, a need for a speedup in organizing communes in the cities.

Regardless, the tone of the propaganda and the extensiveness of the demonstrations is far more serious than ever before.

It is a bit early to make any firm predictions, but I have a horrible feeling that the Reds are spoiling for an incident. What, where and how—I would not want to guess at the moment. If the usual crisis cycle is followed, it most likely would occurr in late summer or autumn. This guess on timing is based particularly on the fact that Peking has pulled something every-other Fall, that is, to hit the front pages at the time of a United States national election.

This might just be coincidence, but probably is not. I think the Chinese are well aware of the fact that the two major parties in the States do not see eye-to-eye on China policy, and they love to sharpen controversy at crucial times.

For some time I have felt that the Chinese Communist habit of issuing periodic warnings against the United States for alledged violations of territory was a buildup toward an incident. Last night they issued their 99th such "serious warning." They will use the background of warnings in an attempt to put justice on their side. In other words, if they decide to shoot down an American plane, they will follow up by saying, "We warned the United States time-after-time in an attempt to prevent bloodshed--but the American imperialists refused to listen."

As for other possibilities, the Nationalists claim there has been an increase in Communist activity opposit the off-shore islands, and the Indians claim the Reds are building up heavily in Tibet next to the disputed Ladakh area. Since the Reds already control the most essential parts of Ladakh, and the Indians are in no position to kick them out at the moment--it seems unlikely that anything will actually happen there in the near future.

Laos is still a strong potential trouble spot. Militarily it has been quiet since the United Nations made known its concern last summer--but the Reds have not slowed down their propaganda agitation there.

A more explosive situation, I fear, is in South Vietnam, where there are increasing indications of considerable Communist guerilla activities. From what I understand, the Saigon government has been playing down its troubles with the Reds. There certainly have been few reports of incidents from the South Vietnam side. However, the Communist reports regularly indicate that some type of military activity has been taking place.

Of course, there is always the possibility that the Chinese Reds will tone down their activities and anti-American propaganda as quickly--and as unexplainably--as they built it up. The current anti-American campaign is running about two months ahead of the one in 1958 which culminated in the off-shore island crisis. It will be hard for the Reds to maintain its intensity through the summer if they are working toward an autumn incident.

Regardless, I think the current situation out here is something we must watch very, very closely, and keep reporting on with reasonable regularity. The buildup in 1958 went generally unreported because there were too many other affairs taking the top news in other parts of the world--particularly at that time in the Middle East. As a result, when the off-shore island fracus started, most of the world was caught by surprise.

There is, of course, the problem that the anti-American propaganda and the hate America demonstrations are so repetitive that they become routine, and it becomes difficult to continually make them sound like news. For instance, I could give the same broadcasts today that I gave last Sunday, and except for the changing of a few figures, they would be just as accurate.

With indications being, though, that the Chinese Communists are building up to something, I don't think we can afford to belittle the seriousness of the situation merely because it appears repetitive.

I will keep you informed of any developments as they appear to me here.

Best regards,

Guy

Guy Searls

GS:al

cc: Ralph Paskman
Robert Skedgell

Interview With Chou

ED MURROW'S filmed interview with Chou En-lai, which was televised the other night, was, as Mr. Murrow observed, quite different from most interviews conducted by American newsmen.

All questions had to be submitted to Chou, the Prime Minister of Red China, in advance. Mr. Murrow submitted 31. Chou chose to answer only 10. His answers were written in advance, and merely read by him and his interpreter. When the reporter asked a "follow-up" question—calling for additional detail to a previous answer—the interview was interrupted while advisers scurried to put just the right words in the Prime Minister's mouth.

All the questions pertaining directly to Red China, including the status of the American hostages held there, were ignored by Chou. Instead, he dwelt at length on the Hungarian revolt and a comparison of Red Chinese-Soviet Union relationships and those between the U. S. and its major allies. In the first Chou followed the Moscow propaganda line to the letter. In the second he spent several minutes saying that relationships between his country and Russia are beautiful because they could not be otherwise between socialist societies, while the U. S. gets along horribly with its allies because we are all imperialists trying to knife each other in a competitive struggle for possessions.

The interview resembled most closely those conducted at a distance by Western newsmen and the late Soviet dictator, Joseph Stalin. For years there was almost always a list of questions on Stalin's desk from some Western correspondent. When the dictator wished, he could pick from a list the queries that would make a good basis for whatever propaganda barrage he had in mind. Of course his answers were legitimate news, but the correspondents were playing right into his hand.

Such, no doubt, were Chou's intentions in permitting the filming of an interview for television. But Mr. Murrow frustrated that motive by following the film with a discussion of Chou's answers with General Carlos Romulo, Philippine ambassador to the U. S., and Dr. Tingfu Tsiang, Nationalist China's chief delegate to the U. N. Neither Chou's foggy circumlocutions nor Mr. Murrow's cloud of cigarette smoke kept those men from viewing the interview with clear eyes.

With the propaganda value thus removed, the interview gave Americans a worthwhile glimpse of a man near the top in the shadowed land of China. But it is doubtful that Chou won any converts in the U. S.

"SEE IT NOW"

CLINTON AND THE LAW

Clinton, Tennessee

January 6, 1957

Bingham, Barry
SIN

January 16, 1957

Dear Barry:

I am most grateful to you for taking time to write about the Clinton piece. The people of Clinton renewed my faith in many things, and the response of the audience was one of the most encouraging things I have encountered in a long time.

Please tell your bride that we have not forgotten about Bookmobiles.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Barry Bingham
President
"The Louisville Times"
Louisville 2, Kentucky

rh

BARRY BINGHAM, President

MARK F. ETHRIDGE, Publisher

LISLE BAKER, JR. Vice Pres. & Gen. Mgr.

The Courier-Journal
THE LOUISVILLE TIMES

LOUISVILLE 2, KY.

January 8, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

I want to tell you how tremendously impressed I was by your show on Clinton, Tennessee. It struck me as representing the highest standards of journalism, interpreted in the effective terms of the television medium.

I had heard about the performance of Mr. Kasper, but I could hardly believe that the reports could be true until I saw him on your show. Several of the Clinton residents, on the other hand, sustained my faith in human nature.

The total effect of the program was much more hopeful than I had anticipated, thanks perhaps to the tactical error made by those who attacked the young minister. In any case, I think you performed a valuable public service by putting this striking program together.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

Barry

Barry Bingham

Burchard, John E.

GIN

January 25, 1957

Dear John:

Janet has shown me your reference to our Clinton piece in your letter of January 14th. Thanks very much. The response to it was both mature and encouraging.

Sincerely yours,

Dean John E. Burchard
Massachusetts Institute of Technology
Cambridge, Massachusetts

rh

SCHOOL OF HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL STUDIES
Cambridge

OFFICE OF THE DEAN

January 14, 1957

Mrs. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Janet:

Consumed with curiosity as I am, and delighted as I always have been by the grace of your hospitality, it is with the greatest regret that I have to tell you I cannot aceept your invitation to dinner Tuesday night. I shall not be at the trustees' meeting either since I have a long-standing engagement in Chicago on both days. I am terribly sorry.

Would you tell Ed for me how moved I was by the story he ran from Clinton, Tennessee. It was the next day that emissaries of the State Department came by for counsel on what to put in their shiny building which Ed Stone is devising for the 1958 Brussels Exposition, and I urged them above all to have a series of showings of some of Ed's best programs, those particularly which deal with an open and candid assessment by Americans of American situations, and among those especially those about which our friends abroad may have confused impressions. I urged them also to see if he could not in the next year make others which would fill any lacunae. I can think of no better thing for us to do abroad than to be frank in an unapologetic way. Whether the Congress would agree with such a view in probably quite a different matter.

I have wired you this morning: "Regret unable dine Tuesday night. Letter follows."

Sincerely yours,

John Burchard

John E. Burchard
Dean

Horan, Walt

SIR

January 15, 1957

Dear Walt:

Many thanks for the kind words about the Clinton show. The response has been universally favorable, and I was particularly proud of the fact that the people in Clinton thought it a fair picture.

Thanks again for writing as you did.

Sincerely yours,

The Honorable Walt Horan
House of Representatives
Washington, D.C.

rh

Would you tell Ed for me how moved I was by the story he ran from Clinton, Tennessee. It was the next day that emissaries of the State Department came by for counsel on what to put in the Army building which Ed Stone is devising for the 1939 Brussels Exposition, and I urged them above all to have a series of showings of some of Ed's best programs, those particularly which deal with an open and candid assessment by Americans of American situations, and among those especially those about which our friends abroad may have confused impressions. I urged them also to see if he could not in the next year make others which would fill any lacunae. I can think of no better thing for us to do abroad than to be frank in an unapologetic way. Whether the Congress would agree with such a view is probably quite a different matter.

I have wired you this morning: "Regret unable dine Tuesday night. Letter follows."

Sincerely yours,

John Burchard

John E. Burchard
Dean

Publicity
Pat
Ed

January 14, 1957

Mrs. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York, N.Y.

Dear Janet:

Consumed with curiosity as I am, and delighted as I always have been by the grace of your hospitality, it is with the greatest regret that I have to tell you I cannot accept your invitation to dinner Tuesday night. I shall not be at the trustees' meeting either since I have a long-standing engagement in Chicago on both days. I am terribly sorry.

Would you tell Ed for me how moved I was by the

S F N
Kefauver, Estes

January 16, 1957

Dear Estes:

You were very gracious to write about the Clinton report. The response has really been extraordinary; thoughtful and mature. The people of Clinton liked it, and that is always the acid test.

It has been much too long since we have met. I shall make you a signal when next I am in Washington.

As ever yours,

Senator Estes Kefauver
Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C.

rh

ANNOUNCER

Today, on SEE IT NOW, Clinton and the Law, a study in desegregation edited and produced by the partnership of Murrow and Friendly, sponsored by Pan American World Airways.

COMMERCIAL

ANNOUNCER

Now speaking to you from the Control Room of Studio 41, here is Edward R. Murrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW

We call this report "Clinton and the Law". It does not pretend to be a study of desegregation with all its vast political social and economic implications. It is merely the record of one community as written by the people who live there. In other communities neither the problems nor the solutions might be identical, but the people of Clinton, Tennessee thought they discovered something of value, and they cooperated with us in presenting and preparing this report for you.

This is Clinton, Tennessee -- Christmas time - nineteen fifty-six.

CHEER: Let's go Clinton High, let's go

Let's go Clinton High, let's go

Let's go Clinton High, let's go

EDWARD R. MURROW

Clinton's population four thousand. That's the high school basketball team in action against Lake City. They lost 63 to 43. Last year they won - had a good football season this year in spite of all the recent trouble.

The Clinton pep band plays "Rock Around the Clock" and for all outward appearances it's just another night in just another Tennessee community. But Main Street has not always been quiet. There have been mobs in the square before the courthouse and riots that had to be broken up by the National Guard and a white Baptist Minister was beaten up on Broad Street. The violence in Clinton was news all over America and much of the rest of the world.

(CHILDREN SING): "Peace on the earth - good will to men."

EDWARD R. MURROW

But this is not a report on the National Guard in Clinton, or the tanks in the street, or the teargas, or the burning crosses, but rather an examination, after the fact, filmed in Clinton between December 4 when the Reverend Turner was attacked and now.

It is an attempt by SEE IT NOW and the citizens of Clinton to explore the chain of events and emotions which brought violence and shame and hope to this town. All the persons to be heard during this sixty-minute report will be citizens of Clinton with the exception of Judge Robert L. Taylor of Knoxville and John Kasper of Washington, both active participants in the conflict.

(MORE)

EDWARD R. MURROW (CONT'D)

Of the 4,000 people who live in Clinton, more than thirty-seven hundred are white and by tradition and custom,most of them believe in separate schools. In 1950, Negro parents, backed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, brought suit against the Anderson County school system which administers Clinton High School, asking that their children be admitted.

The Courier News, the Clinton weekly, spoke for the community in support of segregation. Editor Horace Wells.

EDITOR HORACE WELLS

Well, any newspaper is inclined to follow the -- the thinking of the majority of the people in the community, and this community and I myself have favored segregation all down through the years. Back when this law suit was filed in nineteen fifty, we did everything we could to maintain segregation by trying to provide the Negro students with good, equal but separate facilities, and that was the way the community felt, and that's the way the community wanted it, and that was the editorial policy of this newspaper.

EDWARD R. MURROW

The Federal Judge in this section of Tennessee in 1951, and now, is Robert L. Taylor of Knoxville.

JUDGE ROBERT L. TAYLOR

The Anderson County School case was before my court about five years ago. At that time, I held that the colored children were not entitled to enter the Clinton High School because they were being furnished equal but separate facilities. At that time the equal but separate facility doctrine was the law.

EDWARD R. MURROW

The Negroes appealed Judge Taylor's decision and when the Supreme Court decision of May 1954 ruled against segregation, Judge Taylor's ruling was reversed. On January 4, 1956, he ordered Anderson County to comply.

JUDGE ROBERT L. TAYLOR

It is the opinion of this court that desegregation as to high school students in that county should be effected by definite date, and that a reasonable date should be fixed as one not later than the beginning of the Fall term of the present year of nineteen hundred and fifty-six.

EDWARD R. MURROW

Accordingly, on August 20, 1956, approximately seven hundred students, registered for the Fall opening - without incident. Twelve of them were Negroes. Judge Taylor told them all to obey the law and there seemed to be no questions.

Then, another voice was heard in Clinton - John Kasper, an outsider, a White Supremacist, told them that the law need not be obeyed.

JOHN KASPER

Our failure to date has been failing to attack - failing to attack - failing to attack at every level and continuously.

We in the White Citizens' Council say - now, yesterday, today and forever as long as there is one living white man in the United States, the Supreme Court is not the law of the land. (BANGS TABLE).

(MORE)

JOHN KASPER (CONT'D)

That decision ... (BANGS TABLE) ... is not the law of the land now or never will be. Never!

(CHILDREN RECITE): "The flag of the United States of America."

EDWARD R. MURROW

John Kasper first came to Clinton on August 25, and threatened to close up the school if desegregation continued.

PLEDGE: "With liberty and justice for all."

EDWARD R. MURROW

Kasper had certain qualities of leadership and there were those in Clinton willing to be led. One hundred and three days later, his boast was fact.

An organized campaign of picketing, threats, dynamiting and rioting had brought Clinton to the brink of anarchy. Kasper has been arrested twice but continues to lead the battle against Judge Taylor's order.

School attendance, shrunk by parents' fear of violence, were at times as low as two hundred and sixty.

The pressure mounted on every one - the Faculty - the parents - the students. This is Jerry Shattuck, Captain of the football team and an All-State Guard, talking to reporter Arthur Morse in the gymnasium.

MORSE

How did the students react the first day that they --- that the Negroes came to class?

SHATTUCK

Well, I --- I'd like to say something about two or three weeks preceding the time school started ...

MORSE: Yes.

SHATTUCK

... our school starts the first of September, and all through the month of August, of course, we knew we would have Negro students in school with us when we started, but no one said too much about it, and no one seemed opposed to it violently, and then I believe it was the Saturday before the Monday that school started, this Kasper came into town and he started calling people up and stopping them on streets and trying to form pickets in front of the school for Monday morning, and then Monday morning, when we did come to school, we found that there were, oh, fifteen to twenty people out there with pickets, and the students, most of them, were out watching and everything of course you know it was something that they'd never seen before, and then when school started and the Negro students were inside, no one was hostile towards them.

Everyone seemed to be friendly. All the trouble seemed to be outside the school among the adults, and oh, I'd say six or seven of the students that Kasper persuaded to picket. Well, of course, you know that things kept adding on top of each other and pretty soon the National Guard came into town and of course things quieted down in a hurry then, and then Kasper left and for about a month or month and a half, everything was quiet, and then this --- the local authorities wanted to try Kasper on sedition and inciting a riot.

(MORE)

SHATTUCK (CONT'D)

I think it was, and then he came into town for that trial, and then after that, this intimidation within the school that's happened just recently, started.

MORSE: What sort of intimidation was it?

SHATTUCK

They'd go down the halls and maybe push a Negro student or - I remember they threw some Negro student's books out into the rain one day, and they poured some ink and some eggs down into a Negro student's locker, and I think they threw a book at a Negro student in a Study Hall.

MORSE: Jerry, how do you personally feel about having Negro classmates?

SHATTUCK

Well, I didn't ask for integration and I wasn't enthusiastic about getting it, but the Supreme Court said that our High School should be integrated, and so I thought that I should do all I could to bring this Court Order about peacefully. I think our football coach said - put it very well. He said: "All through your life you're going to come up against things that you don't like," but he says, "you are going to have to accept them anyway and just make the best out of them that you can," and that's the way I feel about it too, and I think that that's the way most of the students feel.

EDWARD R. MURROW

The twelve colored students who came down every morning from Foley Hill also had a lot to get used to.

JO ANN ALLEN

And then Monday morning when we started to school, there were only a few people around, and I thought maybe well they're just here to be curious and they wanted to see us come in and that they would leave later, but then on the next day when things -- when more people came and -- and the young boys started walking with signs, I began to wonder and think, well, maybe they're not going to accept us like I thought they were, and on Wednesday morning, I almost cried to go back home, because there were so many people and they looked so mean and they looked like they just wanted to grab us and throw us out. They didn't want us at all. I could just see the hate in their hearts, and when we got inside the school, most of the children were very nice to us, and then there were some you could tell that they didn't want us there.

They really show you in a big way. They put signs on lockers and told us to get out and they threw paper at us and they shoved us in the halls, and they shoot -- threw chalk at us, and said all sorts of nasty things and it just made me feel bad, and I couldn't concentrate at all on my lessons.

EDWARD R. MURROW

But more than on any other individual, the brunt of the pressure was exerted on Principal D. J. Brittain, Jr., who had fought the original battle for segregation and was now fighting to obey the law of the land.

MORSE: Mr. Brittain, as Principal of Clinton High School, have you yourself suffered any personal harassment since this situation began?

D. J. BRITTAIN, JR.

Yes sir. I --- I can frankly say that I've suffered nothing but personal harassment - and other people too. My wife and teachers and students in the school, or anybody that took a stand to obey the law - not necessarily that they agreed with it, but any --- any person - to --- for myself, the first day and night my telephone rang incessantly. I guess my life was threatened ten or twelve times by anonymous telephone callers who would all hang it up. I have since had my phone number changed four times to keep from getting these annoying calls. I received letters, many through the mail. I received two today, one of which was an unsigned letter, of course, which said that they felt that I was a lowdown person and used other vile names and felt that someone should throw acid in my face or in the face of someone in my family, and that I wasn't fit to live. Now, I have had a number of those kind of letters and those letters are always anonymous. They never put a name on them, and our other teachers have been called names of all kinds, and they have make it --- have made it a point within the last few weeks to do anything they could to make it difficult for the teachers.

MORSE: How would you characterize the attitude of most of your pupils in this situation?

D. J. BRITTAIN JR.

They have stood by us loyally in --- in every test that came up, and we feel that they still do to a large degree. We believe like -- we believe that there may be forty students in the school who are creating the trouble that we have at the present time, and subject to this, or before this, an organization, a Youth Organization, has been organized which was connected with the White Citizens' Council and has their full backing, and I understand has the same goals, and these people, and I have talked to several of them in the school, are encouraging other people, if not doing things themselves, to drive the Negroes out of the school.

Now, when I talked to Mr. Kasper at the beginning of school, he wanted to know what I was going to do about getting the "niggers" - in those words ' "out of Clinton High School," and I told him that I had three choices -- that I could resign my job, or I could stay with it and obey the law, or I could do what he said, and that I chose none of those except to abide by the law as it was stated. But Mr. Kasper informed me that he was interested in only two things, and those were, one, to drive the Negro students out, and, two, to get me out of my job. Here is a matter that is clearly a decision of the United States Supreme Court, and we do not feel that if we allow or teach our citizens to disobey this law, that they are learning the right principles of citizenship. In otherwords, if they can do that, they can violate any other law or any other decision of the country.

(MORE)

D. J. BRITTAIN JR. (CONT'D)

We have also been working at the problem of trying to get people to understand each other better and be more tolerant towards each other, and one of the interesting developments of this thing is - to me has been that I am now being accused of being a Communist. I was born in Tennessee. I've lived my life in Tennessee. I attended Tennessee schools. I attended Merryville College in Tennessee to get my Bachelor's Degree and Master's Degree at the University of Tennessee, and if there is anything about me that is Communistic, I certainly do not know what it is, and it looks to me like, however, that some of the attacks and methods that are being used against the schools and against myself lean more in that direction than anything that I have ever done or said. Quite frankly, I think I can feel like many people in Europe feel.

My wife and I, since the opening of school, are always careful when we go home. We study the premises. When we get in,we lock the doors and get the lights on. Any noise or any sound that occurs, we are always concerned at what it is. There have been some nights when we have felt that it was -- the only safe thing for us to do was to stay out of town. We have visited our friends at times. It is just a constant thing which I'm sure it is part of the organization to wear myself and my wife down.

(MORE)

D. J. BRITTAIN JR. (CONT'D)

It just presses you down every day lower and lower, and to me, it is an amazing thing that an American citizen, living in the United States, is --- has to be subjected to this, while the lawless citizens, those who refuse to abide or accept the law, continue to run free. I know this is not a true picture of America. I know it is not a true picture of the majority of the people of Anderson County, but it is a picture of myself and several other citizens in Clinton who have tried to abide by the law.

EDWARD R. MURROW

The most talked about man in Clinton is John Kasper of Washington, D.C. John Kasper, still awaiting appeal of a one-year sentence, is the self-appointed Executive Secretary of the Seaboard Citizens' Council and a protege of Ezra Pound. Since his two arrests, he is forbidden from interfering in Clinton, but because it is impossible to measure his full effect on the community, without observing him in action, we followed him to nearby Kentucky. On December 12, he was speaking to a White Citizens' Council group in a fourth-floor loft.

JOHN KASPER

The argument simply does not hold that the white race being a minority -- rather being a majority in the United States should turn over to a group of people only removed from slavery eighty years and only removed from the jungle by a few hundred years, turn over to them the control of our entire civilization. The basis of common law is the custom of the people, and if the custom of the people in Anderson County is to keep the races separate, then the Supreme Court law doesn't mean anything - it doesn't.

EDWARD R. MURROW

John K[illegible]r on the Ku Klux Klan.

JOHN KASPER

In e[illegible] years in every Southern state, the segregation (BANGS ON [illegible]) laws we are fighting for today were written - every one of them - by the Ku Klux Klan - which saved the South, and the men who stood face to face at Chickamauga --- Braxton, Bragg and General Thomas, if they didn't have a principle to fight and die for; if they said, "Well, we'll just let this thing go on," every single one of us here tonight would be julatttos and not white. Every one of us.

EDWARD R. MURROW

John Kasper on the people of the South.

JOHN KASPER

They underestimated the intelligence and the resistance power of the mountain folk down here in Tennessee and Kentucky. They underestimated that. They thought, well maybe they were dealing with a group of hillbillies, rednecks, crackers, but those are the real people in the United States. Make no mistake about it, and those hillbillies and crackers, as Billy Branham said, they're the purest white people living on the face of the earth anywhere and the strongest. Among them are men who get on their knees and pray every Sunday and they pray too. They pray hard. They believe in that Bible and they believe in Jesus Christ.

EDWARD R. MURROW

Mr. Kasper tells of his Clinton adventure.

JOHN KASPER

When I was in Charlottesville, I saw a little piece in the Charlottesville paper which said that integration was a-comin' in Tennessee for the first time - the first school - Clinton High School. It happened to be just a day away and I wanted to find out how the folks felt about it. I didn't think they were for it but I didn't tell them anything about that. I just went door to door. I showed them a picture of nigger soldiers kissing some white girls. You've probably all seen that picture - Army and the -- Fort McClellan, Alabama. Some say it's Germany - it doesn't make any difference.

(MORE)

JOHN KASPER (CONT'D)

They're still niggers in American army uniforms kissing white girls. It doesn't make any difference whether it's Germany or Alabama. Being done; it's wrong.

Now, I showed them the picture and I asked them if they knew about the niggers going to school the next day, and they said they knew about it or they heard something about it or they didn't hear about it. Some of them hadn't even haard about it, and I asked them how they felt about that, and they said, "I'm a-gin' it. (KASPER BANGS ON TABLE.) What can we do about it? Nothing we can do about it."

So I told them something about picketing - how labor unions operate. I told them to be down at the school the following day - no, Monday morning, and I would be there with them and we'd picket and we'd -- we'd discuss this thing with the local officials. We would find out what, if anything, could be done about it.

EDWARD R. MURROW

John Kasper on Politicians.

JOHN KASPER

What we are trying to do is regain local control of local affairs, and it is local government - local corruption that we must deal with first. You can hardly expect to have a choice between the hollow pumpkin in the -- the hollow pumpkin on a pole who is in the White House now and the man who ran against him in the recent election - national election.

(MORE)

JOHN KASPER (CONT'D)

Two men - both of them dedicated to stupidity and treachery, both of them. It doesn't mean a thing - either one of them. When you compare them to the patron saint of the Republican or Democratic Parties - Jefferson or --- or Lincoln, or any of those people, why these men are nothing ... our President today. They're just sworn enemies of the American Republic, sworn enemies of the Constitution, do everything they can in their power to destroy it, and have consistently for thirty-five years, each -- each and every one of them.

EDWARD R. MURROW

John Kasper on the Supreme Court.

JOHN KASPER

The idea is clear I think in everybody's mind that the right aim of law is to prevent coercion either by force or by fraud, and the Supreme Court decision is exactly, precisely fraudulent, precisely coercive, but the Supreme Court is in there for life and the whole Federal Judiciary is in there for life, and there's nothing you can do about it. An impeachment is silly. I mean it's just --- it's so hard to accomplish that it's probably easier to assassinate a man. The Supreme Court - we know they're Communists. We know that to combine nine men in the Supreme Court don't make one good Civil Claims Judge, but yet on the other hand, combined, they make one of the most deadly Communist hydra-headed monsters we've ever known, but I am absolutely confident we're going to destroy that too.

(MORE)

JOHN KASPER (CONT'D)

I say intergration can be reversed. It can be stopped anywhere provided an attack is made at every single level. That meetings of the County Court are attended; that the constant self-same demands are made; that people keep hitting the Judge who made the original ruling; that pressure - tremendous pressure is brought to bear on that School Principal, on the School Board, on the local newspaper, or whoever it is that happens to be responsible. There is no sense any longer appealing to Senator so and so or President --- or the President or the Supreme Court Judge. It has got to be a pressure down here which is more or less like a lit stick of dynamite and you throw it in their lap and let them catch it, and then they can do what they want with it but let them worry about it.

EDWARD R. MURROW

Clinton and the Law will continue immediately after this message from Pan American World Airways.

COMMERCIAL

EDWARD R. MURROW

Nine o'clock on the morning of December 4, 1956, was conceivably the darkest hour of the worst day in Clinton's history. The Reverend Paul Turner, a Baptist, was beaten up after escorting six negro youths to school. There were witnesses.

MRS. VIVIAN SHOOPMAN

It was a --- it was a horrible thing and I thought they were actually killing him. Blood was streaming down his face and even - it just looked that blood was running out of his eyes. I asked some one in the group - just anyone - to help him, and when there was no response, I went to him and tried to assist him by pulling some of the men's arms from around his face, and all the time the men in this group who were standing around were screaming "kill him," and that's exactly what I thought they were going to do.

I certainly don't consider that it was an act of bravery. It was just a matter of the right or wrong thing to do, and I did what I thought was right, and I'm --- I'm certainly not ashamed of the fact that I did. It's just that I'm ashamed really for the people of Clinton that it did happen in such a nice town where such nice people live.

EDWARD R. MURROW

Reverend Turner is thirty-three years old, has spent all of his life in Tennessee.

REVEREND PAUL W. TURNER

For about five days these negro students, having of course the legal right to attend Clinton High School, had stayed home because of harassment and hindrance and heckling and threats upon their lives and incidents that actually would make anybody scared.

(MORE)

REVEREND PAUL W. TURNER (CONT'D)

I chose to take such a stand on this moral principle - that as long as the law is the law as it is in our land, and as long as they did personally choose to come to Clinton High School, their legal right, that they had a moral right to attend unheckled and unhindered and unharassed. It was this that prompted me to accompany them. Though there were quite a few hecklers we made our way to the high school building without any overt incident. When I emerged from the school building, about five or ten minutes later, the hecklers were still there and they heckled me personally. About three hundred yards away from the high school - we were far away from where the policemen were doing their duty, of course, in front of the high school one of the Citizens' Council members had stationed himself with about three other men on the corner. As I made my way to that corner, they jumped me. I retreated across the street - Broad Street of Clinton, trying to keep him at arm's length while the other fellows were trying to surround me and to hold my arms and to get me stationary for the beating. I retreated all the way across the street trying to avoid any incident. Finally, I found myself pretty well backed up against the Bishop Building on the other side of the street. I knew then that I had to do something and it was at that time also that one man successfully held my arms down and allowed the number 1 man of their gang to land a pretty good blow upon my nose.

(MORE)

REVEREND PAUL W. TURNER

It was at that time also that I realized I had to defend myself in some way, and so I took off after the man who had slugged me, pinned him against a car, and immediately about eight to ten people were on our backs. After a while, when the police arrived, everybody scattered pretty much. We came up from our position bending over, I took a hold of the two fellows that led the attack - one in one hand - one in the other, and shoved each of them into the arms of a policeman, and from there they took them on over to the police station. I retreated into a doctor's office.

EDWARD R. MURROW

But everyone did not applaud Reverend Turner's act which, coincidentally, occurred on the same day that Clinton was electing a new Mayor. James Meredith, a grocer, running for Mayor with the backing of the White Citizens' Council, was badly defeated - claims that the Reverend's action may have swung the election to his opponent.

JAMES B. MEREDITH

My name's James B. Meredith. I'm operator of the City Food Market in Clinton, Tennessee. I was in this Mayor's race here December the fourth, nineteen fifty-six which I was defeated. Well, about the election, I think is a lot of misrepresentation - a lot of it started here in this Clinton Courier News which is a local weekly newspaper here. I've been here a resident of this county around twenty -- a little better than twenty years.

(MORE)

JAMES B. MEREDITH (CONT'D)

The way he had me represented as if I might have been Jesse James or somebody just come in here on a horse - rode into town, got off, which that was untrue. I've been here on this street for about twenty some years operating a grocery store.

They made it out to be segregation against integration. As for me, I'm like ninety-five percent, I'd say, of the people here in Anderson County. I am against integration. Of --- of course, we believe in negro having equal rights, equal education, and equal facilities, but we think they should have them in their own place. As for being endorsed by the White Citizens' Council, as everybody knows, I came out in this race on my own --- as --- my friends came in the store here and encouraged me to run this Mayor's race. I was running a good race in this Major's race up until the morning before the polls opened - why this minister, he went up on the hill to bring the niggers down to school, and then a few minutes after that, why the scuffle I hear started down somewhere in the lower end of town.

That was approximately, I'd say, about ten minutes before the polls opened. As to whether or not that was political, I --- I don't know. My understanding was that niggers wasn't supposed to come to school that morning, but I figure on coming back in either two or four years from now and winn' this Mayor's race.

EDWARD R. MURROW

There were other merchants involved and some were losing customers because they stood by the Court Order. This is R. G. Crossno, Chairman of the School Board.

R. G. CROSSNO

I am sure there is no doubt in your mind as to my offical connection with the dairy company. As President of the Norris Creamery, Incorporated, we too have had threats - boycott of our product in a number of instances. We have lost accounts which we have served ten, twelve, fifteen years as result of my being a member of this particular School Board. What I would like to assure you as a Faculty and my fellow members on the Board, if it becomes necessary for me to make a decision as to whether I sell a quart of milk or resign from the School Board, I would like to assure you here and now that I will not sell a quart of milk but will remain a member of this School Board.

EDWARD R. MURROW

Also on December 4th, the Principal's wife was knocked down and several white and colored children were beaten. The School Board asked for Federal protection, and at 11:45 closed the high school until order could be restored. Mrs. Eleanor Davis, a mother and a teacher, explains to a P.T.A. group what it was like.

MRS. ELEANOR DAVIS

We were stunned. There were some who were jubilant. Sure, they had wanted it to happen and they rejoiced that now they didn't have to go to school and they could keep other people from going to school who really wanted an education, but those were few in number. There were other students who were so stunned they didn't know whether to leave or not. Going down the hall, I found students crying. I found Seniors who were bitter because they felt that they might not be able to graduate. Of course, tension had been high and you can imagine reaction - the various reactions.

After the students left, the Faculty didn't want to leave. Somehow we just couldn't leave. We met together in the Faculty Room and we felt defeated. We felt as if we'd waved a flag of surrender and we didn't want to wave a flag of surrender. We didn't want to admit that we couldn't control the situation. It was not until the acquittal of Kasper in our local Criminal Court and the organization of the Youth Council that we began to have a breakdown within the school.

(MORE)

MRS. ELEANOR DAVIS (CONT'D)

The members of the Youth Council were not all students, but among those who were students, we had some habitual troublemakers, disiplinary problems, students who found it difficult to pass, and some of the students who belonged to the Youth Council were so ashamed of the fact that they had to belong, that they refused to wear their badges. They had only joined at the insistence of their parents. They refused to participate in any of the trouble making. I know because I talked with them.

There are a few students who have been so sensitive to this situation, to the things that they've heard on -- or seen on the outside, that they have drawn within themselves, and they're not the same as they used to be. They're afraid to express themselves, and they've lost that happy, carefree attitude of youth. Of course, we hope that time will heal that and they will be once more their happy selves.

Now, I don't think anybody can say enough concerning the courage of the negro students themselves who were willing to face persecution in their home town to get an education. The majority of students, and I do mean the majority, have undergone this crisis with great courage and faced it intelligently, trying to be courteous and helpful at all times, and I think these students have grown up a little bit as a result of it. That's all. (APPLAUSE)

EDWARD R. MURROW

(BELLS RINGING)...That Sunday, with the school still closed, and the FBI still in town, Reverend Turner faced his all-white congregation for the first time since his controversial act.

REVEREND PAUL W. TURNER

... The Bible is without precedent as a book and I personally have no fear that it will ever be superseded. But many have tried to misuse the Bible, trying to justify some low standard of conduct by the very Bible that they profess to love and by the book that never compromises with sin, with pride, with prejudice, or with hate. Bill Graham tells the following story: "Shortly after the Civil War in a very fashionable church in Richmond, Virginia, there entered a negro man one Sunday morning when Communion was being served. He walked down the aisle and took his place at the altar to partake of the elements of the Lord's Supper. There was a rustle of anger that swept through the congregation. Sensing this delicate situation, a distinguished gentleman stood up, and walking down the aisle, he took his place by his colored brother. Immediately, his magnificent example swept over the spirits of the rest of the people in that congregation, and they followed him to the altar, taking their place there, too. This man was none other than Robert E. Lee." My friends, we have been too far away from God. When mobs are able in our land to flout the law, the tragic result is a Cicero, Illinois, or a Phonenix City, Alabama.

(MORE)

REVEREND PAUL.W. TURNER (CONT'D)

Here in Clinton, we are not especially against integration. We are not especially against segregation, but we are positively and definitely against the disintegration of our community and our body politic that we cherish above all things, realizing that where anarchy prevails, none of us has anything of any value and none of us has any freedoms any more, and now we realize more clearly than ever before that it is Christ or chaos. (PAUSE)

May we pray?

EDWARD R. MURROW

Clinton and the law will continue after a few words from our friends at Pan American World Airways.

COMMERCIAL

EDWARD R. MURROW

The next morning, December 10, Clinton High School opened its doors again. Principal Brittain had invited the County Attorney, Eugene Joyce, to tell the student body what the law expected of them.

COUNTY ATTORNEY EUGENE JOYCE

I am here this morning in my official capacity as County Attorney to tell you what in the future the Board of Education and this faculty will expect of you as students. It is not my intention to tell you what to think, nor it is my --nor is it my desire to tell you what to believe, but it is my duty to tell you how to act in the future, so long as you are students at Clinton High School.

(MORE)

COUNTY ATTORNEY EUGENE JOYCE (CONT'D)

To my knowledge, never in the history of American education has it been necessary to read an instrument such as this to a specially called Student Assembly. I have been asked now to read to you this Injunction from the United States District Court of the Eastern District of Tennessee: "And this Cause, it appearing from sworn Petition...

EDWARD R. MURROW

(VOICE OVER) ..But even before the school had been reopened, the long arm of the Federal Law had taken over. U.S. Marshals had moved into Clinton and arrested sixteen men and women accused of violating Judge Taylor's injunction.

Their arraignment took place in nearby Knoxville on December 10, the same day school reopened. Here are eight of the defendants on their way to the courthouse, and here is the voice of the County Attorney reading the injunction.

COUNTY ATTORNEY EUGENE JOYCE

"That on August the 29th, nineteen fifty-six, a crowd of people, agitated by one John Kasper, attacked one of the negro children of the school; that Kasper stated on various occasions that the Court had no authority to issue the aforesaid Order of Desegregation in the Clinton High School, and that it should not be obeyed."

(MORE)

COUNTY ATTORNEY EUGENE JOYCE (CONT'D)

"It is ordered and decreed by the Court that the aforementioned persons, their agents, servants, representatives, attorneys, and all other persons who are acting or may act in concert with them, be and they hereby are enjoined and prohibited from further hindering, obstructing or in any wise interfering with the carrying out of the aforesaid Order of this Court, or from picketing Clinton High School either by words or acts or otherwise."

EDWARD R. MURROW

The young woman under arrest is Mrs. Zella Nelson, daughter of Clem Dishman. Reporter Morse talked to Dishman at his home on College Hill.

ARTHUR MORSE

This is Clem Dishman who lived in Clinton for twenty years, has his own garage downtown. Clem, what do you think about the situation here in Clinton?

CLEM DISHMAN

The way I understand it is that my daughter and the rest of these folks here were signed up to be a witness in this little case here the city affairs a 'fightin' inside the corporation, and they gather them up, and they take them over to Knoxville and put them in --- put them in jail over there. They even put my daughter in there with I think it's either six or seven criminal women - the way I look at it --- just in a bull pen, and I don't --- can't see nothing fair about that.

(MORE)

CLEM DISHMAN (CONT'D)

You see what I --- what I ---what --- what needs to be done the way I look at it now, these --- there's only about six or eight of 'em here goes to school. I think you'll find they're eight. Why couldn't them people just go to some other school? They got a colored school here at Knoxville, and Anderson County offered to pay their tuitions, furnish a bus, furnish the gas; they even went enough -- went far enough to furnish a colored driver. They asked for a colored driver over here just before the Pastor went up on the hill to lead them off - to drive the bus. They had a notion to go in --- they had that much notion to going - when he goes up and causes all the trouble, see. The Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Paul Turner, goes up on the hill here, leads the colored off, puts them into school, goes over in town then and has this fight. I think the Supreme Court when they ruled that they have segregation everywhere --- I think they kind of misrepresented the Charter the way I look at it now. I don't know too much about the law but if it'll work in one place it'll work in another. It'll work in all. You take just nine men out there or whatever you might want to call it - well, over in Russia they got the same thing over there. They got the same nine men over there as the ruling of --- for that country. I don't think that's right. I think that's a Communist way of doing business. Now, I'll tell you what I think about it. That's just the way I think about it. See what I mean?

MORSE Yes. Well, what do you think about --- about John Kasper?

CLEM DISHMAN

I think John Kasper's a real man. I think --- I think they kind of got him under a bad deal this year and a day stuff, myself. Now, I'm just telling you from my personal self, see, of thinking. That what I think about Kasper. I don't think there's a finer man nowhere. He just woke us up around here and the people around here - this government we're living under - the way I look at it that he just woke us up to the fact that we're just living under anything that might --- anybody might want to do around here. This newspaper over here - Wells - I heard him swear on that stand over there, hisself, that he put in that paper what he thought the County needed to know --- the man that runs the paper right here in this town.

MORSE: Thanks very much, Mr. Dishman.

DISHMAN: You're more than welcome.

MORSE: Appreciate your talking to us.

DISHMAN: You're more than welcome. Glad to have met you.

EDWARD R. MURROW

Dishman's daughter is no longer in Clinton High School because her father doesn't want her in a desegregated school. Jo Ann Allen's father has withdrawn her for a different reason. They're getting out.

HERBERT ALLEN

My name is Herbert Allen, and I've lived in Clinton for twenty-four years, and I found it to be a nice, little town to live in. Very peaceful - very quiet. We never had any trouble in this little town. A thing like this happens sometimes, we say overnight, but this thing is to be, and quite naturally some doesn't think it should be, but God said he created all men equal and all men alike, and so therefore, none of us stands above the other person in God's sight, and we as a negro race, we are only in Clinton, Tennessee, abiding by the Supreme Court ruling that we'd send our children to the high school in this Anderson County. We hadn't broke any law. We hadn't went against the court ruling, but we leaving now for Los Angeles, California, not so much because of this situation, but that I might better myself and that Jo Ann might have a little bit more freedom in her school activities and in her ...

JO ANN: Career?

HERBERT ALLEN: Career.

JO ANN ALLEN

During all the excitement - all the things that the people were doing, I was able to accomplish something. I made two A's and a B, and the only bad grade was a C, which isn't very bad, but I [illegible] an A or a B.

(MORE)

JO ANN ALLEN (CONT'D)

My teachers were very proud of me and my parents were too because they thought I did well even through all of the strain that we did have to go through, because sometimes I couldn't keep my mind on my lesson for thinking about the people on the outside and what they were thinking of.

HERBERT ALLEN

And we're not leaving here with hatred in our hearts against anyone even those who was against us. We do not hate those people because we realize that those people just misled and they was trained and brought up the way --- that way. That's why they were never ... able to understand.

EDWARD R. MURROW

Clinton High School resumed four days ago after the scheduled Christmas recess with six hundred and fifty-five students enrolled. There were no incidents.

Some say that the worst is over; that although there is still little enthusiasm for desegregation, there is now a strong will to comply with the law. There are those in Clinton who say the big change came when the Federal Marshals and the FBI moved in. Others, among them Editor Horace Wells, claim it was Reverend Turner's beating.

EDITOR HORACE WELLS

Another thing that has come about - I think this is largely due to the attack on Paul Turner the other day, was that many of us had stood by, unwilling to stand up for integration, and yet also unwilling to violate the law, and when Paul Turner was attacked, the --- the feeling of the community was more or less solidified. No mere words could have done it. It took some kind of action - a heroic action - something of this beating that was administered to Paul Turner, to bring us to the point where we're willing to stand up and say, "Now we're not going to put up with being pushed around any more. We believe in law and order, and that's what we want and that's what we are going to have," and that's the reason that people are willing to go to Knoxville and put the matter before Federal Judge Taylor and say, "Now we want this Order enforced."

The trial of the sixteen Clinton defendants is set for January 28. There are those who question the legality of the injunction, including the Attorneys-Generals of three Southern states and a few columnists.

The courts will decide.

As for Clinton, a joint meeting of the Junior and Senior Chambers of Commerce unanimously adopted a Resolution upholding the desegregation law.

TOM ROLLINS

In the last four months we have had a lot of controversial world-wide publicity on Clinton, most of which has been brought about by a very small minority of the local citizens. Most of us are peaceful, law abiding, home loving people that abhor violence and mob action. We believe in our government, in our laws and the justices handed down by our courts. Even though the government and our laws and our courts do not always please us as individuals, we as Americans and citizens believe first in personal freedom. This personal freedom is not the freedom to form mobs and take the law into our own hands, but freedom to think for ourselves, and if an issue doesn't please us, to use every legal, peaceful means at our command to change the issue.

The Bill of Rights is also a bill of obligations. I read that somewhere the other day, but it's good, it just fits. Today, we're just concerned with whether or not you are for or against law and order.

EDWARD R. MURROW

That was "Clinton and the Law" - an examination after the fact of what happened in Clinton, Tennessee. This was in no sense an effort to examine the whole complex problem of segregation as such. In other communities both the problems and the solution may not be identical to those that were reached in Clinton, Tennessee.

And now for SEE IT NOW good night and good luck.

COMMERCIAL

SIN
Lilienthal, D.E.

January 16, 1957

Dear Dave:

Belatedly, my thanks for the note on the Clinton story. The response has been universally favorable. My greatest satisfaction was that the people in Clinton thought it was a fair piece; we even received favorable messages from people in jail.

Delighted to know you are back in the country again. When can you and Helen come up for a week-end?

As ever yours,

Mr. David E. Lilienthal
44 Wall Street
New York 5, New York

rh

January 8/56

DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

Dear Ed:

To you and Fred F. & organization, a salute on the Clinton story, in our "home county" of Anderson. The enclosed letter to Horace Wells may interest you.

As always

Dave

Edward R. Murrow
CBS

52N

TENNESSEE
EXECUTIVE OFFICE NASHVILLE

FRANK G. CLEMENT
GOVERNOR

January 14, 1957

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I watched your See It Now program on "Clinton and the Law", on one of our local stations yesterday. It had been delayed one week due to previous program commitments.

I realized after watching it that there was certainly no need for any concern on our part, as perhaps was evidenced in my recent telephone conversation with you. This was indeed in the Murrow tradition--clear, objective, factual and hard hitting. It was a valuable case study on a complex, moral, sociological, educational and political problem. While the program did no preaching, it was still a very powerful lesson in brotherhood for those who had the discernment to see it.

Congratulations on a masterful job of reporting, and I hope that you and your excellent staff will see fit to return to Clinton a year from now and do a follow-up show. I feel confident that by then the heros of your documentary, the principal, the pastor, the editor, and all the others, will still be there, still guiding their community toward harmony, while the John Kaspers, et al, will be nothing more than an evil memory. And yet without the Kaspers in our lives, few of us would realize the true value of the democracy in which we live; that with all its faults it is something worth fighting for.

Sincerely yours,

Howard E. Anderson

HEA:mr

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
"SEE IT NOW"
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Marshall, Glen

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Fred Friendly

from: Mr. Jones

January 17, 1957

I thought perhaps you and Ed Murrow might like to glance at the attached correspondence sent to us through Glenn Marshall, Jr., of Jacksonville, Florida.

MERLE S. JONES

MSJ:mjw

CBS TELEVISION

A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

485 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, NEW YORK · PLAZA 1-2345

MERLE S. JONES
President

January 15, 1957

Mr. Glenn Marshall, Jr.
Station WMBR Broadcast House
Jacksonville 7, Florida

Dear Glenn:

Thank you for sending along the letter you received from the Florida Council on Human Relations.

Looking forward to seeing you before too long.

Sincerely,

/s/ MERLE S. JONES.

MSJ:mjw
bcc: Mr. Salant

WMBR

Radio and Television

BROADCAST HOUSE · JACKSONVILLE 7, FLORIDA

GLENN MARSHALL, JR.
President of WMBR

RECEIVED

JAN 14 1957

MERLE S. JONES

January 11, 1957

Mr. Merle Jones, President
CBS Television
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Merle:

I am enclosing a letter that we received from the Florida Council on Human Relations which is addressed to CBS Television but as this does not look like a copy, I am assuming that the envelope was addressed to WMBR. I am retaining a copy of it for my files but thought you would like to have the original as it represents a very fine expression on a most delicate subject in this area of the United States.

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely,

Glenn

Glenn Marshall, Jr.

GMJr:rl

Enclosure

1 - Pat

FLORIDA COUNCIL ON HUMAN RELATIONS

DEDICATED TO MAKING THE AMERICAN WAY WORK EVERYWHERE, EVERYTIME, FOR EVERYBODY

WM. K. WILLIAMS, Executive Director
HOWARD D. ROBERTS, Associate Director
E. CAROL KLOSE, Office Secretary

324 S. BEACH STREET
DAYTONA BEACH, FLORIDA
Phone CL 3-7072

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

DR. PAUL F. FINNER, Pres. Emeritus
Tallahassee
REV. CAXTON DOGGETT, President
Miami
EDWARD D. DAVIS, Vice-President
Central Life Ins., Tampa
MRS. W. C. WHITE, Secretary
Jacksonville
I. H. BURNEY, Treasurer
Afro-Amer. Ins., Jacksonville
DR. WARREN H. COLLIE
Dentist, West Palm Beach
MISS SARA LEE CREECH
Florist, Belle Glade
MRS. MARGARET BLAKE
Teacher, Tampa
HERBERT DAVIDSON
Editor, Daytona Beach
DAVISSON DUNLAP
Attorney, Jacksonville
PROF. A. L. KIDD, FLA. A & M
Tallahassee
W. C. TAYLOR
Mortician, Belle Glade

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

REV. JIM ARMSTRONG
Vero Beach
DR. GORDON E. BIGELOW
University of Florida
MRS. ROSABELLE C. BOND
St. Petersburg
REV. H. F. BROCKINGTON
Cocoa
REV. ALVIN BULLEN
Warrington
MRS. EDITH CARTER
Educator, Jacksonville
MRS. CECIL DAVIS, Pres.
UCW, Daytona Beach
MRS. FRED A. DIXON
YWCA, Jacksonville
THOMAS DREIER
Publisher, St. Petersburg
DR. WINSTON EHRMANN
University of Florida
REV. JOHN C. FULLER
Orlando
WILLIAM GAY
Attorney, St. Petersburg
RT. REV. C. A. GIBBS
Bishop A.M.E. Church
DR. H. D. GOODE
Dentist, Pensacola
REV. EDWARD T. GRAHAM
Miami
DR. I. S. HANKINS
M.D., Orlando
DR. GODFREY W. HAWKINS
Dentist, Miami
V. C. JOHNSON
Dinsmore
DR. HAL G. LEWIS
University of Florida
RT. REV. HENRY I. LOUTTIT
Bishop, S. Fla. Diocese
DR. RICHARD V. MOORE, Pres.
Bethune-Cookman College
DR. ELLWOOD C. NANCE, Pres.
University of Tampa
REV. J. B. NICHOLS
Pensacola
DR. GILBERT L. PORTER
Fla. State Teacher's Ass'n
MRS. MABEL N. REESE
Editor, Mt. Dora
HOLLIS RINEHART
Attorney, Miami
MRS. ELLEN F. ROBERTS
Teacher, Bonifay
MISS MARIE ROBERTS
Teacher, Miami
MRS. GEORGE P. SCHANCK, JR.
Orlando
MRS. DAISY H. STOCKING
Daytona Beach
RABBI J. MARSHALL TAXAY
Daytona Beach
MRS. DOROTHY C. TOMLIN
St. Petersburg
MRS. EDWARD W. ULRICH
Miami
DR. R. RECHE WILLIAMS, JR.
M.D., Tampa
MRS. MAYME E. WILLIAMS
Teacher, Miami
MRS. WARREN ZEUCH
Vero Beach

January 8, 1957

CBS Television Network
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Through this medium we wish to commend and thank you for your January 5th presentation of "Clinton and the Law - a study of desegregation by Messrs. Murrow and Friendly on the "See it Now" program.

Even though your general news presentations have made an outstanding contribution in objectively presenting the Southern controversy over desegregation, it is certainly gratifying to have you devote a special program to depicting the efforts of law-abiding Southerners as opposed to the lawless elements in the desegregation struggle. We certainly feel that it did much toward stimulating better interracial understanding and good will, and we hope it will serve to be a beginning of similar presentations.

For your information, ours is a statewide interracial organization working to promote harmony, understanding and equality of opportunity among all the people of the state. One of our brochures is enclosed for your review.

You have our sincere best wishes for a continuation of much success and happiness and many blessings. If at any time we can be of assistance to you, please do not be modest about contacting us.

Sincerely yours,

Wm K Williams

Wm. K. Williams, Exec. Dir.

Howard D. Roberts

Howard D. Roberts, Assoc. Dir.

HDR/ck

Affiliated with Southern Regional Council

Keckeisen

Florida Council on Human Relations

324 South Beach Street

Daytona Beach, Florida

affiliated with

Southern Regional Council

OUR PURPOSE:

To "WORK IT OUT LIKE GROWN-UPS"

The Florida Council stands for a calm, studied approach to the problems of the South. It believes the peaceful evolution of better race conditions in the South can best be brought about by the interracial conscience of the South, and that Southerners of both races can take the lead in solving their own problems.

OUR METHOD:

The Council works through education, fact finding and intelligent persuasion. It does not pressure for legislation, it carries on no court action, and it uses no pressure group tactics. It undertakes to do for Florida what the SRC has been doing for the South: "Search out the facts, and turn the light of reason upon problems which too often have been approached only on the basis of feeling."

OUR POLICY:

The Florida Council realizes that in Florida, with its great population consisting of large numbers of people of every race, color, religion, national origin and ancestry, there is no greater danger to the state, and its citizens than the existence of groups prejudiced against one another and antagonistic to each other because of these differences.

The Council will work for mutual understanding and respect among all groups in Florida. It will seek to eliminate prejudice, discrimination and disorder and give effect to the guarantee of equal rights for all, assured by the Constitution and the laws of Florida and of the USA.

We do not believe in the exclusive validity of any single approach or any single organization. There is not only room, but a desperate need for a wide variety of programs concerned with broadening democracy through legal, economic legislative, religious and educational means.

OUR ROOTS:

The Florida Council, datin deeply rooted in a Southwic ment to face current problem tions. In that year the Co racial Cooperation was foun
the South's leading church Among them were Dr. M. A inent Baptist minister; Mr. J nessman and philanthropist;
dean of the Emory Univers ology, and Dr. Will W. Alex sion's Director. The Comm meetings ground where the races could work together to tensions and avoid violence.
through persuasion and educ progress of which Southerner ly proud. Early in the 194 movement sought to unify an efforts. As a result, the Co racial Cooperation merged in ly formed Southern Regiona corporators of SRC were Moore, the Methodist Chur editor of the Atlanta Constitu
Clement, president of Atlan Charles S. Johnson, president and Dr. Howard W. Odum, pr at the University of North C

The Florida Council in turn the Florida Committee on I tion, the Florida Council of Interracial Cooperation, and t of the Southern Regional Co ginning, the Council's memel distinguished Floridans, white walks of life. Some of its p members were Bishops Frank D. Wing, Episcopal Church;
president of Florida A & M Co
Cooper Gibbs, Mrs. Henry H
M. M. White, Jacksonville;
Tampa; Rev. John D. Culmer

The Florida Council is one cils in 12 southern states, affi has its own membership, gove and staff. It is a nonprofit, no denominational organization.
tional and at the same time faiths. It is nonpolitical in th in political activities. Howev consult with public agencies makes its influence felt for government.

With the aid of a three y
Fund for the Republic in 1 ating back to 1919, is wide interracial move-

lems in search of solu-
Commission on Inter-ounded by a group of ch men and women.
. Ashby Jones, prom-
. John J. Eagan, busist; Dr. Plato Durham, ersity School of Thelexander, the Commis-mmission provided a e best people of both to erase prejudice, ease
ce. It made possible, ducation, much of the ners today are so just-1940's leaders in the and revitalize common Commission on Interin 1944 with the newnal Council. The in-re Bishop Arthur J.
hurch; Ralph McGill, titution; Dr. Rufus E. tlanta University; Dr.
ent of Fisk University;
, professor of sociology
h Carolina.
urn is the successor of n Interracial Cooperaof the Commission on d the Florida Division Council. Since its be-nebrship has included hite and Negro, in all s pioneer officers and nk A. Juhan and John ch; Dr. J. R. E. Lee, College; Judge George
Havens, Miss Eartha
e; Mr. C. D. Rogers, ner, Miami.
one of 12 such Coun-affiliated with SRC. It overning board, officers nonpolitical, and non-
n. It is nondenominaime supported by all that it takes no part vever, it can and does cies and officials and or truly representative year grant from the 1954, the Southern

GENERAL OBJECTIVES:

To create representative bodies of white and Negro citizens to consider in full democracy the necessary steps toward genuine integration.

To serve as a convincing demonstration of Southerners working together as fellow citizens without regard to race.

To stimulate local initiative to work for local solutions in full democracy, so that legislation and judicial rulings may be translated into justice for the individual in his every day life.

To counteract appeals to prejudice and violence by demagogues, professional bigots and hate organizations.

To present the facts about the state, and their implications, through newspapers, radio, magazines, pamphlets, and other public media.

To provide a program adaptable to local need in both the relatively backward and the relatively advanced areas of the state.

To give special emphasis to the development of leadership among promising young Floridans of all races.

To encourage effective functioning of enlightened citizens through the civic life of their communities.

To serve as a meeting ground for citizens of all races, occupations and religious persuasions.

SPECIFIC OBJECTIVES:

1. To take steps regarding the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court about segregation with particular emphasis on education and counseling on a local level.
2. To make surveys and stimulate programs to improve opportunities for all people in the areas of:
   Education
   Employment Health Housing
   Law enforcement
   Public Services, and Recreation
3. To protect individual rights and liberties.

Regional Council is assisting the 12 states affiliates' efforts to establish state offices with full time professional staff. Through the leadership of Dr. Paul F. Finner, chairman of the Florida Council, this step was completed in August, 1955.

MEMBERSHIP BLANK

Fla. Council on Human Relations
324 South Beach St., Daytona Beach, Fla.

Believing in the principles and aims of the FCHR, I would like to become a Single Member .....($5.00)

Joint Member .....($7.50)
(Husband & Wife)

Student .....($2.00)
Contributor .....($)

(Each membership includes subscription to "New South" a publication issued monthly by the Southern Regional Council.)

Full Name..... Street .....

City..... County..... Occupation.....

Check Money Order Cash

"Why I Belong to the FCHR"

Because no problem facing our state and nation is more important to the preservation of the free world and the success of democracy, and because I believe the problem can only be solved through education at the local level I am a member of the Florida Council on Human Relations. Right thinking people of both races by working together can solve the problem to the ultimate benefit of all of our citizens.

THE RT. REV. HENRY I. LOUITT
Bishop of South Florida
Episcopal Church

The program of the Florida Council stresses mutual understanding, harmony and good will in the preservation of law and order during a critical period.

PAUL F. FINNER
Professor Emeritus, F.S.U.

I belong to the Florida Council of Human Relations because of what I believe is its sincere Interest in, and its Sane approach to the problems of the People.

W. C. TAYLOR
Mortician Belle Glade

I belong to the Florida Council because I have seen terrific tensions develop between racial, religious, and nationality groups in our community and in our state. There is a great need for some organized effort to relieve these tensions when they develop and better still to prevent them from devloping. The Florida Council represents such an effort. It will do much to maintain harmonious human relations in our state.

CAXTON DOGGETT
Minister, Rader Memorial Methodist Church, Miami, Fla.

I am active in the Florida Council of Human Relations because it is made up of men and women who try earnestly to demonstrate in their daily lives the principles of true democracy and Christianity by treating people of all races and religions as neighbors. We hold that the rights of all men are inseverably linked so that we cannot harm nor degrade nor torment one individual from among all the millions on this planet without in some degree wounding each of the others. For our country to achieve its possibilities all its people of all races and all religions must work together for the betterment of all. To act otherwise is to demonstrate our denial of a belief in democracy.

THOMAS DREIER
1011 Brightwaters Blvd.
St. Petersburg Editor & Writer

I belong to the Florida Council on Human Relations because I believe it to be the best vehicle for solving of Interracial problems Southwide, Statewide, and on the local community level.

I. H. BURNEY
Vice President Afro-American Life Insurance Company

I belong to the Florida Council on Human Relations because, as a Christian, I am anxious every man shall share equally in all the blessings of a great democracy and that there shall be real brotherhood regardless of nationality or skin color. Since a group such as Florida Council can help to put these beliefs into action and that inspiration and strength comes from such a group, it is a true benefit to be a member.

MRS. C. W. WHITE, Jacksonville

I belong to the Fla. Council of Human Relations because I want to work effectively toward bringing the American principles of equality of opportunity and human dignity into full recognition and practice in Florida. This is an obligation to myself and to my state even more than to the large part of our population to whom the benefits of equality and dignity have been systematically denied.

MRS. NATHAN C. STARR, Gainesville

McDade, H.T.

SEN

January 16, 1957

Dear Mr. McDade:

Thank you for your gracious letter about our report on Clinton. The response to it has been mature and altogether favorable.

It is not disrespectful to my present sponsor, and no more than the truth to say that I never expect again to have such a close, cordial, and comfortable relationship with a sponsor as we had with Alcoa.

Thank you again for writing as you did.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. H. T. McDade
Public Relations Manager
Aluminum Company of America
P. O. Box 463
Alcoa, Tennessee

rh

Turner, Paul W.
S I N

January 9, 1957

Dear Reverend Turner:

My partner, Fred Friendly, has shown me your letter of December 21st. By now you will have seen our report on Clinton and trust that you will not feel your confidence in our reporters and editorial judgment was misplaced.

Sincerely yours,

Reverend Paul W. Turner
First Baptist Church
Clinton
Tennessee

rh

ERM
f41

First Baptist Church
PAUL W. TURNER, PASTOR
CLINTON, TENN.

December 21, 1956

Mr. Fred Friendly
CBS 485 Madison Street
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Friendly:

It has been a great and wonderful delight to have your staff, headed by Mr. Arthur Morse, here in Clinton for the last three weeks. As I said to him a few minutes ago by telephone, what you have done in filming our "situation" may be considered mutually beneficial, to you as a good program and to us as a nation's vindication of our townsfolk.

The two teams have been extraordinarily courteous and personable. You can be proud of them in their representation of CBS.

We look forward to January 6, when all eyes will be on "See It Now."

Yours sincerely,

Paul W. Turner

Paul W. Turner
Pastor

PWT:cl

Waring, T.R.
S SW

The News and Courier
ESTABLISHED 1803
CHARLESTON, SOUTH CAROLINA

THOMAS R. WARING
EDITOR

Jan. 22, 1957.

Mr. Fred W. Friendly,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Ave.,
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Friendly:

Thank you for your offer to let us see a film of Ed Murrow's report on Clinton, Tenn.

Since the article to which you refer appeared, several of us on the staff had an opportunity to see a private showing of it. We all thought it was skillfully done.

The report contains much that we consider propaganda for racial integration -- done with subtle restraint that, in our view, is unfortunately quite effective. I say "unfortunately" because we are committed to the belief that separation of the races is in the interest of people both white and Negro.

With best wishes, I am,

Sincerely,

T.R.Waring,
Editor.

Waring, J. R.
55/N

January 18, 1957

Dear Mr. Waring:

One of your readers was kind enough to send us a copy of your editorial of January 8 having to do with SEE IT NOW's recent television program called "Clinton and the Law".

Having read your Harpers article last year, Ed Murrow and I were, naturally, very interested in your comments and we should be equally interested in knowing what your reaction would be to the actual program. If you would care to view the film, we should be delighted to send you either a 16 or 35 millimeter print. A letter to Murrow or me at the above address will cause the film to be in your office within forty-eight hours.

Respectfully,

Fred W. Friendly

Mr. T. R. Waring
Editor
Charleston News & Courier
Charleston, South Carolina

FWF/hlt

"See It Now"
Wells, Dorothy

October 1, 1957

Dear Mrs. Wells:

Many thanks for your kind letter of September 20th. I am interested to hear how the fund is to be handled and feel that it is being done in a very sensible way. It was most thoughtful for you to write and tell me about it.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Dorothy Wells
Secretary
Clinton Courier News, Inc.
Clinton, Tennessee

mcc

September 20, 1957

Mr. Ed Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Now that fall is here again, the Clinton Parent Teacher Association has held its first meeting since the receipt of your most generous gift of $5,000 to be used as a Student Scholarship Fund, and the first order of business was the authorization of this letter to you to express our sincere appreciation for your generosity.

Needless to say that at the time the gift was announced originally, all of us in Clinton who are interested in the welfare of our school and the students there, were thrilled and grateful to you and to Mr. Friendly for your thoughtful and most helpful contribution.

We thought you would like to know that a committee of leading citizens experienced in handling scholarship awards is being organized to select those who are to benefit from the fund. Tentatively, it has been agreed that the money is to be loaned to worthy applicants, and to be repaid in order that it may be available over the years. Pending completion of our plans, the money has been placed in a savings account at the local bank.

May we again tell you that your gift is warmly appreciated, and will be disbursed carefully, making it possible for your generosity to be effective over the years in better educating the young people of this community and through education providing a better understanding between all of our people.

Yours very truly,

Dorothy P. Wells

Mrs. H. V. Wells Jr.
Secretary

Wilkins, Roy

FDR

January 16, 1957

Dear Mr. Wilkins:

Thank you for your letter about our report on Clinton. The response to that particular program was one of the most encouraging things that I have seen in a long while.

Thank you for writing as you did.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Roy Wilkins, Executive Secretary
National Association for the Advancement of Colored People
20 West 40 Street
New York 18, New York

rh

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE
20 WEST 40th STREET, NEW YORK 18, N. Y.
LOngacre 3-6890

January 10, 1957

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I am very grateful to you for the superb "See It Now" program on January 6 entitled, "Clinton, Tenn., and the Law."

This was a powerful exposition in a most persuasive manner of the American heritage of freedom, and the present threat to it which has arisen in some sections of our country.

Even if I were not who I am and did not have a special interest in the developing crisis, I would still, as an American, be thankful for your use of the medium of television to underscore Americanism.

Very sincerely yours,

Roy Wilkins

Roy Wilkins,
Executive Secretary.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison
New York, N. Y.

rw/mdj

NAACP Fight For Freedom

NATIONAL OFFICERS

President
Arthur B. Spingarn

Dr. Channing H. Tobias
Chairman of the Board

Vice-Chairman of the Board
Dr. Robert C. Weaver

Vice-Presidents
Rabbi Judah Cohn
Norman Cousins
Grace B. Fenderson
Lewis S. Gannett
Oscar Hammerstein, II
John Hammond
Dr. John Haynes Holmes
Dr. William Lloyd Imes
Dr. Allen F. Jackson
Hon. Ira W. Jayne
Eric Johnston
Eugene M. Martin
Dr. O. Clay Maxwell
L. Pearl Mitchell
Hon. Wayne Morse
T. G. Nutter
A. Philip Randolph
Ike Smalls
Willard S. Townsend
Bishop W. J. Walls
Andrew D. Weinberger

Treasurer
Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers

Assistant Treasurer
Hon. Theodore Spaulding

EXECUTIVE OFFICERS

Roy Wilkins — Executive Secretary
Thurgood Marshall — Special Counsel
Clarence Mitchell — Director, Washington Bureau
Henry Lee Moon — Director, Public Relations

Branch Department

Gloster B. Current — Director
Lucille Black — Membership Secretary
Ruby Hurley — Southeastern Regional Secretary
Franklin H. Williams — West Coast Regional Sec'y Counsel
Herbert Wright — Youth Secretary

Branch Field Secretaries

Lester P. Bailey, Clarence A. Laws
Mildred Bond, Charles A. McLean
Medgar W. Evers, Tarea H. Pittman
John W. Fiamer, Charles Price
Gertrude Gorman, Robert W. Saunders
Noah W. Griffin, Frank W. Smith
E. C. Washington, Jr.

Robert L. Carter — Assistant Special Counsel
Herbert Hill — Labor Secretary
James W. Ivy — Editor, The Crisis
Madison S. Jones — Special Assistant for Housing
John A. Morsell — Assistant to the Executive Secretary
Medora Stewart — Life Membership Campaign

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Atlanta, Ga. — Dr. Benjamin E. Mays
Baltimore, Md. — Lillie M. Jackson; Carl Murphy
Baton Rouge, La. — John G. Lewis, Jr.
Boston, Mass. — Dr. Allan Knight Chalmers; Kivie Kaplan
Brooklyn, N. Y. — George K. Hunton
Camden, N. J. — Dr. Ulysses Wiggins
Charlotte, N. C. — Kelly M. Alexander
Chicago, Ill. — Earl B. Dickerson
Cincinnati, Ohio — Hon. Theodore M. Berry
Cleveland, Ohio — Dr. Nathan K. Christopher
Columbia, S. C. — Rev. James Hinton
Dallas, Texas — A. Maceo Smith
Detroit, Mich. — Dr. James J. McClendon; Walter Reuther
East Orange, N. J. — Samuel Williams
Flint, Mich. — Dr. J. Leonidas Leach
Fort Worth, Texas — Dr. George D. Hemmingway
Greenwich, Conn. — Alfred Baker Lewis
Kansas City, Mo. — Carl R. Johnson
Los Angeles, Calif. — Dr. H. Claude Hudson; Loren Miller
Nashville, Tenn. — Z. Alexander Looby
Natchez, Miss. — Dr. A. M. Mackel
New York, N. Y. — Lillian A. Alexander; Dr. Algernon D. Black; Dr. Ralph J. Bunche; Hon. Hubert T. Delany; Dr. Buell Gallagher; Hon. Herbert H. Lehman; Eleanor Roosevelt; Amy E. Spingarn; Arthur B. Spingarn; Dr. Channing H. Tobias; Dr. Robert C. Weaver
Oak Bluffs, Mass. — Dr. S. Ralph Harlow
Oklahoma City, Okla. — Roscoe Dunjee
Philadelphia, Pa. — Dr. Harry J. Greene; Hon. William H. Hastie; Hon. Theodore Spaulding
Pittsburgh, Pa. — Daisy E. Lampkin; Jessie M. Yann
Richmond, Va. — Dr. J. M. Tinsley
Savannah, Ga. — Westley W. Law
Stillwater, Okla. — Donald Simmons
Washington, D. C. — Dr. W. Montague Cobb; Rt. Rev. Stephen Gill Spottswood

NATIONAL LEGAL COMMITTEE

Lloyd Garrison, New York, N. Y., Chairman

Atlanta, Ga. — A. T. Walden
Birmingham, Ala. — Arthur D. Shores
Boston, Mass. — Herbert E. Tucker, Jr.
Cambridge, Mass. — Benjamin Kaplan
Charleston, W. Va. — T. G. Nutter
Chicago, Ill. — Earl B. Dickerson; Sidney A. Jones, Jr.; W. Robert Ming, Jr.; Loring B. Moore
Cincinnati, Ohio — Theodore M. Berry
Dallas, Texas — W. J. Durham
Erie, Pa. — William F. Illig
Houston, Texas — Arthur J. Mandell
Ithaca, N. Y. — Milton R. Konvitz
Kansas City, Mo. — Carl R. Johnson
Los Angeles, Calif. — Robert W. Kenny; Loren Miller
Nashville, Tenn. — Z. Alexander Looby
New Orleans, N. Y. — A. P. Tureaud
New York, N. Y. — Harry Bragg; Bartley Crum; Morris L. Ernst; Osmond K. Fraenkel; Karl N. Llewellyn; James Marshall; Shad Polier; Louis Pollak; Samuel I. Rosenman
New York, N. Y. — Jean Sandifer; Andrew D. Weinberger; Herman Zand
Philadelphia, Pa. — William Coleman
Richmond, Va. — Oliver W. Hill; Spottswood W. Robinson, III
St. Louis, Mo. — Sidney R. Redmond
Tulsa, Okla. — Amos T. Hall
Washington, D. C. — George E. C. Hayes; George M. Johnson; Edward P. Lovett; James M. Nabrit; Frank D. Reeves; Ruth Wyand
Wilmington, Del. — Louis L. Redding

NATIONAL HEALTH COMMITTEE

Dr. W. Montague Cobb, Washington, D. C., Chairman

Albany, N. Y. — Dr. Joseph B. Robinson
Boston, Mass. — Dr. Edward L. Young
Camden, N. J. — Dr. Ulysses Wiggins
Chicago, Ill. — Dr. A. W. Mercer
Cleveland, Ohio — Dr. Nathan Christopher; Dr. James E. Levy
Detroit, Mich. — Dr. James J. McClendon
Flint, Mich. — Dr. J. Leonidas Leach
Hartford, Conn. — Dr. Allen F. Jackson
High Point, N. C. — Dr. Murray B. Davis
Kansas City, Kan. — Dr. A. Porter Davis
Los Angeles, Calif. — Dr. Emory I. Robinson
Natchez, Miss. — Dr. A. M. Mackel
New York, N. Y. — Dr. Ernest R. Alexander; Dr. Viola W. Bernard; Dr. Russell L. Cecil; Dr. Harold L. Ellis; Dr. Henry C. Falk; Dr. Myra Logan; Judge Myles A. Paige; Dr. C. B. Powell; Dr. Theodore M. Sanders; Dr. Robert S. Wilkinson
Opelousas, La. — Dr. A. C. Terrance
Philadelphia, Pa. — Dr. Harry J. Greene
Richmond, Va. — Dr. J. M. Tinsley
Roanoke, Va. — Dr. Harry T. Penn
San Antonio, Texas — Dr. C. Austin Whittier
Tulsa, Okla. — Dr. R. C. Bryant
Washington, D. C. — Dr. Millard Dean; Dr. Joseph G. Gathings; Dr. C. Herbert Marshall; Dr. Edward C. Mazique

"SEE IT NOW"

BURMA, BUDDHISM, NEUTRALISM

February 3, 1957

521
Melody, Ward B

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION

Washington 25, D. C.

March 7, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Thanks. Your correction on loans to Burma was most gracious - and effective.

Sincerely yours,

Ward B. Melody

Ward B. Melody
Assistant Director of Public Reports

520

CBS TELEVISION

Melody Ward B

Office Communication

to: Mr. Friendly

from: Mr. Murrow

February 26, 1957

Following is insert for SEE IT NOW, Sunday. Doesn't matter where it goes, but I suggest the very end of the show.

"Last month during a program on Burma this reporter said, 'Burma now desires United States aid but insists on paying it back, and unfortunately there is no category for this.'

I was wrong. The International Cooperation Administration informs me that we have offered a twenty five million dollar credit to Burma to be repaid over a forty year period with interest, and we have offered to lend Burma more than seventeen million dollars in Burmese currency.

I should have checked more closely with Washington. It must have been a case of the eyes of a fool being on the ends of the earth."

E.R.M.

rh

565

INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION ADMINISTRATION
Washington 25, D. C.

February 20, 1957

J. J.: thought they have an!

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

Your far-reaching "See It Now" television program of February 3, 1957, which featured Burma, has brought us a flurry of queries regarding our ability to extend foreign aid in the form of loans, particularly to Burma.

Reading the script of your February 3 show we note you stated that "Burma now desires United States aid but insists on paying it back and unfortunately there is no category for this."

The script quotes in part the reply of Louis Walinsky, whom you introduced as an American economist employed by the Burmese, as follows:

"The United States has helped Burma -- wants to help her now. Burma wants to pay for the help she gets. To me it's ironic that it is easier for us to extend aid on a gift basis or on a grant plus loans basis than on a loans repayable basis."

The queries we have received, and are still receiving, from private citizens, housewives and businessmen and from members of Congress who have had complaints from their constituents, attest that an erroneous impression was left with a great many people to the detriment of the foreign aid program.

The facts are that ICA can and does make loans to foreign countries, and is under a mandate of Congress to utilize loans wherever possible.

Burma is interested in repaying what she receives, and it is on this basis that talks with Burma are presently under way. We hope and expect these talks to be successfully concluded shortly.

The United States has offered a $25 million line of credit to Burma from ICA funds, to be repaid over a 40-year period with interest; and in addition, the United States has offered to lend to Burma the equivalent of $17.3 million in Burmese currency, derived from the proceeds of the sale to Burma of surplus American agricultural commodities under the terms of Public Law 480.

ICA has concluded loan agreements with foreign countries amounting to $112,500,000 during the first half of this fiscal year.

More than $2 billion in foreign aid funds have been used as loans rather than grants since the Marshall Plan started in mid-1948, and principal and interest collections have totaled over $176 million. Because principal and interest payments do not begin until the fourth year of such loans, these figures represent collections only on loans made from 1948 through 1953.

We are certain that you did not intend either to state our case erroneously or to bring unjustified criticism against the foreign aid program, and it will be greatly appreciated if you can help us get the facts to your "See It Now" audience.

Sincerely yours,

Ward B. Melody

Ward B. Melody
Acting Director of Public Reports

Niven, Paul.
SIN

July 3, 1956

Mr. Paul Niven
Room 1703
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Niven:

Your photographs arrived this morning. I am therefore sending today by special delivery both your passport which is duly visaed for Burma, and the document which you will have to present to immigration authorities on arrival at Rangoon. I also enclose some information materials on Burma which you can read during the voyage.

We have not yet received a reply to the cable concerning your visit to Burma. While we have every expectation that our proposal will go through, the regulations, as I explained to you before, require the approval of the Government for a visit such as yours. Should the reply from Rangoon arrive after you sail on the 5th, I will get in touch with you at your London address without fail.

With Best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Than Hla

(U Than Hla) Counselor

UTHHbac

c.c.
Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

2801

See It now

Confidential

Published by The Economist Newspaper Limited, 22, Ryder Street,
St. James's, London, S.W.1.

December 6th, 1956.

Foreign Report

CONTENTS

Polish Approaches
Washington and the Himalayas
Nepal on the Knife-edge
Who Pays for Salvage?
Burma's Jaundiced View of Barter

Polish Approaches

Three aspects of the Gomulka government's latest activities are being closely scrutinised by observers anxious to assess the future course of Poland's national policy. They are:

1. New attitudes toward Western Germany,
2. New relations with the Catholic church, and
3. New trends in trade with the free world.

The latest development in relations between Warsaw and Rome is the papal announcement that five bishops are being appointed to assist the Polish Primate in regard to Silesia, Pomerania and the other territories taken from Germany in 1945. This is seen as clear evidence not merely of (a) the rapprochement between Church and State in Poland symbolised by the reinstatement of Cardinal Wyszynski, but of (b) Poland's success in getting the Vatican to persuade German Catholics to modify their opposition to any papal action that even indirectly implied acceptance of the Oder-Neisse frontier.

This fits into the pattern of increasingly numerous, practical and frank contacts and exchanges between Poland and the Federal Republic. For several months there have been unofficial and informal discussions between Poles and West Germans, with journalists of both nationalities acting as intermediaries on occasion. Officials of the two governments have also met and talked at private houses in West Berlin.

It now seems possible that in 1957 the setting of Bonn-Warsaw relations on a new footing will get off to a practical start. But an exchange of consular representatives or missions, not of ambassadors, would be the only possible move in the immediate future; the West German government recently declared that it was not possible to envisage full diplomatic relations. Both sides, however, have an obvious interest in continuing to explore new possibilities.

But diplomats at the UN and in western capitals believe there is a long way to go yet before there can be a settlement of the basic German-Polish issues, for these involve (a) the definitive settlement of the frontier, and (b) the whole broad question of German reunion and Soviet withdrawal from central Europe. But Warsaw is trying to establish some kind of relations with the Federal Republic without reference to the frontier. At one recent encounter, the German asked if an exchange of consuls or diplomats would be construed as implying recognition of the Oder-Neisse frontier. The Pole said "no." He cited precedents for full diplomatic relations between nations whose frontiers were in dispute.

Two German inquiries made during these unofficial talks concerned (a) a "cultural condominium"—essentially, the reopening of German schools, financed from the Federal Republic, in the territories taken by Poland; and (b) a suggestion that some 80,000 to 100,000 displaced German families be allowed to go back to these territories. The Poles rejected both ideas. They might, they said, allow a few Germans to rejoin relatives in the Oder-Neisse territories, just as some Poles had been allowed to join their families in Western Germany. But they argued that to re-admit 100,000 families would revive the national minority problem.

TOO BIG A BITE?

A further Polish argument for refusing to yield an inch on the Oder-Neisse line is that it would be unthinkable to write off the huge effort that has been put into rehabilitating the "regained territories." Some Germans, however, point out that the effort has been too much for Poland. They can quote official Polish evidence of this failure—e.g. a Warsaw broadcast on November 25th which referred to "stagnation" in the territories since 1948, to failure "to raise the new settlers to the cultural level of the local population," and even to the mistake of "treating the western territories as an integral, unchangeable part of Poland."

Gomulka's Poland seems at least to be putting the Oder-Neisse problem in a more realistic light by modifying the picture, dear to communist propagandists, of a Western Germany restrained from making war to recover Silesia and Pomerania only by the might of the Red Army. The new picture is less over-simplified. Thus, on November 23rd, the Polish communist organ, Trybuna Ludu, printed an article insisting that "there can be no mention of peace in Europe while German revisionism, if only in thought, reaches out beyond the Oder and Neisse"; but, in the same issue, the paper's own correspondent in Western Germany wrote that:

> "The flourishing prosperity in Western Germany, the almost total absence of unemployment, the great improvement in living standards in recent years, and especially the stabilising of the livelihood of many resettlers (i.e. deportees from territories taken by Poland), means that more and more Germans regard the Oder-Neisse problem as less urgent, and the revisionist and revanchist campaign finds less and less response."

At the same time there is a visible eagerness to revive economic links with Western Germany (while leaving it to Russia to salvage the East German "Democratic Republic," which the Poles are no longer willing to help to keep afloat). The Polish-West German trade protocol signed on November 16th allows for an increase in trade up to $70 million each way, and the Poles plan to switch to Western Germany coal which was formerly earmarked for Russia. On both sides there is a cautious interest in possible German investment in Poland. The Poles seem fully alive to Germany's obvious interest in helping them become less economically dependent on Russia.

AID, NOT TRADE?

Even before Mr. Gomulka spoke at Katowice this week about Poland's economic plight and urgent need for foreign credits, there was plenty of evidence that his government was anxiously looking not only to Western Germany but also to the West as a whole for help. Mr. Jacobs, the American ambassador in Warsaw, has been discussing trade questions with Mr. Joseph Winiewicz, the Polish under-secretary for foreign affairs. US economic aid has also been the subject of private talks. These have continued regardless of Gomulka's speech on November 29th, in which he demanded the cancellation of Poland's outstanding postwar debts to western countries, and made play with the fact that he had got Russia to write off "debts"—which in fact arose from postwar Soviet exploitation of Poland (see last week's FOREIGN REPORT).

Outwardly, the Gomulka government claims to seek only trade, or, at most, normal short term commercial credits; "aid" is formally spurned because of the political implications. But in private at least one Polish representative has mooted the hope of a US loan of $150 million, a figure which Washington is not ready to accept. Gomulka and his colleagues are daily becoming more realistic both about their need for western supplies and their inability to pay for them. Output of coal, a staple export, has slumped catastrophically. Coal exports ran to 27 million tons in 1950; in 1956, 24½ million was expected but only 19½ million, at best, will be exported; in 1957, exports will be nearer 14 million tons than the target figure, already scaled down, of 16½ million. This week an official commentator derided "wishful thinking" about the prospects of closing the trade gap by doubling exports of chemicals and industrial equipment; it would not be easy, he said, to "find buyers for our equipment, which, to be honest, is not the most modern." With a slight air of desperation, he urged that foreign exchange should be earned by expanding tourism and shipping services. (Yet ships are one of the big items on Poland's new "shopping lists"—and few shipyards today have surplus shipbuilding capacity.)

British and other western firms have lately been struck by the changed character of Warsaw's "shopping lists." Previously, virtually all Polish inquiries had been for heavy machinery or machine tools, many of them suited to armaments manufacture. But during November there were many inquiries about machinery for making consumer goods and for building equipment. One such "shopping list" included machines and presses for producing glass bricks, fire-proof material, and various forms of plastic products. A charge now being levelled at "Stalinists" who are being "purged" from Polish trade organisations is that of acting merely as middlemen for Russia, and, specifically, of buying quantities of copper and similar strategic raw materials on Russia's behalf, often paying inflated prices which contributed to Poland's present foreign exchange crisis.

Simultaneously, however, the Poles are making frantic inquiries in the West for scrap and iron ore. (Unfortunately for them, at this season the market is particularly tight, for big 12-month contracts for 1957 have already been placed.) According to Polish experts, this scramble for scrap and ore is due to the fact that Russia, having had to abandon its practice of getting Polish steel from Nowa Huta at cut rates, has now stopped supplying scrap and ore to Poland. Some of the big furnaces at Nowa Huta may already have been put out. Meanwhile the Poles face the problem of finding profitable markets for the steel which they are no longer willing to sell cheap to Russia. They hope to get a fair price from China, if possible in dollars; a director of Nowa Huta was among the numerous Polish trade envoys who have flown to Peking in recent weeks.

The questions that confront western officials dealing with Gomulka's economic approaches are:

(i) What chance is there of any credits now extended being repaid by a government which will be under continued pressure from below for better living standards? (There is little optimism about this.)

(ii) Will even the most generous western aid (within the limits of what is practicable) suffice to save the Gomulka government from a collapse, under internal pressures, which might mean that all the aid given to Poland would be lost in the ensuing chaos?

(iii) When there are so many other (e.g. Asian) applicants for help, how much interest has the West in keeping afloat a regime which, while claiming to have " gone further than Jugoslavia in some respects," is still economically and militarily bound to Russia and hostile to the free world?

Thus the western decision must ultimately be a political one. And the course the Gomulka government sets in the next few crucial weeks will be the decisive factor.

Washington and the Himalayas

When Mr. Nehru is in Washington the week after next, he will have more to do than to urge that Communist China be seated in the United Nations and to canvass its latest plan for assimilating Formosa. His decision in October to pay this visit reflected a new awareness of India's need to regain American friendship. Since then, the Anglo-French embroilment in Egypt has made both India and the United States even more eager for good relations. But Washington will not find it easy to agree with some of the Indian Prime Minister's ideas, which are reported to include:

1. The Formosa plan (autonomy until Chiang dies, then incorporation into Communist China).
2. The giving of only economic, as opposed to military, aid to Pakistan.
3. A more understanding American attitude on Kashmir.

Before the Egyptian conflict, Delhi was unruffled by Karachi's new approaches to the UN on the Kashmir question. It was confident that the problem was solving itself (in India's favour) and that Pakistan was helpless to change the course of events. Then the fighting in Egypt led Indians to fear that, in the context of general international disarray, Pakistan would have " another shot at Kashmir." Indian border forces were alerted. Nervousness persisted even after the immediate crisis had passed. Now, Pakistan's latest initiatives on the UN plane have made India eager for maximum international sympathy on Kashmir. But India cannot expect to get far by arguing the case on legal and moral grounds when the Americans are now preoccupied with the strengthening of the authority of the UN—which India is defying over Kashmir.

A more hopeful line of argument for India is the strategic importance of the whole Himalayan frontier of the free world. It can emphasise the need for stability and security in Kashmir in the light of:

1. Reports that half a million Chinese have already been settled in Tibet, and that five million settlers are "planned" within the next few years. (There are only about one million Tibetans.)
2. The Indian communists' strategy, developed since the Telengana rebellion failed, of building up a northern "stronghold" with its back to the Himalayas.
3. China's wooing of Nepal, and the generally uncertain outlook there (see next article).

If Nepal passes out of India's sphere of influence, Kashmir, which also faces both ways across the great mountain barrier, will acquire even more strategic importance. Even some observers who regard Pakistan's claims as justified believe that Kashmir is probably safer in the hands of the Indian army, which has two crack divisions there. Some also share Delhi's view that a plebiscite would mean communal bloodshed and chaos—and a fresh chance for the communists. They also believe that there would be a popular uprising if Sheikh Abdullah was released from jail, perhaps even if he was given a trial. (Last August, on the third anniversary of his arrest, hundreds of arrests were made after Kashmiri demonstrations in his favour.) Observers who accept these realities do not necessarily either approve of the present Kashmir government's police-state techniques, or believe that India will succeed in winning over the Kashmiris by economic bounty (though some reckon that if a plebiscite were held now, Srinagar, where improvements have been lavished, might already opt for India, while the rural areas would still choose Pakistan). But they do agree that any disorderly transfer of power in Kashmir would endanger the security of this sector of the boundary between the communist and the free worlds.

For the Americans, however, the problem remains (as indicated in FOREIGN REPORT last week) not just how to be friends with Asia, but which Asians they can be friendly with. This problem is very acute in the case of Kashmir. Many normally "neutral" Asians, in general aligned with India rather than with Pakistan, nevertheless condemn India's Kashmir policy. Hitherto, UN discussion of Kashmir has always taken place in the Security Council, where at most only two Asian countries have had to declare their stand. If the dispute now comes before the Assembly, it will have much graver effects than Hungary on the unity of the Asian-Arab bloc.

Nepal on the Knife-edge

A policy of playing off China against India will be adopted by Nepal if elections there next year are won by the Nepalese Congress Party, which is now the main opposition group. Although the NCP recognises the threat from the north, it has also begun to fear that India's hold on the country may become too tight. The following principles therefore dominate its programme:

1. Alignment with India, but complete independence from India.

2. Friendliness towards China, but suspicion of Chinese intrigues.

3. Acceptance of economic aid from all sources (Nepal has already financed most of its five-year plan with money from India, China and America).

The NCP's chances of winning the elections (if they are held, which is not yet certain) have been improved by the recent reconciliation between its leaders, Mr. M. P. Koirala and his younger brother Mr. B. P. Koirala. These brothers led the bloodless revolution in 1951 which ousted the long-dominant Rana clan, but spoilt their victory by violent quarrels between themselves over Nepal's dependence on India and the powers to be allowed to the monarchy.

Among the many political factions in Katmandu, the party's chief rivals for power are (a) the party now in power, the Praja Parishad; and (b) Dr. K. I. Singh, the "dark horse from Peking." It views their electoral chances thus:

A.—The conservative Praja Parishad, under the leadership of the present prime minister, Tanka Prasad Acharya, holds only two strong cards:

1. The support of King Mahendra, who put the prime minister in office earlier this year and whose influence keeps him there. The young king is worshipped in Nepal, but it is doubtful how far this reflected glory will spread to the government's candidates in an election.

2. The loan of £4½ million (without strings) which the prime minister obtained when he recently visited Peking. The NCP fear that this money will be used to bribe the electorate.

But the party has failed to produce efficient administration or effective land reform, and it has no real hold over the country.

B.—For Dr. Singh, this discontent over the inefficiency of the present regime is a powerful weapon. He has a strong personal following, partly because of his stout opposition to the Rana regime in the old days; partly because of the vigour and skill of his political campaigning since he returned a year ago from three years of refuge in China. His policy since his return has been to: (a) deny any connection with the communists; and (b) emphasise his friendship for India (he was formerly a violent opponent of Indian influence). But the NCP say that:

1. This posture has been assumed merely to deceive India and prevent it vetoing his rise to power.

2. His long stay in China has, in fact, made him a convinced communist and he is only biding his time to declare himself.

Dr. Singh's chances in the election have been improved by: (a) the large funds he is believed to have brought back from China; and (b) the fact that the present king is less devoted to alignment with India than was his father (it was King Mahendra who secretly negotiated Dr. Singh's amnesty with Peking). The NCP's worst fear is that the young king's open-mindedness and the people's discontent will enable Dr. Singh to get into power, and that he will then show his true communist colours and Nepal will slip under Chinese control.

Who Pays for Salvage?

Britain, France and Egypt will each be asked to shoulder a large part of the cost of clearing the Suez Canal if the payments scheme devised by Mr. John McCloy is accepted by the United Nations. Since the total cost is unofficially reckoned at $40 million, the burden will be a sizeable one.

Mr. McCloy, chairman of the Chase Manhattan bank, is the financial expert on the UN committee of three organising the canal clearance project (the technical expert is Lieut.-General Wheeler, engineering consultant to the World Bank; the administrator, a South African on the staff of the UN Secretariat, Mr. Alfred Katzin). Before he produced his plan, the United Nations was confronted with two diametrically opposite proposals, namely:

(i) That Britain and France—and perhaps Israel—should foot the whole bill (proposed by the Soviet bloc and some Arab states).

(ii) That Egypt should pay, by allowing the canal tolls to be used for the purpose (proposed by several western representatives and supported by the British and French).

It was obvious that both these suggestions would be turned down. But Mr. McCloy has now propounded a compromise solution, to the effect that:

1. The canal users would pay part of their fees into a special canal clearance fund, but
2. Payments would not be calculated solely on the basis of tonnage passing through the canal, and
3. Britain and France would have to carry an extra share of the cost.

Although Egypt, as the country directly responsible for blocking the canal, is expected to contribute a large share towards its clearance, there is no suggestion of depriving Egypt of all revenue from the canal. To allow both for some revenue for Egypt and for the clearance fund, toll rates will therefore presumably have to be raised. But a flat increase would put a disproportionately heavy burden on countries, such as Norway, which account for much of the traffic through the canal but are in no way responsible for it being blocked. The implication of the McCloy formula is that the toll will be raised more for Britain and France than for the other canal users. Thus, while all users would contribute, the plan is weighted against Britain, France and Egypt.

Israel's position in this scheme is interesting. If Egypt continued to refuse to allow Israeli vessels through the canal, Israel would presumably pay nothing towards its clearance. This might prove a useful argument for persuading Egypt to drop its veto.

Mr. McCloy's scheme presupposes the raising of a substantial loan, since the salvage contractors cannot be asked to wait for payment until the canal is making money again. The World Bank is the obvious source of a loan of this size, and Mr. McCloy is said to have already been in communication with the bank's president, Mr. Eugene Black. Since Mr. McCloy himself is a past president of the bank, his request will carry weight.

Burma's Jaundiced View of Barter

The Burmese are having long second thoughts about their barter deals with the communist bloc, writes our special correspondent lately in Rangoon. Their disastrous experiences since the arrangements made with Russia and other communist countries last year (see FOREIGN REPORT of August 30th) have led them to wonder whether there is a way of getting out of next year's commitments. Under the 1955 agreements, they are committed to sending 800,000 tons of rice a year to the communist countries, including 400,000 tons to Russia. The cabinet is now debating—not for the first time—whether the communist countries should be asked to settle for only 190,000 tons next year.

Apart from the now notoriously unsatisfactory quality and handling of some of the communist bloc's deliveries to Burma, and the adverse effect on the national economy of long-term deals at fixed prices, the Burmese have three main reasons for wishing to reduce the volume of the barter agreements:

(i) Their rice export surplus next year is expected to be only 1·4 million tons, compared with 2 million in a reasonably good year. The price of rice is expected to harden, and the Burmese do not wish to lose the chance of profiting from any rise.

(ii) Soviet deliveries to Burma had fallen between £4 and £5 million short by the end of September. The Russians have bullied the Czechoslovaks into making up the difference, and an agreement to this effect has been formally reached between Burma, Russia and Czechoslovakia. The Czechs, however, are reported to have been extremely reluctant, and the Burmese are not optimistic about the arrangement.

In comparison with the Russians, the Chinese have been diligent with their deliveries and in fact now have a credit balance with Burma. On the other hand: (a) there is a limit to Burma's capacity to make use of such goods and materials as China can provide at its present stage of industrialisation; and (b) the Burmese are annoyed by the extent to which China has resold their rice in other countries, where they hoped to find markets themselves. Peking's sales of rice to Ceylon against rubber are an old story; but it is now reported that Burmese rice bought by China is finding its way on to the Singapore market. The Burmese have been stirred to the point of having samples of this rice flown to Rangoon for examination.

(iii) Under the 1955 agreement, the Russians offered to pay 20 per cent of the price of their purchase of Burma's rice in sterling. But they stipulated that the money should be used only for certain specific purposes, such as the upkeep of the Burmese embassy in Moscow and the expenses of Burmese visitors to Russia. The Burmese now see that they are in effect financing part of Russia's propaganda.

Some Rangoon experts would like to reduce Russia's share of Burmese rice in the coming year to as little as 50,000 tons. One well-informed source in Rangoon considers that the Russians are not in a position to raise objections.

The Economist

COPYRIGHT RESERVED
"FOREIGN REPORT" IS SUPPLIED ON THE CONDITION THAT IT IS REGARDED AS CONFIDENTIAL BY THE RECIPIENT. IN NO CIRCUMSTANCES MAY THE CONTENTS BE REPRODUCED IN WHOLE OR PART.

PRINTED BY KELIHER, HUDSON & KEARNS, LTD., HATFIELDS, LONDON, S.E.1
FOR THE ECONOMIST NEWSPAPER LTD., LONDON, S.W.1.

"SEE IT NOW"

POLAND, 1957

MARCH 31, 1957

Gauthier, Paul

April 12, 1957

Dear Mr. Gauthier:

I am so happy that you are able to watch our SEE IT NOW efforts.

I have talked over the subject of Dr. Irving P. Krick with my partner, Fred Friendly, and we have come to the conclusion that our schedule for this season is fully booked. We only have two more shows before the summer hiatus. The one in May is on the subject of Puerto Rico and we are in the midst of planning for the June show. However, when we come back in the fall, the weather may be a subject for us to reconsider.

I hope that some time soon again I can get out your way and have a visit with you. Leo Rossi, Ed Scott and the rest of the SEE IT NOW staff send their regards.

Cordially,

Edward R. Murrow

Mr. Paul Gauthier
The Adams County Free Press
Corning, Iowa

RRM/hlt

T

The Adams County Free Press

5/IV

Paul S. Gauthier, Editor

Corning, Iowa

1 April 1957

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enjoyed your production yesterday on Poland a great deal. In fact, the last two See It Now programs have been masterpieces.

In the midwest and other areas right now, this Dr. Irving P. Krick is one of the hottest items. This might be a source of some sort of program for you some time in the future. I believe this weather modification will be discussed more all the time; am sure it's a coming thing in this part of the country.

Best regards to all including Ed Scott, Leo Rossi and the other boys.

Sincerely,

Paul Gauthier

Paul Gauthier

"SEE IT NOW"

THE PUERTO RICANS - AMERICANS ON THE MOVE

May 5, 1957

J & N

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Friendly

from: Mr. Murrow

April 16, 1957

NOTES ON PUERTO RICO

The men around Munoz are young. There is amazing drive and energy, a sense of mission not unlike the early days of the New Deal -- there is no manana and no siesta -- there is no graft; at least Munoz' principal opponent admitted it was a clean administration, and American businessmen said, "You don't have to pay off anybody down here."

There has never been anything quite like Puerto Rico. It is without precedent, not a state, not a colony, no representation in Washington, no federal taxes. They appear to be proud of their American citizenship, and at the same time conscious of their Spanish heritage, and the leaders at least believe they have a unique role to play in relation to the United States and the Latin American countries.

The variety of topography is staggering. Within ten minutes flying time there is impenetrable jungle, fertile land irrigation, desert, seaside, everything but snow.

The status of Puerto Rico is a tribute to the flexibility of the United States Constitution, and it can move in any direction. I think we should make mention that under certain circumstances the Puerto Rican vote in New York might well determine the election of a governor or a senator.

The reason for the low rate of juvenile delinquency in Puerto Rico is the same throughout most of Asia; namely, that in large families the kids have a job to do, even if it's only taking care of the younger ones.

Munoz estimates privately that there may be a hundred men in both Houses of Congress that may know something about Puerto Rico but not more than a half dozen who are really knowledgeable. Munoz is troubled about his own party, not because of collusion or incompetence but because he has been in power a long time and has tended to grow soft. No one is willing to speculate as to his successor.

The house on stage right of Munoz' residence was started by Ponce de Leon, but he never saw it since he pushed off to Florida looking for the Fountain of Youth before it was finished. Munoz must have come as close to finding the Fountain as any politician I have ever met. I think, by the way, his heart is still in the hill country because they are the people who brought him to power. I think what he says about both communists and terrorists in Puerto Rico is accurate, although Gene will know better about this.

We may already have it in the New York section, but I think we ought to have someone for a minute or two do a definitive piece on the Puerto Rican crime rate in the city.

E.R.M.

rh

S/N
Sontheimer, Morton

July 1, 1957

Dear Mort,

Many thanks for your cordial letter of May 31st. I am glad that you thought the Puerto Rico program was a good effort. The over-all reaction was most satisfactory.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Morton Sontheimer
P. O. Box 8556
Fdz. Juncos Station
San Juan, Puerto Rico

mec

Puerto Rico News Service

REPLY TO:
P. O. BOX 8556
FDZ. JUNCOS STATION
SAN JUAN, P. R.

CABLE ADDRESS: HAMWRIGHT, SAN JUAN
TELEPHONE: 3-1060

505 BANCO POPULAR BLDG.
STOP 22
AVE. PONCE DE LEÓN
SAN JUAN, PUERTO RICO

"For the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico"

May 31, 1957

Mr. Ed Murrow
See It Now
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed Murrow:

Now that the din and shouting over your Puerto Rico program has died down somewhat, I would like to say that in my opinion you and your people did a first rate job - objective, interesting and in its over-all effect of considerable benefit to the Puerto Ricans. Thank you for sending me the kinescope.

I enjoyed your visit here and hope that somehow you will be able to arrange to come down again.

Cordially yours,

Morton Sontheimer

ms:s

Sir

16 KNXT- NY 10/16/58

OFFICE OF

FR ~~ED FRIENDLY AND~~ ED MURROW

IS IT NOW POSSIBLE TO OBTAIN PRINT OF PROGRAM "SEE IT NOW" MAY 5, 1957 ON "PUERTO RICANS" FOR PRIVATE SHOWING TO SOCIOLOGY DEPT. OF UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

ALEX RUNCIMAN

STAFF DIRECTOR

KNXT

92

RECEIVED
1958 OCT 16 PM 3:13
C B S TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

"SEE IT NOW"

AUTOMATION: WEAL or WOE

June 9, 1957

COPY: Mr. Edward R. Murrow

S I N
Abbott, Charles + Assoc.

Charles Abbott and Associates
MINERALS - ORES - INTERNATIONAL REPRESENTATIVES

Cable Address: "CHARABBOT"

29 WEST 74th STREET • NEW YORK 23, N. Y. • Telephone SChuyler 4-5531

2 January, 1958

Mr. Fred W. Friendly
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Friendly:

I wish to thank you for your letter of September 6, 1957, and for the information on Automation you sent. In having the opportunity of reseeing the program on October 20th I wish to again express my thanks for the wonderful program. And, in addition may I offer my verbal accolade for the most wonderful program "The Lady From Philadelphia" presented last Friday evening.

With reference again to your letter of September 6, 1957, that Automation "also seems to hold out the possibility of a richer life" and "letters such as yours encourage us to investigate subjects of this type, and we look forward to your comments in the future", I wish to present for your consideration the following thoughts for a series which could greatly assist in international understanding and would, I believe, have a large reception in the United States and through your distribution and service facilities in many countries. This would be a series I believe which could easily obtain sponsors, and obtain complete cooperation from overseas governments, banking and commercial interests, etc.

The series could be called "See It Soon", or some other title.

In a report I prepared at the request of BBD&O titled "A Plan For The Establishment of International Advertising & Public Relations Facilities", the following information was included.

> "A large potential foreign business exists for a unique film series which would be jointly sponsored by American firms operating in overseas territories and countries, and local firms in such countries who sell to the United States, or who have branches and subsidiaries here, and the respective governments of the countries. As new investments come into foreign countries, it assists in giving employment, develop technical skills, raises the economy, increases savings, encourages local and joint investments, advances the culture of the country, etc. Therefore, many firms operating overseas are always receptive to new foreign investments in the country because of the increase of their potential market for their products.
>
> Therefore, I believe there will be many U.S. and overseas firms and governments who would jointly sponsor such films. One series could be for "spectacular" TV presentations (90 minutes per program per country), and a series of "shorts" for motion picture, club, organization distribution. All films could be done in color. The films would portray the economic, social and cultural life of the country, as well as the benefits which have accrued due to investments in the country. Since all governments and companies have potential and projected plans for expansion, the final portion of the film could be aimed along the theme of "Things Soon To Come."

Mr. Fred W. Friendly
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
New York 22, New York

January 2, 1958

"There are many American companies operating abroad through subsidiaries, branches, and distributors. Each month new companies are formed and will go into production within the next 6 to 12 months. In every instance, these firms will require advertising, publicity, promotion and public relations; and funds will be allocated for such purposes not only for the local market and country, but also in other foreign markets. The following gives a brief picture of such factors in a few countries:

AT PRESENT
800 U.S. firms operating in Great Britain
125 U.S. firms in Argentina
700 U.S. firms in Australia
126 U.S. firms in Western Germany
165 new industries established in Venezuela in 1956. During the last 2 years well known U.S. rubber manufacturers have established 3 new plants in Venezuela. General Motors has just purchased property for construction of a new factory, in addition to their plant in Caracas which has been operating for several years. Autolite recently started operations to manufacture batteries. Sudamtex (United Merchants & Manufacturers of New York) expect to start shortly making nylon yarn. Mc Gregor Sports Wear is to open a factory in Caracas, and Giuseppe Sacchi, an Italian firm plans to establish a subsidiary to make silk yarn.

"Brazil: The Manaus Refinery will furnish butane gas for which there is expected to be a large market. As soon as an appreciable inventory of its products is built up, they will begin to distribute its petroleum by-products, including liquid gas.

Germany: Auto Overdrives: Borg-Warner International Corp. has licensed the manufacture of Borg-Warner automotive overdrive by Adlerwerke. They have 3 major manufacturing divisions today, (1) Automotive, (2) Machine Tools, (3) Office Machines. The company will produce units for German automobile manufacturers who are expected to turn out almost 1 million cars in 1957. Potential demand in Germany alone for cars equipped with overdrive is estimated at 200,000 per year, or 20% of that country's current annual output.

Mexico: Pharmaceutical Manufacturing: Laboratories Lederle, S.A. has opened a new manufacturing plant near Mexico City. The new plant covers 70,000 square feet of floor space and are employing 200 Mexican workers. They are manufacturing a variety of drugs and pharmaceuticals including aureomycin, achromycin, etc.

Mexico: Du Mont went into production in Mexico on November 26, 1956. The plant is operated by Corporacion Nacional Distribuidora, S.A., Licensee, who also manufacture Kelvinator refrigerators."

Mr. Fred W. Friendly
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
New York 22, New York

January 2, 1958

There is, undoubtedly, keen and serious interest on the part of many Americans regarding the international picture and development as well as investment. Of course, not as much as many people would desire, but this could be because people are not presented the facts.

As the special issue of Life Magazine pointed up there are now 580,000 American civilian residents abroad alone or one in every 300 Americans. The bulk of financial involvement, $420-billion has been built up over the past decade. And Mr. Keith Funston, President of New York Stock Exchange stated in a speech within the next 5 years there can be expected something like $90-billion of American investment abroad.

I believe that if a series of TV presentations along the lines outlined would do a great deal in awakening America and be a major step toward international peace. The programs presenting the cultures and background of the peoples, their aims, desires and ambitions, and the results which have been achieved say in the last decade and what is anticipated would go a long long way in a "crash" educational program in America; and would strongly point up the great responsibility America has toward the rest of the world.

I trust the idea for such a series may be of interest to you.

Sincerely yours,

Charles A. Abbott

Charles A. Abbott

cc: Mr. Edward R. Murrow

Sim
Cope, W.E.

July 2, 1957

Dear Mr. Chope:

Thank you for your gracious letter of June 14th.

It is always satisfying to receive commendation from experts, particularly when we are dealing with a field in which our ignorance is monumental.

Thanks again for the assistance of yourself and your colleagues.

We have some hope that the program will be repeated in the autumn.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. W.E. Chope
Industrial Nucleonics
1205 Chesapeake Avenue
Columbus 12, Ohio

fc

Industrial Nucleonics Corporation

1205 Chesapeake Avenue
Columbus 12, Ohio

HUdson 8-0671

Office of the President

June 14, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I wish to compliment you for the "bang-up" job you did on the difficult subject of automation. We are proud to have played a part in the over-all story. Your treatment was technically correct and at the same time highly informative and interesting--a blend which is often difficult to obtain.

You have performed a service, I believe, in pointing out the various aspects of this involved subject. Not only was the need for automation made clear, but also the collateral needs, such as proper educational facilities and proper understanding of human values, were adequately covered. We were happy to cooperate in this outstanding program.

Yours sincerely,

W. E. Chope

W. E. Chope

WEC:mw

MERLE S. JONES

Florence:

These are the letters that Mr. Jones asked me to send Mr. Murrow.

He has written letters to: Messrs. Watson, Dunn, Ford, and Diebold, and prints are being sent to them via Paul Rosen's office.

Nancy

To

From

Station

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

Jones, Merle

F-559

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

See Dr Now

Prog. Bus.

Mr. Merle S. Jones

Fred Friendly

RECEIVED
JUN 1 8 1957
MERLE S. JONES

June 18, 1957

These are the names I promised to send up to you:

Mr. Thomas J. Watson, Chairman of the Board, I.B.M., New York City
Mr. Bert Chope, President, Industrial Nucleonics, Columbus, Ohio
Mr. John Diebold, President, John Diebold & Associates, New York City
Mr. Frances Dunn, Ass't to President, Bell Aircraft, Buffalo, N.Y.

The Ford letter should go to Henry Ford II and should mention the contribution of Nevin Bean, the Ford engineer who reported so graphically on Russian automation. Incidentally, the mimeographed copies of the script have gone into three runnings, and I thought perhaps you might like to have a couple of copies before we run out all together.

Fd

TO: .....

To discuss .....
Return for file .....
F.Y.I. .....
(Record) .....

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Merle Jones

cc: Messrs. Mickelson, Friendly

from: Robert Lang

June 19, 1957

Mr. Seay of Westinghouse has requested the loan of a print of "Automation" through Ed Donaldson of Ketchum, Mac Leod & Grove.

When I requested Mr. Friendly's cooperation in this matter, he informed me you were interested to know of requests for prints of this film and that your office would service same.

Mr. Seay had planned to set up a series of viewings for the principal corporate officers. If, through your office, he can obtain a print for a longer period of time, I am certain Westinghouse would make good use thereof.

RHLang

REL:ad

TO: .....

.....

.....

To discuss.....

Return for file.....

F.Y.I. .....

(Record).....

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Mr. Merle Jones

from: Mr. Fred Friendly

June 14, 1957

Money to see Friendly prog

Attached is a list of the organizations' representatives of SEE IT NOW's report on Automation. Thus far, the principal requests for films have come from the I.B.M. people who want to buy a minimum of one hundred, which McGraw Hill is prepared to sell them (as you may know, we have a secondary rights deal for 16mms with McGraw Hill). I do think it would be a good idea to give Mr. Watson a personal copy from either you or Ed, or both. The other peoples who have officially asked for prints thus far, are Bell Aircraft, Ford Motor Company, John Diebold Associates, Industrial Nucleonics and Minnesota Mining Co.

Ed has a considerable amount of personal mail which he has not passed on to me, but I am sure some of them will have requested prints.

Will keep you posted.

— Thomas Watson Jr —

hlt

Ed mention this urgency of IBM

TO:

To discuss

Return for file

F.A.I.

(Record)

ORGANIZATIONS FEATURED ON "AUTOMATION: WEAL OR WOE" May 27, 1957

SUNDAY, JUNE 9, CBS TELEVISION, 5:00-6:30 PM, EDT

Following is a list of 28 industrial firms and allied organizations that will be featured on the special SEE IT NOW program described above:

ORGANIZATION	LOCATION	PROGRAM INTEREST
Airborne Instrument Co.	Mineola, L.I.	Cytoanalyzer
American Can Co. (Bradley Container Corp.)	Maynard, Mass.	Polyetheline containers
American Cancer Society	New York	Cytoanalyzer
American Tel. & Tel.	Englewood, N.J. Teaneck, N.J.	Direct Distance Dialing
Aramco Steel	Middletown, Ohio	Rolled steel, Charles Hook Board Chairman
Bakery & Confectionery Workers' International	Philadelphia
Bell Aircraft (U.S. Navy)	Buffalo, N.Y.	Automatic pilot for carrier jet landings
Boeing Aircraft	Wichita, Kans.	Making B-47 wing sections
Cornell Medical College	New York	Dr. Papanicolaou, cytodiagnosis
Cross Manufacturing Co.	Detroit	Automotive equipment for auto industry
John Diebold Associates	New York	John Diebold
Ford Motor Company	Dearborn, Mich. Detroit, Mich.	Ford Museum Nevin Bean, Engineer Assembly lines
Freihofer Bakery	Philadelphia	Bread-making, old and new Ross Miller
General Electric Co.	Louisville, Ky. Washington, D.C.	Operation XPC-1 Program Cooking Stove
Giddings & Lewis	Fond Du Lac, Wisc.	Automatic milling machines routing out tail stabilizers
Industrial Nucleonics	Columbus, Ohio	Atomic energy in industry
I.B.M.	New York Poughkeepsie, N.Y.	Thomas J. Watson, Jr. Giant computers: SAGE
Kaganovich Roller Bearings	Moscow, Russia	Fully automated bearing plant
Minn. Mining & Mfg.	St. Paul, Minn.	Manufacture of magnetic tape
North American Aviation	Columbus, Ohio	F-100 stabilizers
Panellit Corp.		Alfred Sperry Automatic oil refinery
Pennsylvania Railroad	Conway, Pa.	Automatic humping
Tidewater Oil Co.	Delaware City, Del.	Automation in oil refinery
U. A. W.	Detroit	Walter Reuther Shop stewart meeting, Local 7
U.S. Air Force (Lincoln Labs)	Lexington, Mass.	SAGE computer system for Air Defense
Westinghouse Electric	Bloomfield, N.J.	Light Bulb manufacture
Wight Grist Mill	Old Sturbridge, Mass.	Restoration of Oliver Evans type grist mill
Wurlitzer Co.		Early one-man band device

TELEPHONE
NIAGARA FALLS · 7851

OFFICES AND FACTORY
NIAGARA FALLS AIRPORT

BELL Aircraft CORPORATION
POST OFFICE BOX ONE BUFFALO 5, NEW YORK

June 14, 1957

Dear Ed:

As far as we here at Bell are concerned, your special automation show was a huge success. The carrier landing people are especially happy about it.

Fact is, we would like to take advantage of such professional work and if possible use two prints of the carrier landing bit as an aid in our program. Is this possible?

My very best to Charlie and the crew.

Cordially,

Swede

A. Gordon Manson
Assistant Director of Public Relations

Mr. Ed Scott
"See It Now"
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

AGM:dlp

INDUSTRIAL NUCLEONICS CORPORATION

MEMORANDUM

June 11, 1957

To: H. R. Chope

From: D. A. Bossen

Subject: "See It Now" Program

I was informed by Mr. Chester Haug, of Warner and Swasey Company, that the "See It Now" automation program was not shown in the Cleveland area last Sunday. Is it possible that CBS is scheduling this program for showing at other times in other areas?

D. A. Bossen

DAB/jp

cc: W. E. Chope
W. VanHorne
P. Werth

THE OHIO BOXBOARD COMPANY

RITTMAN, OHIO
June 11, 1957

Industrial Nucleonics Corporation
1205 Chesapeake Avenue
Columbus 12, Ohio

Dear Sirs:

We planned on viewing the Edward R. Murrow show "See It Now" on Sunday on C.B.S. Television, in accordance with the announcement you were kind enough to send us.

However, the C.B.S. station in Cleveland did not carry this program.

We were interested in it as possible material to be shown in local high schools for interesting students in studying Science courses. We therefore wondered whether it would be available in film form. If so, we would very much appreciate a copy of the film which we can view here with the idea that we might want to purchase a copy if it were suitable for showing in local high schools.

It is possible that it is too technical for such showing and if that is the case, we would appreciate your advice.

Very truly yours,

L K Burnett

L. K. Burnett, Assistant To Senior Vice President

LKB/dd

June 13, 1957

Mr. L. K. Burnett
Assistant to Senior Vice President
The Ohio Boxboard Company
Rittman, Ohio

Dear Mr. Burnett:

Thank you for your letter of June 11, expressing interest in the Edward R. Murrow show on Automation. I am sorry that the Cleveland CBS affiliate did not carry this outstanding report as we found it to be most factual and interesting. I can assure you that it would not be too technical for high school audiences.

I would suggest that you contact the program director of your CBS outlet for information as to whether or not there will be a re-telecast at a later date.

Unfortunately, we are unable to inform you as to whether this program will be produced on film; however, I have sent a copy of your letter to Mr. Scott, of "See It Now," for reply. I am certain you will hear from them shortly.

I might also advise you that the United States Chamber of Commerce has just completed production of a film entitled, "The Atom Comes To Town," which I had the privilege of viewing in Washington, D. C., a few weeks back. While this program does not deal with the subject of automation, it does give an excellent report on peaceful uses of atomic energy. Also, it is designed for public consumption and would be excellent for high school viewing. We have this film on order, and while it is committed for perhaps a month to 6 weeks, we may be able to loan it to you about the first of August. It can be purchased through the Chamber of Commerce at a cost of $140 or may be rented at the rate of $15 for 4 days.

By copy of this letter, I am informing our sales engineer, Mr. Jim Smith, of your request. Please call upon Jim for any assistance that our company may give you.

Yours very truly,

Paul M. Werth
Director of Public Relations

PMW/fd
cc/ Mr. Edmund Scott

GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

INDUSTRIAL ELECTRONICS DIVISION

1103 NORTH CENTRAL AVENUE, PHOENIX, ARIZONA . . . . . TELEPHONE ALpine 4-3171

June 12, 1957

M.S.J.
This one just came in.
F.H.

Sir

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your program this past Sunday -- "Automation - Weal or Woe" -- was splendid. The entire personnel of the GE Computer Department, one of the newest departments in the General Electric Company, was alerted to watch the program. Most of them seemed to have done so. Without exception their comments are not only complimentary but filled with thanks for the insight your program supplied into this problem.

We have a request. It may not be possible for you to fill it. If not, we understand. We would like to get transcripts of those portions of the program which included the comments of Mr. Watson of IBM, Mr. Brown of MIT, and Mr. Reuther of the AFofL-CIO. In addition, we would like to have a copy of those parts of your commentary which discussed the automation problem. That is, the parts other than the descriptions of specific machines or processes.

6/17
Receipt sent.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

R. E. Widmark

Robert E. Widmark
Specialist-Communications
General Electric Computer Department
Phoenix, Arizona

rew/1

PANELLIT, INC.

7401 NORTH HAMLIN AVENUE • SKOKIE, ILLINOIS • ORCHARD 5-2500

ALBERT F. SPERRY
PRESIDENT

June 11, 1957

Miss Natalie Foster
Columbia Broadcasting Co.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Miss Foster:

Mr. Merle S. Jones advised Mr. Sperry there would be a 16 mm. film available of the "See It Now" program which appeared last Sunday, June 9 on Automation.

We would very much appreciate receiving this film to show to our people here, since they are very interested in seeing it. Mr. Sperry, who was in Europe at the time the program appeared, would also like very much to see it.

Will you please arrange for this film to be made available to us? Thanks very much.

Sincerely yours,

H. Campbell

H. Campbell

c

ENGINEERING • INSTRUMENT & CONTROL PANELS • INFORMATION SYSTEMS

PANELLIT

S i N
Reuther, Walter
Automation
June 1957

WALTER REUTHER - MURROW QUESTIONS

MURROW: Mr. Reuther, let's begin with a simple question. What has automation done and what is it going to do to the automobile industry?

MURROW: Well now, Walter, if these machines are going to replace men, the machines aren't going to pay any union dues. What is going to happen to your union?

MURROW: Well, if machines are going to replace men, what is going to happen to your union and the dues?

MURROW: What is going to happen to these men who are replaced by machines?

MURROW: Well, now, this retraining and the relocation of plants, the movement of the working force, would be involved there too. Wouldn't it?

MURROW: Are you saying that Management ought to pay for the retraining of labor?

MURROW: Well now, as I understand it, what you are saying is that fewer men will produce more goods?

MURROW: All right. What then is going to happen as a result? Is --- is this a shorter work week or earlier retirement, or what is it?

MURROW: More hospitals, more schools, more recreation facilities?

MURROW: Well now, Walter, what about the little manufacturer who can't afford to automate? Isn't this likely to get bigger and bigger and the individual be more and more removed from the .....?

END OF REEL

REEL 2:

MURROW: Well, what about the little manufacturer - the man who can't afford to automate? Isn't this going to result in having - getting bigger and bigger labor unions manufacturers - everyghing else?

MURROW: Can this matter of retraining and relocating plants and so forth be carried out across the bargaining table? Is it going to involve added government interference or supervision?

MURROW: Then as I understand it, what you are saying is - that as of now not all of the actual facts have been assembled and put together in one fist, so to speak, much less in a forecasting of what the future might hold or imply?

MURROW: Do you think the four-day ~~in~~ week is somewhere just over the horizon?

MURROW: Are the Russians ahead of us in the field of automation?

MURROW: Now, assuming that, what should we do about it?

MURROW: Well now, we are struggling against the Communists in technological field and idealogical field as well. What should we do in this MURROW: country in order to produce more engineers, more scientists, in order to meet the increased output of the Russians?

MURROW: Well, Walter, you seem to be more interested in the human mind and its development than you are in these mechanical minds that are spouting things all over the place?

MURROW: Well now, if these new plants turn out more and more gear of all kinds, with less and less labor, more and more people have more time to play, to learn, to buy the gadgets. Isn't all this going to increase the inflationary pressure?

MURROW: There were some facts hidden in the .....?

MURROW: Of course, there were some facts hidden in the labor union movement too. Weren't there?

MURROW: You spoke a minute ago about television and radio. What kind of a job do you think they are doing?

MURROW: You served on the committee that studied the peaceful uses of atomic energy, and a moment ago you spoke about prices and various things being rigged. Are you worried at all about the whole peaceful uses of atomic energy being rigged or distorted?

MURROW: I conclude from what you have said so far that as automation develops and progresses, there is bound to be conflicts and controversies between labor and management. In your view, would this be solved across the bargaining table or will labor have to resort to the MURROW: acquiring of more direct political influence?

MURROW: What I meant to say - do you see the possibility of labor moving directly or overtly in the political field?

MURROW: Well, you don't seem to be worried about the prospect of automation. Is that a fair statement?

MURROW: WELL, if the introduction of automation should result in considerable unemployment, do you anticipate any difficulty in holding your union in line?

MURROW: All right. You did this once before, but I'd like you to do it again. Just specify what would you do in concrete terms in order to avoid this dislocation that you see in the future?

MURROW: You are not suggesting, when you mention the government, that the government should make the decision, but merely that government experts. Would it be fair to say that the government should provide neutral grounds on which labor and government meet and pool all their resources?

From Swing

Swing, Raymond G.

7

AUTOMATION

Introductory Comments on a Documentary

A documentary on automation can be just a good feature film with many diverting moments -- a kind of factual science-fiction report -- or it can be an important event, a profound, disquieting and even startling view of our civilization at a decisive turning-point. It can show it on the way to a high and universally established standard of living, but in the early future there is sure to be a showdown between free world economy and authoritarian economy, in which automation plays a key part. And in this showdown it is not certain by any means that we shall win.

Many people think of automation as something that is more or less desirable, that can be chosen or not, as we please. But we are sure to automate. That is, we must if we are to maintain a rising standard of living. There will not be workers enough at the present level of mechanization to provide an increasing volume of goods for a growing population. But the question is not only national. Unless we automate enough, and wisely, we are not sure of being first when the climax of automation is reached. Nuclear war on a universal scale is now ruled out. That leaves automation the chief weapon in the economic rivalry that takes its place, and this rivalry may well lead to the decisive conflict between a free and a controlled economy.

Automation is a coined word that already means different things to different people. This documentary should be about the broad changes that are coming in industry and business, as a result of machines taking over some of the functions of the human control of mechanisation. Automation reduces labor costs; also, it enables products to be made that require more precision than human controls can provide. Further, automated machines can do much of the paper work in vast corporations such as merchandising, banking and insurance as well as all corporate management, do it much quicker, and supply data on which accurate planning becomes possible for the first time.

The dividing line between mechanisation and automation is blurred. But we must assume it is there so as to tell our story. For we are looking ahead. Mechanisation no longer seems revolutionary to us; that is, the first phase of the industrial revolution is over and we are adjusted to it. Now the second phase is unfolding. In some particulars it is not new. But it is sure to produce revolutionary changes just as drastic, formidable, and even dangerous, as the first phase.

The first phase of the industrial revolution produced today's America. When the steam engine was developed, nobody could have imagined what the America would be like. It has been estimated that without its present mechanisation, the population of the United States would be about 40,000,000, primarily agrarian. Industrialism not only has given us a much higher standard of living, it enables us to support 125,000,000 more people.

What the second phase of the industrial revolution will bring may be as unconceivable to us as the consequences of the first phase were to the contemporaries of James Watt. In a sense it is arbitrary to speak of the revolution having two phases. It always has been one revolution. Automation was part of it from the start. But mechanisation had to spread out and become universal before automation -- the mechanical control of mechanisation -- could begin to move to its full meaning.

Indeed, Watt could not have built his steam engine had not a machine tool come first. It enabled him to make a cylinder valve that was accurate, as he said triumphantly, to the fineness of a thin shilling. His first competent steam engine embodied the fly-ball governor, a self-regulating device, which IS automation. Thus, those who cry out against talk of automation as something new are right. It was a necessary part of the concept of effective machine power. It also is right to say that not everything can or should be automated; neither should everything be mechanised ~~either~~. But it is a reasonable to assume that the second phase of the industrial revolution will make as tremendous changes as the first. Critics who say that automation by itself will not produce these profound changes are correct. The revolution will be due to modern science and inventiveness in many fields. But to be fully expressed, science and inventiveness require an automated technology if they are to come to fullest service. And this now is at hand.

These thoughts are not set down as guides for the text of the documentary, but to set the channels for our own thinking in planning the program.

A word of warning needs to be said at this point. Automation is not very photogenic. It is more so than the human brain, since it does some of its work externally, where it can be seen. But much of it is INSIDE machines, and can only be told about briefly while the exteriors of the machines pass quickly on the screen. Moreover, the highly intricate devices and principles by which machines regulate themselves defy simple explanation, and where electronics are used they cannot be explained, or understood, without a fairly advanced degree of technical knowledge. This specialized presentation has to be omitted. That is a loss, for this is the heart of the story, but the technicalities are too abstruse for a mass audience program .

For this reason, the temptation in planning this documentary will be to limit it to showy things that amaze and startle the viewer. But we have a more important opportunity. Without being too technical we can give our viewers a first inkling of the scope of automation today and what it will be in America and Russia. We can challenge the viewer to face the problem of labor displacement, which can be solved without disaster if faced in time. And we can ~~face~~ present him with the challenge of providing scientific and technical training in this country, a respect in which Soviet Russia already is far ahead of us.

An effective, easily understood report has never been given the American public of the full meaning of automation. I have not found it in any book, publication, committee hearing or speech. Thus, this documentary has a unique opportunity of being the first report of this kind.

POSSIBLE SEQUENCE

First section

We can start with the most up-to-date product of automation, the SAGE operation. We should set out by showing Murrow taking part in the radar and computation test of SAGE.

Having begun with the computing machine we can go on to tell briefly a little more about it. We can demonstrate how a machine "learns" and "has a memory". We can quote from the documentary done in THE SEARCH program by CBS in November, 1954 showing the "mouse in maze" sequence. (2½ minutes?)

And while about it we can show how a computing machine processes data, doing it much more quickly than humans, so that a rapid analysis of vast problems can be made for purposes of business, weather, census, and patent research. etc

(An automation purist will object to our starting our documentary with the computing machine. But to do so is attention-getting, and excusable. Indeed, we can apologize for doing it.)

And then, having shown where automation has brought us, we should go back right away to where it began. This is to show the Watt steam engine, with the fly-ball governor. (There have been many self-regulating inventions before, but the fly-ball governor of the Watt engine is the true beginning of automation.) (Shall find where a working model can be filmed)

Second section

Then should come a series of the very best examples of automation:

1) An oil refinery, the most automated industry in existence. (Recommend McMurray Refining Co. plant in Tyler, Texas. As shown in Scientific American this is highly photogenic. An oil refinery is a huge plant almost wholly controlled from an instrument panel by a few men. Crude oil is made into final products without any other human controls.)

2) As an example of things made by automated machines that couldn't be made by manual controls, show factory (in Boston -- details later) where plastic bottles are made.

3) The great Bell Telephone long distance dial set-ups in Englewood and Newark, New Jersey. Rapid sequences can show what happens when a person dials LD any city in America: machines will be seen receiving calls seeking out proper route, registering when every call started and concluded, computing rates, and finally ending by typing out the bill.

4) Automation in big industry. Show Ford engine block plant in Cleveland, or Plymouth in Detroit. (We can quote from Ford film if we want.)

5) The automatic machine tool is most advanced industrial use of automation. Bendix (South Bend) has one. We must also should show automatic machine tool molding a jet-bomber wing electronically by tape, which makes it possible to do job in few hours absolutely accurately that takes days or weeks by hand, always subject to error.

6) We can show what automated appliances can do that humans cannot. The "Slave hands at GE" (Schenectady)

(public debut at Geneva nuclear conference) are essential to nuclear development, and will make a good shot.

7) We can show how automation can help small business. The Murray plant in Brooklyn, which is beginning this month to make an electric current-breaker by automation. In an adjoining room a similar device is being made by manually controlled machinery.

8) We can show automated assembly of computer machines and TV and radio sets. Shots possible at General Mills Autofab, Minneapolis, which assembles computing machines and/or American Locomotive Plant at Arlington, Virginia, where TV's are assembled using celebrated module developed by US Bureau of Standards in "Operation Tinkertoy."

PART TWO

(Social Consequences)

Interview Don Mitchell, Chairman of Sylvania, to get him to repeal some of his testimony (before Joint subcommittee) on coming labor shortage as population grows. His was the best analysis of the future on this subject. (We either fail to maintain a rising standard of living, or work longer hours, or automate. Or we take some of our better living standards in increased leisure. Suggest you read his testimony in the committee record.)

Here we might interpolate an anecdotal shot from the Cleveland engine-block plant of Ford where Reuther was being shown the electronic control center by a Ford vice-president, and the Ford executive said: "You won't collect union dues from this machine, Walter" and Reuther made the already classic retort: "And you won't sell it any Ford cars, either." This sums up the social problem. It is historically correct, and there can follow at once:

Interviews with William Carey of International Union of Electrical Workers and Joseph Bierne, President of Communication Workers of America. (These are leading critics of management's snubbing of unions in facing displacement problem from automation but both are ready to speak out strongly in favor of automation and regard it as good for the country and for labor.)

THE SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE WHICH HELD THE AUTOMATION HEARINGS IN OCTOBER IS READY TO GO TO ANY INDUSTRIAL PLANT WE WANT TO HOLD BEFORE OUR CAMERAS AN INQUIRY INTO METHODS USED IN FACING DISPLACEMENT PROBLEM. THE COMMITTEE WANTS TO GO SOMEWHERE WHERE FORESIGHT IS BEING SHOWN.

PART THREE

(Political Consequences)

Murrow tells of Soviet government establishing ministry of automation in January, 1956. At once we go back to Ford, Detroit for Interview with Nevin L. Bean, general manager of automatic transmission division, one of three US engineers admitted to Soviet factories, in December, 1955, in reciprocity for visit of three Russian engineers to this country. These three US engineers were the first competent authorities ever to see Soviet automation. He will have in his hand a smallish box containing a polished casting holding a dozen large ball-bearings. He will say: "You see this box. When a girl put the casting into the box and sealed it with wax this ball-bearing was touched by human hands for the first time." The Soviet factory is the first completely automated ball-bearing factory in the world. Bean will say the plant is one of the prettiest pieces of engineering he has seen. He will speak of other plants and machines. He will want to stress the quality of educational training in Russia, which he thought "generally at level of MIT" and give (if not used later from Benton) figures of Soviet students in pipe line, compared with our own. See February issue of MACHINERY for Bean article. This Bean interview could be high point of the program.

This interview can be followed by one with Bill Benton on Russian education, and where we and the Soviet Union will be 20 years hence at the present rate of education.

At this point Murrow (or someone else) should show that the Soviet Union is to be automated methodically, so that with the completion of the five year plan the essential automation of industry can go into full development. The objective is a) to give the home market so long starved for goods an adequate supply of consumer goods; and b) the underdeveloped countries can be supplied with the consumer and capital goods they need; and c) the Soviet Union at the present rate of training and expansion may well become the only industrial power with enough engineers and technicians to service its own economy and that of the non-capitalist world. For our part, we may not have engineers enough to service our own economy.

The final interview could be by Walter Reuther, who sees the benefits and scope of automation, knows the dangers, believes they can be averted by foresight and wisdom in dealing with labor displacement and education, and WHO BELIEVES A FREE AMERICA CAN AND WILL ULTIMATELY SURPASS A REGIMENTED AND AUTOMATED TOTALITARIAN RUSSIA.

The program might close with a swift recapitulation of key shots in the program, and end with Murrow, again in the SAGE setting, bringing as the final shot this thought: This is where we are today. What of tomorrow? It would seem to be up to this generation. If we intend to benefit most fully from the completion of the industrial revolution, automation will have to be more than a new word to us or an undigested addition to mechanization. It must become an element in our political and social thought and life. It is something to fear only if we fail to prepare for it.

(There can be innumerable other shots of industrial processes, also interviews as with Senator Flanders, who has made machine tools all his life and knows more about automation than any man in Congress; Vannevar Bush, who is a wise-old-man of engineering and speaks well; John Diebold, the best known automation consultant (who has helped us generously) and Peter Drucker, one of the most respected thinkers in the field.) I have not tried to be definitive about a program, but only to indicate the ground that can be covered, the shots we are fairly sure to get, and the message we have to offer.

Watson, Thomas
SIN

July 2, 1957

Dear Mr. Watson:

Many thanks for the kind words about the piece on Automation. We just made you look and talk the way you do naturally.

There appears to be some chance that the program will be repeated in the autumn.

Thanks again.

Sincerely,

Mr. Thomas J. Watson, Jr.
590 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

fc

(Dictated but not signed by Mr. Murrow)

THOMAS J. WATSON, JR.
590 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

June 17, 1957

Dear Mr. Murrow,

Your recutting of the film taken of me here at 590 Madison was extremely well done and resulted in a very fair presentation of my beliefs concerning the future of automation.

I appreciate the sympathy with which the job was done and congratulate you on the overall program which I thought was terrific.

Sincerely yours,

Tom Watson Jr

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

WATSON SIN ~~Watson~~ ~~Automation~~

June 1957

SPEECH ON AUTOMATION

I. Introduction

President Pierson and gentlemen of the International Chamber of Commerce: I can't tell you how delighted I am to be with you in Paris this afternoon and particularly glad to be representing, with others, the United States of America at this meeting. My memory of this organization dates back to the middle twenties when my brother and sisters and I used to follow our father and mother into various parts of Europe to meetings of this organization. In fact, as we grew up, the International Chamber of Commerce was almost a household word in the Watson family.

It wasn't until 1931, however, that I began to realize the great international implications of this organization. Many of you were members of the ICC at that time and were in Copenhagen during the Congress. You will remember that war was in the atmosphere.

War came but I remember so well the struggle of the members of the International Chamber at that time to bring about international agreements which would prevent war. For many years, my own father has felt that if sufficient knowledge and friendship were built up between the businessmen of the world, if many of the barriers to trade were lowered or done away with, and if each of the countries in the world became dependent on many other countries for raw materials for their finished goods, in fact for their economic way of life, that a tremendous deterrent to war would be built up. The motto of our World Trade company - "World Peace through World Trade."

The aims of this organization today are not greatly different from the aims of sixteen years ago. The international climate for bringing these things about is, however, today much more compatible to our aims than ever before. It seems to me that the International Chamber of Commerce now should become stronger and stronger and should be entering on its most fruitful period in its history.

II. Introduction of Automation

I have been asked to introduce a debate on economic consequences of Automation. To try and tell you what I think it is - what it is doing in the United States. I suspect that it was seldom heard of three short years ago. Some Americans say it's 90% emotion and 10% fact. You will judge for yourselves.

.../

The word means "Automatic Manufacture" - "Automatic Action" - "Automatic Control." And when one understands its meaning, one can certainly imagine how vitally interesting this is to everyone in industry. "Automatic Manufacture" has been the dream of industrialists, businessmen and economists over the history of the industrial revolution.

Automation means a great many things to many different people. To the businessman facing rising labor rates, it means lower costs through automatic processes, doing more of his work by machine power and less by manpower. You may say, of course, he does a great deal of his work today by machine, particularly in the highly industrialized countries, but besides each machine stands a man who runs the machine, and Automation means that many of these men will be replaced by machines - machines running machines, if you will.

To the treasurer or accountant, it means the speeding up of the entire bookkeeping and analytical processes, the figure fact process of running a business. It means balancing out the company's books on the second, third or fourth of the month rather than on the tenth or the fifteenth or even the twentieth. It means bookkeeping departments with relatively few people and with relatively large numbers of machines, bookkeeping departments which can supply factual answers to queries from company executives in a matter of minutes rather than a matter of days. It means a great and brilliant promise for the future.

To the labor leader, Automation is perhaps a nightmare. Yet, I submit to you that it is a nightmare only because it isn't fully understood.

III. Examples

It has been going on since about 1790. When James Watt invented his steam engine, he found very quickly that power alone - power uncontrolled - was not enough. The throttle of his engine had to be adjusted constantly depending upon the load that was imposed on the engine. I suppose the first application may have been sawing lumber. As the saw reached harder parts in the wood, it was necessary to give the steam engine more steam, more power, and so he invented a governor - actually put to use around 1787. The governor saved the use of one man and did a better job than a man could do. A machine running a machine. Even today the same general type of governor is used on steam engines and other types of engines throughout the world.

It's the old two-ball device that stands and revolves on the top of the steam engine. As these balls revolve faster, centrifical force pulls them apart, and in pulling them apart closes the throttle of the steam engine so that the faster the machine goes, the less steam it gets and it slows to a controlled speed. As the machine slows down under load, the spinning balls lower themselves because centrifical force is reduced and the throttle opened for more power and the machine is stabilized to carry itself at a certain given revolutions per minute under the varying load conditions.

.../

This simple device illustrates all of the things that any automation device has whatever its application - whether it be in bookkeeping, in automatic factories or in automatically tracking aircraft in the skies. And so you can see since this machine was invented some 250 years ago that automation has been going on almost since the advent of power.

Here in France, Joseph Marie Jacquard, a man who perhaps all of you have heard of, exhibited here in Paris in 1801, an automatic loom controlled by punched paper cards. This had such a tremendous impact on the textile industry at the time, that by 1812 eleven thousand of these looms were operating in France. This was controlling a machine by a machine. The card feed fed in the various designs that were supposed to be woven and the machine sensing what was punched on the card thereby controlled the second machine, the loom and the shuttle, and told it what to weave.

Back in 1784, in George Washington's time, a man named Oliver Evans in the U.S.A. built a flour mill that was just about as automatic as any mill can be. A system of conveyors, run by water power, picked up the grain, carried it through all the grinding operations, and delivered the finished flour. This machine was not a great success - the market for the flour was not large enough. The commodity was not very expensive when made by previous methods.

In metalworking too, automation has a history. In 1920, A. O. Smith Corporation in Detroit, U.S.A. began to produce auto frames in an automatic factory: a little later, Budd Wheel Company in the same city built one for car wheels. These were pretty close to automatic factories - the products were simple and the market wide and expanding.

Likewise, in the field of accounting and computing, as long ago as 1830, a man named Babbage in England was designing machines using punched cards with automatic input and output. These machines at the time were considered impractical and too expensive to market, but his 1834 machine, capable of doing one addition per second was strikingly similar in concept to recent super accounting machines.

Now let's take a look at some typical automation machines of today. There is a machine in wide use in Detroit, Michigan, which is called the "Transfermatic." This machine does 553 operations in the production of an automobile motor block with no help or adjustment from humans at all. It drills holes, it bores cylinders and every operation that it does it checks so that if it produces the right kind of a block, it is shunted into a carrier to roll it onto the production line of the automotive plant, and if it produces a block which has some errors in it, this block is thrown into the scrap or reclamation pile. The Renault company here in Paris has developed and is using a similar machine.

.../

In our own IBM plant in Poughkeepsie where we build electric typewriters, we have a machine which takes a raw casting for the base of an electric typewriter, and it does about 200 operations on this typewriter base. It produces the base ready for assembly with the rest of the typewriter without the intervention of human hands or human thought. We make these bases in a period of about 60 seconds, where formerly it took us 3 to 4 hours, and with an overall average wage rate in our plant and many other plants in America of $2.20 an hour, you can well imagine how quickly one can write off the cost of automation of this type. You have other automation machines at work in Europe which many of you know of.

Let's take a look at automation in accounting. The most modern type of accounting until very recently has been done with punched card accounting machines. Our own company has made punched card accounting machines and there have been a number of other companies making them. This principle to a degree is automation because the machines sense cards and put the cards in certain order and do certain additions subtractions or multiplications. Now with the advent of electronics, the companies in this industry have learned how to put data formerly put in punch cards on magnetic tape. All of the data that can be put on one of those punch cards can be put on one inch of magnetic tape - a very tiny inch of magnetic tape, not very wide, and very, very thin. And then, where these punch cards formerly could be handled in our ordinary machines at around 100 per minute, we can handle these inches of tape representing one punch card at 75 per second. And so, we have gotten a tremendous lift in speed. You can compute a 5,000 man company payroll, which perhaps formerly took in processing time a matter of three or four working days, in a matter of 3 or 4 hours using that super automation machine.

One of the interesting things to conjure with in this whole process of automation is to realize that to some degree, one is trying to build into a machine some of the functions of a human brain. This is controversial and I don't wish to be misinterpreted. I believe very firmly that no one but God can make a brain which can create, can take one or two known thoughts and combine them together and come out with an entirely different new thought but for many years certain very simplified functions of the brain have been able to be duplicated on machine. This does not have to do with the creation of anything by a brain and never will. In the U.S.A. our new IBM machines are called "Giant Brains." This is an error. They are flexible storehouses of vast amounts of information. They are terribly fast. They multiply one 9 digit number by another in 3 millionths of a second. But they never can produce anything which is not derived from facts placed in the machine earlier.

"They are singularly unoriginal."

.../

IV. The Status of Automation in the World

Since automation is such an important subject today and since it is a subject that seems to be on everyone's tongue, I think it important that we take a look at the status of it. First, is it new? If you read articles written in America and other places about automation, it begins to sound like a monster created in the last three or four years which is rapidly swarming over industry in America and may swarm over industry in Europe - something that is new and is tremendously powerful and that will cause a very immediate revolution in industry. Nothing could be further from the fact. Only the word is new.

A very large part of the Industrial Revolution was based on automation. Automatic shoemaking machinery is automation to the very highest degree, and all of this equipment was designed 50 to 75 years ago. Textile machinery is truly automation. Most of this equipment was designed 50 to 100 years ago. So, automation isn't anything very new, we just have a new term, and so we must look for another reason why it is getting all of its publicity and attention today.

And there is a reason, gentlemen. That reason is the understanding of the use of electronics as it applies to automation. If one was willing to spend enough money, one could have created an automatic factory to produce simple articles 40 to 50 years ago, but the automatic devices, would have been built of rods, gears, and levers, and the machine to run the machine would have certainly been as big as the factory itself, if not bigger. And that is why automation, to a very advanced degree, did not take place except in those areas where a very large amount of product was being produced and the profit or the volume on this product was sufficient to justify a very substantial investment in automatic devices for the manufacturer.

Now there is a new tool in industry, and that tool is electronics. It was developed largely during the war. But it is through electronics that hope of the future for the automatic fabrication of radios, television sets, to some degree even of automobiles, is promised. Now instead of a very, very large machine to run a machine, it is possible to build a relatively small machine to run a machine -- we call them "black boxes" in America. It is now possible to build a machine which will store a million characters or perhaps give a million instructions to another machine. You can begin to understand with this ability of storage and this ability of rapidly getting to this stored information, that the machine to run a machine, the automation, becomes much simpler and much less expensive than it ever could have been before the advent of electronics. So now we have taken a great leap forward. Let's look at it for a moment in the manufacture of accounting machines where I have some knowledge.

.../

In the United States at the present time, our organization is making accounting machines with a device called Autofab. Autofab means "automatic fabrication." In this electronic process, we project a picture of a circuit on a plastic board photographically - we develop this circuit photographically - and then we etch away the copper covering to this board so that we leave on the board only the wiring that we want, and this automatically. We bore holes in this circuit to receive tubes, diodes, translators, resistors and all of the other things that one uses in an electronic circuit. And then we automatically feed this board under hoppers containing these various electronic elements. We drop these elements into these holes again automatically, and we dip these boards in solder which automatically affixes all of these elements to the board; and then we put these boards automatically in packing cases from which they are assembled at another point in the factory into the final IBM machine. The components are varied - the wiring changed automatically at will. This replaces a process that was completely done by hand, where soldering and running of wires was a very laborious proposition, and where our cost is probably one-tenth former cost. Automation here becomes a tool for profit.

We have been consistently, ever since the early 1800's, producing more product with proportionally less people. The application of automation in factories as I said in the past has been slow because this new means of doing automation through electronics just wasn't known. Nevertheless, the factory output in the last 35 years has increased through the efficient application of power and automation so that the individual factory man is producing now four times what he produced in 1915 and total employment has steadily climbed. In the last century, 1850 - 1950, the United States work week has been reduced 41%, from 69 to 40 hours.

I am not an economist as you know, but it seems to me that automation holds a greater promise for the future industry than any other thing that has come to the industrialist in the last few centuries - more promise than anything that has been handed to the manufacturers of the world since the application of the water-wheel to do part of the work of man. At home and abroad one gets the erroneous impression that automation will have very adverse effects on labor. In the United States I have been told that even if we apply all that we know about automatic control or automation at the present time, regardless of costs, and each one of these applications has to be balanced against cost, only a very small segment of our laboring force, perhaps 8%, would be directly affected.

In some cases automation can revive an industry that is in difficulty, actually put people back at work. A coal mining machine has been developed in the U.S. which will do the work of many miners and it is expected that this coal mining machine instead of putting people in the coal industry out of work, will put people back to work. For the reason that coal mining, particularly hard coal mining, has become so expensive because of the high labor factor as to render the price of hard coal so high that it is being rapidly replaced in the U.S. by oil and gas. With the introduction of this very highly automatized machine, the whole hard coal industry may be revived. Since this machine can perhaps do the work of ten or twelve former workers, coal mining becomes profitable once more.

.../

We are producing very complex computers for our Armed Forces in the United States. Without much automation in manufacture, these machines would simply be too expensive to contemplate. This is an industry created by automation.

We are fanatics in the United States on automation. We are continually pushed by costs. The average wage rates in our own plants have risen from $626 per hour in 1930 to a total of $2.20 today, and in order to pay that wage we just have to make our machines work in the most automatic way and the fastest way possible. The result - 45% of the machines tools in the U. S. are less than ten years old and this age is constantly decreasing.

62.6¢

I think actually what we do is go through an economic cycle. It is well to think about it here. It seems simple, it seems rudimentary, and yet in my own industry, and I think in industry generally in America, this had happened. In the first place by the application of automation one needs less manpower. One produces the same or greater product with less manpower. In using less manpower, one lowers one's costs and broadens the market. This creates a need for more product. Therefore, more factories must be built. When we have more factories, we need more manpower. So we go from less manpower by the application of automation to more manpower because of greater output and greater demand. Sounds like magic but it works.

Remember the Industrial Revolution involved a great deal of automation. With all this automation, the total employment of the countries of the world that were being industrialized was steadily increasing and it still is. Don't forget this very significant fact when one speaks of automation putting people permanently out of work.

The automotive industry, which most Americans consider the ultimate of modern production methods, offers good example. In spite of dollars invested in automatic machinery each year, the number of workers in this industry has doubled since 1941. In General Motors Corporation alone this represents an increase of well over 200,000 workers.

I could cite as examples any field where automation is making inroads, provided there has been the time for necessary readjustment of individuals and groups temporarily affected. Today we have over 1,000 companies engaged wholly or partly in the manufacture of automatic control or automation equipment. It is one of the fastest growing industries in my country - last year it sold more than 3 billion dollars worth of equipment.

We in America have a very real problem confronting us in the next decade. Automation is the best and only solution. The problem can be outlined quite simply.

.../

1. Due to the wonders of modern medicine, our people are living longer. They are increasing the market.

2. At the same time, our birth rate is climbing faster than ever before.

3. To meet these increased markets, our available manpower short term is forecast to increase only slightly. Due to the low birth rate during 1930 - 40 (the depression years), and due to the longer schooling period which our youth is now able to have, there will be a dearth of labor to man our factories.

To me the answer is obvious. Skilled management engineers have estimated that to meet the challenge of the next ten years, each U.S. worker in America will have to produce 50% more goods on an average than previously. This can only be done through automation.

Automation is going to take over the uninteresting, drab industrial jobs on a machine basis and allow the interesting jobs to be handled by men - the complicated jobs, the jobs that require real thinking. Many of you in this room run factories. I wonder if in walking through these factories you have thought of the utter boredom of the worker who is working, for instance, a punch press producing washers all day long. Think of being confined to a machine that produces a little ring of metal five or six or eight times a minute. Think of how this person feels about his job against how you and I think of our jobs. Think of the personal satisfaction that we get out of doing our jobs well, and think of how missing this personal satisfaction item must be in the job of the repetitive worker in the plant doing a very drab job. All of these drab jobs can be taken over by automation very, very simply and very, very cheaply, and think of what will happen to the morale,of employees when many more employees have interesting jobs.

And now in conclusion, I want to say that I think automation has come about to date by evolution. It has come about over 300 years - it has come about very slowly. Actually there is very little automation comparatively in the world today. There is a lot of application of power. I think we have learned to apply power to almost everything that conceivably power could be applied to. We have even applied power to the brakes of a car - to the steering of a car. We have applied power to our simple lawn mowers, and in the United States even though you are cutting a lawn 50-feet by 50-feet, you often find a gasoline driven lawn mower. We have power-driven washing machines, power-driven dryers, power-driven ironers, power-driven dish washers, etc. So, power has really been applied on a very wide basis.

Now the next step is applying automation to that power, making the power automatic. Certainly the lawn mowers will be automated before very long and will be caused to cut around a perimeter of an uncut area and keep cutting and closing that perimeter until the whole lawn is cut, and then the lawn mower will automatically stop itself. The same applies to farm machinery in general.

.../

You will find automated automobile driving, I am very confident, on the super highways of America in the next 25 years. You will drive your car or conduct your car to a super highway, you will buy a ticket or pay a toll, and you will decide at what speed you want to drive. If you want to drive at the rate of 80 to 90 kilometers per hour, you will accelerate your car up to 80 or 90 and when you arrive at that speed you will pull a lever which will automatically control your car at that speed and follow an invisible line caused by an electronic impulse emitted by a wire laid down in the middle of that highway. Your car will continue to follow that, automatically putting on the brakes if there is something ahead, accelerating back to speed when the road is clear, using more power up hills, and less power down hills completely automatically until you arrive at your destination, at which point you will pull your automatic control lever to OFF and you will turn your car off the highway.

Gentlemen, you may smile at this, but this is an absolute reality in America's future, and I confidently predict this will happen. I think exactly the same thing will happen with airplanes. Not that the airplane pilot is particularly tired or challenged by his job today, but that he is human. I think that with the controls that can be put into the automatic flying of an airplane, it can be made more reliable and safer than a physical being can be made to be safe. And, therefore, I confidently expect the jet airliners of the future will take off automatically, will climb to altitude automatically, will land automatically in fog, rain or sleet and that pilots will simply be monitoring the automatic equipment to make sure that none of it fails, in which emergency the human might take over.

To me, automation has no perils. I have not even mentioned the shorter working day or even the 4-day week which I think eventually will become a reality. I look forward in my life span to witnessing a remarkable and astounding future.

Automation will bring into being new products and new methods absolutely impossible formerly. Since these applications will be opening up new fields, I do not foresee any overall unemployment, even in the relatively short term in any country where more automation is used.

Automation gives hope to everyone:

Hope to the manufacturer for lowered costs - greater volumes - more efficiency and most important greater profits.

Hope to labor for shorter hours - more interesting jobs - better working conditions.

Hope to the consumer - to all of us - for more things for everyone with better quality and lower cost.

.../

And so, by continued evolution - automation is going to bring us a safer and better world - an increasing standard of living for all - greater output per individual and cheaper consumer goods for all to buy.

In truth, I think automation is the great economic promise of tomorrow.

LET US NOT FEAR IT

LET'S EMBRACE IT FOR

AUTOMATION MEANS PROGRESS

Thank you very much

Diebold, John
SIN June 9, 1957
Automation

September 21, 1960

Dear Mr. Diebold:

Your recent letter and testimony arrived during Mr. Murrow's absence from the office.

I shall bring it to his attention upon his return in a few days.

Thank you again.

Sincerely,

Mary Cecchini
Secretary

Mr. John Diebold
John Diebold and Associates, Inc.
40 Wall Street
New York 5, New York

Program on Automation
S/N

JOHN DIEBOLD & ASSOCIATES, INC.

40 WALL STREET, NEW YORK 5

Dear Ed:

The Joint Economic Committee of the U. S. Congress recently asked the witnesses of the 1955 Automation Hearings to present new testimony. I am pleased to enclose the statement that I have prepared at the request of Representative Wright Patman.

Sincerely,

John

Statement of Mr. John Diebold

Prepared at the Request of the Subcommittee on Automation and Energy Resources of the Joint Economic Committee
Congress of the United States

August 1960

Statement of John Diebold, President, The Diebold Group of Management Consulting Companies

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee, it is most appropriate at this time to consider the role of automation and technological change in our economy. The Committee is to be commended for once more turning its attention to this subject - a subject which has assumed increasing importance as a domestic issue and powerful force in the entire world.

The original hearings of this Committee marked the first national recognition of the important role of automation and technological change in our society. The proceedings of those hearings have been widely read and liberally quoted from. Those hearings provided one of the first comprehensive publications containing the views of many persons representing different sectors of the economy, all concerned with automation.

The present compilation of testimony is perhaps of even greater import in view of the present economic and world political situation. I welcome this opportunity to bring my original testimony up to date.

INTRODUCTION

Many of the promises, and certainly some of the problems of automation, have become realities in American life. The uses of automation that we predicted in 1955 have, for the most part, come to pass. No longer must we speak of the "Advent of the Automatic Factory." Automation has "arrived." During these few years, since the hearings in 1955, "Automation" itself has become an industry. The increases in manufacture of automatic equipment for machine and process control in the factory have been complemented by the phenomenal growth of the electronic data processing equipment industries servicing both factory and office. The whole new field of computer technology has passed from its infancy stages to one of high complexity and sophistication. It was only several years ago, when I first testified before this committee, that the first computers became available for office use. Yet, today, electronic data processing equipment is a common tool of industry.

Both office and factory automation have been most instrumental in increasing our productivity and national output. In fact, their importance in the economy has made it necessary to transcend our present thinking of these techniques as simply "tools" of production. Automation, and the concepts that it embodies, has become a national resource - a source of strength to the nation and a stimulus for technological change.

It is questionable whether we have used this resource as effectively as we should or could, although our achievements seem spectacular. The uses to which we put our energies and the results derived can no longer be compared only with our own historical performance. The world has changed too fast for that. We have seen very graphically in the last few years the results of efforts in the technological area. We have watched our chief competitor, the Soviet Union, make remarkable gains both militarily and economically. If we do not make the fullest use of the techniques we have developed, you may be sure that the Soviets will do just that.

Neither technical nor economic reasons have prevented us from making optimal use of automation. Perhaps, the most important single fact surrounding automation has been the fear it has engendered - fear of the human consequences of automation. Much of it has been irrational; some of it reasonable. The fact remains that we must improve the environment for achieving technological changes. But we must also recognize that in order to reap the benefits of technological innovation, we must be prepared for innovation in the social environment. We must be willing to consider new solutions to human problems we can't solve with old methods.

We are in a critical economic war. The United States Government should do all it can to stimulate private enterprise to produce cheaply and efficiently, and increase business' re-investment rate. This calls for a positive national policy toward productivity and technological change.

At the same time, government, business and community must work together to minimize (and hopefully eliminate) the human hardships that may locally appear due to rapidly changing economic conditions.

The fact remains that we still don't know enough about the effects of automation, or indeed technological change, to intelligently deal with it. This lack of facts stimulates the fear. In the five years that have elapsed since the initial hearings on automation and technological change, no concerted effort has been made on a national basis to overcome our ignorance. Certainly the efforts of this Committee will do much to help meet this need.

REFLECTIONS ON MY ORIGINAL TESTIMONY

Chairman Patman in his recent letter inviting me to submit testimony before this Subcommittee asked for my views on:

-the progress which automation has made since the earlier hearings in 1955

-the growth of the automation industry

-the extent and type of employee displacement

-and the problems of retraining and reallocation of workers.

Representative Patman specifically asked where I felt that events had reinforced my earlier views and where my views had changed in light of current trends. I will address myself initially to these questions. I believe it would then be helpful to discuss in more detail various aspects of automation of interest to this Subcommittee -- to attempt to "bring automation up-to-date." My discussion will include the following sections: Automation Today, more on the concept of automation; Applications and Uses for Automation; The Automation Industry; and Economic and Social Aspects of Automation. The statement will conclude with my views on the need for a national policy to deal with automation and technological change.

Changes in Views

In 1955, I stated before this Subcommittee that I did not feel that "automation requires any special legislation." I still think the legislation should not be directed specifically at automation, so much as it is necessary for government recognition of the total problem of coping with technological change.

The hearings, which this Subcommittee inaugurated in 1955, stressed the potential impact of automation and technological change on the United States. During the intervening years, this "potential" has partially been realized. The introduction of automation technology has resulted in changes within industry and government. It is not difficult to determine the importance that industry places in automation; the growing amount of industrial capital expenditures for automatic equipment speaks for itself. Unions have recognized automation and have made an issue of it at the collective bargaining tables. The Federal Government, in its various agencies, is continually installing substantial amounts of electronic data processing equipment to obtain greater efficiencies (and, indeed, recent Congressional committee hearings were devoted to measuring the effects of electronic data processing in government.) Individual state governments have held conferences to consider the economic and social consequences of automation for their states -- the Governers of both Massachussetts and New York convened such conferences recently. Automation has become a national issue.

In these last few years other issues have become crystallized in the public's eye: our rate of national economic growth, the political and economic competition with the Soviet Union, the growth of the free world as a source of competition and as a market and the problems of bringing underdeveloped countries into the twentieth century economically, technologically, and socially. All these issues seem to me to be interdependent with each other and with the issue of automation and technological change. We cannot sustain a high national growth rate, we cannot compete effectively in the world markets, we cannot adequately aid foreign countries, unless we make the fullest use of our productive capabilities. We have not accomplished this in recent years. I believe we will have continued difficulties in overcoming our domestic and international problems unless we tackle this issue: how to employ automation and technological change most effectively.

To my mind, there is a clear need for national policy aimed at making the most effective use of technological change. It is not a question of dealing with automation alone. Automation is part of a complex pattern of continuing technological sophistication within our economy. In fact, it is most difficult to isolate the effects of the uses of automation techniques from other change. The Bureau of Labor Statistics, for example, correctly recognized this difficulty when they recently announced the sizeable productivity increases in 1959 over 1958. They pointed out that this increase could not be attributed to one factor alone but to "the combined effect of a number of interrelated influences, such as skills of workers, managerial skill, changes in technology, capital investment per worker, utilization of capacity, layout and flow of material, and labor-management relations."

The problem, it would seem, is much broader than the "control" of automation through special legislation. We cannot "legislate" automation into existence, just as we cannot legislate its disappearance. Automation is a philosophy of technology - a set of concepts. In itself, it only makes available to us the knowledge of how to better satisfy our material and intellectual desires. Automation does not "cause" anything. To attribute any inherent evils to automation or technological change is like aiming at the shadow instead of the object.

For years we have allowed the turn of phrases, such as "Automation causes---", to erroneously direct our approach to the subject. These phrases are really shortcut ways of saying "When we apply a set of automation techniques, these set of results occur." Our own actions or inactions actually cause the results.

It has been frequently said that "technological change causes unemployment"; but if a person literally believes what he has said, it is like saying "atomic energy causes war." Atomic energy does not cause war and technological change does not cause unemployment.

We know, for example, that the economy is going through a period when the unemployment rate is much higher than the national average for the unskilled, uneducated worker. This state is expected to continue for a long time to come. Is automation or technological change keeping the unskilled unemployed? Or rather is there a more basic problem of the failure to eliminate substandard education and training?

My personal belief is that the prevailing fear of automation and technological change is totally misdirected. If there must be concern over change, it should be directed towards our own actions in coping with change. We have not even devoted sufficient efforts to examining the "change" phenomenon - and this is necessary before we can act properly.

Ironically enough, the nation presently finds itself in a state in which it is not making the fullest uses of the available labor manpower and productive capacity; this at a time when there is an international economic necessity to do the opposite. The national productivity and output has increased only rather sluggishly in recent years. My original views on the rate of speed at which automation would be introduced were that it would "take a long time to effect." I believe that the problems of application are even greater than were anticipated at the time of the initial hearings. Much of the difficulty has not been technological as much as it has been the human problems encountered: introducing new concepts within business organizations not readily adaptable to change, consciousness on the part of management and labor to minimize decreasing employment opportunities within the company and such. These kinds of problems have not been solved to a sufficient degree to substantially increase the rate at which automation will be introduced into industry.

In connection with the above problem is the one of education and reeducation. This problem seems more impressive to me now then during the original hearings. The question of what are the changing skill requirements of industry still goes unanswered. On a national scale, we still have not given this question sufficient study, though it has already become a problem among large localized groups of unskilled workers.

Greater understanding of the extent of the problem is needed. A recent study by the State of New York dissected the problem of its future manpower needs and showed what the educational requirements would most likely be in the near future. The Bureau of Labor Statistics through its fine case studies has shed further light on this problem area. I would think that more research is needed on a national scale to determine our needs in this area.

Because of some of the difficulties that have developed in the introduction of automation, some of the benefits that I anticipated earlier may not come to pass so readily. I do not expect that excessive leisure will be of concern to us in the near future. The problem of increasing our national output would seem to me to take precedence over this. In the same view, I would not expect any drastic reduction in the average work week figures. In some industries, I would expect that my earlier estimate of decreases in the work week to the low thirties may come to pass. (Some industries have already achieved this level). However, the greater reductions in work week will probably continue to occur in those industries with high work week levels, agriculture and services.

Views that have been Reinforced

I began my original testimony by emphasizing the need "to derive some factual information about automation and its impact upon the economy." This need is more urgent than it was before. While I don't feel that automation has been introduced at as high a rate as has been technically possible, its introduction and its impact have far outstripped what little we have learned about it. My original recommendations included "an outline of a factual study of automation." I have submitted a more complete "Guide" to such a study, once again, in the following section in this statement. Studies are still vitally necessary. Academic groups and governmental agencies have effected fine studies in this area, but they have been limited by serious lack of funds to carry this work further. This would seem to be a proper area for supportable research by all levels of government; Federal, State and local. Private Foundations could also do more to support study in this field. A solid, comprehensive body of facts on the economic and social effects of automation is still non existent!

Though we are far from making the best uses of automation, I am most encouraged by the greater recognition that it has received as a new set of concepts rather than as an extension of mechanization. I previously referred to automation as "a basic change in production philosophy... a means of organizing or controlling production processes to achieve optimum use of all production resources - mechanical, material and human."

While industry is far from being organized along these lines, more people are beginning to understand the concepts behind it. We learn of more imaginative uses for automation technology everyday.

Many of the feasible applications for automatic controls that I talked about in 1955 are already operational facts. Especially in the process industries, optimal control is now closely approachable. "It makes it possible to do things that you could not do before, in addition to doing the things we have been doing more efficiently." This still seems to me to be the greatest contribution automation can make to our economy.

The new levels of achievement and doing present tasks more efficiently have not been limited to large business organizations. "Small business" can make extensive use of automation techniques both in the factory and the office. Manufacturers have given attention to the design of electronic data processing systems specifically for the use of small business. We have also experienced in recent years the widespread application of the service bureau concept. These bureaus have been designed to care for the needs of smaller organizations without their own computers (I have discussed the service bureaus in more detail in the section on "Applications", also, data on the extent of usage of small electronic data processing systems is found in the section on "The Automation Industry"). In the factory, the availability of flexible machine tools with numerical control may serve to increase the competitive power of smaller business. My initial opinion that numerical controls would be slow in coming seems to have been borne out. Only recently this technique has started to catch hold in industry, but its rate of acceptance will increase rapidly for years to come (I have included growth estimates of the numerical tool controls industry in the section on the "Industry").

The total automation industry has grown to major proportions within the economy. As I recall, the growth potential of the automation industry seemed doubtful to some witnesses on account of what was considered the high investment needed to obtain automation equipment. However, versatile systems, special designs, lower cost per operation and the service bureaus have succeeded in making automation available to practically all sectors of the business community. According to my firm's estimates there were more than ten thousand computer systems installed by July 1960. When the initial hearings were held, the systems in operation could be numbered in the dozens. Of this July 1960 total, about twenty-eight hundred were small computer systems. We have estimated that more than forty-five hundred systems are on order. My firm's long run projections for this industry put electronic data processing equipment annual sales well into the billion dollar category.

Other sectors of the automation equipment industry, machine and process controls, are expected to grow at comparable rates.

As the installation of these equipments are accomplished, I think we will begin to notice "where automation is introducing changes in our concepts, our ways of thinking about management. The organizational structure of business (will) start to shift." This opinion, that I stated in 1955, I still hold today. My feelings now are that the restructuring trend will continue in business organizations. "This makes for many changes in the requirements of what people are doing in firms. It again calls attention to education, and to areas where it is necessary to understand precisely what is happening."

The issue of education has taken on major proportions with respect to business needs: greater need for the professional college-trained scientist, engineer and technician; less need for the unskilled. New applied sciences have developed in the last few years which have centered about the concepts of automation; these sciences have synthesized the worlds of mathematics, electronics and business. As business grows more sophisticated in its applications of automation, the demand for management personnel trained in these sciences will grow. Now is the time when these people should be trained. I feel quite strongly that this task - of training management personnel who can make the fullest use of automation concepts and techniques - is not being carried out. With all the profusion of data processing courses and surveys of automation attached to business school curriculums, we have few examples of institutions of higher learning in business which fully integrate the concepts of automation into the entire course of study. One of the bottlenecks, then, in making the fullest use of automation may very well be the lack of adequately trained management manpower.

No doubt, the most prominent aspect of automation is how industries' use of this technology affects employment levels. I pointed out earlier that automation is part of the continuing process of technological change. As part of this change, it has contributed to the "dynamic movements from one industry to another" within the civilian labor force. The long term trend of a decreasing percentage of the labor force engaged in manufacturing will most certainly continue. In the last decade, the manufacturing sector has not only shown percentage decreases, but has decreased in terms of absolute number of employees. Following both the recessions of 1954 and 1958, the manufacturing employment highs have failed to reach pre-recession levels. The heavy capital equipment expenditures to further automate and mechanize facilities certainly contributed in some part of this trend.

Most of the manufacturing employment decreases were taken in the production work force. This was accompanied by higher employment levels for non-productive workers, those in the managerial and clerical work force.

Recent estimates for this latter sector show it to be perennially behind production workers in raising its productivity and in its absolute productivity as well. In the years to come, I would expect productivity in this sector to rise at a faster rate than it has previously; this should result, to a great extent, from the increased (and more skillful) use of automatic data processing equipment.

The major employment opportunities can be expected in the services and non-manufacturing, non-agricultural industries. I would expect that in some sectors of the latter category - transportation, public utilities, finance and insurance - further increases in productivity may affect employment opportunities somewhat.

I would like to re-emphasize here my earlier comment that if we are to adequately cope with any human problems arising out of dislocation of industry, minimized employment levels in certain industries, new skills and education requirements, we must direct attention to the basic reasons why these problems exist. If industries relocate to new areas, there is a basic problem of stimulating economic growth in the vacated area. If certain industries recede their employment roles, facilities and manpower must be made available to help the displaced develop new skills and obtain different employment. Technological change cannot be encouraged, any temporary problems that may develop in its path cannot be solved, by dealing symptomatically with the change itself.

BRINGING AUTOMATION UP TO DATE

Automation Today

Applications and Uses for Automation

Growth of the Automation Industry

Economic and Social Aspects of Automation

A Guide to a Study of Automation in the U.S. Economy

AUTOMATION TODAY

Throughout the testimony submitted before this Subcommittee, you will come across definitions of automation. Though views will differ, depending on the background of the witness, I think that the concept of automation as a new way of analyzing and organizing work will be more heavily stressed than at the original hearings.

As I pointed out earlier, I still feel that the concept of the system is most crucial in describing automation. It is the main contribution that automation will make to business organization. If automation means anything at all, it means something more than a mere extension of mechanization. I believe that it marks a break with past trends, a qualitative departure from the more conventional advance of technology that began with jagged pieces of flint and progressed up to the steam engine. It implies a basic change in our attitude toward the manner of performing work. Perhaps because we see things more easily than ideas, this meaning of automation as a way of thinking has been obscured by a fascination with the machines of automation. As a result, when we hear the word "automation" we tend to think of electronic computers, massive transfer machines, numerical tool controls, or perhaps the instrument panel of an oil refinery - machines that new concepts have made possible. Automation, however, is much more than machines, and it is important to understand this if the full social and economic implications are to be understood.

Unquestionably, industrial progress began hundreds of years ago. Great strides were made in the industrial revolution of the eighteenth century. This was the period of mechanization. Mechanization provided power-driven tools, eliminating many manual tasks and freeing labor from much of the physical work required in production. But no matter how small a portion of brute strength was involved in running a machine, a human worker was always needed to operate and control it. Production processes, therefore, were necessarily designed around the human worker as operator. His reaction time, his powers of perception and concentration and discrimination, his height, his power to withstand heat and cold, his two arms and ten fingers and his ability to coordinate them dictated what could and what could not be done.

Now, through systematic application of the principle called feedback, machines can be built which control their own operations, so that production processes do not have to be designed to take into account the human limitations of a human worker. To me, this is one of the distinctive facts about automation. It is no longer necessary to think in terms of individual machines, or even in terms of groups of machines; instead, for the first time, it is practical to look at an entire production or information-handling process as an integrated system and not as a series of individual steps. It is through the new technology of automation that we are now beginning to possess the ability and the tools to build such systems.

In the past our limited knowledge of the nature of feedback and control made their application dependent upon the ingenuity of individual inventors who used these principles for the sporadic construction of individual machines or segments of overall systems. Even if we had been inspired by the idea of integrated systems, as some men have certainly been at different times in history, we did not in the past possess the technical knowledge to turn this idea into reality. Today, because of advances in the theory and technology of control, communication, and information, we do possess that knowledge and, equally important, we are beginning to apply it in many fields of endeavor.

Automation is more than a series of new machines and more basic than any particular hardware. It is a way of thinking as much as it is a way of doing. It is a new way of organizing and analyzing production, a concern with the production processes as a system, and a consideration of each element as part of the system. It is something of a conceptual breakthrough, as revolutionary in its way as Henry Ford's concept of the assembly line. Indeed, it may in the end have an even more widespread effect on business and industry, since its technology rests on a firm theoretical foundation rather than on a specific method of organization or particular kind of machine. Automation is, therefore, adaptable to many different kinds of operations - office work as well as factory work - in small concerns as well as large.

I think that a good part of the confusion which has resulted in attempts to describe automation has come about from defining the word in terms of the nature of its applications. Many of the definitions offered in the past have not conflicted with one another as much as they have neglected one another. That is, they have defined only one segment of what can properly be considered automation (this is the difficulty one encounters when a definition is attempted in terms of "hardware," or machinery, instead of concept).

Chart A, produced by the International Labour Office, shows very graphically the evolution of automation. Very properly, I think, automation is shown phased into the continuous development of work processes.

Although we are in a position to draw some valid conclusions from an adequate study of today's manifestiation of automation, we must remember that automation has not really got off the ground. The concept of automation is what is important. Future machines and hardware will undoubtedly be different from anything that we can presently envisage, but I feel that for a long time to come they will simply be extensions and realizations of the concept of automation.

MANUAL STAGE

production by units

STAGE OF MECHANISATION

assembly line controls

Source: International Labour Office

CHART A

APPLICATIONS AND USES OF AUTOMATION

As it has developed in the United States, automation takes many forms and can be classified in several ways:

One such classification is as follows:

Computers: Automatic handling of information by use of electronic systems.

"Detroit Automation": Integration of machines; linking together, by means of automatic transfer devices of the machines of production.

Process Control Systems: Computer and integrated control systems for operation of process (oil, chemical, atomic) plants.

Numerical Control: The use of tape and other automatic control devices to direct operation of machines and machine systems.

The mechanization of what we already do today is the part of automation that has received the most attention. The automated engine lines in automobile plants, and massive transfer machines are familiar examples of automation. These machines and the jobs they do are important, for they contribute to increases in productivity. But they represent the least significant way in which automation increases productivity.

Eight or ten years ago, I was inclined toward this definition of automation, but with more practical first-hand experience, I soon changed my mind. The more I have been engaged in the actual application of automation to industry and government, the more convinced I am that the fundamental importance of automation is not so much the connecting of machines as it is the ability to create automatic information and control systems. The machines change from year to year, but automation is important as a combination of theoretical understanding, information handling, and of the practical application of this theory to build self-correcting systems.

The truly great gains from automation come when it extends the range of man's capability by permitting him to undertake new tasks and reach hitherto unattainable objectives. It is in this area that man's productivity is multiplied, not a few times, but by many orders of magnitude. And it is here that the greatest difficulties are encountered in determining automation's economic consequences.

For example, the principles of long-range weather forecasting are well understood, but digesting the mass of data necessary to produce accurate long-range forecasts has until now been beyond the reach of man or machine. Just recently, a computer was designed capable of doing more than 100 billion arithmetical computations a day. A giant like this will soon be able to provide accurate long-range forecasts, with repercussions for agriculture, construction, transportation and other industries that are breathtaking to contemplate.

Our experience has shown that the motivations for automating have been very diverse. Apart from the fact that many considered it a band wagon on which they should climb, the overriding factors dictating a decision to automate usually were, and still are, (1) to cut production costs (2) to reduce labor requirements (3) to do existing things faster (4) to do things not possible before (5) to increase productivity and (6) to aid in decision-making by providing fuller and faster information.

Probably the most common, and the worst reason for embarking on an automation program is to save labor costs. Office management in particular has been bedeviled for years by rising clerical costs and the difficulty of hiring enough clerks to get the work done. Mindful of claims to the effect that one man can be taken off the payroll for each $5,000 invested in automatic equipment, management has looked on automation as the answer to a nightmare.

At first glance, this looks like a good enough reason. Ordinarily, an automatic machine does reduce labor costs, though seldom as much as management had hoped. Here is a simplified example of the economics of the situation which shows why.

Computer Economics

A computer system with tape, tape printer, and peripheral equipment may rent for about $20,000 a month. In addition, the cost of going from the old to the new system can easily reach $275,000. It may cost more if the old system is particularly antiquated. The new system, therefore, has to relieve enough clerks to pay for the equipment and to yield a return on the investment. For a three year payout on the investment, annual savings above machine costs must be $92,000. To produce this savings from personnel alone, these costs would have to be reduced $332,000 a year. At $5,000 a year per clerk, this means a net reduction of 66 clerks for the investment to be barely justifiable. And this net reduction has to absorb the extra personnel costs for programmers and machine operators.

The main trouble with this approach is not that savings usually fail to match expectations.

When labor saving is the main goal, it automatically demotes to second place what should be the primary aim of any company installing automation equipment; to exploit fully the potentialities of these machines for doing things that cannot be done well, or cannot be done at all, without them. But even so, automation can cut costs in other less obvious directions.

A Department of Labor study of an insurance company, which installed a computer in the classification sections of one of its divisions, reveals where some of these savings lie. The computer reduced personnel in this particular area from 198 to 85 workers and freed more than 15,000 square feet of floor space for other uses. It reduced the number of punched card machines from 125 to 21, and the yearly rental for these machines from $235,000 to $19,000. Monthly punch card requirements have been cut by nearly 2.5 million. Altogether, the computer is expected to cut the classification section's budgets in half.

Indeed, management has often introduced automation largely to reduce labor costs and then finds that it has done the right thing for the wrong reason. One chemical company figured that for every dollar saved by reducing the man-hour content for each unit of product, it saved at least three dollars because it could produce a better product more efficiently and with less waste.

"Detroit" Automation in Practice

Among the first examples of the Detroit type of automation are the two Brooks Park engine plants of the Ford Motor Company, near Cleveland, which since 1951 have been turning out six-cylinder engine blocks from rough castings. The castings which are first produced in an automated foundry, are fed into a broaching machine, which then "just goes 'whoosh' and it is done," as one startled observer described the process. Altogether, 42 automatic machines, linked together by transfer devices that automatically move the blocks through the complete process, perform 530 precision cutting operations and borings. A rough casting goes through the line and emerges as a finished engine block in just 14.6 minutes, as against nine hours in a conventional plant.

From the start to finish along the 1,545 foot line, no operator touches a part. "I don't do nothing but press these two buttons," the operator of the broaching machine on an automated Ford Line at Dearborn remarked. "Sometimes I use my thumbs (to push the buttons), sometimes I use my wrists and sometimes I lay my whole arm across. The only time I sweat on the job any more is when the sun is 100 and something outside."

All too often today the economies expected of automation do not bear fruit in actual practice. The expected savings from high cost installations may turn into unrealized hopes.

The following, by now famous, case story clearly illustrates that automation can be a two way street, if the moves are not properly planned.

Late in 1952, a well-known Midwestern automotive supplier began planning a new and highly automated plant that was to prove almost disastrous.

This new facility was an industrial automation scheme designed for the production of body frames for the 1955 model of a popular low-price automobile. The heart of the plant was a 39-station riveting and welding transfer line for assembling the frames. Anticipated rate of production was 200 frames an hour, which represented 40 per cent of the customer's total requirements.

A new plant in northern Illinois, specially designed to house the machinery, was scheduled to go into production in the Summer of 1954 - allowing a lead-time of eighteen months between preliminary design and full operation. Although the machinery was installed on time, a continuing series of mechanical defects prevented the line from working properly. For example, the lack of complete drawings and proper references from the equipment vendor resulted in misalignment by one-fourth of an inch of a 30-foot station, which, in turn, prevented transfer through the station. Similarly, a number of transfer clamps had to be redesigned because original plans proved inadequate.

Mechanical problems continued to hold up production throughout the Summer of 1954. By Autumn, the body frame manufacturer was forced to install manual machines in order to meet delivery commitments for the beginning of the 1955 model year. This meant hiring 2,500 workers, rather than the originally planned 1,000. Because of local labor shortages, unskilled workers were hired. Although the plant was located in an area which had a history of labor trouble, little weight had been given to this fact when an automated facility had been planned. As things turned out, the company was faced with severe jurisdictional disputes and slowdowns.

The company succeeded in meeting production schedules with the manual equipment while debugging progressed on the automatic line. The line ran at reduced speed during the Spring and Summer of 1955, but in the Fall, the machinery began to have frequent breakdowns. Pressure for production prevented, for a time, the shutdown needed for correcting the engineering defects, but the line was finally shut down and rebuilt, with redesigned parts substituted for the ones which were faulty. This work took more than a year to complete. In the Spring of 1957, the line was finally started up again. It ran almost perfectly for four months, turning out superior frames at better than the originally planned rate of production.

The 1957 production year then ended. The 1958 model of the automobile was redesigned on a new frame, which was all welded. The original investment in the automatic line was about $4 million.

The estimated cost of retooling for the 1958 frame was about $2 million. In the meantime, because of the frame manufacturer's poor delivery performance, the automobile manufacturer cut his order by about 40 per cent. The economic justification for the automatic line was destroyed. As a result, the 1958 frames were produced on a semi-automatic line in one of the supplier's original plants. The estimated loss on operation of the automated plant was almost $10 million.

Why should all this have happened? The series of difficulties this manufacturer experienced - unanticipated mechanical trouble, labor trouble, insufficient time for debugging the new equipment, severe pressure for production - might at first glance be put down to nothing more than a run of plain bad luck.

But it was not bad luck. Every one of the difficulties that made automation a fiasco for this company can be traced to inadequate planning and insufficient lead time. In short, the company grossly underestimated the magnitude of the change it was undertaking.

Process Control

When the material being processed is not a rigid, solid object but something that flows by its very nature - a liquid, a gas, electric energy, a solid in crushed or powdered form - continuous flow is a good deal easier to achieve. Thus, it is not surprising that automation began earlier and has gone much further in the processing industries than in manufacturing, although these industries are still a long way from full automation.

In chemical manufacture and oil refining - the industries that have gone the furthest in automating - entire systems of control instruments regulate the production processes, making it virtually automatic from raw material to finished product, and sometimes to finished by-product as well. A modern oil refinery, oil men estimate, is 80 to 90 per cent automatic. In Esso's refinery at Fawley, England, six men on any one shift operate distillation units processing 5.5 million gallons of crude oil a day. In another plant in Iran, one operator in a central control room regulates 50,000 barrels a day, the total output of four wells singlehanded. "A man may work for months on a pipeline, or in a refinery, or even in the production fields and never see or touch oil," an official of the Oil Workers Union has said.

Here are a few more examples that further illustrate the advantages of more automated process control:

--The chief instrument engineer of a chemical company stated:

"Our most significant improvements in purity, increases in throughput for existing equipment, and increases in product uniformity have been brought about by the addition of either analytical instruments or by rearranging the existing instruments into tighter control loops, or by the combination of both. When we have studied the economics after installation, it has not been unusual for us to find savings to the company of anywhere from $50,000 to $150,000 per year by adding instrumentation that costs from $10,000 to $15,000."

--Installation of automatic product gauge controls in a plastic film extrusion operation yields savings on materials of $33,000 per year. The cost of the controls was $24,500.

--The installation of computer to control a catalytic polymerization unit in a refinery, in conjunction with chromatograph stream analyzers, other new sensing elements, and pneumatic to electric and electric to pneumatic transducers yielded an increase in yield from 86% of theoretical maximum to 93% plus an annual savings in cost of catalytic material of $75,000. Total annual savings are approximately $350,000. The total cost of the control installation was $300,000.

--The installation of new instrumentation system in a pulp plant resulted in increasing the yield of one cord of wood from .57 tons to .8 tons of pulp.

Numerical Control

Numerical control automation, which has just recently begun to be applied on a widespread basis, is especially applicable to small shops with short runs of greatly varying products--typical job shops. There are roughly 750 of these tape fed machines in existence today. As I mentioned in earlier testimony, the bulk of U. S. hard-goods production is in lots of less than 25 identical units. But today's plant automation is largely of the "Detroit type" - large transfer machinery, suitable for only a small portion of our national production. The solution of this problem is on hand in the numerically controlled machine tool. The development of smaller versions of this equipment will be of principal importance to the factory in the future. Such machines will be capable of producing a short run of one product and then, with a change of tape, producing a few more units of an entirely different product, all from the same tool.

Individual companies adopt automatic control because they expect to benefit from its use by doing existing things better through cutting labor costs, increasing the yield from a facility, reducing in-process inventory, facilitating change in product characteristics or for other reasons. However, the greatest gains in productivity from automation will come from being able to do altogether new tasks and achieve previously unattainable goals. Manufacturers have stated that: -using a new numerical controlled machine tool, the total cycle times in the fabrication of an assortment of different parts are reduced from one-half to slightly more than one-tenth the cycle time using conventional tools -tools are two to four times more productive under numerical control than comparable tools under manual or tracer control.

Just recently a large manufacturer announced that it already had put into operation seventy-five "program-controlled machines" in the last few years. The company was specifically interested in applying automation to its job shop operations.

The next decade will see the spread of this kind of system in the plant, as the last decade has seen the spread of the computer in the office.

For several years now, my firm has conducted comprehensive surveys of users of automotive data processing equipment to find out what have been their experiences. We have generally found that proper uses of the "hardware" through careful planning has opened possibilities of great control and analysis than ever existed before.

Chart B shows part of the results of a survey we took 3 years ago of two hundred and eighty users of computer systems. The areas of greatest satisfaction occurred where the inherent speed of the equipment led to satisfaction. There seemed to be less feeling of success applying the computer where more complex management problems arose (improvement in employee morale, for example) and where there was greater need for management science (long-range decisions) techniques. These problems rather than the equipment have been the major stumbling blocks to successful automation - these, rather than any technical problems that may have developed. Technical developments, new machines, and all the results of competition and new ranges of equipment are all of no avail unless they are properly applied. For a long time, it has been this area of application that cast a shadow over the data processing field. The lag between technical achievement and actual application was, say two years ago, so significant as to be almost dangerous. The lag still exists, but at least there have been worthwhile developments in the application of computers. Information instead of paper work is becoming the raison d'etre of more and more machine systems, and the imaginative developments in 1959 have been quite interesting.

Expectations vs. Experience

CHART B

Source: John Diebold & Associates, Inc.

A textile manufacturer in New York uses a computer almost entirely for information on inventory, sales analysis, and material available for sale. Not only has this been found to be profitable, but the company is developing new applications and further information requirements that will require a larger system in the next two years. A major oil manufacturer is developing a complete program for marketing accounting that will not only reduce costs, but will provide marketing managers with up-to-date information on sales and sales tendencies all over the country. A drug and consumer goods manufacturer is using a computer to keep constant track of area sales in relation to a national index of purchasing power for a given area. As soon as discrepancies are detected between actual sales and sales that should be expected, corrective action is taken and the results can be measured on a week by week basis.

Another producer of consumer goods has been able to use a computer system to determine the effect of money spent for advertising and promotion, and to test the probable effect of expenditures on different types of advertising. The result has been a significant change in his advertising and promotion policy.

A chemical company is developing a program for patent searches and classification that will save large amounts of the time of skilled research workers, while the computer is also being used to provide the company's customers with optimum mixes of fertilizer for specific conditions. A utility company will use one of the new generation of computers to overcome the problem of providing customers with up to date, accurate answers to inquiries, in addition to performing the basic data processing work. The Boeing plant in Wichita, Kansas, is using direct connections from the factory floor to the data processing center in order to gather production data as part of an integrated system of production control.

There are many other examples, but it is enough to say that, although they remain the exception rather than the rule, many companies have made significant progress toward utilizing some of the real potential that computers offer.

The present uses for electronic data processing can be summarized under three headings: (1) Business Data Processing, (2) Analysis for Management, and (3) Scientific and Engineering Applications. This is similar to the breakdown we use for our computer surveys.

In Chart C, I have reproduced the categories under which we collect data for our surveys. It gives a good picture of present kinds of uses for computers in industry. Generally, payroll and accounting functions

Survey Categories for Electronic Dat

-Business Data Processing-

1. Payroll
2. Accounts Receivable & Billing
3. Accounts Payable
4. Cost Accounting
5. General Accounting
6. Production Control
7. Production Scheduling
8. Inventory Control

Scientific and Engineer

-CHART

Sc

ata Processing Equipment Users

-Analysis for Management-

1. Expense Distribution
2. Budgeting and Estimation
3. Sales Analysis
4. Linear Programming
5. Simulation
6. Market Research
7. Statistical Surveys
8. Prediction & Forecasting ering Applications

T C-

Source: John Diebold & Associates

are most often cited as EDP applications. Production and inventory control is becoming widely accepted for computer utilization as well as are operations research techniques (used in simulation, distribution and routing problems and production and inventory controls - to name just a few).

One of the areas of discussion prominently raised at the previous hearings was the application of electronic data processing techniques to small business. Though most small businesses are far from knowing the fruits of automation, many have already tasted it - and many more will do so in the near future. This has come about due to two developments. One, the addition to computer manufacturers' product lines of small scale computer systems specifically designed for the capacity needs and pocket books of smaller businesses; second, the expansion in number of service bureaus and data processing centers. The latter only rents its customers time on computer systems. The service bureaus mostly offer complete services in addition to renting machine time to customers; these services include programming, systems design and consultation.

The service bureau has significantly opened up automatic data processing to small firms. Though they could not justify equipment of their own, use of the service bureaus has been proven economical for such continuing applications as payroll, sales analysis, inventory control, and particularly beneficial for special problems in the operations research category involving linear programming methods.

One of the largest computer center networks, the Service Bureau Corporation, a subsidiary of IBM, has reported that the backbone of its business is from small firms, most of whose gross sales are under five million dollars annually. Their customers include insurance agencies, schools, hospitals, union locals, small manufacturers, medical clinics, dairies, banks, mortgage companies, independent telephone companies and other smaller utilities.

The impact of the service bureau concept on business should be even greater within the next few years. All the leading computer manufacturers have opened large numbers of such centres, and are continually opening more of them. These companies include IBM, Remington Rand, RCA, Minneapolis-Honeywell and Burroughs.

In addition to manufacturer-run service bureaus, independent service organizations are cropping up all over the country. The independent service bureaus do not have the built-in contacts and customers that manufacturers' service bureaus have. They must offer results at rates reasonable to the customer, and at the same time, must operate a profitable business.

Entirely independent service bureaus are in most cases offering punched card tabulating services. They will usually have punched card calculators or small computers for jobs which require more complicated analyses. In order to provide a low-cost service, these companies will specialize in one application, design a standard program which can handle simple variations of that application and will sell this to small firms at an economic rate. The large volume obtained through many customers makes this possible.

An example of this type of operation is located in New York City. This company has standard punched card equipment and a small punched card calculator. They have designed a payroll application on this equipment which can be used for several of the companies which they service. One of these companies has a 1,000-man payroll, a fairly large operation. It is a construction firm which found it very difficult to prepare accurate payroll records under their working conditions. This service relieved their accounting office of a big problem and also prepares the payroll checks and records at a lower cost.

This company has recently installed a computer which will increase its capacity considerably. The company expects to be processing payrolls for companies employing as few as 25 and as many as 1,000 employees. The significant factor in the economics of such an operation is that a standard payroll is designed and the equipment is set up to process a series of payrolls in one run. Only the imprinter changes so that the check and journal headings will show the proper company name. This provides the means for very small companies to take advantage of savings available through large volume processing.

It seems that the small independent service bureaus will be specializing in particular areas, such as payrolls, or insurance calculations, for assisting large companies during peak periods, or survey results analysis, or general accounting functions. Through standardized systems, they will be able to provide low-cost service to the small companies and not only increase their own business but also provide benefits to their customers. The customers, in so many cases, cannot afford their own equipment and even cannot afford specialized treatment, including systems design and programming on a large computer, at a service bureau.

The service bureau concept has gone beyond specific applications to small business. Large service bureaus operate high speed computers for use of the larger corporations to solve highly complex problems. Cooperative service bureaus have also been formed. While many companies are solving their data processing problems through the use of outside service bureaus, a number of companies have found it more feasible to buy a computer on a cooperative basis with other companies. In most cases, the companies who have banded together have done so because their competitors were able to buy computers of their own. In order to compete, the smaller companies had to have the use of computers and had to have them close enough geographically to perform their daily requirement.

One of the earliest groups of this type is SPAN, a group of fire and casualty insurance companies in Hartford, Connecticut. These companies installed a computer system in early 1958 for processing their paper work.

A similar arrangement was accomplished and is operating in the midwest, except that the companies involved are seven engineering firms.

A third group which has seen the need for electronic equipment is a group of banks in Texas. This group of banks will buy equipment and establish a joint computer centre.

The important economic fact to recognize is that each cooperative group is applying the computer for the same type of application - banking, insurance and engineering. The hardware of the system can, therefore, be designed for the application. The computer operation also has a steady flow of customers. These factors make for a more economical operation than service bureaus who are soliciting different kinds of business.

All these factors - the service bureau, the data centre, the cooperative bureau, the new small-scale computer systems - would seem to indicate that what can be called "small business" will have an economic opportunity to make use of automative techniques. It may be further concluded that it will be an economic necessity for them to do so.

Who Uses Automation

Despite the burgeoning use of automative techniques, both in the factory and the office, woefully little quantitative data are available as to usage by industrial and commercial sectors of the economy. The extent of penetration of automation equipment within any industry group is still not clearly ascertained.

As a firm, we assemble this kind of data. We are presently in the process of updating past computer surveys. From a qualitative standpoint, the bulk of computer installations can be accounted for among the following industries: aircraft manufacturers, transportation, insurance companies, computer component manufacturers, financial firms, public utilities, other manufacturing, military and research, science and engineering.

More data is available for the controls and instrumentation industry. I will show in the following section, The Growth of The Automation Industry, that this industry can be expected to grow at a fast rate.

During the next decade, the developments in automation should have a growing impact on American industry. Research now being conducted by electronic equipment manufacturers should yield these results. I think it is only fitting to conclude this section on "Applications" with a short discussion of the kind of developments we can expect in these next ten years.

The most immediate progress will be made in the area of communication equipment. Large corporations, which took the lead in initiating the use of large-scale computing equipment for data processing, will give more management attention to integrating accounting, purchasing, inventory control, and shop scheduling through centralized processing.

Until now, automatic data processing has been largely confined to batch processing. This means collecting data during the day, usually in the form of punched cards. These cards are then sorted and processed against a sequential file in a daily processing run. However, several improvements in the punched card system soon to be introduced should speed up the operation and reduce the input preparation costs.

Faster Fact Gathering

As is indicated in Chart E, equipment will be available this year for card-to-card transmission of data over regular long-distance telephone wires. Relatively inexpensive sending machines installed, for example, in a company's branch plants and sales offices will be used to send information at the rate of 40 cards a minute (and for the price of a phone call) over the telephone lines to headquarters where a receiving machine will produce the data on another card.

TIMETABLE FOR AUTOMATION

CHART E

Source: John Diebold & Associates, Inc.

An extension of this system, the card-to-card information station, also will be available. It would work like this:

A production worker drops his time card into a "remote station" computer located on the production floor and, using a keyboard, inserts such variable data as employee number and quantity produced. This information is then transmitted over cables to a central information station which punches a transaction card. The transaction cards transmitted from this and all other remote stations are accumulated and subsequently converted to magnetic tape and fed into the computer.

Improvements in magnetic tape transmission, however, will eventually do away with the extra operation of converting punched cards to tape. By 1961, tape-to-tape transmission utilizing long distance telephone lines will be available. Even higher-speed tape-to-tape transmission will be possible with the use of coaxial cable. This advance is expected about 1964.

Before the decade is out, it will be possible to feed information from remote stations in plants and offices directly into a central computer, which will maintain an up-to-the-minute file and will immediately feed back answers to requests for any data contained in the file.

In-plant information stations, which will be introduced in 1961, will permit direct, continuous transmission of punched-card data from the remote station into the central computer. The computer will be able to maintain an up-to-the-minute file. It will also produce daily summary reports of operations.

By 1963, continued advances will make possible the in-plant inquiry and control station, which could automate the whole scheduling process. A medium-size computer will do the basic file maintenance of incoming data, but it will be attached to a bigger computer which will draw its information from the file, coordinate such complex processes as scheduling, and relay any changes back to the remote stations.

Service industries, such as banks, will use inquiry stations, for example, to check customer accounts and to record transactions. Airlines will be able to make and confirm reservations quickly, and at the same time, record billing information. Department stores will check credit, and account balances automatically.

Automating the Plant

The truly automatic factory is still far from a reality today, but during the next decade, improvements on existing equipment and systems will bring it closer to realization.

With existing tape-controlled machine tools, extensive calculations are required to prepare the instructions for the coded magnetic tapes. Today, these calculations are performed on a computer using specially prepared programs for each specific part. By 1963, a common input language for computers will simplify this job.

A few companies, both here and abroad, are already using tape-controlled transfer equipment to link together several of these automatic machine tools into an assembly line. Further development of this equipment can be expected in the next ten years.

To be efficient, automatic tools today can perform only one specific function. But automatically controlled tools which can perform a number of different jobs, such as cutting and stamping, will be in use by 1962. The next step after the development of these general purpose machine tools will be the development of general purpose assembly machines.

Versatile New "Brains"

Behind all of these advances are a number of major improvements in in the computer itself.

General purpose computers, installed this year, will be able to handle equally well such business functions as inventory and scheduling, and such engineering functions as the design and development of new equipment.

New compact computers, which will be available by 1964, will be smaller, faster, and more flexible. They will be able to do more jobs simultaneously and will make a bigger file of information easily accessible.

Wider usage of magnetic ink character recognition systems will take place during the decade. Many banks are already using magnetic ink account numbers, which can be "read" electronically, on their checks. Character translation by scanning is another development in this area. In this process, a photo-electric eye scans the numerals and records them.

By 1966, it will be possible to instruct a computer verbally by means of audio translation. In another four years, a mechanical stenographer attached to the computer will give back the recorded data on a sheet of paper . To get the most out of its investment in this revolutionary equipment, management will give more attention to finding broader uses for these new tools of industry.

GROWTH IN THE AUTOMATION INDUSTRY

In the last five years, the growth in the use of automation techniques has certainly been great. But it is my guess that this billion dollar automation equipment industry of today is still in its infancy. I don't think this statement is optimistic. On the contrary, it is quite realistic. In the late 1940's I remember hearing of a statement that "fewer than a dozen electronic computers will be able to satisfy the entire computational requirements of this country." There is no need belaboring this prediction.

I said earlier that I felt that there were real problems in application, that automation would be slow in coming. But "slow" is a relative word. Automation will be "slow" in being applied as compared with its potential applicability. In absolute terms of dollar value of equipment delivered, diversity of machines introduced and number of units installed, the growth rate of the automation industry will generally outstrip that of the entire economy for a while to come.

Several factors can account for this growth. Continual interest on the part of business men in methods which may lead to cost reductions and better management control, technological development within the automation field, and more competition in the industry itself.

One department in my organization is specifically concerned with analyzing the automation equipment market. We are always in the process of updating our estimates and projections. It is significant that projections of the future market usually must be revised upwards as we receive more data on present market conditions!

This section will mainly include some of my firm's data on the industry's historical growth and some projections for future growth.

Process Controls and Instruments

This industry should grow threefold by 1970. Chart F illustrates my firm's estimates of the potential market for automatic controls and instrumentation. We may expect that expenditures for this type of equipment can approach and even exceed three billion dollars a year by 1970.

The process industries, such as chemicals and food processing, have been the major users of controls and instrumentation. Companies dealing with products manufactured in continuous flow systems have been quickest to adopt the use of this equipment. We can expect spectacular growth in process industries during this next decade. Chemical production is estimated to rise more than 125% by 1970, for example. Not only will process control equipment production grow due to growth in its market, new technological developments yielding new uses will expand this market to an even greater extent. Of the total expenditures in 1970 for controls and instrumentation, that equipment going to the process industries may account for about two thirds of this total, or about two billion dollars. Chart G is a graphic comparison between the rise expected in Gross National Product and a projection of process control and instrumentation expenditures. The growth rate in these industries' expenditures will be greater than ten per cent per year during these next ten years. Most certainly, it will outstrip our national growth rate rather dramatically.

ACTUAL & PROJECTED EXPENDITURES FOR CONTROLS & INSTRUMENTATION

CHART F

Source: John Diebold & Associates, Inc.

Numerical Control Equipment

Numerical controls have shown the greatest growth rate of any sector of the automation equipment field, largely because it is the newest of commercially acceptable automation techniques - and there are relatively few actual units installed. Numerical control is only six years in existence, but its acceptance by industry seems complete.

In the last few years, annual sales of this equipment have been doubling the previous year's sales record. We can expect this high rate of growth to continue for years to come. In the next three years, my firm's estimates show this industry growing by five hundred per cent to within the one hundred million dollar range. Chart H shows our projection, again with a comparison to a gross national product estimate.

Already, more than forty companies have developed numerical control equipment and are promoting its sale. The technique has demonstrated distinct advantages over conventional machine tools that outweigh its initial high cost: large potential reductions in production costs, greater accuracy and more speed - to name just a few.

Undoubtedly, the large capital outlays needed to install numerical controlled machines will keep many small businesses from employing them at this time. Many may simply be reluctant to lay out money for new tools when it would seem that the ones they have are perfectly good. Eventually, competition may drive the smaller businesses to use of this technique. Making these automated tools economically feasible for them will require that the machines have great flexibility - which they are technically capable of - and good service on the part of the manufacturers. I think the latter will certainly occur. The analogy may be made here to the role of the manufacturers of computers who have done a great deal in bringing the technical know-how to the equipment users.

RATES OF GROWTH: GNP & PR

CHA

PROCESS CONTROL EQUIPMENT

HART G

RATES OF GROWTH: GNP &

CH

& NUMERICAL CONTROL EQUIPMENT

CHART H

Source: John Diebold & Associates, Inc

The impact of numerical controls on the economy has yet to be strongly felt. This aspect of automation has not received the wide public attention given to computers and transfer equipment; but this phase of the industry alone may well have a most significant impact within certain manufacturing industries. When you consider that about 70 to 80% of the metal-working industry deals with production runs of twenty five units or less and that these operations have been the last to yield to cost reduction efforts, numerical controls are bound to have a major effect on this manufacturing industry. One prognosticator says that "within five years, fifty per cent of the new machine tool facilities will be represented by numerically controlled tools." No doubt this subcommittee will hear other estimates of future numerical control usage from witnesses identified with that industry. Suffice to say, that growth in the application of numerical controls even to twenty five per cent of new machine tool facilities will have national economic consequences.

Electronic Data Processing

I think that it can be safely said of electronic data processing that it is the most extensviely used technique developed within the concept of automation; there seems to be little doubt that the influence in our economy will grow even greater. The intelligent use of electronic computing machinery and its peripheral equipment hold out promises of productivity which we do not, at present, even know how to measure - the "productivity" found in accomplishing things we never thought of doing or simply could not do before. There is still a long way to go, however, in extending the use of this equipment within industries to accomplish day-to-day business functions - payroll processing, inventory control, production control and other such applications.

The number of companies that have computer systems is still a minute fraction of total American industry. Chart I is a summary table of our latest estimates of the number of computer installations. Total installations, as of July 1960, were almost eleven thousand. This is more than a 34% increase over last year's total. These figures only denote computer systems delivered; hundreds more are on order.

I think I can summarize the basis for this recent progress by considering three factors that have had far-reaching influence in automatic data processing. First, development and introduction of new machines and new technical developments. Second, significant developments in automatic data processing for the small and medium size company. Third, the growth of competition in the computer field, and fourth, the improvement of the use made of computers through better planning and better applications.

ESTIMATES OF COMPUTER INS

(As Large-Scale General Purpose

Digital Computer Systems

Medium-Scale General Purpose
Digital Computer Systems

Small-Scale General Purpose
Digital Computer Systems

Miscellaneous Digital Computers

CHART I

*NOTES: The figures here are on a systems classificati peripheral equipment as defined below. Ther bilities in terms of large, medium and small.

Large-scale: The system uses magnetic tape arithmetic speeds. Price in general is in the more.

Medium-scale: The system uses magnetic tap arithmetic speeds. In general, the price rang

Small-scale: The system does not use magnet grammed. Miscellaneous computers are carc not fall into one of the above systems classific

Source: Automatic Data Processing Service
John Diebold & Associates, Inc.

NSTALLATIONS*

-Delivered-
As of July 1960)	(As of July 1959)	% Increase over 1959
607	383	58%
840	444	89%
2810	1691	66%
6717	5636	19%

tion, based on the computer and its associated ere is no implied evaluation of machine capa-ll. Minimum requirements for each class follow:

pes and the computer operates at microsecond e order of magnitude of one million dollars or tapes and the computer operates at millisecond nge is from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

netic tapes, but the computer is internally pro-rd calculators and other machines which do fications.

Technological improvements in electronic computers have been made in such areas as data storage and retrieval, computing speeds and a host of developments leading to special capabilities of "hardware" to cope with specific problems. The most recent important development has been the transistorized computer. We are now faced with a new generation of computers with new capabilities. Generally, the new computing machines have the following attributes:

a) Greater Reliability. Machines will make even fewer mistakes (if this is conceivable) and they will be in operating condition in a greater proportion of the time.

b) Costs of installation will be lower, partly because the machine systems are smaller and partly because of the fewer environment requirements for the installation.

c) Lower Cost Per Unit of Performance. This has several additional implications. The greater speed of processing will permit applications that were impossible before for economic reasons.

d) Greater Flexibility. One machine is now able to serve many more functions than before. For instance, it is, at least from a technical viewpoint, much more reasonable to combine scientific and business applications than it was before.

The development of smaller machines has opened up new areas of business to the computer manufacturers. As can be seen in Chart I, in terms of absolute increases in number of installations and percentage increases in number of installations and percentage increase, small scale computer systems have shown the most impressive growth. Many of these systems have gone to the smaller and medium-sized companies. The growth in the use of service bureaus, discussed in the previous section, has also expanded EDP usage considerably.

The third major development has been a healthy increase in competition among the computer manufacturers. This has resulted in a direct increase in number and kinds of systems available. There is also considerable pressure for the computer companies to provide even better service to customers.

Competition in computers has gone through three stages. Several companies have entered and then withdrawn from the field to leave three or four dominant firms manufacturing business data processing equipment. The third stage began in 1958-59 when a whole new group of powerful firms entered the computer field. Chart J shows the initial announcement dates by major manufacturers of commercially available computer systems.

The industry presently is still dominated by a few companies. IBM, which has maintained its position as the largest in the industry in terms of sales volume, may find it difficult to hold its share of the market in the face of stiffer competition from the rest of the industry. Estimates of IBM's share of the computer market have declined from approximately 80% levels more recently to about 75%. Other computer manufacturers are predicting that this percentage will fall even further. In terms of dollar volume of the market, this should increase for the next few years. Chart K contains our estimates of the annual incremental value of installations since 1955. From an installed value of about seventy-five million dollars worth of equipment in 1955, 1960's installation value should be about six hundred fifty million dollars. The industry is capable of doubling this 1960 figure within five years. However, projections vary considerably, but even the conservative projections for annual installation values are higher than those presently. Personally, I expect the computer market to achieve its high growth potential.

INITIAL ANNOUNCEMENT DATES OF COMMERCIALLY AVAILABLE COMPUTER SYSTEMS

Manufacturer	Announcement Dates
	1950	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	1960
Remington Rand	X
Teleregister		X
IBM			X
National Cash Register			X
Bendix Corporation				X
Burroughs				X
Monroe					X
RCA						X
Minneapolis-Honeywell						X
Royal Precision							X
North American Aviation (Autonetics)							X
Philco								X
Thompson-Ramo-Wooldridge										X
Control Data Corporation										X
Packard Bell											X

CHART J

Source: John Diebold & Associates, Inc.

Approximate Value of Installations
Yearly Increments
Commercial Business and Scientific Data Processing Electronic Computer Systems*

CHART K

*does not include punched card calculators or punched card system unless associated with a computer as peripheral equipment.

Source: John Diebold & Associates, Inc.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL ASPECTS OF AUTOMATION

I do not believe that we are presently experiencing the full economic and social influence of automation -- that is, of fully utilized automation concepts and techniques. The acceptance of automation technqiues by industry has been more gradual than it might have been. Technical or economic feasibility did not hold back the introduction of automation; lack of understanding the new technology, fear, improper planning and other human mistakes are more likely reasons. I think it would not be too great an exaggeration to say that the economic and social environment had a greater limiting impact on automation than the impact of automation on the environment.

An inspection of the aggregate productivity figures would not reveal any abnormally high productive influence in the post-war economy. Even if the recovery year 1959 is included in productivity calculations, total U.S. private industry still only had an annual rate of increase in output per man-hour of about 3 per cent for the entire post-war period 1947-59. The non-agricultural sector of the economy had an annual average of about 2-1/2 per cent for the same period. More recent average productivity growth is even lower. The annual average increase in productivity from 1953-59 in non-agrictural industries is slightly less than 2.3 per cent. In terms of impact on the total economy, it would be difficult to discover where any revolutionary element had been introduced into the works. Of course, substantial productivity gains have been made in a number of individual industries as a result of the introduction of mechanization and automation equipment; in some cases, human hardships have developed; in others this has not been - so. But in the aggregate sense, automation has not so greatly affected the economy that it can be isolated from advances in technology that we continuously experience.

I do not want to give the impression that I intend to minimize the economic effects of automation. The Subcommittee will, no doubt, be provided with many statistics documenting the dislocations of workers and job eliminations attributed to technological change. However, I want to avoid incorrectly attributing these results to automation. I made the statement earlier that automation is a set of concepts and techniques; it is a body of knowledge making available to the nation more efficient means for producing goods. This technology does not cause anything; how we use it yields the results. In other words, how the economy is operating has an influence on what the results will be.

If normal technological change takes place in a rapidly expanding economy, usually the benefits of change are only noticeable: increased productivity, higher wages, new products, etc.

When these same changes take place in a slow moving economy, disruption may occur. The basic problem in this case is not attacking the problem of "change". Clearly, the problem here is the slow growth of the economy.

This may seem like a most academic point, but I believe that it is very important to realize when dealing with the difficult problem of integrating technology in our highly complex economy. There have been times in the history of man when technological developments were so potent and their introduction so rapid that normal economic growth could not accommodate the changes without much human suffering. But I would suggest that in our case we may not be suffering from too rapid an introduction of technology as much as we are experiencing a slow rate of economic growth -- the recent average of about 2.5%.

Economic Aspects of Automation

Automation has continued to be most strongly utilized in the manufacturing sector of the economy. The transportation, communication, utilities, finance and insurance industries are also making use of these concepts to a growing degree.

In terms of the effects on total industry employment, automation has probably most affected the manufacturing sector; I say, "probably" because whether the use of automation or mechanization has been more responsible for the decreases in employment needs is still a moot question. The Federal Government has also made extensive use of automation techniques; the effects on government employment were investigated recently by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House of Representatives.

The economic effect on individuals in an industrial situation experiencing the introduction of automation has varied greatly from industry to industry. A lot has depended on what kind of automation technique was being employed, whether it was electronic data processing, "Detroit" automation, process control or machine tool control. Labor - management relations have also played an important role in affecting the outcome. The versatility of the work force, age levels, education levels, all influence what will happen after automation has been installed.

I have generally found, from my firm's experience, that the installation of automation equipment does not lead to mass layoffs of company personnel. Through the means of retraining, natural attrition, transfers and retirements, dislocation of personnel is minimized. In all cases of successful introduction of automation, management planning for the installation was carefully executed.

Not in all cases could layoffs be avoided. In certain instances, employees were not capable of learning new skills that would be required of them. When transfer possibilities were not available, termination of employment eventually proved necessary. Even here, I found, in several instances, where management maintained the employment level of an operation significantly above what was necessary after the automation equipment was installed. Though it is difficult to generalize that this is standard practice, I have heard others in the field relate this same experience.

Within the last year or two, automation seems to have become a national issue on two counts. First, on the domestic side, it has caused a good deal of fear. To be more precise, I should say that automation has been used to create fear, specifically, fear of unemployment. Secondly, on the international front, we recognize that we need the production efficiencies that automation allows us if we are to compete effectively in the free world markets; we also need increased productivity if we are to maintain our defense position and yet increase our standard of living. These two positions would seem to contradict each other, but they simultaneously exist.

In some of those industries where it is recognized that displacement of labor has and will continue to occur, some action has been taken. The Armour "automation fund", set up last year, attempts to study the "automation problem", tries to find opportunities for employment for workers displaced by automation and inaugurates retraining programs. This company-financed program is paid for by a levy of one cent per hundred weight of meat shipped, up to a maximum of $500,000 in the fund. The Armour fund has been referred to as having "set a pattern" for other industries. Several other companies are actually setting up study committees in the Armour fashion. Judging by the publicity received by a company when it embarks on such a program, there seem to be relatively few companies attempting this. However, a start has been made.

It is also encouraging that other institutions have begun to take steps to train both those who are already in the working force and those who will one day join it for the new jobs that automation creates. Several universities, for example, are now offering courses in computer programming, and a number of computer manufacturers are training clerical personnel on the job. A technical high school in Buffalo offers a course in which students build a digital computer and then learn to solve problems with it. At least one union, Local 1 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in St. Louis, in cooperation with the Federal Office of Apprentice Training and a local vocational school, has set up what it calls a "postgraduate school" for training in new electrical techniques.

Within a short time, 400 members had signed up for a three-year course and were attending 38 different classes four nights a week.

Two state governments, as I previously mentioned, held conferences to discuss the economic and social implications of automation. Both in New York and Massachusetts, the problems of coping with the effects of technological change and automation were aired. At these conferences, at others and in private discussions, I have usually found recurring arguments in both the "optimistic" and "pessimestic" camps of automation.

Here is a summary of some of the arguments most generally used by those who consider automation a blessing rather than a menace.

Automation is nothing new, so there is no reason for concern. Technological changes have occurred throughout history without dire results, and automation is just another technological change. There is no more need to legislate against automation than there was need to slow down the introduction of the assembly line. Technological change is progress and should be welcomed.

Everything will work out in the long run. The natural forces in the economy will make whatever adjustments may be necessary to the introduction of automation. This can be brought about through the movement of displaced workers to other industries, through the expansion of output of industries that automate, or through the introduction of new industries into the economy. If the industries that apply automation expand their output, there may be the need for the same number of workers, but they will be producing a great deal more than before. The introduction of new industries, through invention and research, will take up whatever slack may develop in the economy.

Automation is the key to a shorter work week. There is an unmistakable trend towards less work and more leisure. To realize this goal without sacrificing our real standard of living, we must increase productivity. And automation is the means to increase it. The result of automation will not be forced idleness or unemployment but the enjoyment of more leisure.

Unlimited demand for goods and services will prevent unemployment from automation. Since human wants are unlimited, increased productivity and production through automation will find a market in satisfying these wants. Through greater productivity, earnings will increase to such an extent that there will be a tremendous rise in our standard of living. These increased earnings can come about through higher wages or through lower prices or through a combination of the two.

Automation will create a bigger pie, so that everybody's slice will be larger. This is far better than trying to limit the size of the overall pie and then fighting about how the smaller pie is to be distributed.

Automation will come slowly and in limited quantity. It is neither big enough nor fast enough to warrant concern. Its speed is limited by the long-range planning it requires, the shortage of trained personnel, and the huge investment required. At best, it will affect only a small segment of the total economy, and even those who are so affected will have plenty of time to adjust.

Automation is the only means of maintaining our standard of living in the face of a significant labor shortage. The future problem will be unavailability of labor, not unavailability of jobs.

Employment has been increasing. While everybody is shouting about the harmful effects of automation on employment, there has been a steady increase in employment in the past few years during which the impact of automation should have been at its highest. What unemployment there has been can be attributed to cyclical swings similar to those which occurred before the advent of automation.

Automation brings about lower prices.

A more responsible management will not permit automation to have harmful effects on employment.

Development and growth may occasionally mean hardship, but it is a small price to pay for progress. (This is a rare argument, but as an attitude it may be prevalent).

The growth of the automation industry itself will provide employment for a good number of those put out of work by the products of the automation industry.

Automation is the key to national survival. The only that the United States will be able to stay ahead of, or keep pace with, Russia is through a strenuous increase in productivity. At the same time, more leisure, more comfort, and more consumption goods are the goals of American economic policy.

Automation will bring economic stability. In an automated plant, labor costs will be so low and capital costs so high that it will pay to continue production and lower prices rather than to cut production and lay people off. And even if production is cut, the cut in employment will not be proportionate, because most of the work will be indirect labor that does not vary with volume of production. Furthermore, automation programs must be long-term in nature, and their completion will not depend on short-term changes in sales.

This means that investment expenditures will be more stable. In these ways, cyclical fluctuations will be reduced.

Some of these arguments or points of view are sound. Some are false. Others are a mixture of fact and fancy. The dilemma is increased because there are contradictions and disputes even among those who agree that automation is a blessing and should not worry anyone. The most significant characteristic of all these approaches is that they are weak arguments for the point of view they espouse. The strongest arguments are those that are founded on world politics, rather than on economics.

The reason for the weakness of these arguments as they now stand is that there are no facts to back them up. There are no facts on which to base an evaluation of their worth, and there are no structures of theory within which the facts can be developed, sorted, and evaluated. The only strength that these viewpoints have is the fact that the counter arguments are also weak and unfounded.

The more common arguments for concern over automation are indicated below. The wide diversity of appeals that they have and the difficulty of evaluating them without greater knowledge - of facts and theory - can be seen even from this limited presentation.

The boom has helped up to now. The advent of automation - which is still in its infancy - has been accompanied by the greatest period of boom that America has ever experienced. A backlog of wartime demand and huge government expenditures have created the boom. This cyclical upswing has masked the effects of automation on unemployment because the temporary factors of a boom have enabled the economy to absorb those technologically displaced.

Automation is an accelerating phenomenon. As yet we have not seen its real effects. There have only been instances of complete automation, and some factories that can be considered partly automated. But the real impact will come in the future, when the gestation period is over, and the technical difficulties have been overcome. At that time, there will be a sudden surge forward, at an accelerating rate, and the resulting unemployment will wreak havoc with the economy.

There will be no purchasing power. As automation replaces workers and permits the manufacture of products without labor, these workers will be unemployed. As a result, they will not be receiving the wages that permit them to buy the products of American industry. The result will be the piling up of stocks in warehouses and the biggest depression that we have ever had.

And like every depression, it will spread to those areas of the economy that are not directly affected - the non-automated areas.

The growth of job opportunities cannot grow as fast as necessary.

Markets will become saturated. There is really no sense in pretending that automation will permit the same number of workers to turn out more products, because there will be no desire for these additional products. After everybody in America has two cars, he will not want a third. The truth is that there will be fewer workers turning out the same amount of products, because there is a certain point beyond which additional units will not be absorbed. In addition to the sufferings of those workers who are actually displaced, the drying up of their purchasing power will create a national depression that will eventually have repercussions on those who were not displaced by technology.

In comparing the pessimistic point of view with the optimistic, two things become clear - and without any need to pass judgments on the validity of either point of view. In the first place, the pessimistic side - or those favoring control and mitigation - is much the more powerful. It is on the offensive, it has much more active advocates, and it can appeal to the emotions much more effectively. Secondly, the pessimistic side has a definite program which it can champion. The higher minimum wage, the guaranteed annual wage, the four-day week, the granting of specific guarantees, and eventually the control of investments in automation - these are all specific points that can be put forth as a constructive program to avoid the dire consequences that are predicted. The opponents of these viewpoints have nothing concrete to offer, and they are constantly on the defensive.

The issues are, most closely drawn by organized labor, as they have a direct stake in employment movements. Chart L is a summary of some of these key issues, and how labor wants these issues resolved.

Social Aspects of Automation

Automation's social consequences are broader than its economic effects. Results in the social sphere also depend on the speed and degree of automation. Although automation can influence nearly every phase of our life - from what we do, to how we are governed - there is as great a lack of factual information as there is for the economic questions. Even the immediate effects of automation at the work place are hard to ascertain. There are only a few thorough studies of this subject. The few that exist are not sufficient to come to any generalized conclusions.

CHART L

Automation: How Labor Sees The Issues And The Action To Be Taken

Major Issues	Action To Be Taken
Industrial	by Industry:
-Decreasing job opportunities in manufacturing, mining and transportation industries. -Workers are being "dislocated", they need more job security. -Change in wage structure and job evaluation systems. -Labor not sharing in the gains of productivity from automation. -Industry's labor needs are changing fast, workers must be retrained.	Through collective bargaining establish provisions for: -Shorter work week. -Stronger seniority rights. -Severance payments and other supplementary benefits. -New systems of compensation, eliminating incentive-type wage payment plans. -Higher wages. -Earlier retirement. -Retraining Programs. -Special Funds to cope with Automation problems.
National	by Government:
-The slow rate of Economic Growth: The GNP should be growing at a 5% annual rate as opposed to the recent 2-1/2% growth trend. -Rate of increase in real earnings per per worker is too low, not as high as early post-war growth rate. -Increased Number of Economically distressed communities. -High sustaining unemployment levels, the possibility of automation leading to a "wholesale unemployment and depression."	-Stimulate Economic Growth through increased Federal spending, foster "job creating, job-inducing programs." -Promote a Federal Training and Retraining Program. -Government legislation inducing lower work week levels. -Greater aid to Economically distressed communities. -State Governments should increase unemployment benefit. -Change Social Security regulations to provide retirement benefits at earlier age.

The individual studies come to different conclusions, depending on the kind of automation that was introduced (factory automation or electronic data processing), where it was introduced and the conditions under which the change to automation took place - to name a few. There have been cases reported, for example, where the introduction of automation in a process plant led to higher morale among the workers, a more highly developed social unit in the plant and an upgrading in skills. But these reactions have not been true in all cases studied - or even in a majority of the ones that I have seen. A study of an automated assembly line operation reported "increased feelings of tension" among the workers; nor is this an isolated case. Recent studies of automatic data processing installations report a high level of routine work - as high or higher than before the introduction of the automatic equipment. In other establishments, routine work decreased in a comparable situation.

From my own experience, I find that one generalization holds true for the entrance of electronic data processing into an operating unit: there is an increase in the percentage of skilled personnel for the given operation unit after EDP is installed. At the very least, we can see that newer skills are needs - programmers, systems analysts, systems engineers. Certain valid generalizations can be made about the needs for retraining programs and, especially for education.

On all levels of working and living we will need more education. Beyond retraining those who already have jobs to prepare them for more highly skilled work, we must face the larger problem of how we are to increase our resources of engineers, scientists, and trained technicians. At present, a good part of our most talented raw material goes to waste every year. About half of the high school students in the upper 25 per cent of their classes do not attend college at all, and another 13 per cent drop out before they finish. All told, almost two thirds of those best fitted to exercise scientific and technical leadership are not being trained to their highest capacity.

This problem will grow more acute in the years ahead, and not only because the need for trained men will grow. We are still drawing heavily on the knowledge and the trained personnel developed under the pressure of military needs. But we cannot go on living off our hump indefinitely. We will have to develop ways of making higher training available to those best suited to make good use of it.

On the high school level, where technicians are trained and where the decision for or against science as a career is often made, the situation is equally acute. High school programs must be reassessed and so must the supply and quality of high school teachers.

As Dr. Allen V. Astin, Director of the National Bureau of Standards, has pointed out, "with the great shortage we now have of scientists and engineers, it is difficult to get anyone with any competence to do the teaching in the high schools at the present time."

But the question of education goes far beyond better training for work in specialized fields. Many of the new jobs that automation will create (supervising the intricate workings of delicate machines, for instance) will require an increasing ability to think and to judge, increased understanding of mathematical and logical methods, in short increased education in the largest sense of the term. Management will need these abilities on a higher level. And all of us, if our increased leisure is to mean something more than just another day when we can sleep late, will need to develop some of these qualities. In view of these needs, one of the great mistakes we could make would be to concentrate all our attention on the specialized problems of educating scientists and technicians.

More than that, the fact that the new machines are capable of providing us with more information than we have ever had raises questions of the highest importance. Just as they can provide answers to scientific questions that could never be answered before, so machines can provide answers to questions outside the field of science that could never be answered before because no one person or group of people could comprehend all the facts. Man could become a cog in the machine, accepting, in Norbert Wiener's words, "the superior dexterity of the machine-made decisions without too much inquiry as to the motives and principles behind them." It is here that our ability to think, to judge, and to understand will stand us in best stead. For machines are only machines. It is up to men to decide how to use them.

Foreign Aspects of Automation

In the practical application of automation concepts and techniques to industry, the United States leads the world, at the present time. In terms of growth rate in application and absolute number of automated installations we are ahead of any country in the free world. I have not included the communist-block nations because there is no substantial data to estimate their progress accurately.

Qualitatively, we know that they are moving ahead at a fast rate. To the extent that they are employing automation, it is interesting to consider Premier Khrushchev's report to the 21st Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union. He gave some indcation of the widespread applications intended for mechanization and automation under the Soviet Seven-Year Plan for Economic Development (1959-1965).

Mr. Khrushchev reported that, "Integrated mechanization and the automation of production processes constitute the chief and decisive means for ensuring further technical progress in the economy and, on this basis, a new rise in labour productivity, the lowering of cost prices, and the improvement of the quality of products." This theme is further amplified in Mr. Khrushchev's statement of the "target figures" with regard to level of automation to be obtained. Of particular note was the indication of plans for the "establishment of more than 50 experimental model enterprises where the latest patterns of integrated automation will be put into effect."

In a final section, in a discussion of specific provisision of the 'plan' as it pertains to educational development, it was stated that "the greatest increase in the number of engineers graduated (during the years of the 'plan') will be in the specialties of chemical technology, automation, computing engineering, radio-electronics and other branches of new technique." Stress will also be placed upon scientific development and, "in particular the successes of computing mathematics (which) are directly connected with the development of automation."

I would suggest that it would be sheer folly to take these words lightly, in view of the Soviet Union's accomplishments in the field of engineering education, and the science of mathematics. Recent reports point to a gap between "theory" and "application" in the field of automation in the Soviet Union. I would not expect this state to last very long (if, indeed it is an accurate picture of present achievement levels).

It would also be a mistake to take a complacent attitude toward European business. Though we "out-automate" Europe by sheer volume alone, the level of sophistication in automatic techniques is high, especially in factory automation.

My company continually surveys the Western European electronic data processing market. We have found the European attitude to be more cautious of EDP hardware than is true in the United States. The cost factor of automatic equipment is given heavier emphasis. However, we have found that the average European computer user can be expected to make better use of the hardware's capabilities than his American counterpart once it is installed. He has been pre-disposed by his educational background to more easily accept the theoretical capabilities of the electronic hardware.

Western Europe has a total of over 2,000 computer installations, or about 20% of total United installations. However, over 90% of this total are small computer system installations. What is most significant is that France and Germany, between themselves, have almost 70% of total European installations. Orders for computer systems number in the hundreds for all Western Europe.

Between the Russians on one hand and Western Europe on the other, we literally "have our hands full." It seems to me that we are in a most tragic plight as a nation when we must worry about the ill-effects of introducing automation -- even at a slow rate!

GUIDE TO A STUDY OF AUTOMATION IN THE U. S. ECONOMY

In my final recommendation before this subcommittee in my initial testimony, I suggested that a study of automation be undertaken on a comprehensive basis. This study is still needed. Other witnesses will no doubt make this same suggestion to this subcommittee; I have seen testimony of people who have made this recommendation at other Congressional hearings.

Some excellent studies concerned with automation have been accomplished. Certainly, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the U. S. Department of Labor is to be congratulated on its Studies of Automatic Technology series. The Bureau's recent studies on the introduction of office automation was most welcome. People in the academic world have also produced some significant work in this field. Quite frankly, I still feel that the problem of gathering adequate data has not been surmounted.

The following discussion and "Guide" is taken from a planning pamphlet that I prepared last year for the National Planning Association:

Automation is only one of the many complex interlocking factors that shape the economy. While it may not be practicable or possible to study all of the factors that make up the economy, we can make an industry-by-industry study of what automation has meant so far, and thus foresee with some certainty what it is likely to mean in the future. We do know that the potential impact of automation is such that we cannot disregard planning for it. We need complete enough information to plan for the kind of action automation will require from industry, labor and government. It is for the purpose of obtaining this type of information that I here propose an initial study of the economic consequences of automation.

In making a study of automation, we must also give emphatic attention to the education problem in all its aspects - a problem that is corollary to the economic one. I feel very strongly that the educational problem is the most challenging one we shall have to face as the age of automation advances. We must first determine what the economic direction is likely to be, and then meet it with reasonable human foresight. We must ascertain in some detail the nature of the industrial, managerial, labor and social problems experienced by the industries that have already begun to automate, if we are to determine just how we are to train people to meet them.

It seems to me that, at this point, the most useful way of collecting, organizing, and analyzing the information necessary to such a study as this is a detailed case-by-case approach to a number of specific industries that are representative of the several types of applications of automation practiced today. It would be valuable also to study a few typical industries where there is some especially interesting aspect to the way automation has been applied or has affected them. The following list should provide a good starting point:

The Automotive Industry

This industry has solved some immense problems in automating some of its processes and illustrates well the kind of automation that has come to be called "Detroit automation." A study of the industry should develop useful information on how workers and working conditions are affected in factories which have learned how to handle long runs with specially designed automatic machinery.

Paper Manufacturing

This is a processing industry which is just beginning to use feedback control systems. The effects of automation on labor here are likely to be slight, since there will probably not be much reduction in working force, but there are other interesting aspects to be studied. A change in the productivity of the capital equipment is one of these. In addition, the technical problems in this industry give a good deal of insight into the fundamental technical problems that must be overcome before automation can become complete in the processing industries. For example, present methods of measuring or testing paper consistency involve actually tearing the paper and letting water seep through it. If this area of the industry is to be effectively automated, this method, which is now an art, must be turned into a science.

Food Processing

This is one of the traditional automatic machinery areas and would be an interesting study from the standpoint of determining whether there are really any differences between the social and economic effects of introducing the older style of automatic machinery and the newer developments.

Airframe Manufacture

Since production runs are very short and engineering changes are frequent, the airframe industry has many of the problems of job shop manufacturers, even though it is dominated by a few large companies. In a sense, it could be said that the airframe industry is pioneering in job shop automation. Appropriate case studies, therefore, could shed considerable light on the potential forms and the pace of job shop automation.

The airframe manufacturing industry is again worth studying because it relies heavily on computers for scientific calculation. From my own experience, I suspect that there has been an enormous increase in employment as a result of these techniques and it would be important to see whether the situation in this area is applicable to the wider problem of employment opportunities. In addition, the aircraft industry is starting to use computers on a wide scale for office use. But perhaps an even more valuable study could be made in this field on insurance companies, since this industry is already using computers and is certain to be one of the heaviest users of them in the future.

Oil and Chemical Processing

These industries are highly instrumented and have introduced a cerain amount of centralized control. They would provide a valuable study of the relationship between manufacturing areas and the office in an industry where there is almost no labor directly involved in the manufacturing process. As more is learned about the use of computers, considerable change is bound to occur in this industry through automation, and it is an area which should be explored. It is also an industry where we can measure the effects of automation over a considerable period of time. A case study could record what happened in the original shift from batch to continuous processing twenty odd years ago.

Electronic Assembly

This industry is interesting because the problem of considerable and continuous variation of the product is involved. The methods that are being used to attack this problem, and their effects on an industry that even today relies on an enormous amount of womanpower for production, would illuminate the problems of other industries faced with this kind of situation.

Office Automation

In this area, several kinds of studies might profitably be made. For example, it would be worthwhile to compare the approaches used by Sylvania, which has a large number of branches and a single computer centre for all of them, and by Allstate Insurance or Prudential, which also have a large number of branches and are introducing computers into each of them.

It is also important to find out what will happen when medium-sized business introduces computers into the office. There are a few cases where this has already been done, and I think one or two case studies of such businesses would be very worthwhile.

Nonbusiness Uses of Computers

One of the most far-reaching influences of automation may well be the use of computers for cultural and purely scientific applications. Their use in such tasks as tracing satellites and codifying the Bible has received much publicity. Their possible capacities for extending the frontiers of present knowledge may have a significant influence on education and on the direction of future research.

It would also be of value to make similar case studies of industries that have not yet automated to any significant degree. These studies could be less thorough, but their objective would be to determine the factors that limit automation. Clearer definition of these barriers would enable us to determine whether automation in these areas is merely a question of time or whether the present obstacles are permanent ones. Some industries that would be appropriate for study in this area are construction, transportation, small job shops and companies producing custom goods.

Study Procedure

As for the procedure to be followed in conducting these case studies, I would suggest the following steps for each industry:

1. A general introductory survey of the particular industry should be made so that the study team can get a general idea of the kind of developments that have been taking place.
2. On the basis of this introductory survey, one or two specific companies should be selected for more intensive study. These companies should be typical of the industry in the sense that they are doing things which other companies could and probably will do - that is, they should not be uniquely large, in a particularly dominating position or financially capable of doing things other companies in the industry could not afford. However, they should also be companies that either have done or are doing a good deal in the automation field, and in this respect, they may not be typical of their industry.

3. Before a detailed approach is made on the case study of the company, the study team should obtain general and background information on the history and development of the company.

4. The study team should conduct a pilot study which would include: interviews with key people; discussion with both the personnel department and the union about actual personnel shifts; discussion with manufacturing and planning departments about existing and planned changes; meeting with the controller's department about changes in data processing; and estimate of the relationship of this company to the industry at large.

5. From study and analysis of the pilot study results, it should be possible to develop a plan for a more detailed study, including check lists and a carefully devised plan of action.

6. Based on the data that have been obtained, further observation and interviews should be undertaken. During this time, the study team should primarily observe what is happening. Individual workers, as well as members of management, should be interviewed and their observations studied in detail. All related files and inter-office memos should be examined and, during the course of the study, all pertinent inter-office data should be available to the study team. The team should plan to spend a substantial amount of time on the company's premises, since the more revealing findings may come from a study of a process in the course of development, even though a good deal may have been done toward automation. The team should attent meetings and talk freely with people, but it is important that they remain non-committal and make clear that they do not represent a particular bias, or endorse a particular doctrine.

The preceding paragraphs suggest some of the major aspects that must be considered in a study of automation but, of necessity, other problematic aspects will emerge in the course of the study. The questions that follow are intended to suggest a more specific outline, although by no means an exhaustive one, of questions that must be asked and answered in a study before we can determine the implications of the present and future developments of automation. For purposes of simplification, I have divided these questions into impact areas. Obviously, any such division is arbitrary - for whatever affects industry affects labor, and in turn, the entire community.

Automation and Industry

Extent and Rate of Automation

What industries not highly automated could be so if present technological advances were applied? What has prevented the introduction of automation in these industries?

In automated industries, what degree of the total production capacity of the industry can be described as automated? What percentage of the individual plants that have introduced automation can be described as large, medium or small?

Within an individual company, what percentage of operations are automated? Which operations have been automated? Which have not? Why are the non-automated operations not automated? Because of cost? Because they are not suitable for automation?

When did the company first begin deliberately to automate? When was the automation equipment installed? Was it installed all at once, or over a period of time? How much did the equipment cost? How did its cost compare with the replacement cost of machines it replaced? What percentage of the automation equipment replaced machines that were obsolete? What percentage of the total spent on equipment in each of the last five years was spent on automation equipment? What is the estimated total cost of automating to date?

Did the product or process have to be redesigned before automation could be introduced? What did this involve? How long did it take? Did the new machines have to be specially designed and built? Were there any special problems in getting them designed and built?

Is the company planning further automation? What current technological or economic development might affect the rate and/or degree of automation? What percentage of operations, and which operations, are expected to be automated within the next five years?

Within the next ten years? How much equipment will be replaced because of obsolescence in the next five years? Will it be replaced with automatic or conventional machines?

Has automation permitted the production of new goods or services?

If automation has not been introduced, what are the reasons? Is it because of high costs?

The difficulty of integrating automatic machines with conventional machines? The financial risk involved in automating? Because there seems to be no need for it? Because of worker or union hostility?

Effects of Automation

On Production: Has total production risen for the entire industry and in given companies within the industry since the introduction of automation equipment? If so, how much of this increase can be directly attributed to automation?

On Productivity: To what extent has the introduction of automation increased the productivity of labor? Of capital? To what extent does it force us to re-examine the productivity concept itself? How useful is a measure of output per man-hour when machinery is so large a determining factor in output? Can we still talk meaningfully of direct and indirect labor?

On Costs: How have production costs been affected? If they are lower, where have the principal savings been effected? Have capital requirements been reduced? What part of the direct labor and capital saving has been offset by the cost of design, production, and maintenance of automatic equipment? Has the cost of automation warranted its use?

On Purchasing Power: If automation has lowered cost, how have the savings been apportioned? Are profits higher? Have wages been raised? Have dividends or reserve funds been increased? Are prices lower? If so, how have markets responded?

The Automation Equipment Industry

What is the nature and size of the firms producing automation equipment? What proportion are new firms? How great a part of the total production effort is performed by old firms? Does this represent a major diversification? How rapidly have firms expanded in this field? What is the incidence and nature of mergers?

What portion of the total output is absorbed by military or defense needs? What is the extent and what are the types of Government participation in research and product development? What is the effect of patents?

How is Industry Structure Being Affected?

Automation and Competition

What happens to competition as a result of high capital requirements? As a result of optimizing productivity? As a result of patents? Does automation in one firm or group of firms curtail output and employment in other firms?

What is the prevalence of mergers in automated industries as compared with non-automated industries?

How is small business faring? What is the percentage of new firms in the industry? What is the percentage of business failures? How many of these are small businesses? Have small companies been able to automate? Have they been able to automate to a comparable degree with larger firms?

Automation and Centralization

Is there a tendency toward greater geographic centralization or decentralization? Have new plants in the industry been built in the same location as the old ones? If not, are the reasons for moving attributable in whole or in part to automation, or are they attributable to other causes? What are the future plans of companies in this connection?

Automation and Company Organization

Is there a tendency toward greater administrative centralization or decentralization? How have management responsibilities changed? What new kinds of problems has management had to meet? In recruiting new members of management, have men with new kinds of skills been needed?

Automation and Labor

Because the effects of automation vary not only from industry to industry, but also from firm to firm, labor implications must be distilled from case studies analyzing specific instances.

Automation and Employment

For both whole industries and individual companies within an industry, how have total labor requirements been affected since the introduction of automation? How have the proportions of production, maintenance, supervisory, and clerical workers changed since the introduction of automation?

What change has there been in total employment in the automated segment of a company? What changes has automation made in the proportions of direct and indirect labor in this segment?

How many workers have been displaced by automatic machines? Were other jobs found for them within the company? If so, how many were downgraded, how many were upgraded, and how many moved into jobs similar to the ones they left? If they had to leave the company, how many found jobs in the same locality? In the same industry?

Automation and Retraining

What is the proportion of skilled and unskilled labor employed before and after the introduction of automation? What new job skills have been needed? What job skills have been made obsolete?

How many workers needed some retraining to handle a new job? How was this retraining accomplished and how long did it take? Who paid for it? Was it done on company time? Did it take place within the plant, or was it necessary to perform it outside? If so, what institution handled the retraining? Was it adequate?

What special problems did older workers present? How were these handled?

Did automation create jobs that could not be filled from within the company? If so, how many were there, and how were they filled?

What are the estimated future demands for skilled, semi-skilled, and unskilled labor?

Automation and Industrial Relations

How has automation affected the general level and structure of wages? How has it affected the particular wages of displaced employees who were transferred to another job within the company? The wages of employees working in the automated segment?

How does automation affect job equity?

What are the worker attitudes toward automation? How has it affected working conditions in terms of safety, machine pacing, increased responsibility, and improved work area?

How are industrial relations policies and hiring policies changed? What provisions have been made for displaced employees in the form of severance pay, early retirement, or other benefits? How has automation affected collective bargaining? How have union jurisdictions been changed; how has internal union organization changed?

Education and Automation

How has the present supply and quality of engineers and technical personnel affected the degree and rate of automation? Has a shortage of trained personnel discouraged any firms from introducing automation? How has the availability and quality of needed personnel affected the development and production of automation equipment?

Are existing institutions adequate for giving vocational training to adults? Are there enough of them widely enough distributed? Are their programs adequate? Are secondary school programs adequate? Or, are the high schools teaching skills that will be outmoded before they can be used?

What role can subprofessional training play in providing those workers who do not have engineering backgrounds with sufficient facility in automation skills to fill needed positions? How, and by whom, can such training best be provided? To what extent does such training depend on the redefinition of job titles and descriptions?

Will engineering and technical skills be the key to the important jobs in an age of automation? Must we train engineers to be managers, or managers to be engineers? Are the skills required of the successful manager in a world of ever more complex technology the same as those required in a world where business success depended upon the artful use of insufficient information? If not, what does this imply for management education?

What kind of training can be provided for individuals who have already completed their formal education? How successful have union programs been? Management or company sponsored courses? University extension programs? Home study courses?

CONCLUSIONS

The United States Government should formulate a national policy that will effectively stimulate automation and other technological change.

I find it totally unreasonable - and dangerous - that as a nation we permit the waste of a potent national resource, automation. We are faced with a continuous, economic and political challenge on the international front that demands sizeable outlays for military security, aid to foreign nations, and other international programs. At the same time, we continuously try to raise our material standard of living.

To keep increasing our standard of living and, simultaneously, maintain our economic and political position in the world, we must sustain a high economic growth rate. Real increases in our national output will continue to be heavily influenced by our productivity increases -- and productivity increase is a basic result of technological change.

I think we must face up to the fact that we have not made any concerted effort to deal with the problems that retard economic growth. The nation cannot long sustain a high rate of technological advance without coping with these problems; we simply cannot wait for evolutionary forces to solve our internal problems.

The national policy that will foster automation and technological change should be aimed mainly at bettering the environment for change. (For purposes of formulating national policy, automation should be considered as part of general technological change. It is difficult to separate automation out of the mainstream of change and somewhat useless to do so). This policy should be geared to set in motion two programs simultaneously.

A program for identifying the effects of automation and technological change within our society should be initiated. We must learn how to stimulate automation to best advantage and, at the same time, minimize any harmful effects that may accompany it.

Secondly, mechanisms that can encourage economic and technical growth where such growth has stagnated must be designed. I do not feel that this can be accomplished through the efforts of private enterprise acting alone; the resources of local communities and, of the state governments, are sometimes not sufficient to overcome stagnancy. Individual action by the Federal Government is also insufficient.

A cooperative effort employing the resources of all these sectors of the economy must be brought to bear on these problems if they are to be solved. The government can do much to encourage business through enlightened tax policy and technical aid; communities and states can do more to provide worker training and retraining facilities and assisting in area redevelopment; business can initiate programs to assist employees in adapting to change situations.

A program of continuing study will provide more knowledge on how best to cope with change. It will supply the data needed to influence the social and economic results of the introduction of automation and other technology.

However, no study will be of value if it is an expedient way to avoid taking action on national issues. The extensive knowledge gathered can, perhaps, be best employed in helping to recognize - in advance - where action should be taken to stimulate technological and economic growth.

I also think it is very important that through national policy we encourage the widespread application of basic science to industry. Most of the significant innovations of the post-war period have come about through military research programs. Private industry has been unable to make the fullest use of these advances. The Government can do much to encourage the dissemination of this kind of information to business. Private enterprise can be further stimulated to employ new techniques and equipment through fiscal policy.

The encouragement of innovation in industry must be supported by labor, if we are to achieve its full benefits. Featherbedding in industry has become a valid issue; it is wasteful not only to the individual company in which it occurs but to the entire economy as well. In many instances, labor has shown that it can facilitate change by sponsoring its own retraining programs and by intelligent collective bargaining. The responsibilities of labor in this area will be much greater in the years to come. It remains to be seen whether present labor-management relations, which mainly revolve about periodic collective bargaining sessions, are sufficient to cope with future problems.

These recommendations are far from new. It is vital, however, that they be carried out. I recommend the study of automation at the first congressional hearing, as others have since. Concerted action of government, community and business to make the fullest use of this most important national resource -- automation -- has been suggested previously, although in vain.

I think it is worth remembering that a national resource, as well as a natural resource, can be lost forever if it is not conserved with intelligence and far-sighted planning.

"SEE IT NOW"

CONVERSATION WITH MARSHAL TITO

Followed by live discussion with Richard Hottelet moderating; Clare
Boothe Luce, Hamilton Fish Armstrong and William Lawrence.

June 30, 1957

TO.....Mr....Murrow.....

FROM.....Rebe..Holder.....

May 31, 1957

The following flights have been requested but have not been confirmed as yet.

Lv. N.Y. KLM #626 on Sunday, June 16
Ar. Amsterdam
Lv. Amsterdam KLM #191 on Monday, June 17
Ar. Belgrade at 7:05 pm on Monday, June 17.

S/N
Winterhalter, Vilko

June 3, 1957

Dear Mr. Winterhalter:

The following flights have been requested for Mr. Marrow's trip, and as soon as we receive a confirmation we will let you know.

Lv. N.Y. KLM #626 on Sunday, June 16
Arrive Amsterdam
Lv. Amsterdam KLM #191 on Monday, June 17
Ar. Belgrade at 7:05 pm on Monday, June 17.

Sincerely yours,

Florence Crissan,
Secretary to Mr. Marrow

Mr. Vilko Winterhalter
Yugoslav Consulate
816 Fifth Avenue
New York, New York

TO.....

FROM.....

Tentative

June 16 - Sunday -

KLM 626/16

lvs 6 pm
ars 12 05 - Amsterdam.

KLM 191/17

lvs Ams 2 10 ars Bgd. 7 05

TO Rebe

FROM Kay 5/30/57

Mr. M. is definitely going to Yugoslavia, leaving here on June 16th, I believe. He asks to be reminded to send down to Washington tomorrow the details as to when and how he and McClure will be arriving in Belgrade.

Palmer Williams is making the travel arrangements, so we can get the information from him.

McClure -

TO .....

FROM .....

MAY 30, 1957.

PRESS

COLBROSYS PARIS

SCHOENBRUN MURROW SAYS YUGOSLAVS ADVISE TITO INTERVIEW GRANTED ON PERSONAL BASIS AND IS NOT ASSIGNABLE THEREFORE EYE GOING BELGRADE JUNE SIXTEENTH REGARDS

BURKE

CC. JOHN DAY.

CHARGE "SEE IT NOW".

MAY 30, 1957.

PRESS

COLEROSYS PARIS

SCHOENBRUN MURROW SAYS YUGOSLAVS ADVISE TITO INTERVIEW GRANTED ON PERSONAL BASIS AND IS NOT ASSIGNABLE THEREFORE BYE GOING BELGRADE JUNE SIXTEENTH REGARDS

BURKE

CC. JOHN DAY.

CHARGE "SEE IT NOW".

Mates, Amb. Leo

Sen

HIS EXCELLENCY
LEO MATES
AMBASSADOR OF YUGOSLAVIA
WASHINGTON, D.C.

1957

THE INTERVIEW WITH PRESIDENT TITO WILL BE PRESENTED SUNDAY JUNE 30 STOP

I WILL SEND YOU FINAL TEXT AS SOON AS POSSIBLE. REGARDS.

EDWARD R. MURROW

414-43
fc

Tripple
~~Fr~~ Fale
7 See 21 now.
7/1/57

Mr. Edward Murrow

Washington

Dear Sir:

On the occasion of your interview with our President, the daily newspaper Borba, issue no. 178, July 1, 1957, wrote of you: "Besides being one of the most respected American commentators . . he is considered one of the most distinguished connoisuers of American public opinion. Millions of Americans day by day wait for his evening political comments. . . " Borba mentioned in addition, your fight against McCarthyism in which the American public was deeply impressed by the "fair play" demonstrated on your part, and your intervention on the behalf of the scientist Pauling. In concluding, the paper quoted your words after the aforementioned interview: " I am enthusiastic".

Due to all these facts, you are now very popular and held in high esteem by progressive elements in our country. Being an independent political worker for many years, a fighter for the ideals of Freedom, Justice, and Truth (so emphatically professed by the great working people of the United States), I decided to write you this letter with complete confidence due to our common cause. In view of all these motives, please accept my liberties in making these remarks and suggestions. At the same time, forgive me for writing in Serbo-Croatian but my English is too poor.

Thanks to your televised interview, millions of American working men and women had the opportunity to familiarize themselves with the personality, manner, characteristics, inclinations, habits, and approcach of our President. I believe that Americans were positively impressed by what they saw. I, certainly, share your opinion "that this interview will have a positive echo among the masses".

In my opinion the right way is now open. However, the interview fell short in presenting all the things which are unquestionably important for your progressive public, and at the same time essential for our common cause. The lack of a complete picture of our President could account for this.

Only millions of our common people from Dolomit to Djevdjelia (two border points, one in the extreme northwest, and the other in the extreme southeast of Yugoslavia) could today freely carry in their desires and in their hearts the real image of Tito. This picture could not be properly expressed at official receptions and even less in the official press. This is not the image of the Secretary of the Central Committee of a political party, but a clear vision of a great fighter for the ideals of Freedom, Justice, and Truth. An idea and vision which was born many centuries before World War I in a country which was in the past and unfortunately even in the present time, on the borderline between two civilizations. As such, this country has been in the past, and is today a very important factor in the building of universal progress and peace in the world.

This is Tito from the revolutionary days of 1941 - 1945.

This is Tito from 1948.

This is a deep conviction, that most contributed to force Stalinism to Canossa (Belgrade, 1955).

This is the faith in principles that stimulated triumphal manifestation of millions on millions in the homeland of Lav Tolstoj, Maxim Gorki, and Vladimir Lenjin (when Tito was in the Soviet Union 19 1956).

This is the Man (Tito) who was the first to proclaim in all sincerity the principle of active peaceful coexistence among the nations. In doing this, he logically strenghtened the faith in this principle as the only way for coexistence, as well as for peace in the world.

This influenced also, the struggle for freedom in Poland and Hungary.

This is the great image not yet entirely explained and made known on television, nor through the radio commentaries, not even in the columns of our own or the international press.

It is my deep conviction that this real, unofficial, image of Tito should be presented first before the working people of America, and to the well intentioned progressive public of the entire world. In this way it would be possible to anticipate the birth of a real freedom in the so called Eastern part of the world.

Dear sir, I have made clear to you my fundamental idea now, and having explained the motives for this letter, permit me to tell you who the author is. I am, these days as I was before, an independent, working in a so called private sector, which is much more limited than was stipulated in our Constitution of 1946. I have been in politics since my early days; as a young man of 20 years in 1918, I was the member of the Revolutionary Committee in Pola. Then I had the opportunity to observe how the "heroes of Caporetto" took advantage of the situation. Also, I was entrusted by the Committee to discuss Trieste with the Italian Admiral Cagni.

In 1920, at the time when our neighbour had proved its deep "Understanding" of President Wilson's 14 points, when they fired on our "National Hall" and were busy in destroying our citizens and their property, I had the privilege to be the first speaker at the spontaneous meeting in Ljubljana condemning the barbarous acts of our neighbour.

Through active participation in various cultural and economic organizations, I formed my definite position which I express in The Ideology of the Party of the Working People, published in 1930. In 1932, I established an independent paper under the name of Drzava ("State") in Zagreb, which was published for only a short time. In this I expressed my opinion about the internal political situation in Yugoslavia. In an article entitled "Aristide Briand" the foreign policy of those days was discussed. In 1933, I submitted the program and by-law of the "Party of the Working People" of Yugoslavia for approval. The Minister of Interior, acting on behalf of that reactionary regime, unlawfully denied the approval. After that my friend and collaborator Dr. Vasilije Homadovski printed a pamphlet "The Position of the Working People of Towns and Villages". This booklet was also censured. Among other material was printed my article dealing with political problems of the country.

During the occupation of 1941 to 1945 I was connected with the Titoist forces; because of that I was persecuted but in the last moment I escaped from a situation which could have cost me my life. I was one among those who greeted the forces of the National Liberation Movement in Banjaluka, in 1945. This same year I asked the Secretariat for the lisence to start a periodical, but I was turned down on the grounds "of scarsity of printing paper". After that I organized a cooperative based on the principles of free cooperativism. When the new law dealing with cooperativism came out I was obliged to liquidate the cooperative. Since then I have been working in the so called private sector. I have kept the same opinions during all this time as I held in early 1930. These ideas are: Brotherhood and unity of our people; Uncommitted cooperation with the all freedom loving nations in the world; nationalism and religion above politics; social security for all; economic planning; fighting corruption; free cooperativism; improvement of agriculture and adequate industry; private enterprise in economy, etc.

The Program of the National Liberation Movement, as well as our Constitution of 1946, was based on the same principles . With the purpose of expressing these principles through an independent periodical, I established last February, in Zagreb, a new cooperative. We requested once again a lisence for a paper, but until today there has been no answer.

Furthermore, I think you should be aware of two of my letters: the one I wrote on June 29, 1956, to our President, and the other directed to your Ambassador, James Riddleberger. If we judge these letters in the light of successive events, I think they represent documents which can serve the cause of peace.

Counting on your well intentioned objectivity, I am asking you to promote the idea of setting up an association of independent, uncommitted public workers of all nations. The purpose of this association would be the establishment of ideological unity in freedom through personal contact and mutual cooperation. I think that in these days, when the future of all of us is at stake, that the independent and unofficial progressive elements should be in contact. History has proved that great achievements in the past have been accomplished mostly on the initiative and through the individual efforts of those who acted as the interpreters of their national environments.

t

In the interest of a more cordial relationship between our two countries, you are entitled to the best of your knowledge to use the material, though limited, of this letter. In connection with this matter, may I ask you to inform me about any such occurence. If any of your colleagues or friends are in my country, you are invited to direct them to see me.

If you yourself by any chance plan to visit Yugoslavia, please let me know in advance as I shall be happy to welcome you as a dear friend.

Looking forward to your answer, I am

Sincerely yours,

Gospodin

EDWARD MURROU

V A S H I N G T O N

Dragi gospodine!

Povodom intervjua kojeg ste imali kod našeg Predsjednika Republike pisao je list Borba br. 178 od 1.VII.1957.:

"Edward Murrou je danas ne samo jedan od najuvaženijih komentatora Amerike... nego spada i medju najbolje poznavaoce široke javnosti USA. Milijuni čekaju njegove večernje političke komentare... zatim navodi "individualnu borbu" Vaše Ličnosti protiv Makartizma, kod čega je Vaša "fair play" impresionirala američku javnost. Nadalje iznosi Vaše istupanje u obranu učenjaka Paulinga, a na kraju u vezi sa završenim intervjuom kod Našeg Predsjednika Republike navodi Vaše riječi! " Oduševljen sam".

Na osnovu svih ovih činjenica, Vaša je Ličnost postala Uvaženo popularna u svim progresivnim redovima u našoj zemlji. To je potaklo i mene, kao dugogodišnjeg, nezavisnog trudbenika na političkom polju i pobornika za iste ideale Slobode,pravde i istine, koje vidno afirmira Veliki radni narod USA u svojem radu za dobrobit čovječanstva , da se u interesu Opće stvari, sa ovim pismom, a sa otvorenim povjerenjem na Vas obratim. Radi toga Vas molim, da sa te strane primite i slobodu podnašanja mojih primjedaba i prijedloga, a ujedno da me opravdate, što mi moje ograničeno poznavanje Vašega jezika ne omogućava da Vam na njemu iznesem svoje misli i ako svaku pisanu riječ u Vašem jeziku mogu dovoljno da shvatim.

Vi ste Vašim televizijskim prijenosom pokazali milijonima radnih ljudi Velikog Radnog Naroda od Antlantika do Pacifika, kako izgleda individualnost Našeg Predsjednika Republike,kako govori,kako su njegove Ljudske crte,osobine, sklonosti, navike, konkakti sa neposrednom okolinom i vjerujem da je to zadovoljilo široku Američku Javnost i da će,prema od Vas iznijetom uvjerenju : "imati u masama vrlo pozitivan odjek".

Ali sa time, po mom mišljenju tek sada je otvoren pravi put. Ono što je bez dvojbe značajno za interes Vaše dobronamjerne progresivne javnosti i bitno za interese Opće stvari to, se nije moglo sa ovim snimanjem dovesti do potpunog izražaja, jer nema do danas u javnosti još potpune slike našeg Predsjednika Tita.

./.

Njegovu pravu i istinsku sliku, mogu još danas da nose slobodno, samo u svojim željama i svojim srcima, milijoni naših nezvaničnih radnih ljudi "Pluga, Čekića i Pera" od Dolomita do Đevđelije. Ta se Slika u potpunosti još danas ne može da dobije kod svečanih i zvaničnih prijema, a niti u štampi koja je zvanična. To nije slika Sekretara Centralnog komiteta jedne političke partije, nego je to Jasna Vizija Velikog Pobornika za Ideale Slobode Pravde i Istine, rodjena u željama svijesnih obretnika iz redova Svih Naših Naroda, već više stoljeća prije prvog svjetskog rata, u Zemlji, koja je vjekovima bila, a nažalost je još i danas, previše markantna granica izmedju dviju civilizacija i kao takova je bila uvijek a jest i danas od posebne važnosti u perspektivi izgradnje Općeg progresa i Stvari Mira u svijetu.

To je TITO iz revolucionarnih borbi za slobodu od 1941-1945 godine.

To je TITO iz 1948 godine.

To je Ubedjenje, koje je najznačajnije doprinjelo da staljinizam bude natjeran u Canossu /Beograd, 1955/.

To je Vjera u dosljednost, koja je izazvala triumfalne manifestacije milijona radnih ljudi u domovini Lava Tolstoja, Maksima Gorkog i Vladimira Lenjina, /Tito u SSSR, 1956./

To je TITO, koji je prvi iskreno iznio Princip Miroljubive Aktivne Koegzistencije medju narodima, a logično sa time uzbudio i učvrstio u najširim narodnim redovima, svih slobodoljubivih naroda, veliku vjeru da se Taj Princip imade primarno i bezuslovno osigurati i provesti u unutrašnjem političkom životu svakog pojedinog naroda, jer to je kategoričan preduslov, da se uzmogne ostvariti istinska mogućnost, prave miroljubive aktivne koegzistencije medju narodima i tako stvoriti jedini pravi put za učvršćenje Stvari Mira u svijetu.

To je Refleks, koji se je dosljedno odrazio i u borbama za slobodu u Poljskoj i Mađarskoj.

To je Svijetli lik koji još nije bio postavljen potpuno na ekrane televisijskih aparata, niti preko komentatora radio emisija, a niti u stupcima naše, a niti medjunarodne štampe.

Moje je duboko uvjerenje, da sada poslije prikazanog Lika Individualnosti našeg Predsjednika Republike, treba da baš ova nezvanična ali Istinska Slika Titove Ličnosti, bude postavljena u potpunome svijetlu, najprije baš pred javnost Vašeg Slobodnog Radnog Naroda, a tim putem pred svu Dobronamjernu Progresivnu Javnost cijeloga svijeta.

./.

Strukelj

Tako će se moći uočiti praskozorje, koje predskaziva radjanje dana prave Slobode, u takozvanom istočnom dijelu svijeta.

Dragi gospodine, sada kad sam Vam iznio primarnu misao i objasnio razloge, koji su mi dali slobodu da se na Vašu Ličnost sa povjerenjem obratim, treba da Vas malo upoznam sa glavnim crtama lica, koje si je uzelo slobodu, da se u ovoj formi na Vas obratim. Ja sam i danas nezavisan i nezvaničan radnik u privatnom sektoru, u našoj zemlji, koja imade danas privatni sektor daleko više sužen nego li je to bilo predvidjeno našim Ustavom 1946 godine. Političkim radom sam bio zaokupljen već od moje najranije mladosti. Godine 1918. kao mladić od 20 godina bio sam član Revolucionarnog Odbora "Mornara" u Puli, imao prilike da vidim "slavodobitno iskorišćavanje situacije od strane junaka Kaporeta" i imao sam prilike da ispred Odbora razgovaram po pitanju Trsta sa talijanskim admiralom Cagni. Godine 1920 kad su naši susjedi pokazali svoje "veliko shvaćanje" Vilsonovih tačaka i zapalili Narodni Dom u Trstu i vršili javno uništavanje našeg života i naše imovine, imao sam prilike da kao student Univerze u Ljubljani budem prvi govornik na prvom velikom spontanom protesnom Mitingu tih dana. Aktivnim radom u raznim narodnim prosvjetnim i privrednim organizacijama, ja sam izradio svoj konačni stav, koji se je izradio 1930 godine u napisanoj Ideologiji Stranke radnog naroda Jugoslavije. Godine 1932. uspjelo mi je da odštampam nekoliko brojeva svojeg nezavisnog lista "Država" u Zagrebu, koji je zatim bio zabranjen, a u kojemu su iznijeti nazori na naše unutrašnje političke prilike sa jednim posebnim osvrtom na vanjsko-političko naziranje u članku "Aristid Brijan". Godine 1933. uložio sam prema onda važečim propisima program i pravila "Stranke radnog naroda Jugoslavije" na odobrenje, medjutim je tadanji reakcionarni režim, rješenjem svoga Ministra unutrašnjeg dijela dana 23. avgusta 1933. protuzakonito uskratio odobrenje. Na to je jedan moj saradnik Dr. Vasilije Homadovski, odštampao jednu brošuru pod naslovom "Stav radnoga naroda gradova i sela" koje su isto tako tadanje vlasti plijenile, a u kojoj je iznijeto moje gledanje na ondašnje probleme političkog života naših naroda i odštampan program Stranke radnog naroda. Za vrijeme okupacije održavao sam vezu sa Narodno-oslobodilačkim Pokretom, pa sam od kvislinških vlasti zatvaran i u zadnji čas umakao sigurnoj smrti, tako sam dočekao oslobodjenje zemlje i bio medju prvim govornicima, koji su na prvom javnom mitingu u Banja Luci 1945 godine pozdravili dolazak naše Narodno-oslobodilačke vojske. Odmah iste godine sam tražio od Komiteta, da mi dade odobrenje za izdavanje jednog povremenog lista, ali sam bio odbijen radi "pomanjkanja papira".

Kupelu

Zatim sam osnovao jednu građjevinsku zadrugu na osnovu principa slobodnog zadrugarstva, ali ta je morala likvidirati poslije dvije godine rada, kad je došao novi zadružni zakon. Ostao sam đđsljedno u privatnom sektoru najprije kao koncesionirano građjevinsko poduzeće do 1950 godine, a od tada dalje, pa i sada kao ovlašteni privatni geodeta. Kroz te vrijeme, kao i danas ostao sam vjeran svojoj ideologiji, koja je napisana 1930 i 1933 godine i koja je u svim svojim bitnim tačkama kao: Bratstvo i jedinstvo svih naših naroda. - Nezavisna saradnja sa svim slobodnim narodima svijeta. - Nacionalizam i Vjera izvan politike. - Opće Socijalno osiguranje. - Direktivni privredni plan . - Borba protiv korupcije. - Borba protiv Birokracije. - Podizanje slobodnog zadrugarstva. - Podizanje poljoprivrede i potrebne industrije. - Privatna inicijativa u Privredi i druge nužnosti, a koja su načela bila i osnovni program Narodno-oslobodilačke borbe, a kao takva došla do izražaja i u našem Ustavu od 1946 godine, kojim su stvoreni temelji naše Narodno-demokratske Federacije. Ja sam februara mjeseca ove godine osnovao u Zagrebu jednu zadrugu sa ograničenim jamstvom, radi izdavanja jednog nezavisnog lista, koji bi iznosio ova gledišta, ali ova molba do danas usprkos opetovanih mojih umgiranja nije riješena, ni odobrena, a ni odbijena.

Nadalje držim da je značajno, da Vas drugom prilikom upoznam sa sadržajem pisama od kojih sam jedno uputio 27.VI.1956. godine Predsjedniku naše Republike i pismom od 29.VI.1956.godine kojega sam uputio izravno na Ličnost Vašeg Ambasadora Gospodina James Rid.dleberger u Beogradu. Ta dva pisma su razvojem dogadjaja postali, po mom mišljenju dokumenti, koji se mogu danas korisno upotrebiti u radu sa Opću Stvar Mira, kod koje držim, sa te strane medju prvim pobornicima Vašu Veliku Zemlju, Veliki Radni Narod USA a sa ove strane, ovdje u Evropi na granici Azije sve Narode naše Federacije. Ta 2 pisma daju jasan dokaz da psihoza, koja istom Vjerom kao i danas buktila u našoj zemlji od godine 1941 - 1945 i odmah poslije dogadjaja 1948 godine bila kao takova već prije dogadjaja u Poljskoj, dakle da je put kojega žele svi naši Narodi, a kojega je uvijek omogućavala čovjekoljubiva i neustrašiva dalekovidna odlučnost načela Ličnosti Predsjednika Tita, bio već tada vidno ocrtan.

./.

Radi toga računajući na Vašu afirmiranu dobronamjernu objektivnost, obraćam se na Vas sa ovim pismom, da bi tako potakao i pokrenuo Vašu inicijativu u pravcu stvaranja jednog udruženja (association) nezavisnih, nezvaničnih, slobodnih javnih radenika iz redova svih naroda, koji bi putem ličnog kontakta i saradnje doprinjeli stvaranju "pravog ideološkog jedinstva u slobodi", svih naroda svijeta, jer dok zvanične organizacije, financirane sa sredstvima svojih Vlada, drže po svim zemljama istoka i zapada, zvanične sastanke, mislim, da ne mogu sada, kod ovih važnih i odlučnih zbivanja u svijetu, da ostali slobodni i nezvanični progresivni elementi, kojima sigurno ne manje leži na srcu prosperitet svih radnih ljudi i svih naroda, da ostanu bez medjusobnog kontakta; tim više što sama historija kazuje, da sve Velike stvari za prosperitet čovječanstva na političkom i naučnom polju nisu u velikoj većini slučajeva bile stvorene od zvaničnih Vlada, nego slobodnom pobudom i saradnjom dobronamjernih nezvaničnih pojedinaca, kao tumača potreba svojih narodnih sredina.

Materijal, koji sam Vam ovim pismom mogao dati na uvid u prilično ograničenoj formi, molim Vas da prema Vašoj ocjeni , a u interesu stvaranja još srdačnije saradnje izmedju naše dvije zemlje, slobodno koristite za javnost, a mene o tome iz ljubaznosti naknadno izvjestite. Isto tako u koliko imadete u našoj zemlji nekog Vašeg saradnika i dobrog poznanika iz redova novinara, u koliko želite, možete da mi radi objašnjenja, na mene uputite.

Ako bi Vas Vaš put nanio opet u naše krajeve, što bi bez dvojbe bilo sada od značajno velike koristi, molim Vas, da bi me na vrijeme izvjestili u Vašem dolazku, da Vas mogu dočekati i pozdraviti kao dragog prijatelja.

U očekivanju Vašeg uvaženog odgovora upućujem Vam moje iskrene pozdrave sa izrazima poštovanja

Tripalo

(Božo Tripalo)

U Zagrebu, dne 7.VIII.1957.

ADRESA: Geodet BOŽO TRIPALO
ovl. mjernik
ZAGREB - Gvozd 23.
Jugoslavija.

TO Mr. Murrow

FROM

Mr. Mickelson's office would like to know if you are are willing to release these questions ~~fxxxxxx~~ to Mr. Connor since the sound track will not be available until Friday.

No! These are not the questions as asked!

Sir

THE TITO INTERVIEW

1) WERE YOU EVER IN AMERICA?

2) DO YOU FIND IT HARD TO UNDERSTAND AMERICA? (HE PROBABLY WOULD SAY HE HASN'T PUZZLED OUT WHY IN APRIL HE WAS GOING TO BE INVITED TO WASHINGTON AND THEN CONGRESS SEEMED TO HAVE DISAGREED)

3) IS A VISIT PLANNED?

(THEN EVEN MORE PERSONAL QUESTIONS: (?)

HIS DIVERSIONS ARE HUNTING, RIDING, SPEED-BOATING (HE TOOK DULLES FOR A FAST RIDE) AND HE IS A SECRET PIANO PLAYER LIKE TRUMAN, PROBABLY A BETTER ONE.

HE MAY BE INDUCED TO LET MADAME PRESIDENT APPEAR BRIEFLY. SHE IS PHOTOGENIC AND TOOK HER COLLEGE DEGREE IN ENGLISH, SO SPEAKS IT BETTER THAN HE. SHE NEVER TAKES ANY PART IN POLITICS, AND PRESUMABLY WOULD SAY SO.

4) HOW WOULD YOU SUMMARIZE YUGOSLAVIA'S FOREIGN POLICY? (HE PRESUMABLY WILL SAY IT IS A POLICY OF INDEPENDENCE, BASED ON THE RIGHT OF FINDING ITS OWN WAY TO SOCIALISM.)

5) DO YOU BELIEVE IT IS POSSIBLE FOR YOU TO HAVE GOOD RELATIONS WITH THE KREMLIN AND HAVE EQUALLY GOOD RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES? THE NEWSPAPER GOSMIAJAK COMPLAINED THAT OUR RESUMING ARMS SHIPMENTS WAS PREDICATED ON RELATIONS WITH THE KREMLIN NOT BEING GOOD. HOW WOULD YOU BELIEVE WE COULD SEND YOU ARMS IF YOUR RELATIONS WITH THE KREMLIN WERE VERY CLOSE INDEED? DOES THAT NOT LEAVE OUT OF ACCOUNT THE REALITY OF THE COLD WAR?

6) WE LIKE THE CONCEPT THAT YUGOSLAVIA IS SO PLACED AS TO HAVE A SPECIAL UNDERSTANDING OF WHAT IS HAPPENING INSIDE RUSSIA AND THE KREMLIN. WHAT DO YOU BELIEVE IS NOW HAPPENING? IS THE MODERATE POLICY STILL IN EFFECT, OR DO YOU THINK IT HAS BEEN SIDETRACKED BY THE EVENTS IN POLAND AND HUNGARY?

7) DO YOU BELIEVE THAT SOVIET TIES WITH EASTERN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES (NEVER SAY SATELLITES TO TITO) WILL BE LOOSENED?

8) WOULD YOU SAY THAT THE BALKAN ALLIANCE IS DEAD? (THIS WAS FIRST CONCEIVED AS A WAY, THROUGH ASSOCIATION WITH GREECE AND TURKEY, OF LINKING TITO WITH NATO. WOULD YOU SAY THAT THIS CONCEPT IS NOW COMPLETELY OUT OF THE PICTURE? ARE THERE NOT STAFF MEETINGS?

IS THERE STILL A SECRETARIAT, AND WHO HAS IT THIS YEAR? COULD THE ALLIANCE BECOME IMPORTANT?

9) WHEN YOU WERE IN MOSCOW, A STATEMENT WAS MADE BY (CHECKING; EITHER BULGANIN OR ZHUKOV) THAT IN EVENT OF A WAR BETWEEN USSR AND USA THE YUGOSLAVS WOULD BE FOUND VALIENTLY FIGHTING ON THE SIDE OF THE USSR. (PRIVATELY, TITO WAS GREATLY ANNOYED BY THIS STATEMENT) YOU CAN REALIZE THAT THIS HAS MADE MEMBERS OF CONGRESS ASK WHETHER IT IS SAFE TO SUPPLY ARMS TO YOU, SINCE THEY MIGHT BE USED AGAINST US. (TITO CAN BE EXPECTED TO AFFIRM STRONGLY A POLICY OF NEUTRALISM, NOT ONLY AS TO USE OF FORCES, BUT AS TO TRANSIT RIGHTS.)

10) YOU MAKE A GREAT POINT OF YUGOSLAVIA'S RIGHT TO TAKE ITS OWN ROAD TO SOCIALISM. WOULD YOU SUM UP WHAT IS DIFFERENT IN YOUR WAY FROM THE WAY OF THE SOVIET UNION? WOULD YOU TELL THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN YOUR WAY AND GOMULKA'S? MAO TSE-TUNG'S?

11) THE CONGRESS OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY IS BEING HELD IN NOVEMBER (57), THE FIRST SINCE THE CELEBRATED ZAGREB CONFERENCE OF '52. WHAT DO YOU EXPECT FROM IT? DO YOU BELIEVE IT WILL REPRESENT THE SAME KIND OF MODERATING INFLUENCE ON COMMUNIST POLICY (DOMESTIC) AS DID THE ZAGREB CONGRESS? DO YOU ANTICIPATE

AS A RESULT THE HOLDING OF NATIONAL ELECTIONS? IF SO WOULD YOU SAY THEY WOULD BE AS FREE, MORE FREE, LESS FREE, THAN THE LAST GOMULKA ELECTIONS IN POLAND? (THIS MIGHT PRODUCE A DISCOURSE ON HOW DIFFERENT YUGOSLAVIA IS FROM POLAND; IT IS A LAND OF 5 NATIONS, DIFFERENT LANGUAGES, DIFFERENT ALPHABETS, THAT NEVER HAD REAL TIES WITH THE WEST, AND NEVER HAD A TRADITION OF MANY PARTIES. DEMOCRACY IN YUGOSLAVIA IS NATIVE AND IS REFLECTED BY WORKERS' COUNCILS, WHICH REALLY HAVE POWER IN THE COUNTRY. EDUCATION, SCIENCE, INDUSTRY, MEDICINE ARE SELF-GOVERNING ETC., ETC.)

12) ARE YOU IN FAVOR OF DISARMAMENT, AND DO YOU BELIEVE THERE CAN BE ANY FARREACHING REDUCTIONS UNTIL THERE HAS BEEN A SOLUTION OF THE GERMAN QUESTION? WHAT SOLUTION DO YOU FAVOR?

13) HOW DO YOU REGARD THE MOVEMENT TOWARD A CLOSER EUROPEAN INTEGRATION? WOULD YUGOSLAVIA LIKE TO PARTICIPATE IN CLOSER EUROPEAN COOPERATION (MUST AVOID USING PHRASE: 'COMMON MARKET)? DO YOU BELIEVE THE PLANS OF COOPERATION NOW BEING MADE CAN BE EXTENDED TO INCLUDE EAST EUROPEAN COUNTRIES?

14) YUGOSLAVIA USED TO BE A FOOD-EXPORTING COUNTRY. WHY ISN'T IT NOW? (THE ANSWER PRESUMABLY IS THE TROUBLE FROM COLLECTIVES. NOW ONLY 8-10% OF ALL FARMS COLLECTIVIZED.

(IN THE REPRESENTATION IN THE ASSEMBLY THE WEIGHTING IS DONE ON THE BASIS OF THE CONTRIBUTION TO THE GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT. IN THIS WAY THE PEASANTS ARE KEPT IN A PERMANENT MINORITY, ALTHOUGH THEY HAVE A NUMBERICAL MAJORITY.) DO YOU THINK THE REPRESENTATION OF AGRICULTURE IN THE GOVERNMENT IS FAIR AND DEMOCRATIC?

15) YOU HAVE BEEN CRITICIZED FOR YOUR TREATMENT OF CARDINAL STEPINAC. ARE YOU ANTI-CATHOLIC? (HE PROBABLY WILL SAY THAT HE ALSO HAS AN ORTHODOX BISHOP IN PRISON, AND SIMPLY WANTS RELIGION TO KEEP HANDS OFF STATE AFFAIRS.)

16) AFTER THE EVENTS IN POLAND AND HUNGARY, YOU WERE OUTSPOKEN IN YOUR COMMENTS ON POLISH EVENTS, BUT WE THOUGHT YOUR STATEMENTS ABOUT HUNGARY WERE AMBIGUOUS. WOULD YOU CARE TO CLARIFY YOUR VIEW OF THE KADAR REGIME AND SAY IF YOU BELIEVE YOU CAN ANTICIPATE FRUITFUL RELATIONS WITH IT?

17) AFTER THE ZAGREB CONFERENCE, YOUR CLOSE ASSOCIATE DJELAS HAD THE GREEN LIGHT TO WRITE ARTICLES ELUCIDATING THE

NEW LIBERALIZATION OF COMMUNIST POLICY IN YUGOSLAVIA. SINCE THEN HE HAS BEEN IMPRISONED AND HIS FRIEND EXILED. WILL YOU SAY WHETHER THIS MEANS THAT THE HOPES OF LIBERALIZING COMMUNIST POLICY HAVE VANISHED?

18) IF TITO SPEAKS UP FOR THERE BEING MANY ROADS TO SOCIALISM OUTSIDE YUGOSLAVIA, WOULD HE CONCEDE THE DISCUSSION OF MANY ROADS INSIDE YUGOSLAVIA?

19) IF HE AGREES (WITH MAO TSE-TUNG) ON THE POSSIBILITY OF CONTRADICTIONS BETWEEN THE MASSES AND THEIR LEADERSHIP IN COMMUNIST COUNTRIES, DOES HE CONCEDE THERE IS SUCH A POSSIBILITY INSIDE YUGOSLAVIA?

IT WAS MARSHALL ZHUKOV ON JUNE 20, '56 WHO SAID THAT "IF WAR WAS IMPOSED ON THE SOVIET UNION AND YUGOSLAVIA'S MILITARY FORCES, THEY WOULD FIGHT SHOULDER TO SHOULDER TO THE BENEFIT OF MANKIND."

See IT now.

BRIONI:

You are approaching the harbor of Brioni, a small island off the Dalmatian coast of Yugoslavia. President Tito is at the wheel of the speed boat, his wife alongside him.

Brioni is a small island only a couple of miles long, scalloped with bays and inlets. It has known Etruscans, Phoenicians, Romans, Huns, Austrians, Italians; in the last war it was a German headquarters whose buildings were bombed flat. New modern hotels have been built near the harbor, probably the most luxurious in all Yugoslavia.

This is President Tito's retreat, where he receives visiting dignitaries, and from which he conducts affairs of state for several months during the year. There are only two automobiles on the island - most of the transport is by carriage, drawn by matched cavalry horses. The woods are full of deer, pheasant, rabbits and sheep. There are ruins of a Byzantine basilica and a Roman villa. Much of the marble for the palaces of Venice came from these islands.

This is the island of Vanga, only a couple of miles from Brioni. It's only about ten acres in size, and it is here that President Tito and his wife spend much of their time. The soil is rich, the vineyards, melons, pears and strawberries lush. There are three small stone houses on Vanga - a steel net to keep sharks from the bathing beach. This is the rustic open dining room. And here is where President Tito works. There is no telephone on his desk, but there is one in the next room. The tapestries, wood carvings and other furnishings all come from Macedonia.

Our interview with President Tito took place at his villa on Brioni. No questions were submitted in advance.

Wild lines.....

President Tito is 65, but he doesn't look it.

President Tito is a "full-throttle man", whether driving a speed boat, an automobile or conversing, he likes to go at top speed.

He understands English perfectly, but declines to speak it except in private conversation.

He says he would rather talk hunting, gun dogs and riding than politics.

"SEE IT NOW"

THE POST OFFICE

OCTOBER 6, 1957

Postoffice
10/6/57

Sir

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Mr. Paley

from: Mr. Murrow

November 19, 1957

I have scrutinized the turgid screed attached to Mr. Arthur Gray's letter to you. It would be easy enough to analyze his analysis in detail. For example: he complains on Page 5 that "LIFE, as everyone in the industry knows, spent thousands of dollars on a survey and determined that LIFE actually pays a profit to the Post Office." On Page 9 I say "LIFE claims that far from receiving a subsidy of $9,000,000, they actually make money for the Post Office." Also on Page 9 he says, "Mr. Murrow is quoting from Post Office propaganda." Called propaganda or not, I preface my statistics by saying "According to the Post Office." We could also point out that the gentlemen of the Post Office could shoot as many holes in Al Cole's remarks as the magazine publishers have shot at Summerfield, but all of this seems to me to be beside the point.

I would be inclined merely to tell Mr. Gray that our decision to rebroadcast the program was based upon the fact that the first presentation was pretty well blanketed by the World Series -- that before choosing Mr. Cole as a spokesman for the magazines we studied testimony before Congressional Committees and consulted with a number of magazine publishers. And that in dealing with a matter such as this, ~~are~~ facts, figures and philosophies are all in contention, and we have no alternative but to present the view and conclusions of responsible spokesmen of the magazine industry, the Post Office, members of Congress and leave it to the viewer to decide who is right. We are obliged to identify our sources to give adequate opportunity for the presentation of contrasting or conflicting points of view and in this case that is what we did.

fc

E.R.M.

See It Now
Howells, John

November 1, 1957

Dear Mrs. Howells:

Many thanks for your note about our SEE IT NOW on the post office.

I appreciate the point you make, but it was not possible for us to deal with everything in just one program. Sometime we may have a try at reporting on the International Post.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. John Mead Howells
580 Park Avenue
New York, New York

mcc

SIN
Hunger, John W.

November 1, 1957

Dear John:

Thank you for your note of October 10th. I am glad you enjoyed our SEE IT NOW program on the post office.

I regret to say that I do not feel I can presume even to suggest to the Postmaster General that he issue a postage stamp in honor of Charles Martin Hall. After all, I would not take it very kindly if the Postmaster General took it upon himself to tell me what to do on television!

Sincerely yours,

Mr. John W. Hunger
Alderman
1725 Fifth Avenue
Arnold, Pennsylvania

mcc

Office Phones { 245 New Kensington
957 New Kensington
Residence 4310 New Kensington

1725 Fifth Avenue

JOHN W. HUNGER
ALDERMAN
REAL ESTATE, INSURANCE AND MORTGAGES
OFFICES AT ARNOLD AND NEW KENSINGTON, PA.
ARNOLD, PA.

October 10, 1957

Hon. Edward Murrow
C/O C. B. S.
Madison Avenue
New York City, New York

Dear Ed:

I certainly enjoyed seeing you and the Postmaster General together the other night, and it was surely enlightning.

You remember, several years ago, you promised that you would like to do a favor for Chief Wilson of ALCOA, so, would you please be kind enough to get intouch with the Postmaster Genreal, and see if he would be agreeable to making a postage stamp in honor of Charles Martin Hall.

You told me several years ago, that you would be glad to talk to the Postmaster General, but I know you have been very busy. So, this might be a good opportunity.

Trusting that you will give this your attention, I remain,

Respectfully yours,

John W. Hunger

JWH/lm

Hutton, E. F.

October 10, 1957

Dear Mr. Hutton:

Many thanks for your gracious letter about our SEE IT NOW program.

I am enclosing a transcript of the program as you requested.

Sincerely,

Mr. E.F. Hutton
Sixty-One Broadway
New York 6, New York

fc

E. F. HUTTON
SIXTY-ONE BROADWAY
NEW YORK 6, N.Y.
WHITEHALL 4-2100

October 8, 1957

Personal

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I listened with rapt interest to your television broadcast on Sunday evening, respecting the "Great Billion Dollar Mail Case." It was extremely interesting.

Sometime ago, I wrote an article for Leslie Gould, of the NEW YORK JOURNAL AMERICAN, on the operation of the Post Office Department. In substance, it was that if the businessmen of the free economy would take over the Postmaster General's Department they would immediately save millions of dollars yearly and put the operation on a paying basis by efficiency of operation.

Your presentation, which was seen by millions, was an eye opener. Of course, there is a political angle to this situation, meaning by that that many postmasters in various cities throughout the country have been appointed to office as a pay-off for helping in presidential elections.

Now, may I ask a favor? Is it possible for you to send me a copy of the script you used Sunday evening? I would greatly appreciate it.

Very sincerely yours,
E. F. Hutton
E. F. Hutton

EFH-g

Dictated over telephone

"See Ltr Now"
Monte, John

October 31, 1957

Dear Mr. Monte:

Many thanks for your cordial letter of October 13th. I am glad you enjoyed our presentation of the "Billion Dollar Mail Case".

We have received a great deal of mail and favorable comments on the program.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. John Monte, Jr.
Secretary
Long Beach P. O. Clerks Union
Local 543
Box 543
Long Beach 1, California

mcc

CONVENTION HEADQUARTERS

WILTON HOTEL

LONG BEACH POST OFFICE CLERKS UNION

LOCAL 543
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS
BOX 543
LONG BEACH 1, CALIFORNIA
PUBLISHERS OF THE "LONG BEACH BREEZE"
HOST LOCAL 1958 STATE CONVENTION

AFFILIATIONS
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR - C.I.O.
CALIFORNIA FEDERATION OF LABOR
LONG BEACH CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL
CALIFORNIA FEDERATION P. O. CLERKS
POSTAL PRESS ASSOCIATION

24th Biennial Convention

California Federation of Post Office Clerks and Women's Auxiliary

Wilton Hotel - May 30-31-June 1, 1958

October 13, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

On behalf of the officers and members of Local 543, Long Beach Post Office Clerks, we want to express sincere thanks and appreciation for your presentation of the "Billion Dollar Mail Case".

Ybu and your staff are to be congratulated on a well done documentary.

Our members highly praised your commentary. Of course, the highlight of the program, was the speeches the employees made in regard to a much needed salary increase.

Thanking you, I remain

Sincerely yours,

John Monte Jr

John Monte, Jr
Secretary.

Nagle, Paul

October 9, 1957

Dear Mr. Nagle:

Thanks for your wire.

You are, of course, entirely correct. We were obliged to ignore vast and important areas of the postal service. I assure you we did so not out of lack of interest, but because of the limitation of time.

Maybe you are right that we should have had less oration and more animation, but it isn't easy to look for a billion dollars in an hour's time. Maybe we will have a chance to have another look at the subject sometime later.

Thanks very much for sending me the telegram. We appreciate instructive criticism as well as uncritical praise.

As ever yours,

Mr. Paul A. Nagle, President
National Postal Transport Association
1300 Connecticut Avenue N.W.
Washington, D.C.

fc

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper sign.

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1220 (R 11-54)

DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LT = International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

PHB003 LONG NL PD=PH NEW YORK NY 6= 1957 OCT 6 PM 7 48

EDWARD R MURROW=

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SVC NYK=

THE NATIONAL POSTAL TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION REPRESENTING THE NATIONS RAILWAY MAIL CLERKS AND AIR MAIL CLERKS IS DEEPLY DISAPPOINTED BECAUSE YOUR PROGRAM COMPLETELY IGNORED THE POSTAL TRANSPORTATION FUNCTION. DISTRIBUTION IN TRANSIT HOLDS A LARGE PART OF THE ANSWER TO BETTER POSTAL SERVICE. THE VIEWING PUBLIC WAS GIVEN ONLY A HINT OF THE WAY IN WHICH MAIL REACHES ITS DESTINATION. NO LESS DISAPPOINTING IS YOUR HAVING GIVEN NO ATTENTION WHATEVER TO POST OFFICES MEDIEVAL LABOR RELATIONS. THE VIEWING PUBLIC CERTAINLY WOULD HAVE APPRECIATED LESS ORATION AND MORE ANIMATION. POSTAL EMPLOYEES HAD HOPED FOR MORE ENLIGHTENED TREATMENT AT YOUR HANDS=

PAUL A NAGLE PRES NATIONAL POSTAL TRANSPORT ASSN
1300 CONNECICUT AVE NW WASH DC=.

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

Oct. 29th

MRS. JOHN MEAD HOWELLS
580 PARK AVENUE
TEMPLETON 8-1954

Dear Mr. Marrow —

We listened to your — or, rather, viewed your Post Office program, and we thought it most interesting and important — But can't you some day tell us about the marvellous International Post — We take it for granted that we can send a letter any — where in the world, but we do not realize it is because of the one International agreement that works —

Very sincerely —

Abby Howells —

"See It Now"
Potash, Shirley

October 10, 1957

Dear Shirley:

Very many thanks for your cordial little note about Sunday's SEE IT NOW. I am glad that you and Dick enjoyed the show. We have received a number of nice comments on the program, but we liked yours best.

As ever yours,

Miss Shirley Potash
Time, Inc.
Rockefeller Center
New York, New York

mcc

TIME
INCORPORATED

TIME & LIFE BUILDING
ROCKEFELLER CENTER
NEW YORK 20

EXECUTIVE OFFICES

October 7, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

My husband (who, I think, is an extraordinary journalist) said that yesterday's "See It Now" was "extraordinary journalism." He is for raising the postal rates, I am against it, but we both agreed that this is the first time in a long long while that we saw this kind of journalism in depth on our 21" screen.

Congratulations to you and Fred Friendly and everyone else involved.

Bestest,

Shirley

Shirley Potash Clurman

SIN
Schwartz, Bernard

November 1, 1957

Dear Mr. Schwartz:

There is, of course, considerable merit in the issues you raise in your courteous letter of October 17th.

You will appreciate, I am sure, in part, at least, the problems involved in editing a program. We normally shoot about one thousand feet of film for every one hundred that get on the air, and I can recognize from your letter the disappointment of your membership, but it is my problem to try to stimulate widespread public interest in the Post Office and its problems.

You may be interested to know that the other members of the Postal Service thought the treatment fair and served to focus attention, however superficially, upon the practices and just grievances of the postal workers.

We may have occasion to return to this subject later on, and if we do, perhaps the treatment can be in greater depth and detail.

Thanks again for writing as you did.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Bernard Schwartz, President
New York Federation of Post Office Clerks
412 Eighth Avenue
New York 1, New York

fc

TELEPHONE: LONGACRE 3-5237

NEW YORK FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS

LOCAL NO. 10, NATIONAL FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS

412 EIGHTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

AFFILIATIONS

A.F.L.—C.I.O.

CENTRAL TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL OF GREATER NEW YORK

NEW YORK STATE FEDERATION OF LABOR

NEW YORK STATE FEDERATION OF POST OFFICE CLERKS

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT.

JOINT CONFERENCE OF AFFILIATED POSTAL EMPLOYEES OF GREATER NEW YORK AND VICINITY

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT. OF NEW YORK STATE

October 17, 1957.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
"See It Now"
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I want to express, on behalf of the 10,000 members of this Local, our keen dissapointment at your program of October 3, 1957, the "Billion Dollar Mail Case". It was all the more dissapointing in view of the reputation you enjoy for objective and complete coverage of the subjects you select.

This Local, at considerable time and expense, participated in a special meeting, at which 3 hours of film was taken. While we understand the many limitations imposed, we do believe that there should have been far better coverage. Completely excluded from the broadcast were a number of major issues, raised by speakers, which reflected the needs and feelings of 500,000 postal employees. Mr. Cole, of READERS DIGEST, and Postmaster General Summerfield, spoke for approximately 20 minutes while spokesmen for postal employees barely had five minutes, and this included items, which may have had human interest, but certainly, other major problems were deserving of at least equal coverage.

Several members of this Local spoke on such subjects as, the Work Performance Standards Program, Merit Promotion, Union Recognition, and the crisis with respect to the turn over of personnel. Every one of these issues is of vital importance, not only to postal employees, but to the public, as they directly affect the kind of service the Post Office Department is able to give. The question of policy regarding postal rates, while important, should not have been permitted to completely obscure major problems which, aside from the question of costs, per se, actually have a more direct bearing on the efficiency of the Department.

Was it your desire to place primary emphasis on the question of publishers vs departmental costs and the technical backwardness of post office facilities? This was your right, but I believe it was unfair to utilize postal employees, simply to add a touch of human interest to the program. Certainly if it was desired to give proper recognition to the basic problems of the Post Office Department, then allowance should have been made for the inclusion of the employee viewpoint on an equitable basis.

Our members particularly resent the lack of opportunity to challenge your assertion that European postal workers earn only one third the salary of postal workers in this country. This statement gives a completely distorted view of the issue. It utterly ignores differences in living standards, costs of living, and what is a decent wage based on our economy. Why no comment about the differences in costs of materials, machines, equipment, administration, etc., as between our Post Office Department and foreign postal services? Even more revealing would be a comparison between the salary of Postmaster General Summerfield, and other top post office officials, to which we do not object, and similar postal officials in European countries.

It is our understanding that this program is to be rebroadcast on Sunday, October 20,1957. If this is so, I earnestly hope you will review the thousands of feet of film "shot" at our "gripe" meeting on Sept. 11, 1957, with a view to giving us a "fair shake". In particular I urge you to consider a broader coverage of the salary question.

In this connection, we would be happy to provide any information, or contribute in any way possible.

Our membership feels most strongly on this subject, and this communication is a directive of the Membership Meeting of this Local held on October 16, 1957.

Thank you for your interest in the Post Office Department and its employees.

Sincerely,

Bernard Schwartz

Bernard Schwartz,
President.

"SEE IT NOW"

ATOMIC TIMETABLE

Part I

NOVEMBER 25, 1957

Sir

Copy of letter to Fred from Arthur.

The Hyatt House, International Airport, Los Angeles, California - ORchard 2-9141
September 15. 1957

Dear Fred,

Unfortunately there's no typewriter in the vicinity so you'll have to suffer my fine Italian hand. Here's a summary of things I've seen which I think have some potential for us and which I hope will reach you before you see Rickover.

Pittsburgh Area

1. Shippingport: Here's some perspective on Shippingport. It is hoped that Shippingport will be providing power via Duquesue Light and Power, by the end of '57 and this would make it the first large-scale commercial use. This is a Rickover-Westinghouse operation. Reactor experts feel that Shippingport-type reactors which use pressurized water cannot be economical because of the complexity of the heat exchangers and other factors. General Electric's boiling water reactor at Pleasanton, California, 40 miles from San Francisco will be on the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. line about the same time as Shippingport but it is only a 5,000 kilowatt operation. It is the first privately-financed nuclear power operation in the US and is modeled after Argonne National Lab's boiling water reactor which has been providing 2/3 of the power for all the Argonne buildings for quite some time and thus is in fact the US pioneer in nuclear power. The GE reactor is a backstop for their Dresden, Illinois plant now under construction which will have roughly three times the output of Shippingport.

2. Westinghouse: Because of its submarine reactors and orders from Shippingport, Yankee, Belgium and Edisonvolta in Italy, Westinghouse has been dominant in the peacetime field though GE has more government work.

   Cheswick - Westinghouse mass production of atomic components, notably the $250,000 leakproof pumps for Shippingport. Parts of Belgian reactor can be shown. Magnitude of plant shows nuclear age upon us commercially.

   Research - Example of way in which irradiation changes characteristics of substance, giving it commercial use: A ball is dropped on silicon gum. The ball plops into the gummy substance and does not bounce. Then the gum is irradiated, the ball is dropped and it bounces high off the gum.

   Blairsville - Manufacture of uranium pellets (it takes 3,000,000 pellets with tolerances of ½ of one-thousandth of an inch to make up the fuel elements). Metallurgy at Blairsville features the processing of zirconium discovered in 1824 but unused until its neutron absorbing capacity was noted recently. We can watch a $25,000 ingot forged and sent through the receiving mill until it becomes a thin cladding? for a uranium fuel element.

3. Nuclear Science and Engineering Co.-Example of a bright young company stepping out into the atomic age with leadership averaging age 30. They analyze samples of bone and milk for fallout under AEC contract.

Oak Ridge

1. Oak Ridge trains circuit-riding science teachers - these will be in Wyoming, Louisiana and Maine during our filming. They have excellent visual displays of fission and radiation and could serve as our pioneer while showing the stimulation of high school kids. The exhibits flash chain reactors like pinball machines.

2. Robert Charpie (pronounced Sharpy and he is!), Assistant Director of the lab at 31, planned US participation in Geneva Conference, dynamic and brilliant on (a) how national labs translate research into impact and (b) how nuclear power can make and shape world.

3. Dr. William Russell - Geneticist who works with his wife. Can demonstrate how radiation of a mouse shortens the life span of its offspring (not generations hence, but the offspring). Can demonstrate mutations from high-dose radiation and makes point that the mouse is 15 times more sensitive than the fruit fly which formed the basis of H.J. Muller's research and radiation standards.

4. Dr. Congdon - One of the most significant contributions of the past decade. Congdon can demonstrate how bone marrow can be transplanted to a mouse which has received lethal radiation. Radiation destroys the immune system of the body and thereby permits the introduction of a foreign body. There are important human implications in the treatment of leukemia as well as radiation. We can show removal of bone marrow from mouse femur without revolting viewers.

5. Dr. Doherty - the injection of AET, a chemical compound prior to radiation, prevents death from what would otherwise be a lethal dose. The compound is too toxic for humans but suggests possibilities.

6. The historic 1943 reactor in which most US isotopes are now produced. We can show placement of isotopes in reactor, withdrawal and processing by mechanical handling including some fascinating packaging, canning and bottle-top spinning by remote control. Abbott Labs in Oak Ridge picks up some isotopes, processes them pharmaceutically on the spot and ships 'em out on the same day the orders from physicians arrive by teletype. This urgency is because of the short half-life of many isotopes.

7. Oak Ridge's giant research reactor will be brought to criticality for the first time about Oct. 15. We can cover. Tense and terse phraseology, unfamiliar words and complexity of control mechanisms may make this or other reactors which will be available an interesting sequence.

8. Homogeneous Reactor - This is experimental, uses liquid fuel, has great possibilities. Men change parts below water using 30 foot poles which remove nuts, bolts and large assemblies. Liquid fuel is one answer to complex, expensive and wasteful fuel elements but the big problem introduced by the liquid is corrosion.

9. Special training division - Students from other countries learn how to handle isotopes. The Argonne group is more interesting, however.

10. Dr. William Pollard, Director Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies and ordained Episcopalian priest. Out of this world if worked with carefully. Discusses the "naturalness" of atoms and hydrogen bombs (the sun) and the unnaturalness of such uniquely earthbound characteristics as free oxygen. Eloquent about the role of science, the unity of religion and scientific inquiry, the uninevitability of nuclear destruction.

11.

11. Dr. Karl Z. Morgan, Chairman of theSubcommittee on Internal Radiation of the Nat'l Academy of Science - he is a standart-setter. He deplores AEC over-simplification or fadiation hazard as well as Ralph Lapp type of over-alarm, draws convincing picture of radiation hazards on blackboard showing we must reduce medical X-ray exposures which are forty times greater than fallout levels if continued at same rate over lifetime - tall, craggy, quiet, impressive.

12. Tower shielding facility - Spectacular pictures - two 350 foot towers between which a reactor is hoisted dripping from its water base. In shielded underground room radiation from airborne reactor is recorded as development of first nuclear reactor for aircraft propulsion advances. Cameras can ~~upon~~ top of film from towers.

Detroit Area

1. General Motors Technical Center - Isotope Lab - Piston ring irradiated at Oak Ridge comes back to lab. Put in dynamometer which simulates traffic, stops and starts with characteristic sounds. Radioactivity from piston ring transmitted to motor oil and when measured by counter registers wear of piston-ring. In 10 minutes get ~~resulst~~ results that once took weeks and were not as accurate. (editorial and unobjective note: this enables General Motots to design a piston ring which will not wear too long).

2. University of Michigan Phoenix Project - ambitious program for studying impact of atomic energy on society but at the moment, is expendable. Very uncoordinated and we get better basic research elsewhere.

Chicago

1. Argonne Cancer Research Hospital:

   (a) Treatment of breast cancer by destruction of pituitary gland by radioactive beads placed through patient's sinuses thus avoiding brain surgery. Treatment designed to reduce sex hormones which promote spread of breast cancer. Can be used to help about 50% of such cases. We can view placement of beads through image - amplifying fluorscope. We can use real patient for all scenes but through scope and can use cadavar for that (take me out, coach!).

   (b) Cabolt 60 therapy with revolving machine and use of one million volt Van De Graaf machine for superficial tumors.

2. Argonne National Lab:

   (a) Dr. Austin Brues, Director Biology & Medicine - not inspiring compared to others.

   (b) Dr. Miriam Finkel - has done first large-scale exposure of mice to varying doses of radiation. 7,000 mice used, she is willing to give us details which indicate that radiation standards for man are safe by a factor of a thousand. She has measured somatic not genetic effects and her findings support the threshold followers who say nothing happens until you get a certain degree of dose. This is not, repeat not, related to genetics of which Russell's studies at Oak Ridge are preeminent.

(c) The handling of plutonium. U235 comprises only .3% of all uranium but U238, the other 99.7%, can become fissionable plutonium. Plutonium could be atomic fuel except that it is so deadly to man if it gets in the respiratory system. The maximum dose to man is one/tenth of one millionth of a gram. But a new AEC reactor is being designed to use plutonium. We can show the experimental handling of this stuff in the lab. Operators use gloves in chemical caves and the trick is to keep absolute purity in the air.

(d) Paul Fields is a young chemist who, working with a Swede and an Englishman, discovered element 102. He symbolizes the epochal discoveries being made and could be used in sequence next to the new Berkeley accelerator which is designed to discover element 103.

(e) International School of Atomic Energy - Students from 24 countries work on a do-it-yourself reactor called the Argonant. Many Asians, demonstrates internationalism.

(f) Food irradiation in the swimming pool reactor. Army Quartermaster Corps has foods lowered into watery reactor for irradiation. We can show exhibit of meats and breads left at room temperatures for months without changing characteristics while controls are rotted & mouldy.

(g) Dr. Leo Marinelli: Devised the iron room, a chamber free of background radioactivity where humans as well as other samples can be checked for activity. Says Marinelli, a fluent Continental with a cigarette holder and Venetian accent, "We were born, conceived and developed in a radioactive world". He has discovered that there is less strontium 90 in fallout than there is radium in much Illinois drinking water. Marinelli will operate his fantastic machine for us while a subject sits in his iron room. Then we can see a radium dial painter having her radon (a gas expelled in respiration) measured and we can urge listeners who worked with radium to notify the proper person so they can contribute to radiation data.

(h) Experimental Boiling Water Reactor - This supplies 2/3 of the Argonne Lab's power and is most impressive. They will have it do tricks for us, bringing up power rapidly. TV monitor of steam pressure dial will shoot up in control room. We can film the control rods which are below the pressure vessel while the reactor is operating, so can demonstrate how reactions are slowed and speeded.

(i) Dr. Norman Hilberry, Director of Argonne is eloquent on the subject of basic research and can trace how seemingly unrelated laboratory experiments are suddenly brought into focus, as with atomic energy. He is excellent on the subject of national labs and in describing how the US was skating on thin ice during the Stagg Field days. He is an alternative to Ernest Lawrence, Glenn Seaborg or Louis Alvarez at Berkeley.

(j) Argonant, the do-it-yourself reactor previously mentioned - It produces only enough power to light one 100 watt bulb but has all the essentials of a reactor. The international students practice on it.

(k) Subcritical Assembly. Students working with Fermi's original Stagg Field graphite. There is a placque on the assembly.

(l) Metallurgy - An alternative to the Westinghouse Blairsville operation. Uranium in a steel jacket is rolled back and forth and bonded with zircaloy then six such plates are welded by automatic machine into one fuel element.

(m) Caves for handling radioactive materials - these and the GE caves at Pleasanton, Cal. are most photogenic. Can show precision work using mechanical hands.

(n) Scully's Greenhouse - We have this on film and nothing substantial has happened since.

San Francisco Area

1. Radiation Lab. Berkeley:

(a) Ernest Lawrence, Director, Nobel Prizewinner, inventor of cyclotron, is in Europe now, back at end of month. Shy of cameras, has never been on TV, will require some personal intervention by a friend. His role, I think, would be the function of basic research. In his absence, other Berkeley spokesmen (and there are plenty, these are the Chicago Bears of atomic energy) could do the job. If he fails, Glenn Seaborg, also Nobel Prizer for discovery of plutonium would be excellent as would Louis Alvarez. Alvarez is a handsome assistant director of Berkeley, inventor of ground-controlled approach in aircraft. Any of these could talk about the cyclotron which produces cosmic-type rays, the bevatron which whirls neutrons 300,000 miles in 1.8 seconds and discovered anti-matter and HILAC, the new accelerator which it is hoped will discover element 103. Any of these might say that these enormous gadgets are designed to hurl particles at greater and greater speeds against nuclei and thus discover the nature of the nucleus. The shorter the distance between man and the heart of the atom the larger the equipment necessary.

(b) Donner Laboratory - Best single place to show medical applications:

(1) treatment of polycythema vera, disease caused by overproduction of red blood cells. Treatment with radio phosphorus by injection has doubled years of survival.

(11) destruction of thyroid by radio iodine.

(111) multi-port detector is huge gadget. Patient lays on table, four detection instruments measure radioactivity in various parts of his body. Counts show whether new red blood cells are produced.

(1V) Movable scanner moves over patient's body making continuous picture to spot thyroid cancer as iodine moves to various areas.

(V) patient wears space mask as carbon 14 passes through body and is measured after exhalation. Used in metabolism studies, relates to diabetes.

(c) Photosynthesis - the mystery of how plants transform sunlight into energy has been unlocked by Dr. Melvin Calvin and colleagues. A must for the show. Algae grow in shaking container with lights. Algae are fed radio carbon, killed, then chromatography shows how various chemicals reacted. Dr. Calvin shows a CO_2 atom model and H_2O model, then shows $C_{12}H_{22}O_{11}$ which is the sugar they manufacture.

(d) Dr. Hardin Jones, radiation expert, assistant director Berkeley who describes known association between radiation and leukemia in this and other countries, excellent.

2. General Electric Atom Lab, Pleasanton:

First privately-financed nuclear power in US. Very impressive operation, goes into business in December or November, has already been brought to criticality. G.E. also has beautiful radioactive-handling lab. Their atom power division in San Jose is like Westinghouse at Cheswick.

STILL TO BE SEEN

National Reactor Testing Station, Idaho:

Materials testing reactor
Reprocessing of radioactive waste
Propulsion unit for Navy cruiser

Salt Lake City Pipeline:

The use of tracers to follow different types of liquids through pipelines so they know when the gasoline has ended and the kerosene is about to begin, etc.

I'll be home next weekend. My finger is falling off. Love to Dorothy.

Arthur

P.S. I'm not the traveling-type!!

Tomorrow Prog. Bus
S/N
Collingwood, Charles
McClure, Bill

October 18, 1957

Dear Charles & Bill:

Attached are some question ideas for Dr. Hinton. Change them and expand on them as you see fit. Let me fill you in on the rest of the show.

Actually, it is going to be the first of several attempts to do "This radio-active planet" and we will probably call the show something like this. This will be part one and will deal with power and other peacetime uses. Ed will be doing Admiral Rickover from Shippingport - our first major peace-time reactor which is expected to go critical in the next few weeks. Rickover will talk not only about the reactor, but about our power problems. I expect it will be a kind of "Paley report" in which we point out that we are using up our oil and coal at such a rate that by 1980, we will be in Britain's position. That's why it is very important that you get Hinton to go deeply into Britain's position problems -- Suez and the low reserves in fossil fuel, high cost of coal, etc. I expect the Admiral will also speak of the "artificial creation of obsolescence" here and how it causes us to use too much of everything. Also, on the program will be Dr. Edward Teller, chief architect of the H-Bomb, who will speak about the low state of scientific education here compared to the Russians. He will also talk about the need to know. Ed and I will be doing Teller in Baltimore Tuesday (not in Berkeley and if we get any ideas out of his comments that affect your project we'll cable you). Admiral Strauss will be on the program, but we'll do him last - he'll answer the questions that the entire program begs.

Other coverage on the show will include a "spectacular I think" sequence already shot of an airplane reactor being tested five hundred feet over Oak Ridge, strung between four towers. We'll be doing several types of power reactors in the US, a zero power reactor which enables scientists to figure out the cores of future reactors. We'll cover changing of fuel elements and disposal of radioactive wastes, and the powering of a jet engine by nuclear energy.

On the medical side, we'll be showing cobalt radiation therapy and the use of radiosotopes in detecting damage and measuring metabolism. We may show the destruction of the pituitary by cobalt beads in the treatment of breast cancer. We'll have a sequence on the unlocking of the secret of photosynthesis and we'll show the irradiation of food to preserve its shelf life.

There will also be a brief prologue with Compton at Stagg field predicting a bright new era (years ago) and Szilard saying the Stagg field success would go down in history as civilizations darkest day.

In addition to the Hinton questions, be sure to do a brief description by him of Calder Hall and also shoot Calder Hall reactor (shots to be used with or without his narration). Also please do as a Collingwood opening leading into Calder Hall and Hinton. As for Cockcroft, we'll decide what direction to go.with him after Hinton.

Good luck.

Mr. Charles Collingwood
Mr. William McClure
CBS News
26 Hallam Street
London W.1., England

FWF/hlt
encl.

P.S. Is there any visual sequence they can do for us on the recent fusion experiment?
~~The second treatment of this~~ Incidents also The second treatment of this subject will be in the Spring and will include radiation and fall-out. You may want to mention this to your Calder Hall contacts.

Bill, when you shoot Calder Hall exteriors, be sure to do druid markers in foreground. Here are some notes from an exploratory trip that Morse made, which may orient you.

10/18/57

QUESTIONS FOR SIR CHRISTOPHER HINTON

1. The United States and Soviet Union were years ahead of Britain with nuclear weapons. Yet in the quest for atomic power, Britain has attained certain leadership. How come?

2. In the United States where ~~mut~~ first atomic power is still to go on the line, it will cost considerably more than electricity made from coal or oil. How does this compare with your Calder Hall figures? (additional question) When will atomic power be cheaper.

3. What about the ~~There-is-some~~ criticism in America that the British have gotten off to a head start but will suffer in the future because you have put all your eggs in one basket and that research has already passed you by.

4. There was an important news story several weeks ago that British scientists at Harwell had made an important break-thru in fusion or the use of hydrogen for peace-time purposes. Would you talk about that for a few minutes?

5. As you know, the US Navy now has three atomic submarines. What are the British doing about Nuclear powered merchant ships - what about aircraft?

6. Isn't there a wide area of duplication and, therefore, waste in what you are doing here in England and what we are doing in our American laboratories?

7. What about safety with these reactors? I have read that the British safety requirement is considerably less strict than the American one (if this doesn't lead him to last week's mishap, then ask him about it).

8. What about the future - where will your program be by 1965?

Gunther, R.S.

December 9, 1957

Dear Mr. Gunther:

Many thanks for your cordial letter of November 26.

I am glad to learn that you liked ATOMIC TIMETABLE. The audience reaction was very favorable, and the calibre of the correspondence was unusually high.

Thank you for taking the time and trouble to write.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Richard S. Gunther
5512 Van Nuys Boulevard
Van Nuys, California

mcc

Richard S. Gunther

5512 VAN NUYS BOULEVARD
VAN NUYS, CALIFORNIA
STATE 6-5571

NOVEMBER 26, 1957

EDWARD R. MURROW
COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM
NEW YORK, N. Y.

DEAR MR. MURROW:

I HAVE ALWAYS ADMIRED YOUR PROGRAMS AND THIS ADMIRATION TURNED TO ENTHUSIASM WHEN YOU TACKLED McCARTHYISM WHILE AT THE HEIGHT OF ITS POWER.

HOWEVER, I HAVE NEVER SEEN YOU DO A BETTER JOB THAN WAS DONE SUNDAY BY INTERVIEWING MEN OF THE CALIBER AND OBVIOUS INTEGRITY OF ADMIRAL RICKOVER AND DR. TELLER.

YOU PERFORMED A GREAT PUBLIC SERVICE AND PLEASE DO MORE. THE COUNTRY NEEDS PEOPLE LIKE YOU.

VERY TRULY YOURS,

RICHARD S. GUNTHER

RSG:BL

TO Mr. Murrow

FROM natalie

Fred says he will talk to you about the attached before he goes home this evening. He is in the cutting room at the moment.....

N

McClure, Bill

RECEIVED
1957 NOV -8 PM 4:48
C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y

RECEIVED
1957 NOV -8 PM 4:48
C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y

M

CBS/ACR5/WEA1639/TD396

LONDON 52 8 930P

PSS CBSINC

NY

BURKE PROFRIENDLY ATOMIC ENERGY AUTHORITY PRESS OFFICE SAID TODAY FUSION RELEASE EXPECTED MID NOVEMBER BUT IMPOSSIBLE ADVANCE SHOOT ZETA PERHAPS AFTER WRAPS OFF STOP IF RELEASE DAY COULD BE ADVANCED THROUGH ANGLO AMERICAN AGREEMENT NO SECURITY OBSTACLE WOULD PREVENT PHOTOGRAPHY STOP ANY MURROW INTERVENTION WOULD CERTAINLY CLEAR AIR REGARDS

MCCLURE

LW 445P NOV 8 1957

ACK

Talk

Sim

MEMO

Wilson S. Meyers

Ed:-

You may be interested in our latest bulletin about your program.

Wilson

11/15/57

ATLANTIC CITY ELECTRIC COMPANY

SUPERVISOR'S TAILBOARD TOPICS

A Digest of Current Interest

Atomic Energy

will be featured on two of TV's top Sunday shows. Edward R. Murrow will start filmed series on peace time use of nuclear energy on "See It Now" over CBS-TV (Channel 10) on November 24—5 to 6 P.M. Dave Garroway's "Wide, Wide World" will do live report on December 6th over NBC-TV (Channel 3) 4 to 5:30 P.M. According to reports both programs will describe Electric Industry's part in atomic power research and development. Both programs will visit many key plants and laboratories including Duquesne-Westinghouse Shippingport reactor, world's first full scale atomic plant devoted to civilian needs. They will also make report on atomic progress made at Argonne Laboratories in preservation of food and propulsion of aircraft. "See It Now" will make filmed report on first power reactor station built in England at Calder Hall. World leaders in atomic energy will also appear on both programs. Write down dates—November 24th, 5 P.M., Channel 10 and December 6th, 4 P.M., Channel 3. You won't want to miss these programs.

The Electric Industry is participating in 14 projects with generating capacity of more than 1,500,000 kilowatts, costing well over $400 million. Sixty-nine investor-owned electric operating companies and more than 40 manufacturing companies are cooperating in these installations. For several years, Atlantic City Electric has been interested in Atomic Power Development Associates project at Detroit.

Atomic Electric Power is fast becoming an important issue to Electric Industry. With electric use doubling every ten years (may triple this decade) we are going to need low cost nuclear fuel to supplement conventional fuels in generation of electric power.

Edward R. Trapnell

one of Washington's leading public relations authorities on atomic power, recently told New Jersey audience that while atomic power development will need cost-cutting incentive, efficiency and practical operating experience of investor-owned electric industry, it cannot do job alone. Trapnell contends that government must continue to make substantial investments in research and development, not only for electric power but for many other uses including national security, public health and safety. Many industry leaders interested in atomic development agree with this contention. But some do not agree. Perhaps because of the following:

Federal Power

by nuclear energy may ultimately become real challenge to our industry. Advocates of federalized power may use government's stake in atomic energy as wedge to build and operate generating stations and then by insidious preference systems attempt to distribute and market electric output. Like present federally-owned power projects they will then compete with free enterprise utilities in same old way—interest free money and tax-free electric income. The New York Daily News warns that present public power moves "an open attempt to create a public nuclear power empire like TVA". The Guaranty Trust of New York has pointed out that "a political stranglehold on commercial atomic energy could eventually spell the doom of private enterprise as the free world has known it". This is why we must not be lulled into complacency. This is why we should be well informed on this important subject.

Hon. Carl T. Durham

Congressman from North Carolina and Chairman of The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and a ranking member of that group for eleven years, clarified congressional thinking on this subject recently. In a letter to the Electric Companies Public Information Program on September 18, 1957 Mr. Durham wrote:

"The electric industry recognizes, I am sure, the necessary role of the government in atomic energy. The relationship to national security and the question of public health and safety are the basic reasons for government regulations of this industry.

But the regulatory responsibilities of the government in the field of the development and utilization of nuclear energy must not be exploited to expand and enlarge the government activities in the field of power. Electric power is a needed public service which the citizens of this nation can provide for themselves, under effective regulation. The notion that the federal government should build and operate generating stations just to have public power is the rankest kind of federalism, is wholly repugnant to our concept of free enterprise, won't assure the nation an adequate power supply, and generally weakens our economy by the unsound tax manipulation which results from federal power investment."

Millville, N. J.—"The Heart of Delaware Valley, U.S.A."

received some nice publicity in an article by Hugh Scott, published in Philadelphia Inquirer's Sunday Magazine, "Today". (11-3-57) Article traced Millville's renaissance from small town to a modern city throbbing with new industry, new homes, new business, new vision and new civic pride. While article praised other Millville civic leaders, it described Clarence R. Wolf, President of New Jersey Silica Sand and Director of ACE CO. as "the type of senior citizens small cities dream of, seldom get". Incidentally, Mr. Wolf received honorary degree of Doctor of Science from Lafayette College on October 26. A graduate of Lafayette in 1911, Mr. Wolf is life trustee of College. Before becoming interested in silica sand in 1923, he was Principal of Millville High School. While sand is Mr. Wolf's business, he devotes considerable time and effort to community life and other outside interests. One of these is world's largest private holly orchard of over 4500 trees. He organized Holly Society of America and has served as its President for 10 years.

Paul J. McCorristin

newly elected president of Southern New Jersey Development Council was cited in Millville story as "a genial tornado" who sparked civic cooperation through Mayor and City Commission, Board of Trade, other civic groups and public utilities. He was described by Scott as "The man who created 1200 jobs". As new head of SNJDC, McCorristin has program designed to encourage closer cooperation between our municipalities in area development and discourage provincialism which plagued Southern New Jersey for so many years. If you would like copy of Millville story—contact Wilson Meyers.

Central Surveys, Inc.

conducts nationwide customer opinion surveys regarding electric industry each year including opinions of electric service and electric company employees. In 1956-57 they talked with 21,640 customers and found 97% had favorable things to say about their electric service. Of 3% who were critical common complaints were "low voltage and interruptions". The 97% figure compares with 95% in 1950 and 88% in 1948.

Electric Company Employees received high score during same period. 11,639 customers were asked about employee promptness and courtesy. 95% gave favorable answers—2% were unfavorable and 3% had no opinion. On opinions about cost of electricity 63% gave favorable replies. In this part of survey too many people failed to realize all the values or services represented in their electric service bill. Too many people still refer to it—and think of it—as "light bill". For example customers were asked "how many different things would you say you used electricity for—5, 10, 15, 25 or what?" The median reply was 8, but actual count revealed median average of 14 appliances per home.

Air Pollution Commission of N. J. adopted code covering control and prohibition of fly ash on October 21. It becomes effective on July 1, 1958. In addition to defining solid fuel and fly ash, code sets limit of stack emission based on BTU's per hour. Reports describing fuel-burning equipment will be required by State Department of Health.

Community Chest Campaigns are now being held in Atlantic and Salem Counties and Bridgeton. Have you discussed our new payroll payment plan with your group? The many community agencies supported by Red Feather Campaigns need our help. Let's give our fair share.

NEW RADIO PROGRAM

sponsored by Company to cooperate with our electric appliance dealers will start on Dec. 2 in Atlantic City. It will be called "Reddy Kilowatt Show" and will eminate from window of Main Office Building, Kentucky and Pacific Avenues. It will feature Bob Weems and be broadcast over WFPG, 3:30 to 5:30 P.M., Monday through Friday. It will have public service format, interviews, news, weather, special contests, meeting calendar, home making hints on electric use and will also promote electric appliances for our dealers.

New Washington Cocktail

"The Sputnik" — one part vodka — two parts sour grape juice.

Rickover, R. Adm.
Hyman

November 8, 1957

Dear Admiral:

The film we shot at Shippingport turned out very well indeed.

The slight background noise didn't interfere with the sound at all, and I am hopeful that you will be somewhat gratified with the end result.

I am enclosing a few stills.

As ever yours,

Rear Admiral Hyman G. Rickover
United States Atomic Energy Commission
1901 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

fc

Strauss, Adm. Lewis L.

Sen

December 5, 1957

Dear Admiral Strauss:

Thank you for your gracious letter about SEE IT NOW.

You will be interested to know that the audience reaction, while not massive, was altogether favorable and the calibre of the correspondence was unusually high.

As you know, we hope to revert to this subject again and will hope to again have the invaluable aid and assistance of yourself and your colleagues.

For our part, that is Friendly and myself, we would like to do a program in this area every week.

Sincerely,

Admiral Lewis L. Strauss
United States Atomic Energy Commission
Washington, D.C.

fc

UNITED STATES
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION
WASHINGTON

OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN

26 November 1957

Sir

Dear Mr. Murrow:

When I tuned in to "See-It-Now" on Sunday, I had as my guests in Virginia Sir Edwin Plowden, Chairman of the British Atomic Energy Authority, and Sir Richard Powell, Permanent Secretary of the Ministry of Defense. It was a splendid program, and time passed so quickly that it was hard for us to believe that it had lasted for an hour.

I am sorry that, having come to my part of the interview from the sick bed, I was in such poor voice, but the excellence of the other parts of the program made up for my deficiency.

Faithfully yours,

Lewis Strauss

Lewis L. Strauss

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

cc: Fred Friendly

See It Now, Nov 24, '57 B. I. S.

Wright, Joy

Telephone
CIRCLE 6-5100

Cable:
DIGESTION, NEW YORK

Reference for reply

BRITISH INFORMATION SERVICES
45 ROCKEFELLER PLAZA
NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

November 26, 1957

called

Dear Ed:

We would like to make a secondary use of the excellent programme on atomic energy which you put on last Sunday.

Would you, personally, or CBS, have any objection to our sending to science editors and scientific periodicals in the U.S. an excerpt from the programme on the lines of the draft I attach?

We would like to get this out quickly so perhaps you would be kind enough to have someone give me a call.

Sincerely yours,

Joy

Joy Wright

Mr. Ed Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N.Y.

/nt enc.

BRITISH PROGRESS IN THERMO-NUCLEAR REACTORS

A layman's explanation of what the British are doing in the field of thermonucleonics was given by Sir John Cockcroft on CBS Television's "See It Now" program on November 24.

An introduction by Ed Murrow listed the British accomplishments to date in this field:

> the production of electricity at Calder Hall, the world's first commercial nuclear power station;
>
> the construction in Scotland of a "fast breeder" reactor which next spring will start producing 60,000 k.w. of power;
>
> the building of nuclear power plant for export; > experimentation with an atomic propelled submarine cargo ship larger than the QUEEN MARY with an anticipated speed of 50 knots; and particularly the experiments now going on at Harwell in fusion of heavy hydrogen for peacetime purposes -- a result which will mean for the world an inexhaustible supply of energy.
>

DOING "QUITE WELL"

Interviewed by Charles Collingwood in London, Sir John -- who is head of Britain's Atomic Research Establishment and a Nobel prize winner -- replied to the suggestion that Britain is "leading the way toward harnessing the power of the hydrogen bomb."

"I never like to say we are leading the world in anything. All that I like to say is that we are doing well or doing badly. I think we are doing quite well at the moment."

He went on to outline some of the problems involved in producing a thermonuclear reactor.

/Over ...

The essential problem, he said, is to make the atomic nuclei of the so-called "heavy" hydrogen combine to form helium. When that happens, a great deal of energy is released.

The problem is to reproduce in the laboratory or power stations the conditions prevailing in the sun and stars... that is, ~~to say,~~ the extraordinarily high temperatures necessary to make the nuclei combine.

STAGES ONE AND TWO REACHED

The way the British are going about it, Sir John explained, is "to put the gas in a kind of donut, and heat it up. We do that by passing a very powerful electrical charge through."

The next problem is discovery of a way to prevent the heat thus developed from being lost by the gas touching the walls.

"Fortunately, what helps us in this is an automatic restriction of the gas which tends to squeeze it into a narrow channel. This means it is pulled away from the walls, and it sweeps up into the charge-hole so that the charge is effectively insulated from the walls and we don't lose the heat by conduction to the glass. That is the first very important point."

Stage Two of the project -- which the British have also reached -- is to build a very much bigger donut (known as ZETA) designed to raise temperatures of between one and five million degrees Centigrade.

"If we can do this, the fusion reaction will start and neutrons will be emitted. We do observe neutrons, but on the other hand we know they can come from a number of spurious causes and we are not yet a hundred percent certain that all these neutrons come from true thermo-nuclear reaction."

POSITIVE POWER GAIN

After the successful operation of ZETA comes Stage Three.

This is to get more power out of the fusion reaction than is put in. "So Stage Three," Sir John went on, "would be to build a ZETA II if you like, or another fusion reactor in which you would get a positive power gain.

"And then, beyond that.... you still have Stage Four, which is to build something which is economic and which is real engineering hardware."

UNLIMITED SUPPLY

Asked to give a picture of Stage Four in operation, with a practical fusion reactor working, Sir John replied, "I don't know whether I will be alive to see it.... but if we do get that, the tremendous attraction is that the fuel, which is heavy hydrogen, is in unlimited supply. You just really take it out of the ocean."

So the fuel cost, said Sir John, would be "negligible."

He continued, "There are also other very important advantages if you compare it with fission power: you don't have the radioactive waste products that you get in the fission process. That is another big advantage, and furthermore it may well be possible to convert the energy directly into electricity instead of going through the old-fashioned way of raising steam and making the steam drive a steam turbine....

"It would mean, really, that energy would be in unlimited supply and the world would never run out of energy."

E N D

"SEE IT NOW"

THE LADY FROM PHILADELPHIA

Marian Anderson

DECEMBER 30, 1957

NOTE: MARIAN ANDERSON ALSO APPEARED ON PERSON-TO-PERSON -

October 29, 1954

CBS NEWS
485 MADISON AVENUE
New York 22, N. Y.
Plaza 1-2345

SEE IT NOW
Volume 7 -- No. 4

SEE IT NOW

"The Lady from Philadelphia -
Through Asia with Marian Anderson"

as broadcast over the
CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

December 30, 1957 -- 10:00--11:00 PM EST

PRODUCERS: Edward R. Murrow
Fred W. Friendly

EDWARD R. MURROW

Very often books are dedicated to people. This television program is affectionatly dedicated to the children of Asia and to Anna Delilah Anderson who lives in Philadelphia and who is almost 80, and whose daughter recently represented her people and our country in Asia.

ANNOUNCER

The Lady from Philadelphia is sponsored by I.T.& T. International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation.
We are in the communications business -- the business of communication from man's brain to the tips of his fingers -- the business of communication to the ends of the earth. We maintain and operate the Dew Line in Alaska - the distant early warning system - an electronic sentinel for the Air Force at the top of the world extending from Point Barrow to Greenland. I.T.& T. pioneered over-the-horizon microwave television transmission to Cuba and will some day span the Atlantic. And I.T.& T. keeps Navy jet pilots in constant touch with the giant carriers Forrestal and Saratoga. We call it Tacan and it works through an electronic navigation system which gives the pilot, continuously, his exact direction and distance to the carrier. And every thirty seconds, regardless of weather, a civilian aircraft lands safely somewhere in the world through the miracle of I.T.& T's instrument landing system.

aac

ANNOUNCER (CONT'D)

and International Telephone and Telegraph provides the communications for every-day life. We manufacture telephones and build automatic telephone equipment, and on this constantly shrinking planet provide world-wide cable communications between nations, their industries and their people.

MAN BEHIND CABLE COUNTER: Can I help you?

MAN: Yes, I want to send a message to Manila. Thank you.

ANNOUNCER

We are on television tonight because we want our fellow Americans to know what we do. We also want the American people to know what one woman accomplished in the field of human communications. Now, here is the Lady from Philadelphia.

EDWARD R. MURROW

Miss Anderson, and her accompanist, Franz Rupp, traveled some thirty-five thousand miles, sang in twelve countries, from the 38th parallel to the equator. Her briefing from the State Department and the American National Theatre and Academy was simple -- "You are not a propagandist, just be yourself." Miss Anderson's assignment was principally concerned with the peoples and nations of Asia, but she did receive [illegible]ation from the men of the 24th Division, United States Army, to visit them and sing for them and with them.

MAJOR GENERAL RALPH W. ZWICKER

Miss Anderson, it's a pleasure to have you with us here in the 24th Infantry Division. We've been looking forward to your visit with such great anticipation for such a long time that we more than are happy to have you with us today.

ANDERSON: Oh, thank you so very much. It's a joy to be here.

ZWICKER: Thank you so much.

EDWARD R. MURROW

She flew to the front by helicopter where more than five thousand G.I.'s were waiting for her in an amphitheatre carved out of the Korean hills.

(APPLAUSE - MISS ANDERSON BOWS).

MAJOR GENERAL RALPH W. ZWICKER

General Griffing, General Listenberg, officers, men and ladies of the 24th Infantry Division, and guests, I am certain that in introducing our guest, we will all agree from the fame and the prestige that she has developed not only as an outstanding contralto, but also in the many other lines of endeavor for which she is well know, the greatest of artists in our time, Miss Marian Anderson. (APPLAUSE).

EDWARD R. MURROW

In addition to the Americans, the audience was made up of soldiers from Turkey, Greece, Britain, Thailand, France, and Korea. The 8th Army Choir, conducted by a Korean civilian, accompanied the Lady from Philadelphia.

MARIAN ANDERSON SINGS WITH ARMY CHOIR)

ac

'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.
A charm from the skies seems to hallow us there
Which seek thro' the world, is ne'er met with elsewhere,
Home, home, sweet, sweet home.
There's no place like home,
Oh, there's no place like home.

aac

EDWARD R. MURROW:

And this too is Korea. Miss Anderson had been here in 1953 when there was war. Now she was returning to receive an honorary degree from Ewha Women's University near Seoul.

PRESIDENT HELEN KIM:

... one of the great artists. You are respected as a leader among women. Your success against great odds has encouraged others in their struggle for justice and human rights. You stand as an example of Christian service to mankind. (APPLAUSE).

EDWARD R. MURROW:

When Miss Anderson sang for Jan Sibelius in Finland, the composer had said: "Miss Anderson, the roof of my house is too low for you." President Kim also had some pleasant difficulties with Miss Anderson's height. Few honorary degrees have been so eloquently acknowledged or so attentively heard.

(MISS ANDERSON SINGS):

He's got the whole world in his hands; he's got the big round world
in his hands
He's got the wide world in his hands; he's got the whole world
in his hands
He's got the wind and rain in his hands; he's got the sun and the moon right in his hands
He's got the wind and the rain in his hands; he's got the whole world
in his hands
He's got that gamblin' man in his hands; he's got that lyin' man
in his hands
He's got the crap shootin' man right in his hands!
He's got the whole world in his hands. (MORE)

(PIANO SOLO)...

He's got the little bits of babies in his hands;
He's got the little bits of baby in his hands;
He's got the little bits of baby in his hands;
He's got the whole world in his hands.
He's got you and me, brudder, in his hands;
He's got you and me, sister, in his hands;
He's got you and me, brudder, in his hands;
He's got the whole world in his hands.
Oh, he's got everybody in his hands; he's got everybody in his hands.
He's got everybody here right in his hands; he's got the whole world in his hands. (APPLAUSE).

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Next stop - Saigon Airport in Viet Nam, formerly French Indo-China.

(MISS ANDERSON GETS OFF PLANE. VIETNAMESE CHILDREN SING:

Get-ting to know you, get-ting to know all a-bout you
Get-ting to like you, get-ting to hope you like me
Get-ting to know you, Put-ting it my way, but nice-ly
You are pre-cisely My cup of tea!

Get-ting to know you, get-ting to feel free and eas-y
When I am with you, get-ting to know what to say.
Haven't you not-iced? Sud-den-ly I'm bright and breez-y Be-cause of all the beau-ti-ful and new things I'm learn-ing a-bout you day by day.

GIRL: Welcome to Viet Nam, Miss Anderson.

ANDERSON: Thank you very much, my dear. Thank you a lot.

jsh

EDWARD R. MURROW:

From Saigon to Bangkok, capital of Thailand - which, translated, means -- "Land of the Free" -- Almost every school child in Bangkok learns English.

TEACHER: Obey.

STUDENTS: Obey.

TEACHER: Arrow.

STUDENTS: Arrow.

TEACHER: Belong.

STUDENTS: Belong.

TEACHER: Outlaw.

STUDENTS: Outlaw.

(MISS ANDERSON ENTERS CLASSROOM).

TEACHER: How do you do, Miss Anderson?

ANDERSON: How do you do?

(MISS ANDERSON GIVES THAILAND BOW MEANING "Hello" - CHILDREN RETURN BOW.)

jsh

MARIAN ANDERSON:

Mrs. Boonchuan and students, it is really a very, very great pleasure to meet you, and to know that you are studying English, and that you are going to be better able to understand us from America. I wonder just how your likes and dislikes coincide with those of the children in America.

TEACHER: The girls may have some questions to ask you.

ANDERSON: Fine.

GIRL: Miss Marian Anderson, what is your favorite song?

MARIAN ANDERSON:

I have two favorites. They are both negro spirituals. Do you know about negro spirituals? They are songs of my people that are born out of their -- when they were very sad they have made these songs. Later, their songs were a bit more gay, but this one "TRAMPING" it is called, means walking along slowly and very hard, because you have on your shoulders many unpleasant things, and so the song means when you go to the other Land, everything will be beautiful. In this State, Abraham Lincoln, one of the Presidents of whom you have learned much, made for the negroes in America a freedom - a -- we say Emancipation. You know the word freedom, hum? And after this freedom for which they were most grateful, their songs began to be more gay. Why? Because they began to feel that they - your word "belong." It was Abraham Lincoln, with his Proclamation -- they know the word Proclamation?

TEACHER: I think so.

jsh

MARIAN ANDERSON:

The word Proclamation means a paper that is written to say: "Now we will do the thing in a new way," and this new way was of great benefit to the negroes in the United States.

(MISS ANDERSON SINGS):

I'm trampin', trampin', tryin' to make heaven my home.
Hallelujah, I am trampin', trampin', tryin' to make heaven my home.

EDWARD R. MURROW:

(MUSIC:"SARA SERN PHRA BARAMI" - THE KING ENTERS) -- Thailand used to be called Siam. It's a constitutional monarchy now but when the King enters the band plays Sara Sern Phra Barami and everyone stands. His Majesty sits on a throne in a roped off section reserved for the Royal Family. Veteran memebers of the Diplomatic Corps say that only several times in history has the King of Thailand broken precedent by rising to greet a distinguished visitor.

(THE KING STEPS FORWARD TO SHAKE HANDS WITH MISS ANDERSON, SHE BOWS).

ANDERSON: Your Majesty.

(MISS ANDERSON SINGS:)

K'in a body meet a body, Com-in' thro' the Rye,
K'in a body kiss a body, Need a body cry?
Every lassie ha'e her laddie, Na'ne, they say, ha'e I;
Yet a' the lads they smile at me, When comin' thro' the Rye.

jsh

EDWARD R. MURROW:

- Eight thousand people heard Miss Anderson in a single concert in Hong Kong and in Manila, the "Philippines Herald" called her a brilliant singer and a great woman.

(MISS ANDERSON SINGS SCHUBERT'S "SERENADE" IN GERMAN).

EDWARD R. MURROW:

There was Schubert's Serenade in Manila and Schubert's Ave Maria in Tapei, Singapore and Delhi -- and in between concerts and planes there was always time to pay her country's respects to men like the late Ramon Magsaysay of the Philippines.

(MISS ANDERSON SINGS: "AVE MARIA" IN GERMAN).

EDWARD R. MURROW:

In Viet Nam, an infant nation which has known foreign domination and the ravages of communist civil war, Miss Anderson, on a Sunday morning, prayed, and with an organ several centuries old, sang "Let My People Go."

(MISS ANDERSON SINGS):

When Israel was in Egypt land, Let my people go.
Oppressed so hard they could not stand, Let my people go!
Go down, Moses, WAy down in Egypt land; Tell old Pharoah,
To let my people go!

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Miss Anderson is a Christian but she is as much at home in a Beddhist Meditation Temple as she is in an Israeli Synagogue or a Moslem Mosque. This was a conversation in Rangoon with Daw Mya Sein, a Buddhist scholar.

SEIN: Have you visited any Centers like this before?

ANDERSON: No, I have not.

SEIN: Well, as far as we are concerned, you know, as Buddhists - the Buddha made no distinction at all between whether a person is rich or whether he's poor; whether he belongs in the same caste or that caste, and in one of his sermons, you know, when he was talking about outcasts, he said - "You are not born an outcast just as the way you are not born a Brahman high class." He said - "It is by your deeds that you become an outcast or by your deeds that you become a Brahman.

ANDERSON: And whether you call it one faith or another isn't too terribly important, I think, if we are striving, all of us, to do the very best that is in us to do.

jsh

SEIN: Yes. That is how we feel also. After all it is not outward appearances that is religion or of the mind.

ANDERSON: We do a spiritual that's called -"Oh, What a Beautiful City - Twelve Gates to the City. Hallelujah," and this is one of the songs of my people which tells again of what he hopes for in the Land to which he will go after his labors here are over -where he will be able to have the things that he hoped for here, or the things that mean to him the ultimate.

SEIN: Do you find now in traveling around that this feeling of equality, the feeling that as you say all people can enter the Gates is really becoming more and more accepted in the world? I mean, that nations, for instance, which -- which used to be governed by others are emerging as new nations - this idea that every one has a right or has it in him to enter the Gates - the Twelve Gates, as you say, into the Beautiful City.

ANDERSON: Yes.

SEIN: Do you find that sort of ...?

cg

ANDERSON: I do find it for this reason. I think that many people knew within themselves what they felt were right for them. It is probably the fulfillment to them of many of their prayers that the --we might call them larger nations, or other people have recognized the fact that there are people who are believers, and that they are as important as others. And I think no matter how small you are, how insignificant you may feel, you have in yourself a religion or a belief which makes you great. Have you found too that the fellow can give his all if he feels that he belongs?

SEIN: I think think this sense of belonging is a feeling that most people want to have;otherwise, you find you are outside a thing and you think you can't achieve what you--- you feel you could, because no one would recognize you. You don't belong to anything.

ANDERSON: It is very important. It's been my experience on this trip, the little that one has been able to know of the people of the different countries, that they seek, too, to be great in one way or another.

SEIN: Miss Anderson, why do you use "one does" and "we do" instead of using"I"?

bg

ANDERSON: Possibly because one realizes the longer one lives, that there is no particular thing that you can do alone. With the execution of the work that we do there are many people - those who wrote the music those who made the pianos on which the accompanist plays, the accompanist who actually lends support to the performance. To go out without any of these things, to stand on your own, even the voice, even the breath, even the everything, the motion that you have, to go to a platform to perform, it's not of your doing. So the "I" in it is very small, after all.

bg

EDWARD R. MURROW

Troupes of Communist entertainers have blanketed Asia with their propaganda. During the past year the tiny Republic of Burma has had art and dance troupes from both Russia and China, but all the people of the United States sent Miss Anderson to represent them, and her performance the evening of October nineteenth will long be remembered.

(MISS ANDERSON SINGS:)

There's no hidin' place down there; there's no hidin' place down there. Oh, I went to the rock to hide my face; the rock creed out no hidin' place. No hidin' place down there.
Oh, the rock cried I'm burnin' too - oh, the rock cried I'm burnin' too.
Oh, the rock cried out I'm burning too
I want to go to heaven as well as you
There's no hidin' place down there.
Oh, the sinner' man he gambled and fell
Oh, the sinner' man he gambled and fell
Oh, the sinner' man gambled, he gambled and fell
Now he wanted to go to heaven but he had to go to _____
There's no hidin' place down there.
(APPLAUSE. AUDIENCE STANDS AND APPLAUDS. MISS ANDERSON BOWS)

rt

EDWARD R. MURROW

Among the backstage admirers was the Prime Minister.

U NU: Miss Anderson, your performance, tonight is a very rare combination of good voice, good technique, and good dramatic acting. The beauty and charm of your mind are fully expressed in the pair of your dazzling eyes and your child-like lips. I wish you every success. It is a great plaasure to meet you.

ANDERSON: Thank you so very much. It was a joy to be here.

U NU: Yes.

ANDERSON: It was a great, great joy.

U NU: Next time when you come, please come during cold season.

ANDERSON: I know I shall enjoy it.

U NU: Yes. Our warm weather will tire you out very much.

EDWARD R. MURROW

But it wasn't all smiles and compliments and every American who travels abroad is likely to be reminded of Little Rock.

INTERPRETER: Miss Anderson, would you like to sing to Governor Faubus in Little Rock?

ANDERSON: If it could help at all, I should be very delighted to. If Governor Faubus would be in the frame of mind to accept it for what it is; for what he could get from it, I would be very delighted to do it.

rt

INTERPRETER: Now, since you are accepted as one of the really greats, have you any thought for promoting more understanding between the people?

ANDERSON: It is my honest belief that to contribute to a cause, to the betterment of a cause, you can do it best in the medium through which you express yourself most easily. There are some people who are speakers. I am not. If I should choose to feel that I can help to make a situation better by speaking, that is already out of my medium. For instance, I could not hope to write as well as you. Your pen would mean more to your people than your singing might mean, and, therefore, my singing might mean more to my people than my pen would mean.

rt

EDWARD R. MURROW:

The newest nation on earth is the Federation of Malaya, the southern part of the peninsula which extends from the Asian Mainland down into the Strait of Malacca. It is a melting pot of Chinese, Indians, Malayans and Eurasians. In the capital city of Kuala Lumpur, the Chinese language newspaper, in reviewing her concert, pointed out that when Miss Anderson sang the Malayan National Anthem, it marked the first rendition of the song by a visiting artist and was "a mark of deep respect for the new born nation."

MARIAN ANDERSON:

Ladies and gentlemen, I am especially glad to be here in Kuala Lumpur tonight and to welcome this new nation by singing your National Anthem.

(APPLAUSE - AUDIENCE STANDS - MISS ANDERSON SINGS THE MALAYAN NATIONAL ANTHEM -)

EDWARD R. MURROW:

In her book, Miss Anderson speaks of the future and says some day she might like to try something other than the classics and spirituals. Perhaps something from Rodgers and Hammerstein. In a Kuala Lumpur school, on the very day that the Malayan flag was being raised in the United Nations, she made her debut with a song from "South Pacific."

ag

MARIAN ANDERSON

Good morning, boys. It is a distinct pleasure to be here this morning and to greet you in this close fashion. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that some of you who sit here today will have the destiny of this country in your hands, and it is so very important that you do not let little things - things like hate and fear destroy you, restrict you from being the kind of big person that you could be, and I might bring to your attention that hate and fear are two things with which babies are not born, and I have this morning a song which epitomizes this statement.

(MISS ANDERSON SINGS):

You've got to be taught to hate and fear
You've got to be taught from year to year
It's got to be drummed in your dear little ear
You've got to be carefully taught
You've got to be taught to be afraid
Of people whose eyes are oddly made
And people whose skin is a different shade
You've got to be carefully taught.
You've got to be taught before it's too late
Before you are six or seven or eight
To hate all the people your relatives hate
You've got to be carefully taught.
You've got to be carefully taught.
You've got to be taught before it's too late
Before you are six or seven or eight
To hate all the people your relatives hate
You've got to be carefully taught
You've got to be carefully taught.

(APPLAUSE - MISS ANDERSON BOWS).

ag

EDWARD R. MURROW:

Miss Anderson concluded her trip in Pakistan and India toward which a major part of the Soviet cultural program has been directed. Gunnar H Alfred Gruenther, just recently returned from India and concerned about the effects of this Russian propaganda, says we need more Marian Andersons. He said her effect was inspiring and called her our secret weapon. She was a sellout everywhere and the Indian press called her - "Our Fair Lady. The big night had to do with some Indian musicians and some western music - but let Miss Anderson tell you about it.

MARIAN ANDERSON

The music of India is most interesting. This highly developed and cultivated art has resisted all foreign influence and thereby retained its purity and vigor. One wishes there were more time to study it. The main emphasis is on melody and improvisation rather than harmony as in our western music. The basic form is Raga which is based on various combinations of the seven notes, each divided into its sharp and flat positions. Half tones and quarter tones are [illegible]

[illegible] months ago, one did not dream that we would be singing with [illegible] musicians but last July we received a communication through [illegible] NTA people that there was a newly formed Western Symphony [illegible] Bombay and that they would like to accompany us if we could send them one of our scores for them to work on.

ag

We were delighted and several pounds of western music went eastward by mail. When we arrived in Bombay on the twelfth of November, we discovered that the rehearsing was still going on and we were expected. As far as we know, this is the only symphony orchestra between Tokyo and Tel Aviv, and it is one that we will remember with much fondness always. The conductor, Mr. Da Silva, is a lawyer from Goa, and the string section is made up of clerks, civil servants and housewives, teachers and four doctors. The percussionist is an able-bodied seaman and a most handsome Sikh. The entire woodwind and brass sections come from the Indian Navy, augmented by several policemen. There was no harp or English horn because these instruments simply do not exist in India, where all western instruments are difficult to come by. We rehearsed part of one night and much of the next day with the orchestra and gave the concert that same evening. It is now my very great honor to present to my fellow Americans the Bombay City Orchestra in "Mon Coeur" from Samson and Delilah by Saint-Saens. (MISS ANDERSON SINGS:"MON COEUR" IN FRENCH. THE AUDIENCE APPLAUDS. MISS ANDERSON BOWS, SHAKES HANDS WITH THE CONDUCTOR, AND BOWS AGAIN):

EDWARD R. MURROW:

The Lady from Philadelphia will continue immediately after this word from the people who are sponsoring this program, International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation. Now, here is the President of I.T. & T., General Edmund H. Leavey.

GENERAL EDMUND H. LEAVEY:

Good evening, ladies and gentlemen. You saw earlier in this program some of the things that our company is doing in the field of electronics and communications. I think it is not too much to say that we are constantly discovering new horizons which to us are never-ending.

ag

GENERAL EDMUND H. LEAVEY:

We make radio tubes and transmitters which give wings to words, and as you have just heard, wings to song. We're the pioneers in over-the-horizon radio which promises soon to link the entire earth in a vast television network. We make, and in some places operate, telephone and cable systems without which modern life and modern industry could not long survive. I hope that these few examples will have shown you that what we at the I.T.T. are doing is not merely a far-flung series of operations in the communications field, in manufacturing and research, but is truly one of the most successful international cooperative ventures that the world has seen. There are a hundred and twenty-eight thousand of us engaged throughout the world in working together in various countries to carry on these ventures, and when I tell you that some of our foreign companies -- some of those situated in Europe, for example, have recently celebrated their fiftieth, and in one case their seventy-fifth anniversaries, I am sure you will again agree that trade is a two-way street. Indeed, it seems to us that the critical problem which faces mankind today is whether man can learn to get along with man, and whether the means of communication which we have today can serve mankind to interpret our common hopes and our common aspirations. Communications is our business. It seems to us that in establishing communications with the people of Asia, Miss Anderson has done a useful and very important job. It is for that reason that we at the I.T.&T. are proud to sponsor this program, and now let us return to Miss Anderson.

jsh

EDWARD R. MURROW:

There were news conferences and interviews everywhere and because Miss Anderson was a special sort of an American, the questions asked were of a special kind of interest to Asians. They ranged all the way from atom bombs to baseball to the Lincoln Memorial incident of 1939. Miss Anderson was once barred from singing in Washington's Constitution Hall, and the United States government then made the Lincoln Memorial available for her concert. This conversation was at the All-India Radio Station in New Delhi, and the interviewer is Mrs. Tara Ali Baig, author and commentator.

MRS. BAIG: In reading your autobiography, I was very struck by many things that had happened in your career. Of course, the very celebrated one - the episode at the Lincoln Memorial. You have been a trailblazer in many things, and you undoubtedly did act as a symbol on that occasion. Is that correct?

ANDERSON: Well, I suppose one was a symbol on that particular occasion but you know one talked very little about the affair in Washington that happened at that particular time, because some of the people involved were not perhaps quite well acquainted with conditions, with a particular thing. There are some times that we are so interested in what we think and how we feel, we take upon ourselves the--- the thing of answering for other people, the responsibility of other people, without having first thought out the thing, without being well enough acquainted with it, only to find later on that these things are absolutely not necessary to have been done. I had no bitterness and I have no bitterness now.

MRS. BAIG: I'm sure you don't.

ANDERSON: Because we look for bigger things.

MRS. BAIG: Of course.

ANDERSON: And if you are all right on the inside you don't have to worry about things like that. They will eventually take care of themselves, and whatever unfortunate thing comes, it might halt it for a little while, but there is a divine pattern and there is no one person who can stop it.

MRS. BAIG: I can understand your having no bitterness. I think that what we are always up against in this world is the prejudices of the small people. It's hard for me, personally, to think in terms of the reasons why those prejudices existed, because it's hard for me to think in terms of people being different because they are brown, or what the color of their skin is, seems so irrelevant.

ANDERSON: Yes.

MRS. BAIG: But there is -- also the prejudices do remain. We know they're isolated to certain areas and sectors but -- and that is why again I asked you the question earlier - what you meant by "my people".

ANDERSON: Yes.

rt

MRS. BAIG: I had the impression that you were speaking then of the colored peoples of the United States.

ANDERSON: Naturally when one speaks of "my people" you think first of the colored people in the United States. Now, I might say this - all of the negroes in the United States are not relegated to a particular area --

MRS. BAIG: Oh.

ANDERSON: Not at all. There are some who own their own homes, many of them, and they are things of beauty to behold. There are some who have gone into neighborhoods that have been a little bit run down, and they have done excellent things with those neighborhoods, and it is a joy to go in and look. There are areas where my people are naturally in the very unpleasant places. There are those with whom or about whom we are very concerned, because it is so true that no matter how big a nation is, it is no stronger than its weakest people, and as long as you keep a person down, some part of you has to be down there to hold him down, so it means you cannot soar as you might otherwise. Therefore, regardless of how small the negro may be in whatever area, the whole of our nation is dependent on what is done for the little fellow, dependent sometimes on his very life.

(MORE)

ANDERSON: (CONT) The fact that we were able to come over for the State Department and are thrilled beyond words with the honor and the opportunity, gives us as there certainly must be in the hearts of many negroes who may not see the light of day, so to speak, an opportunity to speak for the only land that we know. If we were not in America, many of us might still be in Africa, some of us might be happier, some of us wouldn't be. I know nothing of Africa. I haven't been there so my land and my country and my allegiance is with America.

MRS. BAIG: That leads me to a very fundamental question. I think that in everybody's life they have difficulties and crossroads, and there is a basic faith that they come back to. I'd like you to tell me, if you can, what would be that basic faith that you come back to.

ANDERSON: And when we speak of words I would like to say to you that I have a most wonderful mother, and her philosophy has been that on which my sisters and I have tried to build our lives. Mother is a believer and the three of her children are also believers. It is so necessary in anything that we do, not to feel too complete because you're obliged to come, regardless whether you like it or not, to your extremity. You cannot leave this world at that point. You've got to see whatever it is through to the end, and although there are many people who seek this help only in extremity, it is nice to be acquainted with it through your whole life, and that is what my mother has taught us,

(MORE)

rt

ANDERSON: (CONT) It gives you a peace of mind. It gives you an understanding of your fellow men, even though in some instances, they behave so poorly, and you know that if the Supreme Being were not a just one, the world should long ago have come to an end, and, therefore, when things happen along the way, which might pull one up rather sharply, through disappointment, you think on your faith, and you go back, so to speak, to the well to be replenished.

MRS. BAIG: Is it -- does it sum it up to say -to see it through to the end?

ANDERSON: Yes, and you know, there --- there is a negro spiritual called (MISS ANDERSON SINGS) "I Open My Mouth to the Lord and I Never Will Turn Back. I will go. I shall go to see what the end will be." And it sums up so much of what so many people need to feel who don't find all of these wonderful things around them. I will go and I shall go to see what the end will be - why? Because I believe in what I find at the end.

rt

Marian Anderson

MARIAN ANDERSON
WALDORF ASTORIA, SERT ROOM

TERRIBLY SORRY TO MISS TODAY'S OCCASION STOP ONLY UNUSUALLY INSENSITIVE DOCTOR PREVENTS MY ATTENDANCE.

REGARDS

ED MURROW

514-70
gw
11-14-60

National Women's Division

American Friends of the Hebrew University, Inc.

11 East 69th Street • New York 21, N. Y. • YUkon 8-8400

MRS. LOUIS S. GIMBEL, JR.
President
MRS. JULIUS FLIGELMAN
Vice-President
MRS. SAMUEL SHUMAN
Secretary
MRS. CHARLES GOODMAN
Treasurer

MRS. ALBERT H. ALLEN
President L.A. Women's Div.
MRS. JULIUS P. BERKE
President Ill. Women's Div.
MRS. MORTON BLITSTEIN
MRS. ALBERT FARBER
President Pa. Women's Div.
MRS. ABRAHAM FINKELSTEIN
MRS. ANNA GOURRICH
MRS. SAMUEL H. LANDY
MRS. HARRY E. LEVIN
MRS. LOUIS E. LEVINTHAL
MRS. OSKAR K. RABINOWICZ
MRS. PETER R. ROSENBLATT
N. Y. State Chairman Jr. Comm.
MRS. MILTON H. RUBIN
MRS. DAGOBERT D. RUNES
MRS. MORSE J. SHAPIRO
President Calif. Women's Div.
MRS. ABRAHAM F. WECHSLER
President N. Y. State Women's Div.
MRS. ANNE PESHKIN
Executive Director
SARA ARTSON
Middle West Regional Director
MRS. GRETTA HESS
West Coast Regional Director

National Officers, American Friends of the Hebrew University, Inc.
PHILIP M. KLUTZNICK
President
DANIEL G. ROSS
Chairman of the Board
JUSTICE FELIX FRANKFURTER
DR. ISRAEL S. WECHSLER
Honorary Presidents
VICTOR M. CARTER
SUNDEL DONIGER
LEO GUZIK
SAMUEL H. LANDY
PHILIP W. LOWN
JAMES MARSHALL
LEONARD RATNER
DR. LEO G. RIGLER
CHARLES J. ROSENBLOOM
NATHAN H. SCHWARTZ
BENJAMIN E. SWIG
IRVING WARSHAW
PHILIP G. WHITMAN
Vice-Presidents
ABRAHAM SHAMOS
Secretary
BENJAMIN P. GOLDMAN
Assistant Secretary
JOSEPH M. MAZER
Treasurer
HENRY W. STEINGARTEN
Assistant Treasurer
PROF. OSCAR I. JANOWSKY
Chairman, Academic Council
PROF. JOSEPH KAPLAN
Assoc. Chairman, Academic Council
PROF. H. J. ETTLINGER
Assoc. Chairman, Academic Council
PROF. LEO STRAUSS
Assoc. Chairman, Academic Council
HON. HERBERT H. LEHMAN
Chairman, National Council
PROF. MILTON HANDLER
Chairman, Bequests and Legacies
MICHAEL M. NISSELSON
Assistant to the President

October 25, 1960.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Mrs. Gimbel and I are delighted that you have accepted our invitation to be a dais guest at our Eighth Annual "Woman of the Year" Luncheon when Miss Marian Anderson will be presented with the "Woman of the Year" Award, by Governor Nelson E. Rockefeller.

I am enclosing your ticket herewith, and look forward to seeing you at the Cocktail Reception at 12 noon in the Empire Room.

The Luncheon itself, will take place in the Sert Room, following the Reception in the Empire Room, which is across the lobby.

With kind regards and my very best wishes,

Cordially

Sylvia Picker

Mrs. Eugene Picker
Eighth Annual "Woman of the Year"
Chairman
Women's Division

SP/mb

enc.

NATIONAL BOARD

Herbert Abeles, New York, N. Y.
Benjamin Algase, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Bernard J. Alpers, Philadelphia, Pa.
Col. Jacob M. Arvey, Chicago, Ill.
Prof. Salo W. Baron, New York, N. Y.
Morris Batzer, Atlantic City, N. J.
Lionel R. Bauman, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Julius P. Berke, Chicago, Ill.
Robert M. Bernstein, Philadelphia, Pa.
Albert M. Bershad, Philadelphia, Pa.
Jacob Blaustein, Baltimore, Md.
David Borowitz, Chicago, Ill.
Judge Irving R. Brand, Minneapolis, Minn.
Max Bressler, Chicago, Ill.
Myron Buchsbaum, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Harry Cahane, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Abram Cohen, Philadelphia, Pa.
Mrs. Frank Cohen, New York, N. Y.
Lewis D. Cole, Louisville, Ky.
Herman Dana, Boston, Mass.
Samuel H. Daroff, Philadelphia, Pa.
Morris R. DeWoskin, Chicago, Ill.
Judge David Diamond, Buffalo, N. Y.
Harold Drimmer, New York, N. Y.
Prof. Clarence W. Efroymson, Indianapolis, Ind.
Judge Henry Ellenbogen, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Louis Elow, New York, N. Y.
Milton Faber, Chicago, Ill.
Mrs. Albert Farber, Philadelphia, Pa.
Charles E. Feinberg, Detroit, Mich.
Morris E. Feiwell, Chicago, Ill.
Sol Fierer, New York, N. Y.
Samuel Fine, New York, N. Y.
Simon Fisher, Miami, Fla.
Julius Fligelman, Los Angeles, Cal.
Dr. Miriam Freund, New York, N. Y.
Samuel A. Fryer, Los Angeles, Cal.
Dr. John H. Garlock, New York, N. Y.
Joshua B. Glasser, Chicago, Ill.
Louis J. Glickman, New York, N. Y.
David Glasser, Johnstown, Pa.
Dr. Israel Goldstein, New York, N. Y.
Abraham Goodman, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. B. A. Goodman, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Charles Goodman, New York, N. Y.
Sylvan Gotshal, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Bernard S. Gould, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. Anna Gourrich, Los Angeles, Cal.
Albert M. Greenfield, Philadelphia, Pa.
Dr. Bernard E. Gruber, New York, N. Y.
Ira Guilden, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Rose Halprin, New York, N. Y.
Max Hirsch, Cincinnati, Ohio
Jacob R. Holtzmann, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Charles Hymes, Minneapolis, Minn.
Dr. Julius Jarcho, New York, N. Y.
Dr. David J. Kaliski, Miami Beach, Fla.
Label A. Katz, New Orleans, La.
Prof. Joseph Kaplan, Los Angeles, Cal.
Dr. Louis L. Kaplan, Baltimore, Md.
Samuel N. Katzin, Chicago, Ill.
Daniel E. Koshland, San Francisco, Cal.
Charles Krown, Los Angeles, Cal.
Moses A. Leavitt, New York, N. Y.
Judge Theodore Levin, Detroit, Mich.
Hon. Louis E. Levinthal, Philadelphia, Pa.
Lester S. Levy, Baltimore, Md.
Joseph S. Lindemann, New York, N. Y.
Samuel M. Melton, Columbus, Ohio
Joseph Meyerhoff, Baltimore, Md.
Mrs. Jakob Michael, New York, N. Y.
David N. Myers, Cleveland, Ohio
Irving S. Norry, Rochester, N. Y.
I. M. Ostrum, Philadelphia, Pa.
Dr. Eugene V. Parsonnet, Newark, N. J.
Dr. Nathan A. Perilman, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. David de Sola Pool, New York, N. Y.
Paul D. Post, Milwaukee, Wis.
Mrs. William Prince, New York, N. Y.
Oskar K. Rabinowicz, Scarsdale, N. Y.
Joseph Rapkin, Milwaukee, Wis.
Dr. Julius M. Rogoff, Rowayton, Conn.
Mrs. Samuel J. Rosensohn, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Oida C. Rubin, Miami, Fla.
Sol Sacks, Akron, Ohio
Herbert Salzman, New York, N. Y.
Samuel T. Sapiro, Miami, Fla.
Sol Satinsky, Philadelphia, Pa.
Morris L. Schaver, Detroit, Mich.
Moses Schonfeld, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Isaac Schour, Chicago, Ill.
Alan E. Schwartz, Detroit, Mich.
Dr. Herman Seidel, Baltimore, Md.
Samuel B. Seidel, New York, N. Y.
J. H. Seidelman, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Harry M. Seldin, New York, N. Y.
J. R. Sensibar, Chicago, Ill.
Herbert S. Shapiro, Miami Beach, Fla.
Mrs. Morse J. Shapiro, Los Angeles, Cal.
A. Shiffman, Detroit, Mich.
Mrs. Rebecca Shulman, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Samuel Shuman, Philadelphia, Pa.
Sidney J. Silberman, New York, N. Y.
Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, Cleveland, Ohio
Joseph L. Simon, New York, N. Y.
Leonard N. Simons, Detroit, Mich.
Harry Starr, New York, N. Y.
Dewey D. Stone, Brockton, Mass.
Bernard Stroyman, Indianapolis, Ind.
Mark Sugarman, So. Coatesville, Pa.
Harry S. Sylk, Philadelphia, Pa.
Edward Toledano, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Selman A. Waksman, New Brunswick, N. J.
Abe D. Waldauer, Memphis, Tenn.
Mrs. Abraham F. Wechsler, New York, N. Y.
Dr. David Wechsler, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Israel S. Wechsler, New York, N. Y.
Ralph Wechsler, Harrison, N. J.
Alan G. Weiler, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Harold M. Weinberg, New York, N. Y.
Joseph L. Weiner, New York, N. Y.
Herman Wiener, Toledo, Ohio
Dr. Joseph W. Wunsch, Brooklyn, N. Y.

NATIONAL COUNCIL

Elmer D. Abramson, St. Louis, Mo.
Rabbi Morris Adler, Detroit, Mich.
Albert H. Allen, Beverly Hills, Cal.
Dr. Moses H. Barron, Minneapolis, Minn.
Sidney Barrows, Minneapolis, Minn.
Dr. Samuel Belkin, New York, N. Y.
Hanon Berger, Rochester, N. Y.
Walter H. Bieringer, Chestnut Hill, Mass.
Harold Bordman, Detroit, Mich.
Louis H. Boyar, Los Angeles, Cal.
Mrs. Alexander Brailove, Elizabeth, N. J.
Edward Branston, Jr., San Francisco, Cal.
Morris Brecher, New York, N. Y.
Rabbi Isadore Breslau, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. Ruth Hagy Brod, New York, N. Y.
Charles Brown, Beverly Hills, Cal.
M. Ronald Brukenfeld, New York, N. Y.
Hon. Emanuel Celler, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Charles Charcowsky, Miami Beach, Fla.
Judge David Coleman, Los Angeles, Cal.
Benjamin Cooper, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Leo M. Davidoff, New York, N. Y.
Norman Davis, Seattle, Wash.
Mrs. Frederick S. DeBeer, Albany, N. Y.
David Dubinsky, New York, N. Y.
Melvin Dubinsky, St. Louis, Mo.
Gabriel Dunkleman, Chicago, Ill.
Dr. Joseph Dunner, Grinnell, Iowa
Dr. Harry Eagle, Bethesda, Md.
Aaron D. Endler, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Norbert Enzer, Milwaukee, Wis.
Jacob Feldman, Dallas, Texas
Dr. Benjamin Felson, Cincinnati, Ohio
Dr. Louis Finkelsten, New York, N. Y.
Joseph E. Fisher, Canton, Ohio
Harry Fleisher, Watertown, Conn.
F. Julius Fohs, Houston, Texas
Leopold Freudberg, Washington, D. C.
Dr. Michael Frost, Passaic, N. J.
Harold B. Fuerstenberg, Chicago, Ill.
Samuel Genel, Philadelphia, Pa.
Dr. Ivan Gilbert, Columbus, Ohio
L. L. Gildesgame, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Nelson Glueck, Cincinnati, Ohio
Dr. Nahum Goldmann, New York, N. Y.
Judge Nathaniel L. Goldstein, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Philip Gottlieb, Coral Gables, Fla.
Ike Greenberg, Torrance, Cal.
Samuel Hausman, New York, N. Y.
Bernhart Hoffman, New Haven, Conn.
Mrs. Hal Horne, New York, N. Y.
Senator Jacob K. Javits, New York, N. Y.
Harry A. Kangesser, Cleveland, Ohio
Nathaniel P. Kann, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Dr. Leon H. Keyserling, Washington, D. C.
Mrs. J. Harry Kulakofsky, Omaha, Neb.
Herbert Landsberger, Ridgefield, Conn.
Fred Lazarus, Jr., Cincinnati, Ohio
Mortimer C. Lebowitz, Washington, D. C.
Atty. Gen. Louis J. Lefkowitz, New York, N. Y.
Maurice Levinson, Utica, N. Y.
Jack Liebowitz, New York, N. Y.
Benedict Lubell, Tulsa, Okla.
Hon. Isador Lubin, Albany, N. Y.
Sol Luckman, Cincinnati, Ohio
David H. Lurie, Utica, N. Y.
Conrad Magrish, Cincinnati, Ohio
Dr. Julius Mark, New York, N. Y.
Harry Markson, Utica, N. Y.
Ben J. Massell, Atlanta, Ga.
Mortimer May, Nashville, Tenn.
Dr. Abraham Melamed, Milwaukee, Wis.
Charles Messer, Cincinnati, Ohio
Dr. Paul Meyer, Columbus, Ohio
Dr. Matthew T. Moore, Philadelphia, Pa.
Stanley C. Myers, Coral Gables, Fla.
Robert R. Nathan, Washington, D. C.
Dr. Abraham A. Neuman, Philadelphia, Pa.
Max Ogust, New York, N. Y.
Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, Princeton, N. J.
Judge Isaac Pacht, Los Angeles, Cal.
Dr. Kurt Peiser, Miami Beach, Fla.
Samuel Pensick, Beverly Hills, Cal.
Jacob S. Potofsky, New York, N. Y.
David Provus, Miami Beach, Fla.
Joseph Pulvermacher, New York, N. Y.
Ralph Robbins, Southbridge, Mass.
Harry Rosenbaum, Stamford, Conn.
Edwin Rosenberg, New York, N. Y.
James N. Rosenberg, New York, N. Y.
Charles Rosengarten, Waterbury, Conn.
Lewis J. Ruskin, Scottsdale, Arizona
Judge Goodman A. Sarachan, Rochester, N. Y.
Rabbi Max Schenk, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Isaac Schine, Bridgeport, Conn.
Samuel S. Schneierson, New York, N. Y.
Harry A. Schwartz, Valley Falls, R. I.
Dr. Joseph J. Schwartz, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. Dora Schwebel, Youngstown, Ohio
Murray Seasongood, Cincinnati, Ohio
Louis Segal, New York, N. Y.
H. Robert Shampaine, St. Louis, Mo.
Ezra Shapiro, Cleveland, Ohio
Charles H. Silver, New York, N. Y.
Rabbi Albert G. Silverman, Holliswood, N. Y.
Hon. Simon E. Sobeloff, Baltimore, Md.
Rudolf G. Sonneborn, New York, N. Y.
Michael A. Stavitsky, Newark, N. J.
Elder H. Stein, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Alan M. Stroock, New York, N. Y.
Max Targ, Chicago, Ill.
Howard L. Tiger, South Orange, N. J.
Benjamin Ulin, Boston, Mass.
Milton M. Unger, Newark, N. J.
Edward M. M. Warburg, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Joseph Weidberg, Miami Beach, Fla.
J. D. Weiler, New York, N. Y.
Lewis Weiner, New York, N. Y.
Joseph Weingarten, Houston, Texas
Martin Z. Wiener, Toledo, Ohio
Abner A. Wolf, Detroit, Mich.
Prof. Louis C. Zucker, Salt Lake City, Utah.

OFFICERS

THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY of Jerusalem

DR. GEORGE S. WISE
Chairman, Board of Governors

DANIEL AUSTER
PROF. NORMAN BENTWICH
ALLAN BRONFMAN
DR. ALEC LERNER
JOSEPH M. MAZER
S. MIRON
DANIEL G. ROSS
DR. ISRAEL S. WECHSLER
Deputy Chairman, Board of Governors

BERNARD CHERRICK
Executive Vice-Chairman, Board of Governors

PRESIDENT YITZHAK BEN-ZVI
Honorary President

PROF. BENJAMIN MAZAR
President

PROF. ARYEH DVORETZKY
Vice-President

YAIR ARAN
Administrator

American Friends of the Hebrew University, Inc.

11 East 69th Street • New York 21, N. Y. • YUkon 8-8400

September 26, 1960

PHILIP M. KLUTZNICK
President

DANIEL G. ROSS
Chairman of the Board

JUSTICE FELIX FRANKFURTER
DR. ISRAEL S. WECHSLER
Honorary Presidents

VICTOR M. CARTER
SUNDEL DONIGER
LEO GUZIK
SAMUEL H. LANDY
PHILIP W. LOWN
JAMES MARSHALL
LEONARD RATNER
DR. LEO G. RIGLER
CHARLES J. ROSENBLOOM
NATHAN H. SCHWARTZ
BENJAMIN H. SWIG
IRVING WARSHAW
PHILIP G. WHITMAN
Vice-Presidents

ABRAHAM SHAMOS
Secretary

BENJAMIN P. GOLDMAN
Assistant Secretary

JOSEPH M. MAZER
Treasurer

HENRY W. STEINGARTEN
Assistant Treasurer

PROF. OSCAR I. JANOWSKY
Chairman, Academic Council

HON. HERBERT H. LEHMAN
Chairman, National Council

MRS. LOUIS S. GIMBEL, JR.
President, Women's Division

MRS. JULIUS FLIGELMAN
Vice-President, Women's Division

PROF. MILTON HANDLER
Chairman, Gifts and Legacies

MICHAEL M. NISSELSON
Assistant to the President

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
580 Park Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It is with a sense of honor and pride that I inform you that Miss Marian Anderson, distinguished concert artist and good-will ambassador, will be presented with our Eighth Annual "Woman of the Year" Award on Monday, November 14, at 12:30 o'clock in the Sert Room at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

It gives me great pleasure to invite you, as a distinguished member of our community, to be honored guest on the dais of this jubilant occasion, and help pay tribute to this great lady.

To give the dais guests an opportunity to meet Miss Anderson, prior to the Luncheon a Cocktail Reception will be held in her honor at noon, on the terrace, adjacent to the Sert Roon.

The "Woman of the Year" Luncheon highlights our activities dedicated to the support of the Jewish National and University Library on the campus of the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. On this occasion we will announce that the "United Nations Reading Room", in the Library, will be named in Miss Anderson's honor.

As a dais guest, you will join the leading members of our community, both national and international, as well as those who have served with Miss Anderson in related fields.

Mrs. Louis S. Gimbel, Jr., our National President, and I, look forward to greeting you personally.

Sincerely yours

Sylvia Picker

Mrs. Eugene Picker
Eighth Annual "Woman of the Year"
Chairman
Women's Division

SP/sng

R.S.V.P.
YU. 8-8400
Ext., 11, 37, 38

373

Women's Division

American Friends of the Hebrew University

Proudly announces the presentation of its

"Woman of the Year" Award

to

Marian Anderson

and cordially invites you to the

Eighth Annual "Woman of the Year"

Luncheon

Monday, November 14, 1960

twelve-thirty o'clock

Waldorf-Astoria — Sert Room

Presentation of Scroll: Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller

Guest Speaker: His Excellency, Michael Comay

Permanent Representative of Israel to the United Nations

R.S.V.P. Covert $10.00

Homage To A Great Lady

IN paying tribute to Marian Anderson as "Woman Of The Year," we honor an outstanding woman and tireless ambassador of America whose supreme artistry has brought joy and solace to millions.

Her great and rare talent, already indelibly inscribed in the annals of music, has succeeded in creating new bonds of friendship and understanding for our country among the rulers and peoples of the world.

We are particularly proud to salute her and her many humanitarian endeavors as symbolic of the cultural ideals espoused by the Hebrew University of Jerusalem.

MRS. LOUIS S. GIMBEL, JR.
National President

WOMEN'S DIVISION, AMERICAN FRIENDS OF THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY

MRS. LOUIS S. GIMBEL, JR.
President, National Women's Division

MRS. ABRAHAM F. WECHSLER
New York State President

MRS. EUGENE PICKER*
Chairman, Eighth Annual Luncheon

COMMITTEE

Miss Dale Adrienne
Mrs. Benjamin Algase
Mrs. Kermit Axel
Mrs. Lester Bachner*
Mrs. Eric Berger
Mrs. Arnold Bernstein
Mrs. S. Daniel Blum*
Mrs. Clarice Blumenthal
Mrs. Evelyn S. Brand
Mrs. Jacqueline Braun
Miss Susan Brecher*
Mrs. Joseph H. Breindel*
Mrs. Israel B. Brodie
Mrs. Jerome Brody*
Mrs. Charlotte Bunkin
Mrs. Lester Canton
Mrs. Celia Chenkin
Mrs. David Cogan
Mrs. Sidney E. Cohn
Mrs. Herman Cooper*
Mrs. Louis Elow
Mrs. Katherine F. Falk
Mrs. David Farber*
Mrs. Mitchell Salem Fisher
Mrs. Kuno Fleischer*
Mrs. Julius Fox
Mrs. Irving Friedman
Mrs. Maurice Geller
Mrs. Leon L. Gildesgame
Mrs. B. A. Goodman
Mrs. Charles Goodman*
Mrs. Milton N. Grass
Mrs. Robert Green
Mrs. Stephen Grob
Mrs. Chaim Gross
Mrs. Jennie Grossinger*
Mrs. Milton Handler
Miss Bernice Harris
Mrs. Louis Harrow
Mrs. Abraham M. Heller*
Mrs. Hal Horne
Mrs. Ralph Hyman
Mrs. Clara Josephs
Mrs. Julius Kahn
Mrs. Leah W. Kahnheimer
Mrs. Horace M. Kallen
Mrs. Alexander E. Langsom
Mrs. Abraham Lees
Mrs. Israel H. Levinthal
Mrs. Edward J. Levy
Mrs. Max Liebman*
Mrs. Leo Linder
Dr. Eva Klein Lipshutz
Mrs. Tonell Litt
Mrs. Harry Louchheim
Mrs. Cesia Lowenstein
Mrs. Harry Mandelbaum
Mrs. Bernard K. Marcus
Mrs. Clara Wollie Mayer
Mrs. Joseph M. Mazer
Mrs. Frances Miller
Miss Pauline Miller
Mrs. George Mittleman
Mrs. Sidney Norris
Mrs. Gerard Oestreicher*
Mrs. Benjamin Pershan
Mrs. David de Sola Pool
Mrs. Oskar K. Rabinowicz*
Mrs. Lawrence J. Roose
Mrs. William Rosenthal*
Mrs. Daniel G. Ross*
Miss Estelle Ross
Mrs. Milton H. Rubin*
Mrs. Dagobert D. Runes*
Mrs. Leona Gould Salmon
Mrs. William Salzman
Mrs. Bessie Sampson
Mrs. Louis Schlechter
Mrs. Arthur Schleifer*
Mrs. Nathan Schulman*
Mrs. M. Lincoln Schuster*
Mrs. Samuel B. Seidel
Mrs. Peter Seitz*
Mrs. Daisy Shapiro
Mrs. Jules Shapiro
Mrs. Mildred Simonson
Mrs. James Slater*
Mrs. Mae K. Slater*
Mrs. Meyer Soybel
Mrs. Rebekah Spitzer
Mrs. Louis Steinberg
Mrs. Arthur Szyk
Mrs. Emanuel Toder
Miss Renee Verne
Mrs. Irving Warshaw
Mrs. Harry F. Wechsler*
Mrs. Israel S. Wechsler
Mrs. Lewis Weiner
Mrs. Carl Weinkle
Mrs. Benjamin Wetzler
Mrs. Lawrence White
Mrs. Alfred Wolkenberg

Mrs. Anne Peshkin,
National Director

Directors of the New York State Women's Division*

AMERICAN FRIENDS OF THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY, INC.

OFFICERS

Philip M. Klutznick
President

Daniel G. Ross
Chairman of the Board

Justice Felix Frankfurter
Dr. Israel S. Wechsler
Honorary Presidents

Victor M. Carter
Sundel Doniger
Leo Guzik
Samuel H. Landy
Philip W. Lown
James Marshall
Leonard Ratner
Dr. Leo G. Rigler
Charles J. Rosenbloom
Nathan H. Schwartz
Benjamin H. Swig
Irving Warshaw
Philip G. Whitman
Vice-Presidents

Abraham Shamos
Secretary

Benjamin P. Goldman
Assistant Secretary

Joseph M. Mazer
Treasurer

Henry W. Steingarten
Assistant Treasurer

Prof. Oscar I. Janowsky
Chairman, Academic Council

Hon. Herbert H. Lehman
Chairman, National Council

Mrs. Louis S. Gimbel, Jr.
President, Women's Division

Mrs. Julius Fligelman
Vice-President, Women's Division

Prof. Milton Handler
Chairman, Gifts and Legacies

Michael M. Nisselson
Assistant to the President

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

Anderson, Marian
5-C-2

November 26, 1958

Miss Marian Anderson
1200 Fifth Avenue
New York, New York

WE SEND YOU OUR BEST SALUTE AND LOVE

Ed Murrow
Fred Friendly

514-70
CBS News

Sir

February 5, 1958

Dear Ed:

It is in the worst possible form to delay answering a letter from a sponsor.

I thank you for yours of January 13th and want to say that I shall always appreciate the confidence of a gambling man from Texas who took a chance on a TV show which, incidentally, gave me more personal satisfaction than anything I have done since the end of the war.

Sincerely,

Mr. Edmond H. Leavey, President
International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation
67 Broad Street
New York 4, New York

fc

INTERNATIONAL TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CORPORATION

67 BROAD STREET

EDMOND H. LEAVEY
PRESIDENT

NEW YORK 4, N.Y.

January 13, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

I have just received from Mrs. Leavey, now in Hawaii, the very thoughtful telegram which you and Fred Friendly sent me there early in January concerning the press reaction to "The Lady from Philadelphia". I had meanwhile received a telephone message from RCA giving me the gist of the message, but unfortunately I had to leave Hawaii before the typed copy of it reached me. Mrs. Leavey is still there, however, and I know derived a great deal of pleasure from reading it.

As Bill Morrell has undoubtedly told you we also received a rather substantial number of messages, practically all containing highly enthusiastic endorsement of the program. To the best of my recollection there were only three adverse ones out of two or three hundred total messages. Added to the messages which you received and which I know were almost totally commendatory, it looks as if you scored your usual smashing success with the program. I am glad that the ITT as a company and I as an individual were able to participate. You may be interested in a message which I received from one of my sisters who did not know that we were sponsoring the show or that I would have any connection with it. Her telegram ran about as follows:

> "When I saw that Ed Murrow was putting on a program featuring Marian Anderson I decided to stay home and watch my television that night, as I always do when Ed Murrow's programs are on the air. Imagine my surprise to see you in the middle of it. Even so it was a great program". (We are really a very affectionate family but cannot refrain from sometimes being witty at each others expense!)

It was a pleasure renewing our old acquaintanceship and a privilege to be with you in the program.

With best regards and best wishes,

Sincerely,

Ed

Sen

INTERNATIONAL TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CORPORATION

67 BROAD STREET

NEW YORK 4, N.Y.

EDMOND H LEAVEY
PRESIDENT

February 4, 1958

Mr William S. Paley
Chairman of the Board
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Paley:

Send copies to Murrow & Friendly

On my return from a trip outside the United States recently I found your letter of January 22nd informing me that you had sent me a film record of "The Lady from Philadelphia". The film itself also arrived and has already been shown to some of our employees who had missed the original broadcast on December 30th. I appreciate very much your thoughtfulness in sending it to us.

I feel personally, and am sure that our own employees and thousands of other people join in the feeling, that Columbia Broadcasting System, Ed Murrow and Fred Friendly, had scored a home run with the presentation. We were happy and proud to have been associated with you and them.

With best wishes and again many thanks for the film,

Sincerely,

Edmond H Leavey

stanley meyer

ED -
THOUGHT YOU WOULD BE INTERESTED -
BEST - STAN

January 3, 1958

President of I. T. and T.
67 Broadway
New York, New York

Dear Sir:

My family and I saw the Marian Anderson broadcast on Monday night over C.B.S.

Something very wise and profound seems appropriate, but only my simple congratulations seem sincere.

SM/mg

INTERNATIONAL TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CORPORATION

67 BROAD STREET

NEW YORK 4, N.Y.

EDMOND H. LEAVEY
PRESIDENT

January 16, 1958

Mr. Stanley Meyer
Four Oaks Farm
Encino, California

Dear Mr. Meyer:

I wish to express my gratitude for your very kind remarks about the "See It Now" television program of December 30. We are all proud to have had a hand in bringing Marian Anderson's tour of Southeast Asia to the public.

We are indeed gratified at the warm response accorded our efforts to focus attention on the sort of communications represented by Miss Anderson's tour.

Sincerely,

Edmond H. Leavey

Prog. Bus
Sec

January 31, 1958

Dear Mr. Cohen:

I write to say my sincere thanks for your assistance in clearing the Rogers and Hammerstein music for our Marian Anderson film.

I think in all truth we couldn't have done the program successfully without those two selections, and as you know, both Oscar and Dick gave generously of their time to counsel us on the whole project.

I thought you might like to have an LP of the sound track and I am sending you one.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Irving Cohen
70 Greenacres Avenue
Scarsdale, New York

fc

P. Bus. Sim

Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein, 2nd
488 MADISON AVENUE • NEW YORK 22 N. Y.
Telephone MUrray Hill 8-3640

January
27th
1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Oscar is in Jamaica, but I know that I take no undue liberty in writing to say that you will have his and my complete cooperation in obtaining the needed prints which you mention in your January 24th letter.

"Getting to Know You" is from THE KING AND I and "Carefully Taught" is from SOUTH PACIFIC. The motion picture rights to both these properties have been disposed of and there must be certain legal complications. I don't doubt that they can be cleared, but I imagine certain steps will have to be taken. I am sending copies of your letter and this reply to Irving Cohen, asking him to facilitate matters as quickly as possible. I am sure you will hear from him in the immediate future.

I have never heard such happy enthusiasm for any television show as there has been for "The Lady from Philadelphia". It's deeply gratifying to have been able to help in some small way and I feel sure that the ultimate good accomplished by this program will be tremendous.

Many thanks and all kindest regards to you and Fred.

Yours sincerely,

Dick.

RR L

Murrow's file

January 24, 1958

Dear Oscar and Dick:

Again, thanks from Friendly and me for what you did to help with "The Lady from Philadelphia". It is conceivably the most satisfying project we have undertaken. Your early enthusiasm and your constant constructive comments and thoughtfulness shall long be remembered.

One slight problem remains. The Urban League, and a group of schools and churches, want prints (the Urban League for an April 1st coast to coast series of rallies in honor of Miss Anderson). We are inclined to provide a 16mm print for such non-theatrical needs in our regular and normal manner, which is to allow an educational film distributor to handle this under our control. Our original music clearances, I am told, provide for such use for all the songs except "Getting to Know You" and "Carefully Taught" which were handled on a personal basis through Irving Cohen and yourselves. It is now necessary to ask you for permission to use these songs for the limited purposes described above. You can have CBS's assurances and my personal one that no theatrical use will be permitted. If you should prefer further negotiations to be conducted with Mr. Cohen, I will so direct but Fred and I did want to put the problem to you on a personal basis and we trust you will be able to help us out.

Incidentally, should either of you desire prints of the show to keep, we should be delighted to arrange same. Copies of the record album are being sent; should you desire additional albums, please let us know.

Again, thanks.

Cordially,

Edward R. Murrow

Mr. Oscar Hammerstein
Mr. Richard Rodgers
488 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

ERM/hl

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Messrs. Edward R. Murrow and Fred Friendly January 23, 1958

from: Bob Philpot

Bob Hoag asked me to send you a copy of a memo covering Mr. Shayon's review of "The Lady From Philadelphia" which has been distributed to all of our network salesmen.

R.E.P.

JI

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Network Salesmen* January 21, 1958

from: Bob Philpot cc: Messrs. Hylan, Dawson, Klayer, Hoag, Maxwell, Blair, Sterritt, Livingston, Bristol, Lethen, Aberle, Ashley, Ingersoll, Stolfi

Re: SEE IT NOW

In the current issue of "The Saturday Review" Robert Lewis Shayon reviews "The Lady From Philadelphia."

Tom Dawson wanted each of us to have a copy of these remarks to read at leisure...because here summed up so well are some of the feelings that probably you too had while watching the show.

Surely we can be proud in the Sales Department that CBS saw fit to invest in – and then broadcast – Marian Anderson's tour of Asia. It's the kind of show that helps make the network the leader among communication media.

While there's no way we know now to measure adequately the widespread influence of this broadcast, Tom suggests we use Shayon's review as a conversation piece whenever possible to tell agencies and advertisers of this kind of programming that is available from time to time as special broadcasts on CBS Televisinn.

R.E.P.

JI

*Messrs. Curl, Flaten, Hall, Harding, Lambart, Materne, Martin, Mayo, Morton, Porteous, Purves, Rastall, Schroeder, Shaker, Smith, Swats

TV AND RADIO

"The Lady from Philadelphia"

I SINCERELY hope that our State Department does not cut the commercials out of "The Lady from Philadelphia," the recent CBS-TV "See It Now" broadcast featuring Marian Anderson, the singer, when they show prints of the program in Asia. The comments of Mr. Edmond H. Leavey, president of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation, which sponsored the broadcast, and those of Edward R. Murrow, the narrator, speaking for I.T. and T., are essential to the propaganda aims of Miss Anderson's 35,000-mile, twelve-nation concert tour. Their remarks create a most favorable impression of American business. "Communication is our business," said the sponsor; then he defined the main problem of international communication today in terms of the question: "Can man get along with man?" Miss Anderson's tour was an act of affirmative communication. Mr. Murrow, noting that I.T. and T. had waived the final commercial, said: "They know that their communication can never be substituted for human communication. Miss Anderson's communication is something with which they—and we—would like to be identified."

This was television in the highest altitudes. What the "See It Now"-State Department- American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA) trio of organizers of the tour were saying, through Miss Anderson to the people of Korea, the Philippines, Vietnam, Burma, Thailand, Malaya, and India, was this: "You have been slaves to white masters from the West. Now you are your own masters, free to choose between the Communists and us. Both are prepared to radiate to you the West's industry, literacy, and material betterment. But the Communists will make you pay a price for that—a second slavery and a poverty of spiritual values. Choose the West and you will gain your freedom and dignity as well as science and technology. Marian Anderson is the image of your own future —if you follow us."

The singer never spoke this argument, of course. Her only instructions from the State Department were: "Be yourself." She gave her own message in her inspired artistry, her joy, enthusiasm, compassion, humility, and serious faith. Her music was, in turn, deep yearning, an adoration, a cry for freedom, a national anthem, a history lesson, and a Christian hymn. Her doctrine was a sense of journey, a "trampin, a tryin' to make heaven my home." It was, "Now we will do the thing in a new way. . . . There is no particular thing that you can do alone. . . . The 'I' in it is very small, after all. . . . All have a right to enter the gates. . . .One will give his all if he feels that he belongs. . . . Yes, I would sing for Governor Faubus if he were in a frame of mind to accept it for what it is. . . . Do not let hate or fear restrict you from being a big person. . . . All people seek to be great. . . . If all is right on the inside, there is a divine pattern. . . . I will go, I shall go to see what the end will be, because I believe in what I shall find at the end." This is the poetry of feeling, and I know of only one poet in America who sings this way: Carl Sandburg. The ethos of Abraham Lincoln is in his rhythms and Miss Anderson's.

The Asian response to her character and artistry was a complete propaganda triumph, to judge by the pictures and soundtrack of "See It Now." The King of Thailand had never before risen from his throne-chair to greet a distinguished visitor. In India, no visitor had ever been invited to speak at Gandhi's memorial in Old Delhi. The Prime Minister of Burma complimented her on her "good voice, technique, and acting ability," and on her "beauty and charm of mind." At Ewha University in Seoul, Korea, she was awarded an honorary degree for her "Christian service to mankind." In Bombay the tour dramatically illustrated the interpenetration of cultures when, for the first time, "a visiting artist" (Miss Anderson) sang with "the only Western symphony orchestra between Tel Aviv and Tokyo."

Less formal, but nevertheless expressing an undeniable sympathy for Miss Anderson as she greeted them and sang for them "in close fashion" were the faces in her audiences—impassive, rapt children; old men and women; Eastern cosmopolites; peasants; clerks; lawyers. These faces of Asia, photographed and edited with perception and taste, burst with startling, vivid reality upon our parochial TV consciousness, smogged and sodden with the gunsmoke and mayas of Madison Avenue and Hollywood. The United States can be proud to have had such a great lady as Miss Anderson to send forth on this tour.

There were other rewards for the "See It Now" audience here in the United States. We saw and heard a native orchestra in Bombay playing Indian music, which Miss Anderson told us "has resisted all foreign influences." We shared the thrill of an item of raw material for history when, in Kuala Lumpur, in the Federation of Malaya, citizens of the newest nation on earth heard the first singing of their national anthem by a visiting artist. Miss Anderson's journey was not that of an individual—she was a symbol of individuality as it is conceived and given historical meaning by contemporary Americans. The broadcast derived its very moving impact from some degree of awareness in the viewers' minds that they were watching not only a propaganda tour but a veritable collision of many cultures—religious, political, esthetic, ethical. At each moment there were overtones of the diffusion, challenge, and potentials of unique civilizations.

WE MUST recognize that "The Lady from Philadelphia" as an act of high creative imagination in television, marshalling the resources of our technology for great human purposes, is uncommonly rare. There is only one Marian Anderson, not many Ed Murrows and Fred Friendlys, and less than a multitude of sponsors like International Telephone and Telegraph whose institutional character permits them to spend shareholders' money on a TV broadcast like this one. Yet we must never cease to hope, with Miss Anderson, that the gates are there for all to enter. What we peddle to Asia we may well use at home; and we are indebted to "See It Now" for this grand reminder of what TV sometimes is and can more often be.

—ROBERT LEWIS SHAYON.

Miss Anderson—"inspired artistry."

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Prog. Bus

Office Communication

to Mr. Paley

from Mr. Murrow

January 19, 1958

Thanks for the kind words about the Marian Anderson show. You may care to know that we have never done a program in this shop that produced as much editorial comment, including newspapers in the South.

Fred and I have spent some time discussing "The Debate" and "What's New?" and would value the opportunity to chat with you at your convenience about both programs before we proceed.

Informatively, we go with the first Truman show on February 2 - as you suggested - the title will be "From Precinct to President" and the subtitle will be "Some Reflections by Harry S. Truman." We shall make it clear in advance notices and on the air that these were in fact reflections and in no sense a commentary on current events.

fc

E.R.M.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: MR. MURROW

from: Mr. Paley

January 2, 1958

I tried to get you after the Marian Anderson show to tell you how much I liked it. It was a masterful job, touching and effective to a high degree.

I am attaching two telegrams I received about the show. I concur in the thoughts they express.

P

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION

TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

1957 DEC 31 AM 12 07

SYMBOLS

DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LC = Deferred Cable
NLT = Cable Night Letter
WUC = Western Union Collect Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

SYA139 DEA073 OB665 LDB61

L SMA518 NL PD=TDSM PACIFIC PALISADES CALIF 30

=WILLIAM PALEY=

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM MADISON AVE NYK=

THANK YOU FOR THE BEST TELEVISION SHOW I HAVE EVER SEEN=

JOSEPH COTTON=.

Accept Regret
Apologize for delay
Back Phone WSP
Reply direct
Return to sender
Status?
Suggest reply
To discuss
Comment or recommendation
Copy to WSP
URGENT

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS

DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LT = International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

1201

Accept
Approval
Background?
Fyi
Note & return
Reply direct
Return to sender
Status?
Suggest reply
To discuss
Comment or recommendation
Copy to WSP
URGENT
Regret Acknowledge Letter
Wire
File

• OA918 LC828

L LLD356 NL PD=LOS ANGELES CALIF 30= 1957 DEC 31 AM 3 29

=WILLIAM PALEY=COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM
485 MADISON AVE NYK=

I DO NOT KNOW MR MURROW SO I FELT I MUST WIRE YOU TO SAY THAT IN MY 12 YEAR ASSOCIATION I HAVE NEVER FELT PROUDER OF CBS THAN I DID TONIGHT WHEN I SAW QUOTE A LADY FROM PHILADELPHIA SINCEREST REGARDS=

=RALPH LEVY=•

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

Jones, Merle S.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication to: Messrs. Murrow and Friendly

from: Mr. Jones

January 5, 1958

I have been out of the office quite a bit; otherwise, you would have heard from me earlier regarding the Marian Anderson show.

Although I had seen substantial clips of this show on two, or three, occasions prior to the air date, I must tell you that I was tremendously impressed by the total show. You gentlemen are to be highly complimented for this effort. All of us in CBS Television are proud to have been identified with it.

I am not one to rely too much on Trendex ratings, but I was pleased to see that this quick rating gave the program a solid, continuing viewing audience.

You may be interested to know that following the program we had about 250 complimentary calls, many of which requested that the program be repeated.

Thank you for the recording. If you do have a few extra, I could certainly use about a half dozen.

Again, congratulations, and, by the way, I would not want to close without thanking you for your very effective sales efforts.

MERLE S. JONES

MSJ:nk

Sin
Anderson, Marian

NOVEMBER 7, 1957

PRESS
MISS MARIAN ANDERSON
CULTURAL AFFAIRS OFFICER
US EMBASSY COLOMBO

BASED ON FOOTAGE RECEIVED SO FAR AM CONVINCED WE HAVE MAKINGS OF MOST DELICATE AND MOVING PROGRAM EVER PRESENTED STOP THINK YOULL HAVE THE WHOLE COUNTRY IN YOUR HANDS STOP REALIZE HOW INCREDIBLY HARD YOUVE BEEN WORKING BUT CONVINCED YOULL THINK IT WORTHWHILE WHEN YOU FINISHED REGARDS

ED MURROW

SHEITHOW
202-550-43

CBS NY GA PLS

SIN

THIS RCA HR 1 MESSAGE

7

TWXA/RC16/JT/IFZ2020 PYFEPI

LNB623/DS134 NEWDELHI 22 22 1905

LT CBSINC NEWYORK

MURROW APPRECIATE YOUR WIRE STOP ENJOYED WORK CBS

CREW OF DEVOTED MURROWITES STOP LOOKING FOWARD

SEEING RUSHES GREETINGS

ANDERSON

Palmer Williams informed H.T.

SENT 218A EST ACK PLS ,

RECD CBS TNX

See It Now
Bendick, R.L.

February 5, 1958

Dear Bob:

Belatedly my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Robert L. Bendick
572 Amalfi Drive
Santa Monica, California

mcc

ROBERT L. BENDICK
572 AMALFI DRIVE
SANTA MONICA, CALIFORNIA

Dec 31/57

Dear Ed. –

Last night I watched – I was deeply moved – I was most grateful that the Lady from Philadelphia had entered our house.

It was a magnificent show about a truly great human being. It was a most heartening renewal of faith, that understanding amongst people is possible even if peace amongst nations does not yet seem obtainable. Perhaps this doesn't help too much, but it gives hope.

I felt real good that Television had, as it has a few other times in the past, (and you were a part of some of them too) showed strength as a medium. Only in the atmosphere of ones own intimate surroundings could an audience fully recieve and react to this look at Marian Anderson.

Congratulations to you, Fred and the whole gang – I miss working on that kind of show

Best wishes for the New Year

Bob.

Sir
Berding, A. H

January 9, 1957

Dear Andy:

Thanks for your gracious note about the Marian Anderson piece.

We were very proud of it and the response has been almost overwhelming.

Thanks again for writing as you did.

Sincerely,

Mr. Andrew H. Berding
Assistant Secretary of State
Washington, D.C.

fc

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE
WASHINGTON

January 6, 1958

Dear Ed:

I am a little late, but nevertheless very sincere, in writing to you to congratulate you on the wonderful Marian Anderson show of a few days ago.

My wife and I saw it with the greatest of interest and admiration not only for the superlative job Marian Anderson herself did overseas, but for the excellent and restrained way in which you told the story with great effect.

With best wishes for a Happy New Year, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Andy

Andrew H. Berding

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N. Y.

See Ch. Nov
Chernoff, H.L.

February 5, 1958

Dear Howard:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your kind words about the Marian Anderson show. Both Fred and I derived a great deal of satisfaction from it and were duly rewarded by the enthusiastic response both by mail and in print.

Janet and Casey join me in sending warmest good wishes to you and Melva, as does Kay Campbell.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Howard L. Chernoff
4188 Arden Way
San Diego 3, California

mcc

HOWARD L. CHERNOFF 4480 H[illegible] SAN DIEGO 3, CALIF.

NEW ADDRESS:
4188 ARDEN WAY

10 January 1959

Dear Ed:

Just to add my comments to all you have already received .... your New Year's round table show and the Marian Anderson hour hit new highs in television for Melva and me. Thanks and with best wishes to you, Janet, Casey and Kay Campbell, I am

Sincerely,

Howard

Prog Cohen, Irving
Sen
Dec 30, 1957
SIN Program

January 31, 1958

Dear Mr. Cohen:

I write to say my sincere thanks for your assistance in clearing the Rogers and Hammerstein music for our Marian Anderson film.

I think in all truth we couldn't have done the program successfully without those two selections, and as you know, both Oscar and Dick gave generously of their time to counsel us on the whole project.

I thought you might like to have an LP of the sound track and I am sending you one.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Irving Cohen
70 Greenacres Avenue
Scarsdale, New York

fc

See It Now
Cook, F. A.

February 5, 1958

Dear Fred:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Fred Alletson Cook
Hewnes & Pearson's
Tower House
Southampton Street
London, W.C.2
England

mcc

NEWNES & PEARSON'S
GEORGE NEWNES LTD. AND C. ARTHUR PEARSON LTD.
TOWER HOUSE, SOUTHAMPTON ST., LONDON, W.C.2

Sir

This letter comes from our New York Office
527 MADISON AVENUE,
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.
PLAZA 9-1171

Mr Edward R.Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York,New York.

Dear Ed:

You probably wont remember me from my Beaverbrook days and your own "This is London...." days but I'm shamelessly trading on them as an excuse to write you about your Marian Anderson program last night.

The only word, and it richly deserves the caps, is: MAGNIFICENT.

This was TV as it ought to be and, sadly, so seldom is. Come to that, the same has been true of a number of your programs of late, notably your weekend round-up of the overseas and Washington correspondents.

Keep it up! We cant have too much of your sort of program.

All good wishes for the New Year,

Yours sincerely,

Fred Alletson Cook

F.G.Alletson Cook

FGAC hsp

Cotton, Joseph

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

SYMBOLS
DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LC = Deferred Cable
NLT = Cable Night Letter
Reply collect
Return to sender
Status?
Suggest reply
To discuss
Comment or recommendation
Copy to WSP
URGENT

1957 DEC 31 AM 12

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

SYA139 DEA073 OB665 LD861

L SMA518 NL PD=TDSM PACIFIC PALISADES CALIF 30

=WILLIAM PALEY=

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM MADISON AVE NYK=

:THANK YOU FOR THE BEST TELEVISION SHOW I HAVE EVER SEEN=

JOSEPH COTTON=.

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

~~Good~~ Dear
Curtis, Ted

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY

ROCHESTER 4, N.Y.

GENERAL OFFICES
343 STATE STREET

TELEPHONE
LOCUST 2-6000

December 31, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

I haven't written a fan letter since Lindberg flew the Atlantic, but I cannot refrain from telling you that the job you did last night with Marian Anderson was the most outstanding thing my wife and I have seen since TV came in.

It was not only an extraordinarily impressive and moving job so far as she was concerned, but I thought the editing and timing were outstanding. She is a great girl and I am afraid probably did us more good in the East than even J. Foster Dulles. You should be proud to have produced it, and I am only sorry we did not sponsor it.

I am sorry our paths do not cross more often these days, but I hope to see you again before too long.

Sincerely yours,

Ted Curtis

EPCurtis:jmf

Dowling, R. W

NOD

WU038 PD LONG

NEWYORK NY DEC 27 '57 629P

EDWARD MURROW

CBS TV NYC

BOB SCHNITZER REPORTS FROM PREVIEW MARIAN ANDERSON SEE IT NOW TREMENDOUSLY MOVING AND EFFECTIVE. AM TELEGRAPHING NUMEROUS CONGRESSMEN SUGGESTION MUST SEE TELECAST MONDAY EVENING. DEEPLY GRATEFUL YOUR INTEREST ANTAS WORK FOR STATE DEPARTMENT AS THIS FIRST IMPORTANT PUBLIC COVERAGE PRESIDENTS PROGRAM EARNESTLY REQUEST CAP YOUR MAGNIFICIENT CONTRIBUTION BY BRIEFLY TELLING YOUR NATIONWIDE AUDIENCE ABOUT PROGRAM THUS ENCOURAGING CONTINUATION AND EXPANSION.

CONGRATULATIONS YOUR SPLENDID EFFORTS NOT ONLY IN THIS INSTANCE BUT ALWAYS TO PROMOTE UNDERSTANDING OF OURSELVES AND OTHERS.

ROBERT W DOWLING CHAIRMAN ANTA.

721P..

Phoned to Friendly

HDS ACK 37-38.

Sin
Eliot, G. F.

February 3, 1958

Dear George:

Thanks for your thoughtfulness in writing about the Marian Anderson piece. The reaction to it was damn near overwhelming.

The powers that be have decided to repeat it sometime in the near future.

Thanks again.

As ever yours,

Mr. George Fielding Eliot
36 Sutton Place South
New York 22, New York

fc

GEORGE FIELDING ELIOT
36 SUTTON PLACE SOUTH
NEW YORK 22, NEW YORK

PLAZA 3-5071

Dec. 31 - 1957

Dear Ed -

I have just seen your "Lady from Philadelphia."

MAGNIFICENT!

Congratulations on a great achievement - and a great service to the country.

Happy New Year to you, Jane and Casey, from Jane and

Yours

George

SIM
Hammerstein, O.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN, 2ND

10 E. 63.

28 May 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow, and
Mr. Fred W. Friendly

Dear Ed and Fred:

I am delighted to have the record inscribed by Marian Anderson. Thank you very much.

Good wishes,

Oscar

OH:mec

~~Hannon, Stuart L.~~
See it now
Hannon, S.L.

February 5, 1958

Dear Mr. Hannon:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Stuart L. Hannon
Deputy Program Director
Radio Free Europe
Two Park Avenue
New York 16, New York

mcc

Radio Free Europe

TWO PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N.Y.

Division of the Free Europe Committee, Inc.

Telephone: LExington 2-8902

January 3, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Allow me to congratulate you for the superb CBS presentation "Lady From Philadelphia." I caught it quite by accident after a familiar, routine day of Western reactions to Soviet initiative, and it was a tonic which I sorely needed. The whole show had an exciting momentum to it and some of the camera work was magnificent. The speech at the Gandhi Memorial, the mute nobility of those Indian faces, and the pervasive religious quality of the communication were all unforgettable. Unfortunately, this is one dimension which we cannot have for our broadcasts to East Europe.

I appreciated your letter of December 9 and one of these days I shall try to get in touch with John Day. Perhaps on the same occasion it will be possible to look in on you.

Sincerely yours,

Stuart L. Hannon

Stuart L. Hannon
Deputy Program Director

SLH:gc

See it Now
Johnson, K.D.

February 5, 1958

Dear Ken:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Kenneth D. Johnson
The New York School of Social Work
Two East Ninety First Street
New York 28, New York

mcc

Columbia University

The New York School of Social Work

TWO EAST NINETY-FIRST STREET • NEW YORK 28, NEW YORK

TRAFALGAR 6-6300

KENNETH D. JOHNSON
Dean

NATHAN E. COHEN
Associate Dean

January 3, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o See It Now
Columbia Broadcasting Co.
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

See It Now reached the summit with your presentation of "The Lady from Philadelphia; through Asia with Marian Anderson" Monday night on Channel 2. The enclosed letter to Miss Anderson will give you the reactions of two of the viewers.

To you and your associates I want to express my deep appreciation of the beautiful job you did throughout the entire program. The photography was something out of this world. I swear when Miss Anderson was singing her tribute to Ghandi and came to the line "About the First Step" I actually saw him move on that beautiful memorial.

But then there were so many highlights to this entire program that I find it impossible to set forth in words all of my reactions.

Please thank your associates and above all will you impress upon them the strong desire we have for a repeat of this performance at the very earliest date. You will find us along with many others that missed it in the front row ready to be held spellbound once more.

Sincerely yours,

Kenneth D. Johnson

KDJ:dhs
Enclosure (1)

I am intent on making this a part of our Film Library at the School.

January 3, 1958

Miss Marian Anderson
c/o See It Now
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Miss Anderson:

Actually it has taken me a few days to "come back to earth" after that magnificent performance of yours on the See It Now program of CBS the other evening. Mrs. Johnson and I were alone in our living room, and I can assure you that almost five minutes elapsed after the close of the program before we could either look or speak to each other. Neither of us has for a long long time been so moved, so inspired, and so completely overwhelmed by everything that is good.

You did a perfectly superb job, and I want to take this inadequate means of thanking you from the bottom of my heart.

May God prosper, bless and keep you for many years.

Sincerely yours,

Kenneth D. Johnson

KDJ:dhs

See it Now
Kaplan, S. P.

February 5, 1958

Dear Mr. Kaplan:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Stuart P. Kaplan
Attorney at Law
1012 Citizens National Bank Building
Los Angeles 13, California

mec

STUART P. KAPLAN
ATTORNEY AT LAW
1012 CITIZENS NATIONAL BANK BUILDING
453 SOUTH SPRING STREET
LOS ANGELES 13, CALIFORNIA
MICHIGAN 5782

Sir

December 31, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I enjoyed your television program of December 30, 1957 entitled "See it Now" concerning the recent travels in Asia by Miss Marian Anderson.

However, my curiousity was aroused by the incident when Miss Anderson sang the song from the musical "South Pacific". The lyrics were on the order of "you have to be taught to fear and hate people who's eyes are oddly made and who's skin is a differant shade...etc". I couldn't help but wonder whether or not these young children, to whom Miss Anderson sang, didn't take these lyrics litterally and out of context from the thought behind the words.

I would be most interested to hear your comments on this point.

Cordially,

Stuart P. Kaplan
STUART P. KAPLAN

SPK:eg

S IN King, Verne L.

February 6, 1958

Dear Mrs. King:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your nice comments about our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways this is the best thing that we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming response both in mail and in print.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Verne L. King
Editor
The Columbia Record
1473 Barnum Avenue
Bridgeport, Connecticut

mec

COLUMBIA RECORDS

A Division of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

1473 BARNUM AVENUE, BRIDGEPORT 8, CONNECTICUT · EDISON 6-0181

January 2, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The SEE IT NOW production of "The Lady From Philadelphia" was so beautifully done that, while watching it, I had that rare feeling that I would never again see anything on television which could touch me so deeply nor which I would feel was as perfectly executed.

I have always been proud to be a member of the CBS Family, and, on Tuesday evening, I was proud that you and your staff belong to the same Family.

My grateful thanks to you and Mr. Friendly for a wonderful experience.

Sincerely,

COLUMBIA RECORDS

Verne L. King

(Mrs.) Verne L. King, Editor
THE COLUMBIA RECORD

See it now
Knopf, Alfred

February 5, 1958

Dear Alfred:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

With all good wishes.

As ever,

Mr. Alfred A. Knopf
501 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

mmc

BORZOI BOOKS

Alfred A Knopf

PURCHASE New York

Sir

Dear Ed –

I've just watched The Lady From Philadelphia and must thank you for this moving experience. It's tremendous.

Best for 1958

Yours,

Arnold

Monday

Levy, Ralph

WESTERN UNION
TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

Class of Service
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

SYMBOLS
Day Letter
Night Letter
International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

Accept
Appointment?
Background?
FYI
Note & return
Reply direct
Return to sender
Status?
Suggest reply
To discuss
Comment or recommendation
Copy to WSP
URGENT

1201

. 0A918 LC828

L LLD356 NL PD=LOS ANGELES CALIF 30= 1957 DEC 31 AM 3 27

:WILLIAM PALEY=COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM
485 MADISON AVE NYK=

I DO NOT KNOW MR MURROW SO I FELT I MUST WIRE YOU TO SAY THAT IN MY 12 YEAR ASSOCIATION I HAVE NEVER FELT PROUDER OF CBS THAN I DID TONIGHT WHEN I SAW QUOTE A LADY FROM PHILADELPHIA SINCEREST REGARDS=

:RALPH LEVY=.

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

EDWARD R. MURROW
485 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

Look Magazine

December 6, 1957

Dear Shap:

Thanks for yours of November 21st.

Under no circumstances, could I make the announcement you suggest on the SEE IT NOW program of December 30th. The program has to do with Marian Anderson's tour of Asia. I would be stealing time from her and the audience were I to do as you suggest. Moreover, I have never yet, on radio or television, mentioned an award the program had received. I do not announce awards other people receive, so why should I announce awards I receive. That doesn't mean I am not grateful...just old-fashioned.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. S. O. Shapiro
Vice President
Look Magazine
488 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

mcc

Morrell, Sydney

SYDNEY MORRELL
67 BROAD STREET
NEW YORK 4, N.Y.

December 23, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N.Y.

My dear Ed,

Although the flight schedules across the Atlantic are notoriously uncertain at this time of year, I did not want to leave for London tonight without sending you my sincere (and, believe me, not by any means selfish!) good wishes for a successful program next Monday.

I am really grateful to you for letting my particular corporation have the chance to be associated with you, Fred Friendly and Miss Anderson. I hope you all get the applause and appreciation you deserve.

If you should have any thoughts about the program -- either before or after it has been shown -- you can reach me

c/o Mrs. M. Redvers-Bate
57 Green St., London W. 1
Telephone: Mayfair 5495

Best-
Bill

See ltr 20
Redmond, D.

February 5, 1958

Dear brother Dick:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

With all good wishes.

As ever,

Mr. Dick Redmond
WHP-TV
Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania

mcc

WHP-TV

Harrisburg, Pennsylvania

January 9, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear brother Ed:

"Something magical happens.'" This quotable quote from Light Up The Sky (I believe) best expresses what has occurred as a result of your "Lady From Philadelphia". It can be further said you truly "Lit up the sky" with this one.

The attached card is one of some seventy inquiries we have had as to whether the program can be repeated. If a repeat is being considered we would appreciate being advised.

I'm sure you've had many comments on the program, so may I merely add my voice in saying that you really did work a kind of miracle in its presentation. I know of several violently prejudiced men who actually wept.

Since it's been so long between drinks, I add best personal regards.

Sincerely,

Dick

Dick Redmond

DR:es

Rogers, Richard

Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein, 2nd
488 MADISON AVENUE • NEW YORK 22 N. Y.
Telephone MUrray Hill 8-3640

January
27th 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

Oscar is in Jamaica, but I know that I take no undue liberty in writing to say that you will have his and my complete cooperation in obtaining the needed prints which you mention in your January 24th letter.

"Getting to Know You" is from THE KING AND I and "Carefully Taught" is from SOUTH PACIFIC. The motion picture rights to both these properties have been disposed of and there must be certain legal complications. I don't doubt that they can be cleared, but I imagine certain steps will have to be taken. I am sending copies of your letter and this reply to Irving Cohen, asking him to facilitate matters as quickly as possible. I am sure you will hear from him in the immediate future.

I have never heard such happy enthusiasm for any television show as there has been for "The Lady from Philadelphia". It's deeply gratifying to have been able to help in some small way and I feel sure that the ultimate good accomplished by this program will be tremendous.

Many thanks and all kindest regards to you and Fred.

Yours sincerely,

Dick.

RR L

Murrow's file

January 24, 1958

Dear Oscar and Dick:

Again, thanks from Friendly and me for what you did to help with "The Lady from Philadelphia". It is conceivably the most satisfying project we have undertaken. Your early enthusiasm and your constant constructive comments and thoughtfulness shall long be remembered.

One slight problem remains. The Urban League, and a group of schools and churches, want prints (the Urban League for an April 1st coast to coast series of rallies in honor of Miss Anderson). We are inclined to provide a 16mm print for such non-theatrical needs in our regular and normal manner, which is to allow an educational film distributor to handle this under our control. Our original music clearances, I am told, provide for such use for all the songs except "Getting to Know You" and "Carefully Taught" which were handled on a personal basis through Irving Cohen and yourselves. It is now necessary to ask you for permission to use these songs for the limited purposes described above. You can have CBS's assurances and my personal one that no theatrical use will be permitted. If you should prefer further negotiations to be conducted with Mr. Cohen, I will so direct but Fred and I did want to put the problem to you on a personal basis and we trust you will be able to help us out.

Incidentally, should either of you desire prints of the show to keep, we should be delighted to arrange same. Copies of the record album are being sent; should you desire additional albums, please let us know.

Again, thanks.

Cordially,

Edward R. Murrow

Mr. Oscar Hammerstein
Mr. Richard Rodgers
488 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

ERM/hl

Sin
Rogers, Richard

January 9, 1957

Dear Dick:

My heartfelt thanks to you and Oscar for your wire on the Marian Anderson effort.

Both Fred and I are deeply in debt to you and Oscar as is Marian Anderson. I think you would feel repaid in part, at least, if you saw the response both by mail and in print.

We have never done anything that produced such widespread and favorable comment and the response encourages us to believe for a little while, at least, that there are an awful lot of people willing and eager to look at something other than westerns and quiz shows.

Again we say to both of you, our best thanks.

As ever yours,

Mr. Richard Rogers
488 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

fc

cc: Mr. Oscar Hammerstein

RECEIVED
1957 DEC 31 PM 12:33
C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

V

WU018 PD

K FAX NEW YORK NY DEC 31 1203P

ED MURROW AND FRED FRIENDLY CBS SEE IT NOW

THANK YOU FOR OUR HANDSOME BEN SHAHN BOOKS BUT THANKS EVEN MORE FOR LETTING US TAKE PART IN THE WONDERFUL BROADCAST LAST NIGHT HAPPY NEW YEAR AND CONTINUED TRIUMPH DURING IT

RICHARD RODGERS AND OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN

1219P..

See It Now
Schlesinger, Arthur, Jr.

February 7, 1958

Dear Arthur:

Many thanks for your nice letter of February 5th.

Enclosed is a copy of the SEE IT NOW script that you requested. I am glad that you enjoyed it. The response both in mail and in print has been overwhelming and Fred Friendly and I feel that in many ways this is the best thing we have ever done.

As ever yours,

Mr. Arthur Schlesinger, Jr.
Widener T
Harvard University
Cambridge, Massachusetts

mcc

WIDENER T
HARVARD UNIVERSITY
CAMBRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS

ARTHUR SCHLESINGER, JR.

UNIVERSITY 4-9710

February 5, 1958

Dear Ed:

I wonder if you could send me a transcript of your interview with President Truman which I heard with great interest and enjoyment on Sunday. There are some historical notes in Mr. Truman's remarks which I would like to have textually.

Sincerely yours,

Arthur Schlesinger Jr.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Braodcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York City, N.Y.

See It Now

February 5, 1958

Dear Phil:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

With all good wishes.

As ever,

Mr. Philip L. Graham
The Washington Post
and Times Herald
1515 L Street, N. W.
Washington 5, D. C.

mcc

The Washington Post
AND Times Herald
1515 L STREET, N.W. WASHINGTON 5, D.C. REPUBLIC 7-1234

PHILIP L. GRAHAM
PUBLISHER

Jim

December 31, 1957

Dear Ed:

The "Marian Anderson Hour" was deeply moving. She was American leadership on a grand scale, a phenomenon recently unfamiliar to me.

The production was, as always, magnificent and everyone associated with it hereby receives the highest possible praise from this precinct.

Sincerely,

Phil

Philip L. Graham

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, New York.

See it now
Seabron, W. M.

February 5, 1958

Dear Mr. Seabron:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. William M. Seabron
Deputy Director
Fair Employment Practices Commission
129 Mason Building
Lansing, Michigan

mcc

G. MENNEN WILLIAMS
GOVERNOR

STATE OF MICHIGAN

COMMISSION
SIDNEY M. SHEVITZ, CHAIRMAN
MRS. ANNE H. COOK, SECRETARY
REV. FR. JOHN F. FINNEGAN
ALEX FULLER
HARRY J. KELLEY
REV. CHESTER A. McPHEETERS

FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES COMMISSION

129 MASON BUILDING
LANSING, MICHIGAN

900 CADILLAC SQUARE BUILDING, DETROIT 26, MICHIGAN
TELEPHONE: DETROIT WO 2-6680 — EXT. 43 LANSING: IV 5-8144 — EXT. 453

WILLIAM M. SEABRON
DEPUTY DIRECTOR

Please Reply: DETROIT January 2, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It was my pleasure to view "The Lady from Philadelphia", the story of Miss Marian Anderson's good will mission to the Far East, on "See It Now" last Monday evening. I have written to thank Channel 2, WJBK-TV, our local Detroit outlet, for presenting this program, and I should like for you and your sponsor, International Telephone and Telegraph, also to know how much I appreciate it.

Miss Anderson was very gracious and intelligent in her relationships with the peoples of these various lands, and in my opinion did a tremendous job in interpreting the attitude of the Negro in America toward his problems. While she did not deny the existence of these problems in our country, it seemed to me she was able to point up the progress we have made and the hope we have for the future.

Please accept my thanks for developing and presenting a program such as "The Lady from Philadelphia".

Sincerely yours,

William Seabron

William M. Seabron
Deputy Director

WMS:sig
afscme52

See It Now
Seltzer, L. B.

The Cleveland Press

OFFICE OF
LOUIS B. SELTZER
EDITOR

January 15, 1958

Dear Ed:

Your note and the album arrived together in this morning's mail.

Marion and I sat enthralled by your "The Lady From Philadelphia".

So moved were we, in fact, that we hastily called our children, and several friends (including Cleveland's mayor) to make sure they were dialed in. Fortunately they were.

"See It Now" had everything. It had a beauty, a depth, a thundering emotional appeal, and it must, too, have had, more important than all else, an underlying persuasive appeal to reason.

I am not going to write you any more notes, Murrow, if they have to be, all of them, in this same highly commendatory pattern. That you compel them is wholly incidental. It does not allow cruising range for my inherently critical temperament. You subvert my journalistic principle of cold, practical objectivity.

For two years now I have been serving in the capacity of national chairman for Brotherhood Week, under the auspices of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. Many times in addresses across the country (at $50 and $100 a plate, by the way) I have described you as one of the foremost exemplars of brotherhood -- and cited in documentation thereof many of your telecasts, "See It Now" shows, and "This I Believe".

So you see, Ed, you'll have to do something about all of this so that I can retrieve some measure of objectivity -- but I sure can't do it when you do the things that you have been doing, and then, so blithely, persist constantly in doing more of.

Marion and I will enjoy "The Lady From Philadelphia" in the quiet of our home (when and if it ever is quiet) -- or, to be more precise, in the company of friends who persist in hanging off of our chandeliers so much of the time.

As always

Louis

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Shayon, Robert L.

CBS TELEVISIO

Office Communica

to: Messrs. Edward R. Murrow and Fred Friendly

from: Bob Philpot

January 23, 1958

Bob Hoag asked me to send you a copy of a memo covering Mr. Shayon's review of "The Lady From Philadelphia" which has been distributed to all of our network salesmen.

R.E.P.

JI

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Network Salesmen* January 21, 1958

from: Bob Philpot cc: Messrs. Hylan, Dawson, Klayer, Hoag, Maxwell, Blair, Sterritt, Livingston, Bristol, Lethen, Aberle, Ashley, Ingersoll, Stolfi

Re: SEE IT NOW

In the current issue of "The Saturday Review" Robert Lewis Shayon reviews "The Lady From Philadelphia."

Tom Dawson wanted each of us to have a copy of these remarks to read at leisure...because here summed up so well are some of the feelings that probably you too had while watching the show.

Surely we can be proud in the Sales Department that CBS saw fit to invest in – and then broadcast – Marian Anderson's tour of Asia. It's the kind of show that helps make the network the leader among communication media.

While there's no way we know now to measure adequately the widespread influence of this broadcast, Tom suggests we use Shayon's review as a conversation piece whenever possible to tell agencies and advertisers of this kind of programming that is available from time to time as special broadcasts on CBS Televisinn.

R.E.P.

JI

*Messrs. Curl, Flaten, Hall, Harding, Lambart, Materne, Martin, Mayo, Morton, Porteous, Purves, Rastall, Schroeder, Shaker, Smith, Swats

"The Lady from Philadelphia"

I SINCERELY hope that our State Department does not cut the commercials out of "The Lady from Philadelphia," the recent CBS-TV "See It Now" broadcast featuring Marian Anderson, the singer, when they show prints of the program in Asia. The comments of Mr. Edmond H. Leavey, president of the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation, which sponsored the broadcast, and those of Edward R. Murrow, the narrator, speaking for I.T. and T., are essential to the propaganda aims of Miss Anderson's 35,000-mile, twelve-nation concert tour. Their remarks create a most favorable impression of American business. "Communication is our business," said the sponsor; then he defined the main problem of international communication today in terms of the question: "Can man get along with man?" Miss Anderson's tour was an act of affirmative communication. Mr. Murrow, noting that I.T. and T. had waived the final commercial, said: "They know that their communication can never be substituted for human communication. Miss Anderson's communication is something with which they—and we—would like to be identified."

This was television in the highest altitudes. What the "See It Now"-State Department- American National Theatre and Academy (ANTA) trio of organizers of the tour were saying, through Miss Anderson to the people of Korea, the Philippines, Vietnam, Burma, Thailand, Malaya, and India, was this: "You have been slaves to white masters from the West. Now you are your own masters, free to choose between the Communists and us. Both are prepared to radiate to you the West's industry, literacy, and material betterment. But the Communists will make you pay a price for that—a second slavery and a poverty of spiritual values. Choose the West and you will gain your freedom and dignity as well as science and technology. Marian Anderson is the image of your own future —if you follow us."

The singer never spoke this argument, of course. Her only instructions 'rom the State Department were: "Be ourself." She gave her own message 'n her inspired artistry, her joy, en- siasm, compassion, humility, and 'ious faith. Her music was, in turn, ep yearning, an adoration, a cry 'eedom, a national anthem, a ' lesson, and a Christian hymn. ctrine was a sense of journey, a "trampin, a tryin' to make heaven my home." It was, "Now we will do the thing in a new way. . . . There is no particular thing that you can do alone. . . . The 'I' in it is very small, after all. . . . All have a right to enter the gates. . . .One will give his all if he feels that he belongs. . . . Yes, I would sing for Governor Faubus if he were in a frame of mind to accept it for what it is. . . . Do not let hate or fear restrict you from being a big person. . . . All people seek to be great. . . . If all is right on the inside, there is a divine pattern. . . . I will go, I shall go to see what the end will be, because I believe in what I shall find at the end." This is the poetry of feeling, and I know of only one poet in America who sings this way: Carl Sandburg. The ethos of Abraham Lincoln is in his rhythms and Miss Anderson's.

The Asian response to her character and artistry was a complete propaganda triumph, to judge by the pictures and soundtrack of "See It Now." The King of Thailand had never before risen from his throne-chair to greet a distinguished visitor. In India, no visitor had ever been invited to speak at Gandhi's memorial in Old Delhi. The Prime Minister of Burma complimented her on her "good voice, technique, and acting ability," and on her "beauty and charm of mind." At Ewha University in Seoul, Korea, she was awarded an honorary degree for her "Christian service to mankind." In Bombay the tour dramatically illustrated the interpenetration of cultures when, for the first time, "a visiting artist" (Miss Anderson) sang with "the only Western symphony orchestra between Tel Aviv and Tokyo."

Less formal, but nevertheless expressing an undeniable sympathy for Miss Anderson as she greeted them and sang for them "in close fashion" were the faces in her audiences—impassive, rapt children; old men and women; Eastern cosmopolites; peasants; clerks; lawyers. These faces of Asia, photographed and edited with perception and taste, burst with startling, vivid reality upon our parochial TV consciousness, smogged and sodden with the gunsmoke and mayas of Madison Avenue and Hollywood. The United States can be proud to have had such a great lady as Miss Anderson to send forth on this tour.

There were other rewards for the "See It Now" audience here in the United States. We saw and heard a native orchestra in Bombay playing Indian music, which Miss Anderson told us "has resisted all foreign influences." We shared the thrill of an item of raw material for history when, in Kuala Lumpur, in the Federation of Malaya, citizens of the newest nation on earth heard the first singing of their national anthem by a visiting artist. Miss Anderson's journey was not that of an individual—she was a symbol of individuality as it is conceived and given historical meaning by contemporary Americans. The broadcast derived its very moving impact from some degree of awareness in the viewers' minds that they were watching not only a propaganda tour but a veritable collision of many cultures—religious, political, esthetic, ethical. At each moment there were overtones of the diffusion, challenge, and potentials of unique civilizations.

WE MUST recognize that "The Lady from Philadelphia" as an act of high creative imagination in television, marshalling the resources of our technology for great human purposes, is uncommonly rare. There is only one Marian Anderson, not many Ed Murrows and Fred Friendlys, and less than a multitude of sponsors like International Telephone and Telegraph whose institutional character permits them to spend shareholders' money on a TV broadcast like this one. Yet we must never cease to hope, with Miss Anderson, that the gates are there for all to enter. What we peddle to Asia we may well use at home; and we are indebted to "See It Now" for this grand reminder of what TV sometimes is and can more often be.

—ROBERT LEWIS SHAYON.

Miss Anderson—"inspired artistry."

Stassen, Harold

January 9, 1958

Dear Harold:

What a gracious guy you are to take time to send your note about the Marian Anderson piece!

We were proud of it and the response has been extraordinary.

Hope to see you soon.

As ever yours,

Mr. Harold E. Stassen,
Special Assistant to the President
The White House
Washington, D.C.

fc

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

January 4, 1958

Dear Edward:

Commendation and congratulations for the presentation of the Marian Anderson report. ! !

This represented brilliant editing of an exceptional story centering on a great person. Thus I am moved to add my personal thanks to you and your staff for doing it.

Sincerely,

Harold

Harold E. Stassen
Special Assistant to the President

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

See it now
Straus, Nathan

February 5, 1958

Dear Nathan:

Belatedly, my thanks to you for your cordial comments on our Marian Anderson show. Fred Friendly and I think that in many ways it is the best thing we have ever done, and we have been deeply gratified by the overwhelming warmth of the response both by mail and in print.

With all good wishes.

As ever,

Mr. Nathan Straus
President
WNCA
415 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

mcc

wmca 415 MADISON AVENUE AT 48th ST., NEW YORK 17, N.Y. · MU. 8-1500
570 KC. · FIRST ON YOUR DIAL

NATHAN STRAUS
PRESIDENT

December 31, 1957

Dear Ed:

Two of your programs that we have watched during the last week seem so outstanding that I would like to add this word to the thousands of letters of appreciation that you doubtless have received.

The Charles Siepmanns were at our house on Sunday and we listened to the first half-hour of your annual news round-up together. They had to leave to pick up some of their children at the station — but Helen and I listened through to the end with great enjoyment and, I may add, benefit as well.

Last night we thought the Marian Anderson show was outstanding, an almost unique achievement by TV in furtherance of better understanding among the peoples of the earth.

More power to you.

I hope our paths cross more often in 1958, as ever,

Yours,

Nathan Straus

Mr. Edward Murrow
CBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York 17, N.Y.

Sutcliffe, R.T

January 9, 1958

Dear Mr. Sutcliffe:

Please forgive my delay in acknowledging your letter of December 20th.

Your promotion of Miss Anderson's program was in impeccable taste and I am certain that it did much to increase the audience.

Both Fred Friendly and I are deeply appreciative of your confidence and we shall hope never to abuse it.

You may care to know that the general reaction to the program far exceeded our expectations.

Thank you again.

Sincerely,

Mr. Richard T. Sutcliffe
Department of Press, Radio and Television
The United Lutheran Church in America
231 Madison Avenue
New York 16, New York

fc

Press
Radio
Television

DEPARTMENT OF PRESS, RADIO AND TELEVISION
The UNITED LUTHERAN CHURCH IN AMERICA
CHARLES C. HUSHAW, Executive Director • RICHARD T. SUTCLIFFE, Associate Director

231 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 16, N. Y. • LExington 2-3410 • Night Phone: LExington 2-3412

December 20, 1957

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The enclosed "Clipsheet" has been distributed early this past week to 5,000 United Lutheran pastors and church leaders across the United States and Canada.

This weekend, worshippers in United Lutheran churches from coast-to-coast either (1) saw the bulletin board posters as they attended services or (2) heard about these three programs in pulpit announcements by their pastors.

Because one of your programs is involved, we thought you'd like to know of this United Lutheran promotion. We are not looking for thanks or accolades; we simply want you to know that this Department of Press, Radio and Television of the United Lutheran Church prefers to endorse and encourage you in the production of TV programs with the highest quality and content rather than to police or condemn.

Respectfully,

Richard T. Sutcliffe

Richard T. Sutcliffe

Enclosure
RTS:jw

Pro Bus. 5811

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Woodard (2)

cc: Messrs. Harrison, Coleman, Stone, Robins (Information copy: Messrs. Murrow & Friendly)

from: Paul A. Rosen

April 12, 1957

Will you please have immediately prepared an agreement with Hurok Artists, Inc., 711 Fifth Avenue, New York City, New York, as agents for Miss Marian Anderson, pursuant to the following:

(1) Commencing in September 1957 and continuing thereafter until approximately December 1957, Miss Anderson will be on a concert tour in the Far East. This tour, which is presented under the auspices of the President's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations (in connection with which the State Department has appointed the American National Theatre & Academy as its professional agency), will take Miss Anderson to Honolulu, Seoul, Taipei, Hong Kong, Manila, Saigon, Penh, Bangkok, Laos, Singapore, Kuala Lumpur, Indonesia, Dakar, India & Lahore, among other places.

During this tour, we are granted the exclusive right to film for television purposes and otherwise, Miss Anderson's concert and related appearances. Our filming shall be done at our own expense, including, but without limitation, expenses of shipping our equipment, transporting our personnel, etc. etc. Miss Anderson also agrees to be filmed in interview(s) with Mr. Murrow.

(2) Compensation

Within ten days following the initial broadcast of the film produced hereunder, but not later than June 30, 1958, we will make payment to Hurok Artists, Inc., as agents for Miss Anderson, in the amount of $3,500. This payment will entitle us to broadcast the film once over a television station in each city throughout the world. For the second run, the payment will be $1,750, and for the third and all ensuing runs, the payment will be $875 per run.

(3) Subsidiary Rights

With respect to subsidiary rights, Miss Anderson shall participate to the extent of one third of the net proceeds derived from subsidiary rights. For the purpose of determining net proceeds, CBS Television shall be entitled to recoup the

to: Mr. Woodard

from: Paul A. Rosen

April 12, 1957

entire cost of production of the subject motion picture (all program broadcast income being applied against the production cost, less, for syndication purposes, the normal distribution and related charges of CBS Television Film Sales) and all direct and actual expenses involved in connection with the disposal of subsidiary rights. We agree to consult with Miss Anderson as to any disposition of subsidiary rights and shall obtain her prior approval, not to be unreasonably withheld, to any such disposition except as follows:

(a) With respect to the distribution of this film for non-theatrical purposes (and, of course, for broadcast purposes), we need not seek Miss Anderson's approval and may freely utilize the film for this purpose;

(b) We recognize that Miss Anderson has prior commitments with respect to phonograph recordings and we agree that we shall respect these commitments and that any refusal of approval by Miss Anderson of any use of the soundtrack of this film as a phonograph record shall not be considered by us to be unreasonable, if her refusal is based on a prior phonograph recording commitment.

Accountings for subsidiary proceeds shall be made within thirty days following January 1st of each year, commencing with January 1st, 1959.

(3) Miscellaneous

(a) Miss Anderson shall provide the services of her accompanyist;

(b) No film in which Miss Anderson appears may be used for purposes of commercial announcements;

(c) We shall have the right to use Miss Anderson's name and likeness and biographical material

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Mr. Woodard

from: Paul A. Rosen

April 12, 1957

(c) Contd.

concerning her in connection with the exhibition, distribution and subsidiary rights use of this film;

(d) Should there be any original music composed by Miss Anderson and/or her accompanyist utilized in this film, CBS Television shall enjoy the free right of use thereof;

(e) In the event that, due to local governmental restrictions, force majeure, etc., we are unable to shoot sufficient film to comprise a one hour television broadcast, the decision as to the sufficiency of material being vested in CBS Television, we shall pay to Miss Anderson the sum of $1,750; of course, if we are unable to shoot any film, we shall have no obligation to Miss Anderson.

(f) Such other terms and conditions as you feel necessary should be included.

Please see that this contract is given immediate attention.

Thank you.

P. A. R.

PAR:jr

October 29, 1954

MARIAN ANDERSON APPEARED ON "PERSON TO PERSON" SHORTLY BEFORE SHE WAS TO MAKE HER DEBUT AT THE METROPOLITAN.

MURROW: Arturo Toscanini once heard a woman sing and he said of her, "A voice like hers is heard only once in 100 years." It was the voice of Marian Anderson, who has been acclaimed for almost 20 years as one of the world's greatest contraltos; many say the greatest. Miss Anderson was born of poor parents in South Philadelphia. Her father died while she was a youngster. She struggled for an education with the help of her mother and friends. And, eight years after her New York debut as a soloist, she won her first real recognition in Europe. This month the Metropolitan Opera made news around the free world by signing Miss Anderson to her first role at the Met in Verdi's Masked Ball. She is the first person of her race to be so honored. Miss Anderson and her husband, Orpheus H. Fisher, live on a 105-acre farm near Danbury, Connecticut. Mr. Fisher, a New York architect, designed this one-story, eight-room sort of L-shaped house. He calls the style contemporary. The Fisher home is set on the brow of a hill, and on a clear day they can look westward almost 30 miles across the Berkshire valley. Good evening, Miss Anderson.

ANDERSON: Good evening, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Tell me first of all, do you prefer to be called Miss Anderson or Mrs. Fisher?

ANDERSON: Well, I believe in concerts I prefer being called Miss Anderson and at home Mrs. Fisher.

MURROW: So we can use them interchangeably tonight?

ANDERSON: Absolutely.

MURROW: I know it is not until next January you are scheduled to sing in the Met, but are you ready?

ANDERSON: Well, not completely. I am trying very desperately to understand the part very well.

MURROW: Miss Anderson, aside from your years of hard work, rehearsing and studying and traveling, do you think luck - that is, good furtune - had anything to do with guiding you to the Metropolitan opera role?

ANDERSON: I think my good fortune started the very day that I was born to my mother. She is the most wonderful person in the world to me, and I think without her, life couldn't have been at all so fine as it is. I have her to thank from the beginning to the end for everything which has happened, because with her the other things have been made possible.

MURROW: I know you must have dreamed about the Met for a long time. How many years has it been since you first saw a performance there?

ANDERSON: I don't realize just how long ago it has been. I remember trying to buy my way into a performance. I had received a certain amount of money, and when I went to Philadelphia to the music store where the tickets were being sold and asked for a ticket, I realized immediately that I must have been very naive when I thought that what they were asking for a ticket was the price of a whole season. So, of course, that performance I was not able to see.

MURROW: You thought you were buying an entire season's ticket and it was only for one performance. Is that it?

ANDERSON: As a matter of fact, I didn't have enough for the one performance.

MURROW: I see. Tell me, is Mr. Fisher here?

ANDERSON: Yes, he is.

MURROW: Good evening, Mr. Fisher.

FISHER: Good evening, Mr. Murrow. How are you?

MURROW: Fine, thank you. Tell me, do you have much to do with Mrs. Fisher's work? That is, do you help her or criticize her, or do you stick to your drawing board as an architect?

FISHER: Well, I criticize her just a little, but I usually stick to my drawing board.

MURROW: Now, about this farm that you have. Do you both work at it?

FISHER: Yes, we do.

MURROW: And what do you grow?

FISHER: Well, I am very much interested in sheep, sheep raising, and we have concentrated most of our efforts towards raising sheep.

MURROW: Well, now, I have just recently acquired a farm. As a matter of fact, not far from you over in Dutchess County in New York. Do you have any advice for me?

FISHER: Well, I would like to give you some advice, Mr. Murrow, and that is this, that I would suggest that the thing to do is to get the most competent farm superintendent you can get and thus turn the complete job over to him.

MURROW: Mrs. Fisher - Marian Anderson - when you are not working on the farm, where do you do your real work with your voice and your music?

ANDERSON: I do it in a little building not too far from here. It is just our studio, and I would like, if you have time to do it, to see it.

MURROW: Good, thank you.

(MISS ANDERSON GOES TO STUDIO.)

MURROW: What in the world is on the floor?

ANDERSON: Music which should have been catalogued sometime ago. I felt rather energetic a few weeks ago and began getting some of it out and putting it on the floor in alphabetical order according to the name of the composer, and the gentleman came along and said maybe you might leave it a little while. It suited me quite finely, so here it is.

MURROW: Tell me, how many jazz numbers do you have in your files?

ANDERSON: Not too many, I'm afraid, and probably not the one which I might have had if I had hoped to please a particular lady who came up to us not too long ago after a concert. I should say it this way really. She stood on the fringe of a crowd asking for autographs and just as the autographs were finished the lady came up and said, "Well, since I am here I will take an autograph." And while giving her the autograph she said, "I don't understand, I still don't understand why you didn't sing Chattanooga Choo-Choo," and I said, "It is not in our repertoire this season."

MURROW: Speaking of your repertoire of the non-jazz songs that you know, what would be your favorite?

ANDERSON: I believe, as a matter of fact, a spiritual called He's Got the Whole World in His Hand. I like the message it brings, and it is a thing which appeals to most people.

MURROW: How does it go?

ANDERSON: Oh.

(SINGS)

ANDERSON: And it is about the little baby and the gambling man and the crap-shooting man. It just takes in everybody, you know.

MURROW: He's got the whole world in His hands.

ANDERSON: Yes.

MURROW: Mrs. Fisher - Marian Anderson - you confirmed tonight what many of us have felt at many of your concerts, that you have a great faith.

ANDERSON: Well, it is definitely our belief, sincerely, that faith is the biggest thing in the world, and out of the world, and with it anything is possible and everything is possible, and for the faith that I have I owe it to my mother.

MURROW: Are you nervous at all about your first performance, dramatic performance at the Met?

ANDERSON: I would say I am very concerned that it would be all that my friends wish it to be. I shouldn't like to disappoint any one of them, and certainly for myself I would like to do the very best possible.

MURROW: Well, I know you will disappoint none of your friends and thank you very much, Marian Anderson - Mrs. Fisher - for letting us come and visit you up near Danbury, Connecticut.

ANDERSON: Thank you, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

"SEE IT NOW"

FROM PRECINCT TO PRESIDENT

Harry S. Truman

February 2, 1958

See SPECIAL PROGRAMS

CBS NEWS SPECIAL
"Harry S. Truman, 1884 - 1972"
December 26, 1972

February 2, 1958

IN 1957, HARRY S. TRUMAN GRANTED MURROW AN INTERVIEW [redacted] IN WHICH HE REFLECTED AT LENGTH ON HIS CAREER AS SENATOR AND PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. AN HOUR OF THEIR CONVERSATION, [redacted] CONDUCTED OVER A PERIOD OF SEVERAL DAYS, WAS TELEVISED ON "SEE IT NOW"; IT WAS AGREED THAT OTHER PORTIONS OF THE INTERVIEW WOULD NOT BE MADE PUBLIC DURING MR. TRUMAN'S LIFETIME.

MURROW: Sir, if you had your choice of all the former Presidents -- and we could have him for two hours, let's say, on film -- which would you choose?

TRUMAN: Andrew Jackson. We'd get some salty things from old Andy.

(no page 2)

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST,
Sunday, February 2, 1958

MURROW: Well, let's go inside and see what Harry S. Truman has to say about his almost eight years in the White House.

~~TRUMAN: Well, we'd get some salty things from old Andy.~~

MURROW: Well, we'll hope for the best here.

~~MURROW:~~ Mr. President, you have talked frequently about the necessity for professionals in public life and in politics. What are the essential qualifications of a successful politician?

TRUMAN: It's just as necessary for [redacted] a man who understands politics to be in a position of operating the government which is founded on politics. A free government is a government by politicians, and a politician is a public relations man who knows how to get along with people. I think the most honorable title that can be given to a man is to say that he is a politician, and I've always said that the great statesmen you read about were all politicians or they would never have been statesmen. They become statesmen after they're in their graves, and I have a long time to go yet before I become a statesman. I claim that I've had experience from precinct to President.

MURROW: You should have titled your book that. Let's go back to your early childhood, Mr. President. What was the first job you had?

aac

~~NOT FOR RELEASE~~
~~before 5:00 PM, EST,~~
~~Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

TRUMAN: I imagine I must have been about twelve or thirteen. I got a job washing windows and mopping floors and wiping off bottles for a drug store at home. An old fellow by the name of Jim Clinton ran the drug store, and I used to go up and open up the store and mop the floor and straighten everything out. And we had a great many people in our home town who would not go into a saloon. There were a dozen saloons around the Square at Independence, and they'd come in for their early morning eye-opener behind the counter and would put a dime on the prescription case and pour their own and then go on out, and, of course, I wasn't supposed to have anything to do with that. But I saw it, and I found out that there were a great many of our leading citizens who were great uplifters publicly but they liked to do just like the old men who went in the saloons openly, and I got quite a kick out of that at twelve or thirteen years old, and I'll never forget the first three silver dollars I got in payment for that first week's work. That's the most important money I ever earned.

MURROW: Did this knowledge that you gained at three dollars a week in the drug store that some of the uplifters acted just like ordinary people serve you in good stead later on in politics?

~~NOT FOR RELEASE~~
~~before 5:00 PM, EST,~~
~~Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

TRUMAN: Yes, it did, for the simple reason that my old grandfather had told me when I was seven or eight years old that whenever he heard one of his neighbors up in the Amen corner of the church praying too loud, he went home and locked his smoke house. Well, this experience in this drug store conclusively proved that the old man was correct.

MURROW: Where did your military service begin?

TRUMAN: I had joined the National Guard in the organization of Battery B, on June the fourteenth, nineteen hundred and five. I was a charter member of the Battery and a Private, and they gave me a nice, beautiful blue uniform with a red cord around the shoulders and red stripes down the breeches legs, and I took it out and showed it to my old grandmother whose house had been burned by the Federals in the Civil War, and she looked at it, and said, "Well, Harry, that's a very beautiful uniform, but that's the first time a blue uniform's been in this house since the Civil War. Don't bring it back here." And I didn't.

aac

~~NOT FOR RELEASE~~
~~before 5:00 PM, EST,~~
~~Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

MURROW: Speaking of uniforms, I am told that at one point just before we got into World War II, you went to see General Marshall and asked to go back in the Service. Is that right?

TRUMAN: Yes, that's correct. I was a Senator at that time and had been a Colonel of Field Artillery since 1927. This was in 1940 or '41, and I went down to see the General and told him that I'd spent my time since I'd been in the Reserve Corps training these young men in field artillery and teaching them how to shoot, and that I'd like very much to go back into the Service in command of an artillery group, and I felt like I owed it to the country. The General pulled his spectacles down on his nose like that, and he said, "Mr. Pres --- Senator, how old are you?" I said, "I'm fifty-six." He says, "Senator, you're too damned old. You go on back and stay in the Senate." I says, "I'm four years younger than you are." He said, "Yes, but I'm already in." So I went back and stayed in the Senate.

MURROW: Well, getting back to the first war, what did you do immediately after your discharge in 1919?

—>

aac

~~NOT FOR RELEASE before 5:00 PM, EST, Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

TRUMAN: I went back to the farm and stayed there for most of the next three or four years, except that Eddie Jacobson and I decided to open a men's furnishing store on West 12th Street, and did, and I furnished the money and Eddie furnished the brains, and we had a wonderful business the first year and a half, and then Mr. Mellon began his wringing out process by making high money, just as we're going through now, and I went busted as one of the little business men. Never forgot it.

~~MURROW: Mr. President, I must be a bad reporter because I have neglected to ask you when you learned to play the piano.~~

~~TRUMAN: Well, when I was about - oh, I guess I must have been eight or nine years old, we succeeded in raising enough money to buy a piano and then I began to take a few piano lessons from Mrs. E. C. White, who was a pupil of Leschetizky. I got a viewpoint on good music which was a wonderful asset to me as -- in an educational way, but when I was about fifteen or sixteen years old, I decided that it was a sissy thing to be a piano player and I quit.~~

~~MURROW: How was it that the "Missouri Waltz" became rather your unofficial theme song, Mr. President?~~

aac

MURROW: How was it that the "Missouri Waltz" became your unofficial theme song, Mr. President?

TRUMAN: I hate to go into the details on that, but the "Missouri Waltz" was composed by a man from Iowa in 1914 and is called "Hushabye My Baby". It's a ragtime song, and if you let me say what I think -- I don't give a damn about it. But I can't say it out loud because it's the song of Missouri. It's as bad as "The Star Spangled Banner" so far as music is concerned.

MURROW: Well, sir, I assume it would be true to say that you achieved national prominence through the Truman Committee?

TRUMAN: Well, the proper name of that committee was the Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program. The newspaper people named it the Truman Committee. I didn't.

MURROW: What would you say its major accomplishments were?

TRUMAN: Well, that Committee was organized for the purpose of helping the United States Government to win the war -- to be an asset to the Commander-in-Chief, the President of the United States, and to General Marshall who was the organizer of the Armed Forces of the United States, and it was handled in just that way.

(MORE)

aac

~~NOT FOR RELEASE before 5:00 PM, EST, Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

TRUMAN: We made investigations of construction programs, and when things were in a tangled condition and action could not be had on the construction of, we'll say training planes and engines for training planes and for fighter planes and for tanks, we'd look into the matter without the idea of headlines or publicity and try to correct the situation. That was the principal reason for its organization, because I happen to know the facts behind the committee on the conduct of the war in the War between the States. The committee on the conduct of the war was said by Robert E. Lee to have been worth two divisions to the Confederacy, and we didn't want that to happen in this war in which we were trying to save the free world from destruction.

MURROW: Do you have the feeling, Mr. President, that occasionally the Congressional power of investigation is abused or stretched too far?

ag

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST,
Sunday, February 2, 1958

TRUMAN: Yes, [redacted] I've always thought that there are times when the investigative power of the Congress of the United States, both in the House and the Senate, has been abused. It's a power that's absolutely essential, however, to get intelligent legislation, and the objective of the investigation is for the purpose of legislation. Legislation came about as a result of our own investigations in this special committee - legislation that was of great benefit to the country.

MURROW: Isn't it true that the first time you heard of the atom bomb was when Secretary of War Stimson asked you to call off an investigation of Oak Ridge?

aac

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST,
Sunday, February 2, 1958

TRUMAN: I had started an investigation at Oak Ridge and at Pasco, Washington, and the Secretary of War called me up and said that he wanted to talk to me about that, and I told him I'd come down and see him. He said, "No, I'm coming down and see you." And he came down and sat down in my office and said, "I want to say to you, Senator, that this is one of the most important things that's ever been done in the history of the world. We can't afford to have a public investigation of it and I'd appreciate it very much if you would call off your dogs and not have the investigation." I said, "Mr. Secretary, if you tell me that, I know it's true and I'll call 'em off." And I did.

MURROW: In 1944, did you think you would remain in the Senate?

TRUMAN: Yes, I thought I'd stay there the rest of my life. I was hoping that things would come around so that when I got through with that term as Vice-President I could go back to the Senate, but it didn't happen that way.

MURROW: You were prepared to nominate Jimmy Byrnes for Vice-President. Weren't you?

TRUMAN: Yes. Jimmy called me from Washington and said the President had decided that he'd like to have him for Vice-President, and asked me if I would nominate him, and I told him that if the President wanted him, I'd do the best I could.

(MORE)

aac

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 P.M., EST.
Sunday, February 2, 1958

(no para.)

TRUMAN: (CONT'D) I didn't know I'd be any asset to him [redacted] as a nominator, but then if that's what he wanted, I'd try to do it, and I found out afterwards that there had been a meeting in the White House a week before that in which it had been decided that the Senator from Missouri was the favorite of the President, but I didn't know about that and never found it out, and a short time after Byrnes had called me, just before I left for Chicago, Senator Barkley called me and asked me if I'd nominate him, and I told him I couldn't nominate two of them, that I'd told Byrnes I'd nominate him.

MURROW: Had you prepared a speech in nomination of Mr. Byrnes?

TRUMAN: Yes, I had a good speech ready. I think it would have nominated him.

MURROW: You never heard directly from Mr. Roosevelt, himself, that you were his choice?

TRUMAN: Not until Thursday afternoon when the Vice-President was to be nominated the next day. They had a meeting of all the Democratic Party leaders in the Blackstone Hotel and asked me to come over, and Bob Hannegan had placed a call for the President, and the President's question - as soon as it was connected - the phone was between twin beds, and you know the President really didn't need a phone - all he needed to do was to raise the window. I could hear every word he said. (MORE)

~~NOT FOR RELEASE before 5:00 P.M., EST. Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

~~TRUMAN: (CONT'D)~~ He said, "Bob, have you got that fellow lined up yet?" Bob said, "No, Mr. President, he's the contrariest man I ever had anything to do with." "You - Bob, you tell him that if he wants to take a chance on losing the election and perhaps losing this war, that's his responsibility." And he hung up. Well, I was sunk. I didn't know what to do hardly. I walked around the room and finally told him I'd do it, and I'd told all my friends that under no circumstances would I be a candidate, but when the President made a statement like that, I had to do something about it, and I couldn't find anybody to nominate me. I finally found my colleague, Bennett Clark, who was the Senior Senator from Missouri, and he agreed to nominate me.

MURROW: Would it be fair to say that some of your subsequent disagreements with Mr. Byrnes may have stemmed from the fact that he had the feeling that he might, or rather, that he should have been the Vice-Presidential nominee?

jsh

~~NOT FOR RELEASE before 5:00 PM, EST, Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

TRUMAN: Well, I don't know. There might be something in that, but I --- I never really thought that was the case. I think that Jimmy had a superiority complex in reference to the Junior Senator from Missouri and that he felt maybe I was not capable and did not know exactly what ought to be done, and that it was his duty to take it over and do it like it ought to be done. But when a fellow becomes President, he really knows where he's going, and I had to tell Mr. Byrnes that I was the President and he'd have to act as Secretary of State at my direction, and I think that's the principal thing that caused the disagreement. There never was any difficulty between me and the Secretaries of State that I had before and after Byrnes. Stettinius and General Marshall and Dean Acheson could not be improved upon as men who understood how the State Department should be run, and the top-notch man in the State Department, in my opinion, was Dean Acheson.

aac

16

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST.
Sunday, February 2, 1958

MURROW: You have been quoted as saying that you never liked yes-men around you?

TRUMAN: I don't.

MURROW: Did Acheson and Marshall argue with you much?

TRUMAN: Yes. Yes, indeed, and roughly sometimes, but when the decision was made, I never had any doubt but what their cooperation and loyalty would be just the same as if they hadn't argued with me. But I don't want men around me that won't tell me the truth, and as they see it, because you can't operate if you have a bunch of men who put you up on a pedestal and say everything you do is right, 'cause that can't be possible.

MURROW: Exactly what did you feel when you were told that you were President?

TRUMAN: Well, I was shocked, of course, because I had hoped to serve out my term as Vice-President and go back to the Senate. I had the most pleasant time in my political life in the Senate of the United States, and, of course, I was shocked when I found out that I had become President of the United States in the midst of the war which was not over yet - the war with Germany and with Japan was still going on, and it was overwhelming almost to step right in and take charge of a situation with which I was not completely and entirely familiar.

STET.

NOT FOR RELEASE
Before 5:00 PM, EST.
Sunday, February 2, 1953

TRUMAN: (CTD) ~~I tried the best I could to inform myself on the subject. My Special Committee gave me a lot of information behind the things they otherwise wouldn't have. I wasn't too familiar with foreign affairs, because I was on the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate.~~

MURROW: Well, Mr. President, in a period of three months, you became President, the war in Europe ended, Japan surrendered, the nuclear age began, the United Nations was created. No man in history ever rode such a tiger in such a short time. How did you manage it? How did you keep your equilibrium? How did you sleep at night?

TRUMAN: No trouble sleeping at night. I -- all my life whenever it comes time to make a decision, I make it and forget about it, and go to work on something else, and when these things came before me, as President of the United States, I made the decision on them and went into the next thing. You never have time to stop.

(MORE)

bg

TRUMAN: (CHD) You've got to keep going because there's always a decision just ahead of you that you've got to make, and you don't want to look back. If you make a mistake in one of those decisions, correct it by another decision and go ahead. That's all you can do.

MURROW: Did religion help to sustain you?

TRUMAN: It certainly did. It certainly did. I come from a religious family, and we believe in efficacy of prayer. The directions that are put out in the Book of the Law under the Jewish part of the Bible, in the tenth -- the twentieth chapter of Exodus and the fifth chapter of Deuteronomy are directions on how to live with other people, and the final thing that is the most important to any man who wants to do the right thing, is the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters of the Gospel according to Saint Matthew - that's the Sermon on the Mount. It's awful hard to live up to those things, but if a man comes as near it as he possibly can, he usually makes a good citizen.

MURROW: ~~Speaking of the Sermon on the Mount, you moved immediately~~ to recognize Israel after it was created. Did it you?

[illegible] [illegible] connect.

bg

MURROW: Speaking of history, Mr. President, how much opportunity did you have to read history while you were in the White House?

TRUMAN: I read myself to sleep every night reading the troublesome ~~biography of some President or some ruler of the past.~~

MURROW: Which President had the most trouble?

TRUMAN: Andrew Johnson.

MURROW: Why?

TRUMAN: Because he didn't have loyalty in his Cabinet - was the principal reason, and because he was trying to carry out the policy of Abraham Lincoln, and the ~~radicals in the radical~~ radicals in charge of the Congress were determined to make an example of the South on secession, and they succeeded in preventing Andrew Johnson from carrying out the policies of Abraham Lincoln. I've always thought that if Lincoln had lived, they'd have done the same thing to him that they did to Andrew Johnson, and there's a wonderful book out on Andrew Johnson written by Stryker I think is his name, that shows just exactly what that man had to go through with. He was, in my opinion, the greatest Constitutionalist that was ever in the White House.

→

24
NOT FOR RELEASE
Before 5:00 PM, EST
Sunday, February 2, 1958

MURROW: Speaking of Constitutionalists, which act of yours do you think will go down in history as being the most significant, strictly in terms of the constitutional history of this country?

TRUMAN: Well, the action that was taken with the Berlin Airlift and the Greece and Turkish thing, and the Korean affair -- I think you'll find that that established beyond a doubt that the President has the power to meet an emergency when it comes up, and he should take the bull by the horns and meet it when it's necessary.

MURROW: But in terms strictly of the Constitution, Mr. President?

TRUMAN: That's constitutional. That's in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief as set out in the Constitution of the United States.

MURROW: I was rather expecting that you might have suggested it would have been the dismissal of General MacArthur in terms of re-establishing or rather establishing again the control of the civilian over the military.

TRUMAN: That was only following a precedent. If you remember, James K. Polk had the same sort of trouble with some of his generals in the Mexican War, and Abraham Lincoln [illegible] after General

(MORE)

jsh

TRUMAN: (D) McClellan, particularly, stands out as an example in comparison with the MacArthur thing, and the Constitution provides that the President is the Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces of the United States, and when he acts as Commander-in-Chief, he's got the right to hire and fire Generals any place he pleases. There was nothing new about that at all. When the Commanding General of the Far East was insubordinate, he got relieved the same as any other General would under the same circumstances.

MURROW: How did you decide to remove General MacArthur and whom did you consult, Mr. President?

TRUMAN: Well, General MacArthur had been becoming rather insubordinate as the proconsul in Asia, which he considered himself, and when he disobeyed orders directly, it became necessary to find out the best thing to do about it. MacArthur had been making statements on policy in the government which he had no right to do. The policy is made at headquarters in Washington by the President and his Cabinet. That is, the Foreign Policy of the United States is made entirely by the President with the assistance of the Secretary of State.

(MORE)

jsh

~~28~~
NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST.
~~Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

~~TRUMAN: (CONT'D)~~ General Mac Arthur sent an article to Dave Lawrence's magazine and didn't send a copy to the White House or to the President. I happened to find it in the press room of the White House, and I suppressed it because it was not in line with the policy of the United States government, and I sent him word that he couldn't do a thing of that kind, and then he was willing to have the matter withdrawn, and a short time after that he did the same thing over again completely contrary to orders. He had acted that way in several instances, not only with me but with President Roosevelt, and I stood it as long as I could, and I made up my mind the best thing to do with him was to give him the McClellan treatment — that was to retire him. General Marshall said he hoped I'd postpone the situation until he had had a chance to read the messages over the last two years, and he also made the statement that he had matters pending before the Congress which might be affected by it. General Bradley said he ought to be fired -- he's a good military man. Averell Harriman, the Ambassador, said if he were in my place, he'd have fired him long ago. I had my mind already made up, but I didn't tell them. And then I told them to come back in two days or the next morning — I forget which it was — and they came back, and General Marshall had read all the messages by that time and he made the statement to me — he said, "Mr. President, you ought to have fired him two years ago, or at least six months ago," he said. And I then discussed the matter with the other people.

(MORE) ish

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST
Sunday, February 2, 1958

TRUMAN: ~~(CONT)~~ Dean Acheson still thought it was poor politics and bad business to fire him. And then I issued the order, had General Marshall write the order out, himself, in longhand, which was to be forwarded to Frank Pace, who was Secretary for the Army, and who was then in Korea. We couldn't reach Frank Pace at all, and General Bradley came over to see me early Monday morning. This all happened on Friday - Thursday, Friday and Saturday. General Bradley came to see me and said that some Tribune reporter had obtained a leak in the Pentagon and he thought the whole thing would be released. "Well," I said, "send a direct message to the General and tell him he's relieved, but inform him also that if we'd have been able to get hold of Frank Pace, we'd have had it delivered in person." And that's how the whole thing came about.

MURROW: Did you expect such a public clamor as resulted?

TRUMAN: Oh yes, I expected a public clamor like that. It's too bad that the General didn't have a good political advisor. If he'd of consulted me about what he ought to do, I would have made it much easier for him and he'd be much more popular man than he is today.

bg

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 P.M. EST.
Sunday, February 2, 1958

MURROW: And what advice would you have given him?

TRUMAN: Well, when he landed in San Francisco, the first thing he should have done was to take a plane and come to Washington and call on his Commander-In-Chief and accept the situation as it was. Then he should have started out and probably gone to New York, Chicago, New Orleans, or Houston, wherever it was he went, and he'd've had tremendous ovations, and the situation would not have developed as it did. He was trying to build up public opinion without consulting the fellow who understood public opinion. I never had anything personal against the General. He's a great military man, and it's a terrible thing when you have to do that to a man who's been in the military service for fifty-one years. But he brought it on himself, and it had to be done.

MURROW: Well, sir, some of your critics claim that some of your controversial decisions were promoted by petulance.

TRUMAN: Oh, I never acted when I was out of sorts, because a man does some things that he ordinarily wouldn't do. I think about the only time that I ever acted when I was really out of sorts was when I told a music critic where to get off when he said some mean things about my daughter. If I had thought about it a while I probably wouldn't have done it.

→

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 P.M. EST,
Sunday, February 2, 1953

MURROW: Much of the criticism, perhaps the major criticism of you, has been aimed at your continuing loyalty to friends even when they were in trouble, and particularly, I remember, your attending Mr. Prendergast's funeral.

TRUMAN: I imagine that was the truth but I've always felt that a man's career is based on his friendships and his loyalty to those friends. I always believed in loyalty to friends unless they did something radically wrong which required prosecution or something like that. I never fronted for any of them when they got into trouble with the law, but I always felt that when a fellow was in trouble was the time that he needed his friends most and then's when they should stick with him, and when you have an idea that your friends are not guilty of anything; when they're even being prosecuted, I believe in loyalty to 'em, but of course, I don't believe in interfering with the law, and I never fronted for anybody in a criminal case.

MURROW: In 1952, the Republican slogan was "Korea, Corruption and Communism". What about Communism in the government?

bz

→

~~NOT FOR RELEASE~~
~~before 5:00 P.M. EST.~~
~~Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

TRUMAN: I don't think there was ever enough Communism in the government to create that comment for the simple reason that there [redacted] is complete loyalty with the vast majority of the more than two million employees of the United States government, and in all their hunting around and in all the charges that were made, there was never a single one of the dema[redacted]gogic charges proved -- that they never found a single Communist in the place where the demagogues said it was. That demagogue's McCarthy if you want to know who I'm referring to.

MURROW: Speaking of demagogues, what's the best way to deal with them?

TRUMAN: With ridicule. Ridicule is the best thing in the world for a demagogue because he is a monumental egotist or he wouldn't be one, and when you can stick pins in him and let the wind out and get people to laughing at him, he's through.

~~MURROW: Well, sir, if we can turn from domestic personalities to foreign ones, I wonder if you would give us your impression of some of the national leaders you've dealt with.~~

~~TRUMAN: Fine guy.~~

~~MURROW: First Churchill.~~

NOT FOR RELEASE
Before 5:00 P.M. EST.
Sunday, February 2, 1958

TRUMAN: (OFF) He is one of the pigheadest man that ever I've come in contact with, and whenever I wanted him to perform, I called Stalin up and told him what I'd like to have done, and then Molotov would do it; otherwise, he wouldn't act at all. Stalin, at Potsdam, that's the only place I ever saw him, made a very agreeable impression upon me. He was easy enough to get along with and he was -- it was easy enough to make agreement with him. Of course, I didn't know at that time he had no intention of keeping them.

MURROW: Mr. President, I remember that you told Stalin at Potsdam that we had the atomic bomb.

TRUMAN: Yes.

MURROW: Did he seem to be impressed at that time?

TRUMAN: No. I don't think he quite understood what I was talking about. I told him that we had discovered a tremendously powerful explosive and that we proposed to use ~~which had come to a [illegible] by an explosion in New Mexico, and then we proposed to use~~ it to end the war with Japan, and he smiled and said he was very happy to hear it, and then the conversation ended, and I went my way and he went his. This was after the --- one of the conferences at Potsdam.

bg

→

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST,
Sunday, February 2, 1958

MURROW: Well, when the bomb was dropped, the war was near to ending anyway. Was this the result of a miscalculation of the Japanese potential? Was our Intelligence faulty in this area?

TRUMAN: It was done on the theory that our troops were expecting to invade Japan in a very short time through the Tokyo plain and on the southwest side of Japan also, and it was estimated that it would take about a million and a half men to make that invasion, and in all probability there'd be a half a million of them casualties and two hundred and fifty thousand of them killed, and when we had this powerful new weapon, I had no qualms about using it, because a weapon of war is a destructive weapon. That's the reason none of us want war and all of us are against war, but when you have the weapon that will win the war, you'd be foolish if you didn't use it.

MURROW: Do you have any reason to think in historical terms that this new and terrible hydrogen weapon will not be used?

TRUMAN: I hope it will never have to be used, because I hope we'll keep the peace in the world and it won't be necessary. If the world ever gets into a turmoil, however, it will be used. You can be sure of that.

→

ag

~~NOT FOR RELEASE before 5:00 PM, EST, Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

MURROW: What was the most difficult decision you had to make as President?

TRUMAN: The most difficult decision I had to make while I was in office was Korea.

MURROW: Any regrets?

TRUMAN: Not the slightest - not the slightest in the world. The reason that I was able to make the Korean decision, I remembered Munich and the League of Nations, and we had just established the United Nations. The United Nations passed a resolution which had recognized the Republic of Korea. ~~[illegible]~~ It had been established, and when the Republic of Korea was about to be overcome by aggressions started by the Communists, backed by Russia, and --- and what later became Communist China, it seemed to me that the proper thing was to establish the United Nations as a going concern, and that's what I tried to do. ~~and that was but that was the most difficult decision I had to make during my whole administration of eight years.~~

MURROW: Were you surprised when Red China entered the Korean War?

TRUMAN: Yes, I was - yes I was, because I had been assured in October by the /commanding/ General of the Far East of the United States Forces that they would not do it.

→

ag

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST.
Sunday, February 2, 1953

~~MURROW: What about the decision not to bomb North of the Yalu, Mr. President?~~

~~TRUMAN: That was one of the decisions that was made in -- in the hope that that would prevent the bringing on of a third World War.~~

MURROW: Mr. President, why did you choose General Eisenhower to head up the NATO Organization?

TRUMAN: Well, General Eisenhower had been the Commander of the Allied Forces in Europe. He knew all the heads of States, and he knew all the military commanders, and this organization, I thought, was one of the most important we've ever had anything to do with, because the passage of that NATO Bill reversed the foreign policy of the United States completely from isolationism to internationalism, and I thought that General Eisenhower understood the situation as well as anybody that ever had anything to do with it. He was then President of Columbia University, and I asked him if he would be willing to take over the job, and he said he'd do anything in the world for the welfare of the country. And he took it and did a good job of it.

bg

—30—

~~NOT FOR RELEASE before 5:00 PM, EST, Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

MURROW: Is it true that you offered him the Presidency at Potsdam?

TRUMAN: No, I didn't offer him the Presidency. I told him that a great many people who had been in his position had been willing to run for the Presidency, but it was my opinion that a man at the top with a military reputation could only have that reputation smeared if he went into politics, because being the Commanding General of the Armed Forces of a nation is entirely different from being the head of the State in a political job.

MURROW: So it would be fair to characterize it as being almost an offer and a warning simultaneously. Was that it?

TRUMAN: It could be taken as that. I gave him wise counsel, and he wrote me the best letter on why a military man shouldn't be President of the United States that's ever been stated, and it's still in existence.

MURROW: And ....

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST,
Sunday, February 2, 1958

TRUMAN: He didn't write the letter to me. He wrote it to a newspaper man in New Hampshire, but he gave me a copy of it and I've still got it, and I never used it on him at all.

MURROW: Is it your feeling as an historian that military men enter the White House under a basic handicap?

TRUMAN: Yes. They've been educated along one line, and a man to be President of the United States has to understand the whole picture, and the only way he can get the whole picture is by varied experience, and he doesn't get that in the military. You can take the historical members of the profession who've been Presidents of the United States. There was Zachary Taylor and General Grant, and the present occupant of the White House are good men. They're honorable men. They want to do the right thing, but they've been educated in a manner that's like a horse with blinders on - he only sees one direction right down the road.

MURROW: Mr. President, you had almost eight years in the White House. What do you regard as the qualifications for a successful President?

TRUMAN: Well, the first and most important requisite is that he must be a fundamentally honest man - intellectually and every other way, and an intellectually honest man will usually succeed in any --- any line of business he takes up.

(MORE)

aac

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST,
Sunday, February 2, 1958

MURROW: It is true, isn't it Mr. President, that historically greater progress has been made when we have had what is called a strong President in the White House, a man who is prepared to do battle with the Congress?

TRUMAN: That's correct. That's correct. A President who doesn't have a fight or two with Congress is not considered a very strong man. It's necessary and it's all right. There's nothing wrong with it. It's not a personal matter. It's a matter of the Congress always trying to infringe the Presidential rights, and a good strong President -- the Congress will accuse him of trying to infringe the Congressional rights. In each case there's always some good accomplished, because the final result will be in the interests of the people, and the fact that we have that division of powers makes it much more safe for the people than it would otherwise. The only efficient government is a dictator's government, and a free government can't be as efficient as one where one decision meets the whole situation, and it's not good. I think our government is the best one that's ever been organized in the history of the world, and I know something about the governments of the world.

→

rt

NOT FOR RELEASE 44
before 5:00 PM, EST.
Sunday, February 2, 1958

TRUMAN: (CONT.) But I don't think that it would have been right for me to run for the Senate at that time, and Missouri has two excellent Senators, and I have no idea and no ambition to unseat either one of them. They're both young men. They're both energetic and they've both made good Senators, and I think it would be wrong for me to try to run for the Senate again, although I'd give anything in the world if I were in the Senate.

MURROW: What about the proposal that former Presidents should be made, so to speak, honorary members of the United States Senate?

TRUMAN: In the time I was in the Senate, I was instrumental in getting together some Senators, and a Bill was introduced way back there in the 30's sometime to make former Presidents and Vice-Presidents members of the House and the Senate with the privilege of sitting with those bodies, and joining in debate and attending committee meetings, but not having any vote which would not unbalance the state's rights to two Senators in the Senate. It didn't get anywhere. It never has gotten anywhere, and I doubt if it ever will.

(MORE)

ag

~~NOT FOR RELEASE~~ 45
~~before 7:30 PM, EST,~~
~~Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

TRUMAN: (CONT) The Senate, I am afraid, feels that a man with too much experience might give some of them an inferiority complex, and they're against it. ~~You know, the United States government turns its Chief Executives~~ out to grass. They're just allowed to starve or -- in fact, sometimes they're tempted to become advertising mediums on account of the fact that they've held the greatest office in the history of the world. Two or three of our Presidents practically starved to death because they wouldn't do that. No President has ever done that in the history of the country, but with the situation as it has developed, first thing you know some President will do it, because he'd rather do that than starve. The country, in its present condition, and I'm not talking for myself because I've never asked for anything - ought to see that the President of the United States is equipped and taken care of just as the Commanding Generals and Admirals of the Armed Forces of the United States.

NOT FOR RELEASE
before 5:00 PM, EST.
Sunday, February 2, 1958

MURROW: And the proposal now is that former Presidents should get the munificent sum of twenty-five thousand dollars a year on which they'll have to pay taxes?

TRUMAN: Yes. That's probably all right - well, that's better than nothing of course. But then, that's a penurious way to take care of the situation. The thing that is --- that is needed worse than anything else is enough help to carry on the -- what's left of the office of the President after it gets out. I have the biggest individual mail in the State of Missouri, and maybe bigger than any in a lot of other states. It all has to be answered and taken care of. It takes three clerks to answer my mail. My postage bill is something tremendous. I have to have a place where I can see people. I see an immense number of people all day long every day in the year, every --- and they have to have some place where I can talk to them. I can't talk to them in a cubby hole or a back room. That has to be paid for and I've been paying for it. If I hadn't inherited some property that finally paid things through, I'd be on [illegible] now.

MURROW: Do you think the limitation on the third term was a wise amendment?

→

ag

~~NOT FOR RELEASE before 5:00 PM, EST, Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

TRUMAN: No, I do not. It was passed in ~~nineteen hundred and forty-eight~~ 1948 because they had -- they were afraid that another Roosevelt would come along in the Democratic Party and that there'd be maybe a three or four-term President. They had no fear of me because they didn't think I could be elected in 1948. But they were fooled, and they eliminated me from that amendment. I could be elected as many times as I wanted to for the Presidency of the United States under the amendment to the Constitution, but I have no ambition to be President again. I've had all I wanted.

MURROW: So then they hated Roosevelt so much that they made a lame duck out of Eisenhower. Is that it?

TRUMAN: That's exactly what they did. That's exactly what they did. They made a lame duck out of their own man, and I think they're as sorry as they can be, but they can't get that amendment repealed. It's not like the Prohibition Amendment.

MURROW: What did you fail to do as President that you would like to have done most, Mr. President?

TRUMAN: Well, there are a great many things that I would have very much liked to have accomplished while I was President of the United States. I think the two most important that I was not able to accomplish were a health program and an educational program for the people of the United States.

(MORE)

aac

The ordinary man with a family and a middle bracket income is not able to have the hospitalization and the medical care that the fellow who has a great income can afford. Some means ought to be found to give him an insurance background so that when the time comes he can get the benefit of all the great things that the medical profession has discovered. You see, they've discovered things which have prolonged the life and the expectancy of every citizen of the country, and the ordinary man and the poor man ought to have the same opportunity to use those things as the man who has a tremendous income. I was trying to arrange an insurance program where [redacted] the money would be available to pay his doctor bills and pay his hospital bills, and yet the very people who would profit by this were the ones that sabotaged it in the Congress. That was the American Medical Association if you want me to name 'em. And on the educational proposition, it's my opinion that equal education means, in the end, equal opportunity for everybody, no matter what his race, color or creed may be. ~~and if he~~

— o —

CBS NEWS
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York
Plaza 1-2345

30-31

"FROM PRECINCT TO PRESIDENT: SOME REFLECTIONS BY HARRY S. TRUMAN" a "SEE IT NOW" report

as broadcast over the

CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

February 2, 1958 - 5:00 to 6:00 PM, EST

GUEST: Harry S. Truman

INTERVIEWER: Edward R. Murrow

PRODUCERS: Edward R. Murrow
Fred W. Friendly

~~NOT FOR RELEASE~~
~~before 5:00 PM, EST,~~
~~Sunday, February 2, 1958~~

February 2, 1958

~~HARRY S. TRUMAN - EDWARD R. MURROW~~

(IN 1957, HARRY S. TRUMAN GRANTED MURROW AN INTERVIEW AT KEY WEST, IN WHICH HE REFLECTED AT LENGTH ON HIS CAREER AS SENATOR AND PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. AN HOUR OF THE INTERVIEW, CONDUCTED OVER A PERIOD OF SEVERAL DAYS, WAS TELEVISED ON "SEE IT NOW"; IT WAS AGREED THAT OTHER PORTIONS OF THE INTERVIEW WOULD NOT BE MADE PUBLIC DURING MR. TRUMAN'S LIFETIME.)

MURROW:

"From Precinct to President" was primarily intended for viewing in the year 1990, or even later, when historians may find it useful to examine the Truman years in the language and voice of the man from Independence who presided over the first eight years of the atomic age. We expect that all of Mr. Truman's friends and most of his foes, present and future, will find merit in such a project even as we might find value in a filmed record of Truman's great-uncle John Tyler's account of the controversy with Daniel Webster over the Vice-Presidency, or Mr. Lincoln's version of the firing of McClellan, or Wilson's frustration over the League of Nations. ~~For several days, just a year ago, Mr. Truman talked with me here on this beach in the Florida Keys. He talked of his years in Independence and those in Washington.~~

(MORE)

aac

TRANSCRIPT

All copyright and right of copyright in this transcript and in the broadcast are owned by CBS. This transcript may not be copied or reproduced or used in any way (other than for purposes of reference, discussion and review) without the written permission of Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

See 4-B-21
ERM Personal
"SPECIAL PEOPLE"
H.S.T.

CBS NEWS SPECIAL

"Harry S. Truman, 1884 - 1972"

as broadcast over the

CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

Tuesday, December 26, 1972

7:30 - 8:30 PM, EST

PRODUCED BY CBS NEWS

REPORTER: Walter Cronkite

EXECUTIVE PRODUCER: Burton Benjamin

The Sunday Bulletin

TV · Amusements

5

TV PROGRAMS
THEATER
MOVIES
MUSIC
RADIO RESORTS

PHILADELPHIA, PA., FEBRUARY 2, 1958 TB

"See It Now" Publicity

TELEVISION

Truman Gives Murrow 'Documentary for Posterity'

By REX POLIER

ONE YEAR AGO, Edward R. Murrow and former President Harry S. Truman met on a small island in the Florida Keys to keep a rendezvous for a good long talk. What resulted may become something unique in historical records.

Before cameras and an open sound track, the man from Independence, Mo., poured out a total of 16 hours of recorded conversation. It covered everything from his first job at 13, sweeping out a drugstore, to his opinion of Russia's Molotov ("pig-headedest man I ever saw!").

More than 50,000 feet of film were shot inside the small, white-clapboard bungalow where the conversations took place on Islamorada. It would take nine hours to run it all off. The official printed transcript is eight inches thick.

• • •

THIS Murrow now intends as a "documentary for posterity." He hopes it will be the first in a series of lengthy, filmed conversations with U. S. Presidents, and possibly other leading statesmen, after they have retired from the heat of politics.

Originally, the CBS newsman had no intention of showing it on television. He merely contemplated the recorded conversations as an addition to the CBS archives—at least for the present. But when he began thinking of the conversations that took place in the pre-sputnik era, a great many things said by the ex-President seemed rather pertinent in the light of today's conditions.

So today, at 5 P. M. on Channel 10, Murrow will show a special 60-minute excerpt from these filmed conversations as a See It Now program under the title of "From Precinct to President: Some Reflections by Harry S. Truman."

• • •

IN HIS New York office the other day, Murrow leaned back in his chair, tucked his thumbs under a pair of fancy, green suspenders, and affirmed that the program's intentions are educational, not political.

Nevertheless, considering how controversial a figure the ex-President is, Murrow conceded with a chuckle that he and his network "could be accused of bias" in originating the program.

"I will be criticised, I suppose, by some, for not contradicting certain statements that Mr. Truman makes during the conversations," Murrow said. "It wasn't my job to debate or to criticise. In my interviews last year with Tito and Chou En-lai, I did not debate with them, or criticise, which, here again, was not my job."

As one who has not been afraid to air controversial subjects, Murrow asserted his faith in people accepting controversy, if properly presented—even by those with divergent viewpoints.

• • •

AS HE RECALLED different things that happened during the four days he was on Islamorada with the ex-President, Murrow frequently chuckled. "I had forgotten what a brisk, determined little man he is," he said.

"We had agreed that there would be no submission of questions in advance and no taboo questions. I

Continued on Page 2

THEATER

A Truman Documentary on TV

Continued From First Page

agreed, completely informally with him, that I would turn over to the Truman Library certain portions—especially some where he talks of contemporary personalities.

"He was very crisp and very direct. He never dodged a question. And he was this without becoming either combative or pontifical. I had forgotten how direct and forthright he can be. He is a completely unequivocal man.

"He is a man who, as much as any other I have ever known, has no concern for hindsight. He has no regrets for any decision he ever made."

Murrow recalls asking Truman why he risked his future in the 1948 Presidential campaign on the critical issue of civil rights. "Because it was right—and we won," Truman replied.

"No extraneous words, no long dissertations, Murrow explained, chuckling. "When we talked about his friendship with the late Tom Pendergast, political boss of Kansas City, he said, 'When you aren't in trouble, you do not need friends. The real test of friendship is whether you stay with a friend when he is in trouble.' "

• • •

FEW PEOPLE knew that the conversations were taking place. Florida troopers sealed off the area. Aside from the camera crews, the only other persons present were Mrs. Truman and Murrow's wife. They were absent, either visiting friends or shopping while their menfolk were at work.

Murrow thinks that one of the best sequences of the conversations, and one which probably will be incorporated in today's excerpts, was the way Truman spoke of the scramble for the vice presidency nomination at the 1944 Democratic Convention in Chicago.

The ex-President told Murrow the story succinctly in two minutes. He said that he first agreed to nominate Jimmy Byrnes. Then the late Alvin Barkley called and asked if he would submit his name before the delegates for the post. Then, Steve Hannegan called and said that Franklin D. Roosevelt had expressed an interest in Harry S. Truman as a nominee for the job.

"I couldn't find anyone to nominate me," Truman chirped.

• • •

THE CONVERSATIONS brought out the names of Dwight D. Eisenhower, Jimmy Byrnes, General Douglas MacArthur and other American and foreign personalities. Many of these, including President Eisenhower, are to be mentioned in today's program, Murrow said.

Since the entire thing was filmed in what Murrow calls the "pre-Sputnik era," he thought it would be better not to up-date it "because the commentary will be even better because of these circumstances."

When Murrow asked Truman what he thought the judgment eventually would be on his administration, he laughed and said he'd leave that up to history.

The CBS newsman said Harry Truman still holds firmly to the opinion that any boy in the U. S. can become President. He was also outspoken in his defense of politicians.

"The running of affairs in public office is a professional job and should be handled by professionals," the former President insisted.

• • •

MURROW explained that most filmed conversations with Presidents and great political figures are made during their active years and consequently could be suspected of a bit of taint. By filming them after they have retired from the fires of battle, they are, presumably, more philosophical and objective.

Except for portions promised the Truman Library, all the Truman footage will be specially treated against deterioration and stored in CBS archives.

It was by stressing the value of such filmed interviews to students of history 100 to 200 years hence that Murrow won the consent of Truman to the project. He first approached him three years ago and asked him to think how important it would be today to have a one-hour filmed conversation of President Lincoln talking about the problems of his administration.

"When I asked Mr. Truman which President he'd most like to have on a filmed conversation, he said unhesitatingly, "Jackson."

'RUMPELSTILTSKIN,' played by Israel pantomimist Shai K. Ophir, dances with joy over his evil machinations in the fairy tale by that name to be presented in the Shirley Temple Storybook series today, 6.30 P. M., Ch. 3.

Shirley Temple to Offer 'Rumpelstiltskin' Today

RUMPELSTILTSKIN, one of fairyland's most notorious characters, comes alive today on television. The famous tale by the Brothers Grimm, presented as a one-hour musical, will be the second in the Shirley Temple Storybook series.

With a cast that includes John Raitt, Phyllis Love, Kurt Kasznar, and Shai K. Ophir, the noted pantomimist from Israel, it will be presented at 6.30 P. M. over Channel 3 here. Shirley Temple again will narrate and, this time, the network has promised more closeups of her than it gave in her first presentation ("Beauty and the Beast").

• • •

THE real "star" of the fairy tale is the evil, demanding dwarf, Rumpelstiltskin, whose role will be taken by Ophir. He came to the U. S. scarcely six months ago from his native Israel to promote his talents and in that time has spiraled from a small act in a tiny night club to today's starring TV role.

As Rumpelstiltskin, Ophir will depart from some of his pantomime and speak on several occasions.

Raitt will be seen as King Rupert who woos and weds the miller's daughter, Elsa, portrayed by Phyllis Love. The miller is played by Kurt Kasznar. Jonathan Harris plays Lord Karsch, the wicked tax collector.

• • •

ADULTS may remember that "Rumpelstiltskin" is the tale of Elsa, the miller's daughter, who, her father bragged, "could spin straw into gold." Actually, she couldn't.

Dragged before the wicked tax collector, Lord Karsch, the latter threatens Elsa with death unless she spins straw into gold. The wily dwarf then steps in and offers to do it for her if she will, in return, promise to give him "a little thing."

Later, Elsa meets and marries King Rupert and the king banishes his wicked tax collector for having forced her into spinning gold from straw. After Queen Elsa bears her son, Rumpelstiltskin shows up to claim his "little thing," and it turns out to be the baby. The royal couple plead with him not to do it. He offers to waive his claim if they can guess his name. The King and Queen overhear the dwarf singing a little rhyme with his name in it.

In the original fairy tale, the enraged dwarf maims himself and leaves, never more to trouble the Queen. However, in this television tale, Rumpel is forgiven and invited to become the baby's tutor.

FILL YOUR FREEZER WITH CHOICE

BLACK ANGUS STEER BEEF Guaranteed Tender side of BEEF 49c POUND

Order Now Supply Limited at this low price!

FREE CUTTING TO YOUR SPECIFICATIONS, IF YOU PHONE WITHIN 72 HRS.

PHONE TODAY ANdrews 9-3420 OPEN ALL DAY SUNDAY

HILL-N-DALE MEAT CO. DOWNINGTOWN, PA.

New Invisible Attractive HEARING AID GLASSES

Your Choice of Attractive Eyeglass Frame Styles

You can't see it!

audivox SUCCESSOR TO Western Electric HEARING AID DIVISION

The entire instrument is hidden! Newest electronic transistor miracle. No cords. No clothing noise. All hearing aid models in stock. Prices from $87.50.

Come in for FREE Demonstration

FAMOUS Optical Name for 60 YEARS ESTABLISHED 1898

HAUSSMANN OPTICAL CO.

DR. J. M. Kane, O. D. and Associates

726 CHESTNUT ST., Phila. WA 2-3090

Please contact me for private demonstration without obligation ( )
Please send complete details in plain envelope ( )
NAME _____ PHONE _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____

PLASTIC PLATES 1/3 Off my regular price
Repairs While You Wait
Dr. S. BELL 1303 Market

TRADE IN YOUR CAMERA ON AN ELECTRIC EYE AUTOMATIC MOVIE CAMERA

MALENA CO.

FREE PARKING for Our Customers On Lot in Back of Our Store

616 MARKET ST. (Cor. Marshall St.) PHILA. 6, PA.

OPEN WEDNESDAY EVENINGS

BUY HERE! PAY HERE! SAVE HERE!

COME IN AND LISTEN! NEW 1958

WEBCOR H-F FONOGRAFS

Here's a buy! Webcor Festival Portable—Magic Mind, 4 speeds, full range speaker. Fully automatic—permits playing stack of 33⅓ and 45 RPM records—all sizes intermixed.

$64.50 AS LOW AS $6.50 DOWN Balance small weekly payments

Musical $149.95

OPEN A 30-DAY CHARGE ACCOUNT Or Use Our Easy Payment Plan

PALMER TIRE & SUPPLY CO., Inc. 4203 WALNUT ST. CALL EV 2-4242 EST. 1911 Op. Wed., Fri. 'til 8:00 P.M.

FREE! Bing Crosby record

$100,000 CONTEST "YOU'RE WORTH YOUR WEIGHT IN GOLD"

NO PASSING THE BUCK

You deal only with one firm — Gerhard's—from start to finish—in making your purchases, obtaining delivery, installation, adjustments, repair service.

Gerhard's maintain the finest showrooms in the country manned by well trained, courteous salesmen who really know their products.

Gerhard's deliveries are made by their own service men who have been taught to handle your property with the same care that you would exercise.

Gerhard's service calls are received and handled by their own dispatchers. Gerhard's $20,000 parts inventory helps eliminate waiting for your part.

Gerhard's dispatch to your home specialists for your particular need, whether it be television, air conditioning, refrigeration, or appliance service.

exciting new Easy Combomatic WASHER/DRYER

MODEL CDH

Four Separate Clothes Conditioning Actions...
- Tilt-Tumble Washing ... 3 wash temperatures
- 4 Master Rinses ... 2 rinse temperatures
- Surge 'n Spin Clothes Saver ... clothes "breathe" fresh water
- Pre-heat Tilt-Tumble Drying ... 2 drying temperatures

They stand behind your new "EASY"! Our highly skilled service staff pictured above is with you when you make your selection in our gorgeous showrooms, when your washer and dryer are delivered to your home, and whenever you require service!

Come In or Phone . . LI 8-1171 or TU 4-8650

GERHARDS, Inc. LAUNDRY HEADQUARTERS GLENSIDE, PA. Easton Rd. & Keswick Ave.

Open Monday Wednesday & Friday Evenings

For Easy Washer "Win Your Weight in Gold" Contest details, see page 31 of "This Week" magazine, then get your entry blank at Gerhard's

RUPTURE-EASER

Reg. In U. S. Pat. Off. (A Piper Brace Product) Right or Left Side

Double $5.95 4.95 + Parcel Post

No Fitting Required A strong, form fitting, washable support.

JOSEPH RICHTER SURGICAL FITTERS WA 2-3862 N. W. Cor. 9th & Filbert Sts.

ADVERTISEMENT

NOTE: THE NEW ADDRESS OF OUR GREATLY ENLARGED OFFICES!

ADVERTISEMENT

To Every Man and Woman Who Wears GLASSES:

Sun-Post 2/3/58

On Television:

Truman Interview Is TV Picture With Depth

By Barbara Delatiner

"See It Now" yesterday presented an intimate and revealing portrait of former President Truman. The hour-long filmed program was a distillation of four days of conversation held last year in Florida between Truman and Edward R. Murrow. It made fot absorbing television fare. "From Precinct to President: Some Reflections by Harry S. Truman" offered a humanized, perceptive glimpse into the life and beliefs of the former President. It was, in a manner of speaking, an electronic memoir.

Barbara Delatiner

Relaxed, friendly and in apparent good humor —his remarks were dotted with chuckles and laugh-provoking anecdotes—Truman spoke with his usual vigor and frankness. He had strong opinions on every subject that Murrow introduced. These ranged from politicians ("a free government is a government of politicians . . . a successful statesman is a successful politician, only he's not called a statesman until his death") to military men as Presidents ("a military man has no varied experience . . . he may be a good man, but he's educated along only one line . . . He's like a horse with blinders on who can only see down the middle of the road").

With equal candor, Truman reviewed his seven years in the White House. His most difficult decision? Korea. "We had to establish the United Nations as a going concern." His use of the atomic bomb? "Any weapon of war is a destructive weapon, but when you have a weapon that will win the war, you'd be foolish not to use it." His biggest disappointment? "Not getting a health program and an educational program for the people of the United States."

Truman discussed the MacArthur affair. "I was following precedent . . . MacArthur had been becoming rather insubordinate . . . he disobeyed orders . . . He had been making policy statements . . . I stood it as long as I could and then I had to fire him." There were comments on some of the public figures with whom Truman came into contact during his political career. President Roosevelt: "The President didn't need a phone. All he needed to do was raise a window." Churchill: "He liked to argue, but he always kept his word." De Gaulle: "A hard person to talk to . . . I was never sure he'd keep his word." Nehru: "An honest man, but difficult to get along with." Molotov: "The pig-headedest man I ever came across." Stalin: "A pleasant man . . . I didn't know then that he wouldn't keep his promises." Especially illuminating were Truman's remarks on the problems of former Presidents. "The United States government turns chief executives out to grass . . . They're allowed to starve," he said. "We ought to see that Presidents are equipped and taken care of like generals and admirals . . . if I hadn't inherited some property, I'd be on relief now."

The producers, Murrow and Fred W. Friendly, report that when Truman agreed to the unprecedented film interview he expressed the hope that similar recordings would be made with all Presidents in years to come, because of their great value to future generations. The excellent visual document presented yesterday proves Truman right.

Noted in Brief

"Rumpelstiltskin" was transformed to the small screen yesterday with the one quality that makes fairy tales so appealing—magic. The second installment in "Shirley Temple's Storybook" was a delight, primarily because of the performance by Shai K. Ophir in the title role. Ophir's prancing, sprinting and spellcasting were worthy of the most polished dwarf. If anything, he made the supposedly villanous elf a most sympathetic character. His enthusiasm was enough to carry the entire story, though he did receive some competent help from John Raitt as the king, Phyllis Love as Elsa and Kurt Kasznar as Hans, her father. Even Shirley Temple's storytelling technique seemed improved. She was less nervous and more sure of herself . . .

Sid Caesar hit his old hysterical stride last night. The pantomime featuring Sid as a seal and Imogene Coca as his trainer was a gem. So was the closing satire on the "three horsetails." It should set Rock 'n Roll back at least a year. The "second date" sketch, more compressed than last week's, also was successful. A few more shows like this and Caesar and company will really be solidly entrenched in Sunday night TV . . . Somehow I just can't seem to work up any great enthusiasm for rodeos—not even for rodeos starring Roy Rogers, Dale Evans and Trigger . . .

The teenage parking skit repeated by Elaine May and Mike Nichols was just as delightful the second time around Saturday night on Perry Como's show as it was a few weeks back on "Omnibus" . . . Dean Martin may have been the "star" of Saturday night's hour-long telecast, but guests Frank Sinatra and Danny Thomas didn't give him much time to be alone. Maybe it helped, for the show was extremely diverting. Why is it that Sinatra is so much better on other people's shows than on his own? . . . Leonard Bernstein's lecture on "What is American Music?" may not have been as explicit as his first New York Philharmonic Young People's Concert, but it was just as entertaining. The music—Gershwin, Aaron Coplan, Virgil Thompson et al.—was wonderful . . . Steve Allen's take-off on the rating systems fell flat on its statistical face. The same thing can be said of his married men skit with Henry Fonda . . . Tried "End of the Rainbow" again Saturday night, but just couldn't stick with it. What garbage . . . Mike Wallace's session with Fulton Lewis Jr. comes under the heading of the dullest interview of the year . . .

Atherton, J. Wm.

ERM
FYI
FS 2/5

ATHERTON & CURRIER, INC.

ADVERTISING

420 LEXINGTON AVENUE
NEW YORK 17, N. Y.
CABLE ADDRESS: ATHURIER

February 4, 1958

Mr. Frank Stanton,
Columbia Broadcasting Company,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Stanton:

After viewing Mr. Edward Morrow last Sunday, I was quite frankly so extremely annoyed at a number of things which he permitted to go out over the air that I fully intended to sit down and write you about it. Mr. David Lawrence has done so much better a job than I could ever do in his column in this morning's Herald-Tribune that I am sending it to you and if you have not already read it, I hope you will do so.

Also, I trust that you will in some manner, shape or form get over to your great TV audience the points made by Mr. Lawrence because if it was not done it would be a damnable outrage against both President Eisenhower and Mr. MacArthur. It seems to me that someone in your Editing Department could easily have caught these obvious errors whether they were malicious or otherwise.

Why not give Mr. MacArthur the opportunity to go on the air on Mr. Morrow's time some Sunday and let the American public once again have the real truth brought to their attention.

With kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

J. Wm. Atherton

J. William Atherton

SIN
Brooks, Jack

March 19, 1958

Dear Congressman Brooks:

Very many thanks for your cordial letter of March 4th. I am delighted to hear that you enjoyed our SEE IT NOW interview with President Truman, and Fred Friendly and I greatly appreciate your taking the time to write to us about it.

Sincerely yours,

Congressman Jack Brooks
Congress of the United States
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

mcc

JACK BROOKS
2D DISTRICT, TEXAS

COUNTIES:
ANGELINA NEWTON
HARDIN ORANGE
JASPER SABINE
JEFFERSON SHELBY
LIBERTY TYLER
SAN AUGUSTINE

Congress of the United States
House of Representatives
Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEES: JUDICIARY
GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS
CHAIRMAN:
GENERAL GOVERNMENT ACTIVITIES SUBCOMMITTEE

March 4, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

It's been several weeks since CBS's "See It Now" interview with President Truman, but the program still stands strong in my mind, so I am adding my compliments to the many you have received already.

Jack Gould of the New York Times called the interview "One of the most remarkable human documents ever shown on television," and I certainly agree with him.

"See It Now" has an excellent record of television achievement in the past, and your interview with President Truman hit a new peak.

You and your colleague, Fred W. Friendly, are broadening the public's knowledge very beneficially with programs such as this one, and I look forward to viewing future presentations of this same high caliber.

Sincerely,
Jack Brooks

cc: Mr. Fred W. Friendly

Butler P. M

February 4, 1958

Dear Paul:

Thanks for the note about the scheduling of the Truman piece.

I hope you had a chance to see it.

Sincerely,

Mr. Paul M. Butler, Chairman
Democratic National Committee
1001 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington 6, D.C.

fc

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE
1001 CONNECTICUT AVENUE, N. W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

PAUL M. BUTLER
CHAIRMAN

TELEPHONE
DISTRICT 7-1717

January 21, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

I was delighted to read in the New York Times that "See It Now" has scheduled a one-hour documentary on former President Harry S. Truman's rise "From Precinct to President," Sunday, February 2.

I thought that you might be interested in knowing that Mr. Truman will be honored by thousands of Democrats at "The Harry S. Truman Dinner" in Washington, D. C., Saturday night, February 22, in the Sheraton Park Hotel.

With warm regards, I am

Sincerely,

Paul

Paul M. Butler

Ferry, W. H.

Telephone: MUrray Hill 2-1250

The Fund for the Republic INC.

60 East 42nd Street, New York 17, New York

February 3, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Ave.
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

The program yesterday was, as always, absolutely top bracket. Historians are going to owe you and Fred Friendly a very great deal.

Congratulations and thanks from everybody here.

Best regards,

W. H. Ferry

Sin
Kupcinet, I.

February 25, 1958

Dear Kup:

Many thanks for your note on the Truman program. It was fascinating to work on, and we have received most favorable comment on the results of our labors.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Irv Kupcinet
Chicago Sun-Times
Sun-Times Plaza
Chicago 11, Illinois

mac

KUP'S COLUMN

KUPCINET

Among the suggestions County Board President Dan Ryan is considering in l'affaire Frank Keenan: Raise Keenan's bond as county assessor to such astronomical heights, in view of his income tax conviction, that he would be unable to post the bond and thus be forced out of office. . . . Capsule comment on former President Harry Truman's filmed interview with Ed Murrow: A chapter in history come to life. It was one of television's finest hours, accomplished with remarkable simplicity: Just two men talking, yet the excitement was breathtaking.

ADLAI STEVENSON'S TIMING was well-nigh perfect Friday night, but to his own detriment. Just as he reached the climax of his Roosevelt Day address, on the ABC-TV network, and was saying in effect, "don't sell America short, I don't believe our nation has lost the capacity for heroic response to great demands"—he was cut off for the dramatic announcement that our first satellite, Explorer, had been launched. . . . ABC officials later explained that they tried to get Stevenson to interrupt his speech and make the announcement, but all their frantic wig-wagging went for naught.

PAMELA MASON, SERVING as Tom Duggan's telephone girl on his Hollywood TV show, stormed off the program the other night after a violent argument over racial discrimination. Up to now, she's been one of Duggan's stanchest supporters. . . . . Attorneys for Tommy and Jamie Hamm (of the Mello Larks) are trying to reach a financial settlement that will make their divorce amicable. Tommy erroneously has been linked with another girl singer. "Absolutely not true," he reports.

PAMELA MASON

"LONESOME GEORGIE" GOBEL just plunked down $250,000 to purchase the Phil Harris-Alice Faye home in Encinco, Calif. The 6½-acre estate also includes a huge guest home, which Georgie is giving to his parents. This is how the deal was made: Harris guest'd on Gobel's TV show recently and mentioned that he hasn't occupied his Encino home for five years because he and Alice preferred living in Palm Springs. Gobel, who had been looking for a larger home (commensurate with his standing as a top TV star), immediately popped up, "I've got a buyer for you—me." A quick visit to the Harris home cemented the deal.

Use P

For the most phone calls were windfalls in The Lucky $ocial $e Contest.

Winners from Joseph, Mich., ar points took adv
special claim-by-ence for out-of-
to pocket portior
$3,460 jackpot.

One of 67 co numbers came u Alvina Boeckmar
erick, Rantoul,
$100, but was u
how the prize w

Another $100
Grace J. Rogers,

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
Sun-Times Plaza, Chicago 11, Illinois

WHitehall 3-3000

February 4, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
CBS
645 Madison Avenue
New York, NY

Dear Ed:

Congratulations on what an interview should be!

Clipping enclosed.

Best regards,

Irv Kupcinet

IK:chc

Sin
Mindling, Lou

February 25, 1958

Dear Lou:

Many thanks for your nice note about the Truman program. The response was very favorable.

Kindest regards.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Lou Mindling
William Morris Agency
918 North Michigan Avenue
Chicago 11, Illinois

mce

NEW YORK BEVERLY HILLS CHICAGO LONDON PARIS ROME

ESTABLISHED 1898

WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY
INC.

919 NORTH MICHIGAN AVENUE
CHICAGO 11, ILL.
TELEPHONE WHITEHALL 3-1744

Feb. 4, 1958

Mr. Ed Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Ave.
New York, New York

Dear Ed,

Just wanted to say "Thank You" for the "See It Now" program with President Truman this past Sunday. I'm sure you must have heard the same thing from thousands of other viewers. If they're looking for programs to plug free TV you gave it to them on Sunday!

Come see us in Chicago soon. As always, kindest regards,

Sincerely,

LOU MINDLING

LM/pp

Rosenman, S. I.

Sam

ROSENMAN GOLDMARK COLIN & KAYE

575 MADISON AVENUE NEW YORK 22

SAMUEL I. ROSENMAN
GODFREY GOLDMARK
RALPH F. COLIN
SYDNEY M. KAYE
WALTER J. PETSCHEK
MAX FREUND
AMBROSE DOSKOW
SEYMOUR D. LEWIS
LAWRENCE R. ENO
MURRAY COHEN

MURRAY HILL 8-7800

January 20, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

sent Jan. 29.

Could you let me know about when you are going to send the script which you are going to use in February to Independence?

I think the President would like to see it, and I certainly would appreciate a copy.

Very sincerely yours,

Sam

SIR:AHS

Samuel I. Rosenman

SIN
Wallace, J. T.

February 25, 1958

Dear Mr. Wallace:

Many thanks for your letter of February 5th and for sending me the clipping on your play on the Truman interview.

We are glad that everything worked out so well.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. John T. Wallace
Sun-Telegraph
Pittsburgh 30, Pennsylvania

mcc

Sun-Telegraph PITTSBURGH

PITTSBURGH 30, PA.

JOHN T. WALLACE
EDITOR

February 5, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Morrow
Mr. Palmer Williams
CBS TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York City, N.Y.

Gentlemen:-

Thought you both might like to see our play on the Truman interview. Between the cooperation of Mr. Palmer rushing me the Q&A transcript and the cooperation of TV station WQED here, (in letting us shoot HST from their moniter), we were able to put together a good package.

Thanks again for your fine help.

Sincerely,

John T. Wallace

John T. Wallace

JTW:js
Inclosure

cc: John S. White - WQED
Ralph Tangney - "

Truman Talks On Music, Bomb, Prayer, Generals

Sun-Tele-Tape

(Here are former President Harry S. Truman's actual words—frank and forthright, as usual—spoken in a televised interview with Edward R. Murrow last evening.

(The transcript was taken from a tape recording of the interview. The CBS-TV program was carried over WQED in Pittsburgh and the accompanying photograph of Mr. Truman was taken from the station's monitor screen.

(This new feature, called Sun-Tele-Tape, employing a new technique in news reporting and presentation, will appear in the Sun-Telegraph from time to time.)

MURROW: Mr. Truman, would you think that that phrase "Give 'em hell, Harry" helped you considerably in 1948?

TRUMAN: I don't know whether it did or not. I don't know who originated that but I always told them when they would say that to me in a crowd that I never did give anybody hell. I just told the truth on 'em and they thought it was hell.

MURROW: Did the knowledge you gained at three dollars a week working in the drug store as a boy that some of the uplifters acted just like ordinary people serve you in good stead later on in politics?

TRUMAN: Yes, it did, for the simple reason that my old grandfather had told me when I was about seven or eight years old that whenever he heard one of his neighbors up in the Amen corner of the church praying too loud, he went home and locked his smoke house.

MURROW: I am told that at one point just before we got into World War II, you went to see General Marshall and asked to go back into the Service. Is that right?

TRUMAN: Yes, that's correct. I went down to see the General and told him that I'd spent my time since I'd been in the Reserve Corps, training young men and that I'd like very much to go back into the Service in command of an artillery group, and I felt like I owed it to the country. The General pulled his spectacles down over his nose like that, and he said—"Senator, how old are you?" I said, "I'm fifty-six." He says, "Senator, you're too damned old. You go on back and stay in the Senate." I says, "I'm four years younger than you are." He said, "Yes, but I'm already in," so I went back and stayed in the Senate.

MURROW: Mr. President, I must be a bad reporter because I have neglected to ask you when you learned to play the piano.

MR. TRUMAN: Well when I was about—oh, I guess I must have been eight or nine years old. I got a viewpoint on good music which was a wonderful asset to me as—in an educational way, but when I was about fifteen or sixteen years old, I decided that it was a sissy thing to be a piano player and I quit.

MURROW: How was it that the Missouri Waltz became rather your unofficial theme song, Mr. President?

TRUMAN: I hate to go into the details on that but the Missouri Waltz was composed by a man from Iowa in 1914, and is called "Hushaby My Baby." It's a ragtime song and if you let me say what I think—I don't give a damn about it, but I can't say it loud because it's the song of Missouri. It's as bad as the Star Spangled Banner so far as music is concerned.

MURROW: Which President had the most trouble?

TRUMAN: Andrew Johnson.

MURROW: Why?

TRUMAN: Because he didn't have loyalty in his Cabinet—was the principal reason, and because he was trying to carry out the policy of Abraham Lincoln, and the radicals in charge of the Congress were determined to make an example of the South on secession, and they succeeded in preventing Andrew Johnson from carrying out the policies of Abraham Lincoln.

MURROW: Which act of yours do you think will go down in history as being the most significant, strictly in terms of the constitutional history of this country?

TRUMAN: Well, the—the action that was taken with the Berlin Airlift and the Greece and Turkish thing, and the Korean affair — I think you'll find that that established beyond a doubt that the President has the power to meet an emergency when it comes up, and he should take the bull by the horns and meet it when necessary.

MURROW: I was rather expecting that you might have suggested it would have been the dismissal of General MacArthur in terms of re-establishing or rather establishing again the control of the civilian over the military.

TRUMAN: That was only following a precedent. If you remember, James K. Polk had the same sort of trouble with some of his Generals in the Mexican war, and Abraham Lincoln had to fire General after General.

MURROW: How did you decide to remove General MacArthur and whom did you consult, Mr. President?

TRUMAN: Well, General MacArthur had been becoming rather insubordinate as the Pro-Consul in Asia, which he considered himself, and when he disobeyed orders directly, it became necessary to find out the best thing to do about it. MacArthur had been making statements on policy in the government which he had no right to do.

I stood it as long as I could, and I made up my mind the best thing to do with him was to give him the McClellan treatment — that was to retire him.

Bradley said he ought to be fired—he's a good military man. Averell Harriman, the Ambassador, said if he were in my place he'd have fired him long ago. I had my mind already made up but I didn't tell them.

MURROW: Much of the criticism, perhaps the major criticism of you, has been aimed at your continuing loyalty to friends even when they were in trouble, and particularly I remember your attending Mr. Prendergast's funeral.

TRUMAN: I imagine that was the truth but I've always felt that a man's career is based on his friendships and his loyalty to those friends. I always believed in loyalty to friends unless they did something radically wrong which required prosecution or something like that. I never fronted for any of them when they got into trouble with the law, but I always felt that when a fellow was in trouble was the time that he needed his friends most and that's when they should stick with him, and when you have an idea that your friends are not guilty of anything; when they're even being prosecuted, I believe in loyalty to 'em, but of course, I don't believe in interfering with the law, and I never fronted for anybody in a criminal case.

MURROW: Well, when the atom bomb was dropped, the war was near to ending anyway. Was this the result of miscalculation of the Japanese potential? Was our Intelligence faulty in this area?

TRUMAN: It was done on the theory that our troops were expecting to invade Japan in a very short time through the Tokyo plain and on the southwest side of Japan also, and it was estimated that it would take about a million and a half men to make that invasion, and in all probability there'd be a half a million of them casualties and two hundred and fifty thousand of them killed, and when we had this powerful new weapon, I had no qualms about using it, because a weapon of war is a destructive weapon. That's the reason none of us want war and all of us are against war, but when you have the weapon that will win the war, you'd be foolish if you didn't use it.

MURROW: Is it true that

Sun-Telegraph

OF THE 'MISSOURI WALTZ' HE SAID—
. . . "I don't give a damn about it"
Sun-Telegraph Photo by Tom Toia

you offered Gen. Eisenhower the Presidency at Potsdam?

TRUMAN: No — no, I didn't offer him the Presidency. I told him that a great many people who had been in his position had been willing to run for the Presidency, but it was my opinion that a man at the top with a military reputation could only have that reputation smeared if he went into politics, because being the Commanding General of the Armed Forces of a nation is entirely different from being the head of the State in a political job.

MURROW: What essentially is the relationship or should be the relationship between the President and the people?

TRUMAN: Well, the people of the United States have but one man—but two men really—the Vice President and the President are the only ones that are elected at large by the whole country. The President is elected by the whole people and he must look out for the interests of all the people. I've made the statement many a time that there are about fifteen million people in the country that can afford to have a representative in Washington to look after their interests in addition to the Congressmen and Senators that they have there and they're called lobbyists. There's nothing wrong with them. They have a perfect right to do that, but there are a hundred and fifty million people that can't afford that. They have but one man in the government to look after their interests, and that's the President of the United States. He is the lobbyist for a hundred and fifty million people, and when he ceases to be that, those people are in a pretty bad way so far as the government of the United States is concerned.

MURROW: Do you think the limitation on the third term was a wise amendment?

TRUMAN: No, I do not. It was passed in 1948 because they had—they were afraid that another Roosevelt would come along in the Democratic Party and that there'd be maybe a three or four-term President.

MURROW: So then they hated Roosevelt so much that they made a lame duck out of Eisenhower. Is that it?

TRUMAN: That's exactly what they did. That's exactly what they did. They made a lame duck out of their own man and I think they're as sorry as they can be, but they can't get that amendment repealed. It's not like the Prohibition Amendment.

"SEE IT NOW"

STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA - HAWAII?

March 2, 1958

See It Now
Carlson, Senator
Frank

March 19, 1958

Dear Frank:

Many thanks for your cordial note of March 5th.

I am delighted to hear that you and Mrs. Carlson enjoyed our SEE IT NOW on Statehood for Alaska and Hawaii. I greatly appreciate your taking the time to write me about it.

With kindest regards.

Sincerely yours,

The Honorable Frank Carlson
The United States Senate
Washington, D. C.

mcs

FRANK CARLSON
KANSAS

COMMITTEES:
FINANCE
POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE REPUBLICAN POLICY APPROPRIATIONS, EX OFFICIO

United States Senate

WASHINGTON, D. C.

March 5, 1958.

Mr. Ed Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting Co.,
485 Madison Ave.,
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

This is just a note to tell you how much Mrs. Carlson and I enjoyed your last Sunday's television program in regard to giving statehood to Alaska and Hawaii.

You rendered a real public service in arranging this program, and as one who favors statehood for both, I sincerely hope we can get action this year.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely yours,

Frank Carlson

Frank Carlson

FC/MF

See It Now
Hanschman,
Nancy

March 20, 1958

Dear Nancy:

Many thanks for sending us a copy of Senator Neuberger's remarks concerning the SEE IT NOW program on Statehood for Alaska and Hawaii. Ed was pleased to see it, and we both appreciate your thoughtfulness in sending it.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

KAY CAMPBELL
EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT

Miss Nancy Hanschman
3616 'P' Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

mcc

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Office Communication

to: Kay Campbell

from: Nancy Hanschman N.H. 3/13/58

In case Senator Neuberger didn't send you a copy of this I thought Ed might be interested as it's always good to hear the nice things.

RICHARD L. NEUBERGER
OREGON

JOHN G. JONES
ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANT
HANS A. LINDE
LEGISLATIVE ASSISTANT
MARY JANE CHRISTGAU
PERSONAL SECRETARY

United States Senate
WASHINGTON, D. C.

March 3, 1958

Miss Nancy Hanschman
3616 'P' Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Nancy:

So sorry to learn that you have been ill. I do hope you will be better soon.

I thought you might like to see these brief remarks which I have just delivered on the Senate floor today.

Warm regards.

Sincerely,

RLN:cag
Encl.

Richard L. Neuberger
United States Senator

Honorable Richard L. Neuberger
348 Senate Office Building
Washington 25, D. C.

March 3, 1958

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM PROGRAM
FEATURING STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA AND HAWAII.

Mr. President, as a supporter and co-sponsor of bills providing for statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, I wish to commend the Columbia Broadcasting System and Mr. Edward R. Murrow for the "See it Now" television program of March 2, which featured the statehood aspirations of these two great territorial possessions of the United States.

I felt this was a public-service program of the highest order. It was factual, complete, unbiased and thorough. I have never visited Hawaii, but I have been to Alaska on many occasions and served there in our Army during World War II. From my personal knowledge of Alaska, I can truthfully say that the portion of Mr. Murrow's program devoted to Alaska was accurate and authentic.

While I undoubtedly am prejudiced myself, I doubt if any neutral citizen of our country, seeing the broadcast in its entirety, could fail to believe that the case for statehood for Alaska and Hawaii was far stronger than the adverse case in each instance. I was particularly impressed by the direct and effective manner in which brave combat veterans of our armed forces challenged the canard that any substantial manner of Hawaii's residents are subversive or unpatriotic.

I congratulate Edward R. Murrow and CBS for this excellent presentation, and I look forward to more programs of an equal calibre.

- 0 -

Sun
Kupcinet, I

March 11, 1958

Dear Kup:

Many thanks for your note on the "Statehood for Hawaii and Alaska" program. It was fascinating to work on, and we have received most favorable comment on the results of our labors.

Best regards.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Irv Kupcinet
Chicago Sun-Times
Sun-Times Plaza
Chicago 11, Illinois

mcc

~~7A00~~ SI 14
Malone, Senator G. W.

February 6, 1958

Dear Senator:

Pursuant to my telephone conversation with you today, we will plan to film your comments on Statehood for Alaska sometime on February 20th. I will telephone your office at about 10:00 on the morning of the 20th to suggest an agreeable time and place.

I am delighted you are willing to participate in this program, and I look forward to talking with you on other matters, too.

As ever yours,

The Honorable George Wilson Malone,
The United States Senate
Washington 25, D. C.

mcc

HARRY FLOOD BYRD, VA., CHAIRMAN

ROBERT S. KERR, OKLA.
J. ALLEN FREAR, JR., DEL.
RUSSELL B. LONG, LA.
GEORGE A. SMATHERS, FLA.
CLINTON P. ANDERSON, N. MEX.
PAUL H. DOUGLAS, ILL.
ALBERT GORE, TENN.

EDWARD MARTIN, PA.
JOHN J. WILLIAMS, DEL.
RALPH E. FLANDERS, VT.
GEORGE W. MALONE, NEV.
FRANK CARLSON, KANS.
WALLACE F. BENNETT, UTAH
WILLIAM E. JENNER, IND.

ELIZABETH B. SPRINGER, CHIEF CLERK

United States Senate

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

February 11, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Permit me to acknowledge your letter of February 6 on behalf of Senator Malone who is currently spending a week in Nevada. As he probably indicated in his phone conversation with you last week he will be back in Washington by the 20th to participate in this program.

Yours truly,

Arthur D. Peterson
Executive Secretary to Senator George W. Malone

SIN
Muncey, Cpt A.R.

March 19, 1958

Dear Allen:

Many thanks for your cordial letter of March 3.

I am delighted to hear that you enjoyed the SEE IT NOW program on the Statehood for Alaska and Hawaii. We found the response to it on the whole most favorable.

With all good wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Captain Allan R. Muncey
U. S. Navy
7321 111th Street, N.
Largo, Florida

mcc

7321 111th.St.N
Largo Fla.
3 March 1958

Mr.Edward R.Murrow;
CBS 485 Madison Ave
New York N.Y.

Dear Ed;

My congratulations on the fine Statehod job of yesterday. You made the "Congressional" leaders sound like those with anaxe to grind. They certainly were not nearly as sure or sound in their arguments as the people,the little people,who want statehood. Your show "P to P" is always good,but I believe this one will stand out.I suspect that you have kindled quite a few bonfires around the nation. The people of several states must have been'real proud'of their congressmen. You and your damned grin did more to make them look silly than anything you could have said. Hearty Congratulations.

In the event that you may think the writer isnt familiar with your work, I was on the engineering staff at WCAU for 21 years and handled your shows when you were in the area.

Best regards to you and best wishes to you and the boys who put your shown together.It is a terrific job and being well done.

Regards again

AL

Allan R.Muncey
Captain USN (ret)

(HAWAII

Stu
Neuberger, Sen. R.L.

March 19, 1958

Dear Dick:

Belated but sincere thanks for your kind words on the Alaska-Hawaii piece. You were most generous.

I hope to see you soon.

As ever yours,

The Honorable Richard L. Neuberger
The United States Senate
Washington 25, D.C.

fc

JAMES E. MURRAY, MONT., CHAIRMAN
CLINTON P. ANDERSON, N. MEX.
HENRY M. JACKSON, WASH.
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, WYO.
ALAN BIBLE, NEV.
RICHARD L. NEUBERGER, OREG.
JOHN A. CARROLL, COLO.
FRANK CHURCH, IDAHO
GEORGE W. MALONE, NEV.
ARTHUR V. WATKINS, UTAH
HENRY DWORSHAK, IDAHO
THOMAS H. KUCHEL, CALIF.
FRANK A. BARRETT, WYO.
BARRY GOLDWATER, ARIZ.
GORDON ALLOTT, COLO.

RICHARD L. CALLAGHAN, CHIEF CLERK

United States Senate

COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

March 4, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I thought you might be interested in seeing this brief comment of mine on the Senate floor March 3rd, about your excellent "See It Now" television program featuring the statehood aspirations of Alaska and Hawaii.

My comments speak for themselves, but I do want to add my personal congratulations for an excellent presentation.

With good wishes, I am

Sincerely,

Dick Neuberger

Richard L. Neuberger
United States Senator

RLN:cag
Encl.

cc: Mr. Frank Stanton

SURVEYS BY DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE TEAMS OF HOROLOGICAL FIRMS

These inspections were made in order to observe the manufacturing processes in the various plants, with special emphasis on an examination of the firms' research and development capabilities. While operations in this field reflecting real credit on the industry were noted, there did not appear to be an unusual research or development capability that could not be found elsewhere. This view was shared by the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Research and Engineering.

STUDIES BY LABOR DEPARTMENT TEAMS

In the studies conducted in various plants by the teams of the Department of Labor, an examination was made of nine skills agreed upon by the jeweled-lever industry as being representative of key skills in the industry to determine the characteristics and employment of such skills and to obtain information as to the training period required to reach proficiency. Examination was also made of the skills in a number of pin-lever and nonhorological precision plants in order to determine if similar skills were to be found in such plants, and the length of time required to reach proficiency upon transfer from one group to the other. The wartime requirements for jeweled-lever industry skills were estimated on the basis of the production programs provided by the Department of Defense.

The Department of Labor investigation showed that in most of the skills examined, with a brief training period, there was relative ease of interchangeability between the jeweled and pin-lever segments of the horological industry, and with training periods of varying lengths, there could be some interchangeability of key skills between precision manufacturers outside the horological industry and those within the horological industry.

CONSULTANT'S REPORTS

The consultant referred to above read and considered all evidence presented up to September 25, 1957, the date of his report. In the process of his investigation he visited the plants of the domestic jeweled watch manufacturers, observed the operations of a number of importers, and also spent several days visiting jeweled watch plants in Switzerland. While he did not have the benefit of data developed by investigations made in recent months by the Department of Defense, his conclusion read as follows:

"It is desirable to have a jeweled watch industry in being in this country for the contribution it can make, along with other precision manufacturers, for production of the timing devices and other items needed by civilian and military users both in peacetime and in emergencies. However, due to significant reductions in recent years in the mobilization requirements for jeweled movements, the tremendous advances in the diffusion of precision production techniques and the availability of necessary skills and production capacity, there does not appear to be a threat to the national security because of imports of jeweled watch movements."

The engineering consultant, after visits to horological plants, to precision manuafcturers outside the horological industry, and to a number of missile plants, reported in June 1957 that he had identified four items for military use which he believed only the jeweled watch industry could produce. Based on this belief and his study of the subject from an engineering and organization standpoint, he concluded that the jeweled watch industry was essential to national defense.

Investigation later made by the Department of Defense established that three of these items were then being produced outside of the horological industry and the fourth had been found unsuitable for use in the missile complex in which it had been expected it could be beneficially incorporated.

CHANGES IN TECHNOLOGY

In the years intervening since 1954 when this subject was last officially reported on by this agency, a substantial expansion of precision skills and plant capabilities has become incorporated in our industrial economy. This trend was developing rapidly by 1954 but had not reached its present degree of maturity and application. These skills and capabilities may now be found in many industries with a consequent enlargement of the base in precision production.

SUMMARY

1. On the basis of the studies it has conducted, the Department of Defense has concluded that the horological industry is not essential in the supply of items critically needed by the military in times of national emergency.

2. It is the opinion of the Department of Commerce, after giving consideration to all factors, that essential civilian requirements for high precision jeweled timepieces during a national emergency could be met from domestic production that would be available, from inventories of such movements that are constantly widespread throughout distributive channels, and such imports as may be possible from foreign sources.

3. The mobilization requirements for watches and clocks have markedly decreased.

4. New weapons and new strategic concepts have drastically reduced the requirements for the types of military items in the production of which the horological industry has participated.

5. The base for precision production and skills in our industrial economy has expanded substantially.

6. The interagency advisory committee on the watch industry is of the opinion that the level of imports of horological products does not threaten to impair the national security.

CONCLUSION

I have examined the report of the Department of Defense on this subject transmitted to me by the Deputy Secretary of Defense, the report made by the Department of Labor, the report of the consultant appointed to undertake and coordinate an examination of the jeweled watch segment of the horological industry and the report of the engineering consultant. I have also considered the requirements data submitted by the Department of Defense and the Departments of Commerce, the evidence presented at public hearings and the briefs and statements subsequently filed. In addition I have had the benefit of opinions of a number of individuals knowledgeable in this field and have considered the advice of the Interagency Advisory Committee on the Watch Industry.

On the basis of the evidence developed by the study, I am unable to find there is reason to believe that the level of imports of horological products threatens to impair the national security.

Sincerely yours,

GORDON GRAY,
Director.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM PROGRAM FEATURING STATEHOOD FOR ALASKA AND HAWAII

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, as a supporter and cosponsor of bills providing for statehood for Alaska and Hawaii, I commend the Columbia Broadcasting System and Mr. Edward R. Murrow for the "See It Now" television program of March 2, which featured the statehood aspirations of these two great Territorial possessions of the United States.

I felt this was a public-service program of the highest order. It was factual, complete, unbiased, and thorough. I have never visited Hawaii, but I have been to Alaska on many occasions, and served there in our Army during World War II. From my personal knowledge of Alaska, I can truthfully say that the portion of Mr. Murrow's program devoted to Alaska was accurate and authentic.

While I undoubtedly am prejudiced myself, I doubt if any neutral citizen of our country, seeing the broadcast in its entirety, could fail to believe that the case for statehood for Alaska and Hawaii was far stronger than the adverse case in each instance. I was particularly impressed by the direct and effective manner in which brave combat veterans of our Armed Forces challenged the canard that any substantial number of Hawaii's residents are subversive or unpatriotic.

I congratulate Edward R. Murrow and CBS for this excellent presentation, and I look forward to more programs of an equal caliber.

Mr. President, I desire now to refer to another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Oregon has the floor.

CANCELLATION OR SUSPENSION OF AWARD OF TELEVISION CHANNEL NO. 10, MIAMI, FLA., TO NATIONAL AIRLINES

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I wish to read a letter I have written to the Attorney General of the United States:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR
AND INSULAR AFFAIRS,
March 3, 1958.

The Honorable WILLIAM P. ROGERS,
Attorney General of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I should like to inquire what steps, if any, are being taken by the Department of Justice toward canceling or suspending the award of television channel No. 10 in Miami, Fla., to National Airlines.

It would seem to me most distressing if Commissioner Richard Mack should resign under fire in this chaotic situation, while the beneficiaries of his dubious activities were allowed to benefit permanently by retaining a television channel valued in the neighborhood of some $1 million.

It is my hope that the Department of Justice will study the possibility of bringing a suit in court, which seeks to vacate the licensing of channel No. 10, in Miami, and to require a totally new series of hearings and proceedings by the Federal Communications Commission with respect to the granting of this channel.

As a Member of the Senate, I urge such a course of action upon your department.

With good wishes, I am,
Respectfully,

RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
United States Senator.

AUTHORIZED PUBLIC-SERVICE PROJECTS IN ARKANSAS

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may

"SEE IT NOW"

FALLOUT

March 30, 1958

NEW STATESMAN

Juliet's balcony speech – poor girl, we think, that's the end of her. Not a bit; everyone is ravished, the hard producer has eyes shiny as hers, and though there may be theatrical and sexual hazards ahead, for triumph and greatness she is bound. This takes the bite out of realism, and so far as I was concerned out of the film, though it kept on with incidentally striking moments. But do theatre people wander out of their super-heated apartments to talk endlessly and coatless in the falling snow? Would Miss Strasberg get past by looks and stance alone, while delivering speeches in a sleep-walking fashion with an eye on the metronome? The effect is bizarre, and we leave Stage Struck with the conviction that most stage-struck of all have been the original author and his latest producers.

The artificialities of The White Nights (Curzon), are at least those of the cinema. A Dostoevsky novelette about a lonely man and a lonely girl meeting at nights on a bridge has been transferred from St Petersburg to Italy, or rather to an Italian studio in which a most beautiful set of back streets and canal has been employed to revive French romanticism. Here are the bridge of Hotel du Nord, the stray dog from Quai des Brumes, the midnight pacings of Sous les Toits de Paris. The naive lovers appeal – up to a point; Maria Schell, ever laughing and crying, is like a Bergner overflowing; Marcello Mastroianni patiently eggs her on, and rather deserves in the end to go off with the dog. It is a pity that this equivocal film should be our second introduction to the talent of Luchino Visconti: his Senso, somewhat garbled as it was, had already done him very much less than justice.

A breath of fresh air comes from Canada in the shape of the youthful Dangerous Age (Academy): 24-year-old director (Sidney J. Furie), two kids trying to get married despite parents and the caprice of registrar's offices. Individual freshness, a social problem, and a realist approach more than make up for an inexperience that sometimes loses the tautness. I think we may see and hear more of Mr Furie.

WILLIAM WHITEBAIT

Testing Time

I WAS shocked to see quoted in the Observer a description of Ed Murrow's voice as 'the voice of an unfrocked bishop'. 'Unfrocked', with its suggestion of seedy disreputability, seems to me quite wrong: Mr Murrow's television persona, which consists largely of his voice, plus glimpses of that crumpled, decent face, is indeed that of a bishop and an important one – chairman, I would guess, of one of the preparatory committees of the Lambeth Conference; but he is emphatically not a bishop in disgrace but a bishop in mufti, one who has shed his purple stock and pectoral cross to reconnoitre a heathen terrain, himself unscathed, on behalf of the forces of light.

Mr Murrow has followed his famous Oppenheimer interview with an exhaustive investigation, in his See It Now series, of the dangers of nuclear radio-activity. This programme, called Fall-out, lasts 80 minutes and was broadcast by the BBC late one night last week – the only painful aspect of this being that some of it clashed with a serious, though less weighty, report on kleptomania by Dan Farson.

It might be thought that so long a programme as Mr Murrow's would become monotonous; but, in fact, it is the 'Well, I'm afraid that's all we have time for' of the typical British TV interview whose hurried superficiality begins to pall. Mr

OVER

Murrow can go into detail: he can force his subjects, in his tellingly undramatic way, to dredge up from the corners of their minds just the facts and arguments that they would never have used if a time-limit of two or three minutes had let them get away with something more plausible. Not that he is always versus rather than vis-à-vis them: on this occasion, one of his most rewarding interviews was with an editor in a small town 90 miles from the Nevada testing-ground – a steady, conventional, likeable man who would not ordinarily, one felt, be a crusader; he had been stirred to protest by such disquieting incidents as the death from leukæmia of a robust eight-year-old farm-boy, and by the offhand arrogance with which districts such as his (like English coastal villages doomed by the technocrats who site nuclear power-stations) are dismissed as 'virtually uninhabited'.

The attitude of some of the scientists on the USA's Atomic Energy Commission is the contemporary trahison des clercs; and Mr Murrow displayed the best-known of them, Dr Libby, at his full, unappetising length: pleasant, glib manner, all the technical know-how and know-what, narrow eyes set close together, the smiler with the strontium 90.

The point about the ample time available to Mr Murrow is important here. If he had been interviewing Dr Libby for Tonight he would not have been able to explore so thoroughly the subsidiary, but significant, episode of the AEC's misleading communiqué on last autumn's underground test: the original statement that this had not been detected more than 250 miles from the explosion – serviceable for the propaganda of those who oppose the suspension of tests – was false and was, reluctantly and belatedly, admitted by the AEC to be false. As Murrow probed, those eyes became mere slits, but the hygienic mouth smiled on: the false communiqué had been put out through 'a pure inadvertence'; it was 'just a plain mistake'. Mr Murrow never rubs in a point, and there was no need to: we expect not merely integrity but infallibility in those who claim the right to poison the atmosphere for our good.

For of course Dr Libby is inspired by what seem to him the highest motives. He wants to make nuclear weapons 'clean'. His philosopher's stone is the 'small clean bomb' – for practical as well as ethical reasons, since, as he put it, 'if we wanted to take a canal, for instance, it would be embarrassing to use small dirty bombs – it would spread too much radio-activity around'. See? He's as humane as you or I or Dr Oppenheimer or Mr Murrow – within the terms of reference of the Atomic Energy Commission. He knows better than you and I that all nuclear testing involves a risk; but Mr Murrow drew from him the assurance that it is 'a tolerable risk'. Some tests mean only 'a little dribble' of fall-out 'here and there'. By comparison with the largest bombs, A-bombs are almost cosy nowadays: 'these little fellows will sprinkle a band of fall-out round the world at about the latitude of Nevada'.

Besides the interviews with these distinguished human beings, the programme included some grisly shots of very important beasts at an 'atomic animal farm' – mice inhaling vaporised strontium 90, sows that had been fed pellets of it, sheep with burn-marks on their skin. The BBC, which did a notable service to humanity by renting this brilliant and unhysterical CBS programme, will more than double its educational value by broadcasting it again at a better viewing time. Those now seeking to enlighten the public on these matters might try to get the film from CBS for private showing.

TOM DRIBERG

RECEIVED
1958 MAY 21 AM 11 55
C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

T Collingwood
See LT
Nov.

CBSINC NY

CBS ACR2/WCA674/TD252

LONDON 55 21 429P

PRESS CBSXINC

BURKE FOR MURROW FRIENDLY FALL OUT SHOW RECEIVED MUCH FAVOURABLE COMMENT STOP AT HOMEOFFICE REQUEST AM LENDING THEM PRINT FOR PRIVATE SHOWING THEIR TOP OFFICIALS STOP FRIDAYS ISSUE NEW STATESMAN FLOGGING DYING HORSE NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT WILL SUGGEST GROUPS ASK CBS FOR PRINTS SHOW AT MEETING STOP WHATS YOUR POLICY QUERY REGARDS COLLINGWOOD

LC 1039AM AMAY 21 1958

ACK'

Libby, W. F.

UNITED STATES
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION
WASHINGTON 25, D. C.

April 3, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting Company
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I want to thank you for your thoughtful gift which I received upon boarding the Queen Elizabeth a fortnight ago. It contributed a great deal to a pleasant voyage.

Also, your kind invitations for luncheon the day of my departure and breakfast and a showing of the recent fallout film upon my return were more than appreciated. It was with great reluctance that I had to refuse same, but the weather changed my travel plan out of Washington; and, upon my landing in the States, pressing official matters necessitated my immediate return to Washington.

Hoping this finds you in good health and thanking you once again, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

W. F. Libby

W. F. Libby
Commissioner

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Sir
Strauss, Adm

Office Communication

to: Mr. Paley

from: Mr. Murrow

April 9, 1958.

I thought you might like to see what Admiral Strauss thought of our piece on atomic fallout.

E.R.M.

3 April 1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I was one of the millions of intent listeners to your program on Sunday. You and Mr. Friendly handled this radioactively-hot issue with fairness and thoroughness and a very great contribution to public understanding must be the result.

with warm regard

Faithfully yours,

Lewis Strauss

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

"SEE IT NOW"

SPECIAL

CONVERSATION WITH PRIME MINISTER MacMILLAN

May 23, 1958

See Collingwood, C.

CBS NEWS London Bureau
26 Hallam Street, London W1 Langham 1166-1167

Charles Collingwood

27 May 1958

Dear Judge:

The reaction to the Macmillan interview has been uniformly excellent. Although Macmillan himself hasn't got back from Scotland yet, so I've had no word directly from him, the Downing Street people are quite ecstatic about the whole thing and especially its domestic effect. Both the BBC and ITV are also very pleased.

Downing Street tells me that they have assembled a file of about 20 cuttings from the national and provincial press for the PM on his return. The only ones I have are from the national press. There is somewhat less of them than would normally be the case because the show ran on Saturday night and, as you know, the inside pages of the Sunday papers lock up early. However, I am enclosing a small anthology of Monday comments plus a piece on your fall-out show from the New Statesman.

It really seemed to me that the show did what we wanted it to do and what we had told people it would do. I hope those amateaur mix-masters in the executive hierarchy are now eating a little crow.

As I cabled you, I thought I looked extremely odd but that the show itself was damned good.

As ever,

Charles

[Collingwood]

DAILY MAIL - May 26th 1958

Comment

MONDAY, MAY 26, 1958

THE GOOD LIFE

WHITSUN so far may not have been all we could desire, but we in the West enjoy a good life.

We may not be able to order the weather, but in everything else we ought to be grateful for what we have built up and cling to it.

That was the PRIME MINISTER's concluding thought in his interview on the Columbia Broadcasting System which was televised in the United States on Friday and repeated in this country on Saturday.

Criticism of MR. MACMILLAN that he fails to "get across" to the people would not be fair on this occasion. Here, clearly, was a leader of broad outlook who looks on world problems in human terms.

Co-operation

FORCEFULNESS was lacking. The manner was still Edwardian. But the thoughtful words demanded attention and conveyed confidence and strength.

America was impressed. Reports say that TV stations throughout the country received many telephone calls from appreciative viewers who admired the PREMIER's manner as much as his calm common sense.

It may be that to Americans, more than to Britons, the manner was as appealing as the words, if only because of the hesitancies and uncertainties of recent pronouncements on the other side of the Atlantic.

Is Britain in decline? In reply the PRIME MINISTER was blunt: "If that had been true the United States would not be there at all." Where

DAILY MAIL - May 26th 1958

It may be that to Americans, more than to Britons, the manner was as appealing as the words, if only because of the hesitancies and uncertainties of recent pronouncements on the other side of the Atlantic.

Is Britain in decline? In reply the PRIME MINISTER was blunt: "If that had been true the United States would not be there at all." Where else could the U.S. look for leadership in Europe but to Britain?

On atomic developments he pointed out that "the whole concept began here." In this field "the more we (Britain and the U.S.) are together the better we shall be." But we should go on alone if necessary.

Domination

MR. MACMILLAN was looking forward when he said the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries were far the most glorious in the British tradition. More glorious than the 100 years during which we dominated the world.

The reason, of course, is that in those earlier decades we were a very tiny country. Yet we stood up to the Spain of PHILIP, the France of NAPOLEON, and the other world Powers of those times.

Now, our era of dominance over, the odds are against us once more. So MR. MACMILLAN urges us to think more of those times so that we can find the inspiration to meet the 20th-century challenge.

MR. MACMILLAN underlined that interdependence in the Free World needs more than military co-operation. "The Free World isn't going to defend itself by rockets and bombers, however good they are. . .

Inspiration

"IT is going to defend itself because, when tested, people say: 'This is a better way of living. It gives the individual a fuller life. It gives him the kind of things he wants.'"

All the rockets in the world would not defend the West against Communism in circumstances of world unemployment. We would defend ourselves if we could prove ours was the best way of living.

These are some of the thoughts the PRIME MINISTER will be taking with him when he goes to Washington to see PRESIDENT EISENHOWER next month.

The West desperately needs the inspiration of good leadership. This televised thinking aloud to the millions in Britain and America could be a beginning.

NEWS CHRONICLE

May 26th 1958

News Chronicle

TV . . . in my view

A TV star with some old-world courtesy —that's Macmillan

THE television event of the weekend was the domestic screening on both channels of Ed Murrow's interview with the Prime Minister, in which Mr. Macmillan not only coined a useful phrase—diplomacy by propaganda—but ably demonstrated it.

His old-world courtesy, careful reflection and unfailing optimism must have been as reassuring to American viewers as those British holiday and travel ads in U.S. periodicals which feature Beefeaters, village greens and smiling milkmaids.

Here were all the legendary English virtues of the past realistically adapted to the present day; an astute performance matched in diplomacy only by Murrow's own in his grilling by Robin Day yesterday (ITV).

Three lessons

Mr. Macmillan's TV personality, always effective, has improved considerably. He bared his teeth only once or twice in the manner which used to preface every other utterance.

His optimism, approximating closely to that quality American "upbeat," was over-cosy; democracy is not such a foolproof commodity that it always floats to the top, like cream in milk.

But his political philosophising was a good deal more profound than statesmen ordinarily care to lavish on television.

With a little bit of luck the interview should have taught even the most isolationist Americans three things:

THAT Mr. Macmillan is not an Edwardian still living in the past;

THAT the term egghead is not necessarily one of abuse; and

THAT paradoxically his well-groomed head may yet come between those two bald pates in the White House and the Kremlin and prevent them from making a complete mess of it.

Agreeable

To provide some genuine Edwardiana, the B.B.C. mounted an agreeable production of Arnold Bennett's The Great Adventure, a comedy of gathering interest about an artist who assumes the identity of his valet and allows his public self to die.

Alec Clunes was the painter and Margaret Lockwood, now something of a specialist in attractive widowhood: the lady from Putney with whom he finds Philistine bliss; both agreeably.

Philip Purser

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN
May 26 1958

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN
May 26th

A MASTER OF URBANE CONVERSATION

The Premier in fine form

By a Television Critic

The Conservatives in recent years have had few more effective party political broadcasts than Mr Macmillan's on Saturday night. The fact that it was not intended as a party political broadcast, but had been arranged principally for an American audience, made its service to the party none the less.

The programme, which was broadcast first on B.B.C. television and then on I.T.V., showed Mr Macmillan being interviewed by two C.B.S. reporters, Edward R. Murrow and Charles Collingwood. Mr Macmillan spoke to them (and thus to his television audience) as man to man. This was not Mr Macmillan's first appearance on television, but never before, perhaps, has he so successfully put aside his platform manner.

No wonder some of the Prime Minister's qualities as a speaker are lost at political rallies. He is a master of understatement, of the aside, of the throw-away line—all qualities of conversation rather than oratory. How superficial, if spoken from a platform, might have seemed his comment that his contribution to the "diplomacy of letters" was to keep his replies to Mr Khrushchev short. What mattered was the shadow of a suggestion in the inflexion of his voice that, in brevity, he was a match for any windbag.

Mr Macmillan had the same urbane attitude towards "summit" conferences. "I enjoy them very much—everything is worth having," he said. But there was going to be no general agreement as long as one side wanted a propaganda victory or a row. His purpose in going to such a conference was "to make a little progress here, unwind a little there." The thing for us to do was to go forward with confidence, believing the other people were playing the game. "If they are not, it will soon be proved. There's nothing to worry about," he said.

The very long-range prospects in our relations with the Russians, he said, must be "the hope and belief that if a country like Soviet Russia develops so tremendously, as it is doing in all the technical, scientific, and material improvements of life, and as the revolution sinks farther and farther into the background, and the period of mass murder and torture and revolutionary methods become more remote, that as the revolution becomes subject to the normal pressure of life and changes into the bourgeoisie, and as these very intelligent people go on with this process, sooner or later they will ask the questions . . . Who made us? Why are we here? What is the purpose? Is there a God? Is there a right and wrong? What is sin? And when that time comes, then the problem is solved. Meanwhile we have just got to hold on."

For our part, he added, we must not take such a passionate interest in Russia's behaviour, but "do a little more to make our own lives better—less vulgar, less crude, very often less sinful."

Mr Macmillan's last word was a cheerful one. "There are a lot of troubles, but then there always have been." There was also "a jolly good side to it." People who were free in the Western world were living a pretty good life, and were well looked after. "It is all in their hands, and although we are a bit apt to worry about the troubles, we ought to be jolly grateful for all we have been able to cling on to and build up." If we had courage and faith we could make it something better than it ever had been before.

LARGE SESS...

DAILY HERALD - May 26th 1958

MOSCOW ATTACKS MACMILLAN

MOSCOW RADIO last night attacked Prime Minister Harold Macmillan for statements in his filmed TV interview, screened in the U.S. last week and in Britain on Saturday.

"If this reflects Mr. Macmillan's mood for his Washington trip it bodes ill for the cause of peace and the lessening of tension.

"Mr. Macmillan argues with Dulles that it's better to have summit talks while he is in power than wait until a Labour Government takes over.

"A Labour Government might carry out its pledges for real talks which could lead to dismantling the rocket bases, grounding the bombers, disengagement in Europe, ending nuclear weapon tests.

The broadcast noted, too, that Macmillan has flown to Washington, Bermuda, to the Commonwealth and to Paris—but has not yet found time to accept an outstanding invitation to visit Russia.

DAILY HERALD

See LT Now

Johnston, Eric

June 12, 1958

Dear Eric:

Thanks for the kind words about the Macmillan piece.

I have more than a faint hope that we shall be able to get SMALL WORLD on the air in the autumn and hope that we may count on your continued counsel and cooperation.

As ever yours,

Mr. Eric Johnston
Motion Picture Association of America, Inc.
1600 Eye Street, Northwest
Washington 6, D.C.

fc

MOTION PICTURE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, INC.
1600 EYE STREET, NORTHWEST
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

ERIC JOHNSTON
PRESIDENT

June 5, 1958

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 17, New York

Dear Ed:

Unfortunately I had missed the Macmillan interview when it was telecast. Thanks to Charlie Mack I got a print and screened it in our place today.

It's superb and I want in this inadequate way to congratulate you and Charlie Collingwood.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Eric

RECEIVED
1957 FEB -5 PM 1:20
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

MacMillan, Prime Minister
Smith, Howard K.

IO

CBS ACR2 CCB345 TD419

LDN 35 5 557P

PRESS CBSINC

NY

BURKE MURROW FOREIGN OFFICER PHONED SAID YESTERDAYS QUESTIONS WERE MERELY ENQUIRIES BUT NOT CONDITION AND WERE POORLY PHRASED BY MACMILLANS NEW PRIVATE SECRETARY WHICH HE REGRETTED STOP THINKS THERE NO PROBLEMS

SMITH

[Special Program: "Conversation With Prime Minister MacMillan - May 23, 1948]

UG 118PM FEB5 PSE ACK

.R2 CBS

MacMILLAN

PROGRAM BUSINESS

Collingwood

RECEIVED
1958 MAY 19 AM 9:28
C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

CBSINC NY

CBS ACR1 WEA154/TD148

LONDON 26 19 220P

PRESS CBSINC

NYK

BURKE FOR MURROW GLAD MACMILLAN INTERVIEW STOOD INSPECTION STOP WHEN CAN I TELL BBC AND ITV THEY CAN EXPECT PRINTS QUERY REGARDS

COLLINGWOOD

OH 826AM MAY 19 1958 EST OH

PLS ACK ACR1 CBS

FORM 2—(6/56)
W. & S. LTD.

Commercial Cables

Sen Bus.

SUBSIDIARY OF
AMERICAN CABLE & RADIO CORPORATION

PLEASE SEND REPLY
"VIA" COMMERCIAL"

RING FOR A MESSENGER TO COLLECT OR TELEPHONE YOUR MESSAGE
TO LONDON WALL 5678

Commercial Cables

A. C. & R. SERVES THE WORLD BY CABLE AND RADIO

Mackay Radio

All America Cables and Radio

No. 731
1958 MAY 13 PM 9 42 8
HWW ERD

HEAD OFFICE:
27/33, WORMWOOD STREET,
LONDON, E.C.2.

THE FOLLOWING CABLEGRAM WAS RECEIVED "VIA COMMERCIAL"

AL

ERD229/CBS2 NYK 90 1/50 13 335P

PRESS ED MURROW HOTEL CANNAUGHT LDN

EXFRIENDLY EYED CALL THIS A TEN STRIKE AND IN ITS WAYIN CLASS WITH ISLAMORADA STOP PICTURE IN MCCLURE TRADITION SOUND FIRSTRATE BUT WITH SLIGHT OVERTONE OF BASINESS BUT GUESS THATS HIS VOICE PRIME MINISTERS SENSE OF HUMOR HISTORY AND CONVERSATION ON ATOMIC POWER SUMMIT

CONFIRMATION OF CABLE TELEPHONED
BY 10 61

FORM 2—(6/56)
W. & S. LTD.

Commercial Cables

SUBSIDIARY OF
AMERICAN CABLE & RADIO CORPORATION

PLEASE SE[illegible] REPLY
"VIA CO[illegible]CIAL"
RING FOR A[illegible]ENGER
[illegible]
TELE[illegible]ONE YOUR [illegible]ESSAGE
LONDON [illegible] 5678

Commercial Cables

A.C. & R. SERVES THE WORLD BY CABLE AND RADIO

Mackay Radio

All America Cables and Radio

1958 MAY 13 PM 9 43 6

HWW ERD

HEAD OFFICE:
27/33, WORMWOOD STREET,
LONDON, E.C.2.

THE FOLLOWING CABLEGRAM WAS RECEIVED "VIA COMMERCIAL"

AL

ERD229/CBS2 PRESS ED 2/40

TALKS AND HIGH MORTALITY OF OFFICE HIGH POINTS AND AS MAN SAYS YOURE A VERY PRACTICED CHAP SAME GOES FOR CHARLIE MAY TWENTYTHIRD OFFICIAL AND ANNOUNCED REUTERS QUERY APPARENTLY BASED TIMES STORY ANNOUNCING POSTPONEMENT WITHOUT ANNOUNCING NEW DATE REGARDS BURKE

CONFIRMATION OF CABLE
TELEPHONED AT 10 6
BY

Sir

MAY 19, 1958

PRESS
COLUMBIA
LONDON

FOR MCCLURE MURROW SAYS ZOOM EVERYTHING ELSE DOWNING STREET

EXCELLENT. REGARDS.

BURKE

514-43
fc

VCBS RADIO NEWS NY GA PLS

WESTERN UNION INTL CABLES ZP PARIS 29/28 19 940A

CBSINC

NYK

FOR MURROW REPORTED UPON ARRIVAL WE AT BUREAUS DISPOSAL HAVE BEEN STANDINGBY FULL BATTLE PACK SINCE STOP DID TEN DOWNING ZOOM SHOTS WORK QUERY REGARDS

MCCLURE

REPT BUREAUS ZOOM

Macmillan
Misc.

MAY 5, 1958

GEOFFREY COX
INDEPENDENT TELEVISION NEWS LIMITED
TELEVISION HOUSE
KINGSWAY, LONDON W.C. 2
ENGLAND

UNDERSTAND MACMILLAN FILM BEING MADE AVAILABLE EVERYBODY. REGARDS.

EDWARD R. MURROW

514-43
fc

Fred Friendly
Please authorize, London to Geoffrey Cox, ITN. 5/5/58
Thanks. H Kany.

May 8 - Murrow going
May 12 - possible interviewing on this date

IS THIS NY 1-3398

YES

RCA/TWXA29/RY

7966
Natalie Forster
(Friendly's Pic)

UWS3182 OPH342 LONDON 21 3 1302

KANY CBS NEWYORK

UNDERSTAND MURROW LIKELY INTERVIEW MACMILLAN STOP WE WOULD LIKE REQUEST OPTION OF ENGLISH RIGHTS REGARDS

GEOFFREY COX-TELINDEP

SENT 8.08AMEST PLS ACK

THAT IS FOR COEXXXX COTELFILM NY 122395

SORY PLS BUST AND SIXX DISREGARD

OK

CBS RAD GA

McMillan
5/2/58

No

TWXB6 VIA RCA UES499 OPH746 LONDON 20 6 137

PRESS RPDLRS2.38 ED MURROW COLUMBIA BROADCASTING

SYSTEM NEWYORK

HOPE YOU CAN AGREE INTERVIEW LONDON FRIDAY

WRIGHT MANAGING EDITOR REYNOLDS NEWS

801A

S1 END.

MAY 2, 1958

COLUMBIA
LONDON

MURROW SAYS CALLING IT "CONVERSATION AT DOWNING STREET" STOP NOT ANNOUNCING OR PUBLICIZING UNTIL FILM SHOT STOP OK BICKNELL WRIGHT MAY 12 OK ROBIN DAY MIDAFTERNOON MAY 13 STOP UNDERSTAND WE SPENDING EVENING MAY 13 YOU LOUISE STOP INFORMATIVELY I HOPE DO RADIO ENDPIECE DAILY WITH BIG ASSIST YOU ALEX STOP SUGGEST FOLLOWING AREAS CONVERSATION WHICH COURSELY YOU AMEND AMPLIFY BEFORE SUBMITTING DOWNING STREET: ONE WHAT THINK CURRENT PRACTICE DIPLOMACY BY PUBLISHED LETTERS TWO WHAT VIEW PROSPECTS SUMMIT MEETING THREE HOW MUCH CONCERN RE GERMANY'S ECONOMIC DOMINATION AND POSSESSION NUCLEAR WEAPONS FOUR POSSIBILITY COORDINATION ANGLO-AMERICAN POLICY OUTSIDE NATO SPECIFICALLY MIDDLE EAST FIVE BRITISH ATTITUDE RE CONTINUED TESTING AND PRESENT LOADED SAC BOMBERS SIX BRITISH PROGRESS PEACETIME USES ATOMIC ENERGY SEVEN EFFECT U.S. RECESSION EIGHT WHAT BRITAIN GAINED RESULT DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION CHINA STOP SUGGEST YOU EMPHASIZE OUR DESIRE TO MAKE THIS THREE-WAY CONVERSATION RATHER THAN FORMAL INTERROGATION STOP HOPING THAT QUESTIONS WILL FLOW FROM PRECEDING ANSWER RATHER THAN FOLLOW PRE-ARRANGED PATTERN. REGARDS.

BURKE

514-43

fc

T CBS NY GA PLS

13 to Collingwood x

TWX/ACR/B7/WEA2508 TD100

LONDON 53 2 1.05PM

PRESS CBSINC

NYK

BURKE FOR MURROW NIGEL BICKNELL AND PAUL WRIGHT WANT YOU

JANET DINNER AND MEETING PEOPLE AFTER EITHER MAY 9 OR 12

ALSO ITNS ROBIN DAY WANTS DO TEN MINUTE FILMED INTERVIEW

WITH YOU FOR PROGRAMME QUOTE TELL THEXTPEOPLE UNQUOTE WHICH

DONE MACMILLAN GAITSKELL NIXON ETCETERA

HOW QUERY REGARDS

COLLINGWOOD

CFM 9 12

DG 7 21AMEST

END PLS ACK,,

ACK ONE TKS END

O

RECEIVED

1958 MAY -2 PM 12:40

C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

CBSINC NY

CBS ACR4/WCC374 /TD272

LONDON Z 35 2 506PM

PSS CBSINC

NY

BURKE FOR MURROW PALEY JONES DOWNING STREET AGREE OFFER MACMILLAN ALL COMERS ON COST FREE BASIS STOP EVERYTHING SET MACLURE CASING IEN JOINT TOMORROW STOP DOWNING STREET PRESSING FOR AREAS QUESTIONS REGARDS

COLLINGWOOD

May 2, 1958

Press
Columbia, London

MURROW SAYS JANET ARRIVING MAY 8 PAN AMERICAN FLIGHT 100 AT 9:30 AM STOP I ARRIVING MAY 9 BOAC FLIGHT 550 AT 3:30 PM

REGARDS

Burke

514-43
News

Upc,

April 28, 1958

Charles Collingwood
Columbia, London

PRO COLLINGWOOD EDMURROW WE DOING MACMILLAN TOGETHER STOP

UNDERSTAND BERNSTEIN RUNNING TRUMAN PIECE FRIDAY NIGHT STOP

IF MACMILLAN LOOKED HE'D GET IDEA STOP REGARDS

Burke

514-43
News

Ufc

April 25, 1958

Columbia, London

PROCOLLINGWOOD EDSURROW I PROBABLY ARRIVING MAY 8TH OR 9TH STOP TENTATIVELY PLANNING SHOW MACMILLAN INTERVIEW MAY 18 STOP ALSO INFORMATIVELY MERLE JONES WANTS 35MM PRINT NEW PILOT SMALL WORLD TO SHOW PALEY AND OTHERS LONDON ACTUALLY PRINT BEING SHIPPED YOU MONDAY KEEP PRINT LONDON THROUGH MY VISIT REGARDS

Burke

514-43
News

TO BE INCLUDED IN YOUR WIRE TO COLLINGWOOD

ALSO INFORMATIVELY MERLE JONES WANTS 35MM PRINT NEW PILOT SMALL WORLD TO SHOW PALEY AND OTHERS LONDON ACTUALLY PRINT BEING SHIPPED COLLINGWOOD MONDAY KEEP PRINT LONDON THROUGH MY VISIT REGARDS

Upcoming

April 25, 1958

Mr. Gustav
Connaught Hotel
Carlos Place
London, England

MRS. MURROW AND I ARRIVING LONDON MAY 8TH STOP WILL GREATLY APPRECIATE IT IF WE COULD HAVE OUR USUAL SUITE STOP WE SHALL BE STAYING UNTIL MAY 15TH STOP REGARDS

Edward R. Murrow

514-43
News

RECEIVED
1958 APR 25 AM 10:57
C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

18th

VCBSINC NY

CBS/ACR2/CCD172/TD250

LONDON 28 25 443P

PRESS CBSINC

NY

BURKE FOR MURROW FRIENDLY DOWNIN STREET WANTSXXXD KNOW APPROXIMATE DATE SHOWING MACMILLAN INTERVIEW INFORMATIVELY THEY HOPE WONT HELD UP UNTIL HIS NEWYORK VISIT REGARDS

COLLINGWOOD

(MAKE 5TH LINE 1 DOWING STREETXXXX RPT DOWNING STREET)

CB 1053 APR 25 1958

ACK

V

upcoming

April 21, 1958

Charles Collingwood
CBS News
Columbia, London

ONE CAMERA FOR MACMILLAN STOP POSSIBLY ARRIVING MAY 10 STOP

WILL ADVISE DEFINITELY LATER STOP REGARDS

Edward R. Murrow

514-43
News

RECEIVED
1958 APR 18 AM 11:47
C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

VZ

CBS ACR1 CCD246 TD236

LONDON 42 18TH 4.31PM

PRESS CBSINC

NYK

BURKE FOR MURROWNAND FRIENDLY DOWNING STREET STILL STICKY ABOUT USING JOINT FOR INTERVIEW STOP NEED KNOW SOONEST WHETHER ONE OR TWO CAMERAS IN ORDER LIST EQUIPMENT TO JUSTIFY MY CLAIM WONT DISARRANGE THEIR LIFE TOO MUCH REGARDS

COLLINGWOOD

upcoming

APRIL 8, 1958

PRESS
~~CBS~~ Columbia
LONDON

FOR KENDRICK MURROW SAYS DELIGHTED CONFIRM MACMILLAN STOP ASKING ONE OR TWO BRITISHERS HERE OUTPOINT ADVANTAGES DOWNING STREET OVER STUDIO STOP COLLINGWOOD SENDS GREETINGS. REGARDS.

BURKE

BX
fc
514-43

T

CBS GA

A-TWX ACR1 WDD111/TD56

LONDON 44 8 1214P

PSS CBSINC

NY

BURKE MURROWS DOWNING STREET TODAY AGREED MACMILLAN FOR MONDAY EVENING MAY 12 STOP THEY PREFER STUDIO TO NUMBER TEN BUT YOU CAN ARGUE THE POINT STOP PLEASE ADVISE SO WE CAN MAKE IT DEFINITE FINAL ALSO PLEASE TELL COLLINGWOOD REGARDS

KENDRICK

GI S725A APL8TH

MARCH 31, 1958

COLUMBIA
LONDON

FOR COLLINGWOOD MURROW SAYS I WILL DEFINITELY DO MACMILLAN INTERVIEW IF ARRANGEABLE STOP HOPE IT CAN BE DONE SOMETIME BETWEEN MAY 5 AND MAY 15. REGARDS.

BURKE

514-43
fc

upc.

RECEIVED

1958 APR -1 AM 10:34

C.B.S. TELETYPE ROOM N.Y.

CBS ACR1 WEA809 TD165

LONDON 21 1 322P

PRESS CBSINC

NY

BURKE FOR MURROW BRAVO EXCLAMATION KEY MAY OUT OF TOWN BUT WILL SETTLE MAY DATES TOMORROW REGARDS

COLLINGWOOD

KX 1028AM APR1/58

PLS ACK

MARCH 10, 1958

PRESS
COLUMBIA
LONDON

FOR COLLINGWOOD MURROW SAYS MICKELSON THINKS BEST IDEA YOU TELL DOWNING STREET I'LL COME OVER FOR FACE THE NATION PIECE RATHER THAN ATTEMPTING SET UP TWO SEPARATE SHOWS. REGARDS.

BURKE

514-43
fc

CBS NEWS
London Bureau
26 Hallam Street, London W1 Langham 1166-1167

Charles Collingwood

6 March 1958

Dear Judge:

I have just had a letter from Ted Koop in Washington asking me to make a pitch for Macmillan on a Face The Nation to be filmed here early in April for showing on April 20. As the channel for such CBS invitations here in London, I have done so. However, I am also aware of your own approaches to Macmillan and the understanding you have with him and his people. Therefore, I think you ought to know that they -- that is, Face T he Nation -- have made this request and that I have forwarded it to Downing Street. I don't know whether you want to renew your own invitation, but if you do, I shall be happy to press it.

Actually, I think the climate is more favorable for getting Macmillan now than it has been in a long time. As you may know, when he got back from his Commonwealth tour he subjected himself to both radio and television interviews and came across so well that his managers are busily congratulating themselves on having projected a New Macmillan to the public. In addition the summit controversy and so forth gives him something to talk about, and I suspect the iron might be hot enough now to be worth striking with some vigor.

I don't know, of course, how all this fits in with your schedule, but I thought I ought to mention it because of all the spadework you have put in on a Macmillan appearance and Face The Nation's current invitation.

Life continues to go well enough here -- up to our ass in budget stuff from New York, but we try to rise above it. A reasonable facsimile of Spring has arrived and London is peculiarly pleasant. Taking advantage of the good weather, the zealots are passing around petitions and organizing marches against the H-Bomb. Its all rather frighteningly reminiscent of the 1930s and Peace Ballots and Peace Pledges. Sometimes I have the feeling that this is where I came in. A funny time. Still, this is a good place to be.

As ever,

Charles

"SEE IT NOW"

WATCH ON THE RUHR - GERMANY

July 7, 1958

SIN
Barnard, Harry

July 21, 1958

Dear Mr. Barnard:

Many thanks for your nice note of July 15th and for your column on WATCH ON THE RUHR.

I greatly appreciate your thoughtfulness in sending it to me.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Harry Barnard
801 Lavergne
Wilmette, Illinois

mcc

Barnard, H.

from the desk of
HARRY BARNARD

801 Lavergne
Wilmette, Illinois

July 15,1958

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I thought that the enclosed column in the Chicago Daily News —which also is to appear in the Madison(Wis.) Capital-Times— would have a special interest for you.

And thanks for all the good works you do!

Sincerely,

Harry Barnard

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER FOUNDED JANUARY 1, 1876
JOHN S. KNIGHT, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER

Published daily by The Chicago Daily News, Inc., Chicago (6), Ill.
400 West Madison st. Tel. DEarborn 2-1111

ABC AVERAGE NET CIRCULATION FOR THE SIX-MONTH PERIOD ENDED MARCH 31 { 565,674 DAILY 557,674 SATURDAY

Pulitzer gold medals awarded the Daily News for "most disinterested and meritorious public service" in 1956 and 1948.
The award for 1956 is the 10th Pulitzer Prize received by the Daily News or members of its staff since 1925.

EDITORIAL PAGE STAFF: A. T. Burch, Associate Editor
John M. Johnston Fred J. Pannwitt Van Allen Bradley Cecil Jensen Sydney J. Harris Louis Marlane

8 MONDAY, JULY 14, 1958

LIBERAL AT LARGE

Finds Americans Mislead Germans

BY HARRY BARNARD

IN THAT German military bible, "On War," by Von Clausewitz, it is written that the final decision of war is not always to be regarded as "absolute." It can be only "a transitory evil," for which, it says, a remedy can be found "in the political circumstances of a later day."

Were he still alive, old Junker Clausewitz would have felt quite set up watching Edward R. Murrow's recent "See It Now" telecast on the subject, "Can You Trust the Germans?"

BARNARD

As no economist could, it showed that Germany now enjoys total prosperity, thanks mainly to "political circumstances" that concern Russia.

I do not begrudge legitimate prosperity for redeemed Germans.

Yet there was cause for disquiet, not only in what Murrow showed, but in the fact that on that very day came news that the Adenauer-controlled Bundestag bitterly berated America for abandoning, at least for now, the scheme to hand back to Germans, as individuals (including some former Nazis), property in this country that was German before the war.

* * *

DOUBLED in value, these holdings were legally assigned to us forever by treaty—not confiscated—in lieu of reparations.

Solemnly, the Germans agreed to this. Today some of their officials want to renege.

Up to now, they have been very polite about this. But the Bundestag action was arrogant and hard to square with assurances that Germany is now a changed nation.

If Germany really felt shame for its war crimes, and valued public opinion outside Germany, would its leaders even consider thus going to bat for former Nazis?

* * *

THE ANSWER to this puzzle, I think, lies more than with Germans with certain Americans who, for reasons that must appear dubious, have misled Germany into this indiscretion.

These Americans, in serving the former Nazis, set up a fantastic outcry that America is turning its back on a constitutional principle, alleged "inviolability" of private property, thereby acting "like Communists."

Oddly, Sen. Olin Johnston (D., S.C.), who boasts of opposing constitutional rights for Negroes, is the leader.

Very cleverly, too, agents of this effort spread the word that Israel approves. The office of Prime Minister Ben-Gurion of Israel has informed me there is no truth in this.

* * *

JUST AS baseless is that "principle" of "inviolability" that Johnston (usually echoed by Dirksen of Illinois) touts so passionately.

The applicable principle, which he twists, is something far different — that property shall not be taken "without due process of law and just compensation."

These protections the former Nazis received, even if they did not grant them to their victims when they were in power, especially as it was specifically agreed that their own government was to reimburse them for losses if it wished to do so.

Besides, if any principle should guide our government, as well as the Germans', in this matter, it is that war must not be sanctioned as a way for individuals to garner riches or for nations to win prosperity. Returning the German war assets would mean such unconscionable sanction.

* * *

SOME innocent people are involved. They should get compensation. But the scheme now shelved by our State Department meant rewarding Hitlerism, confirming a young German on Murrow's show in his belief that "Hitler was not all bad," and proving that Clausewitz is still a fine guide for German nationalism.

It also meant that if anybody screams "Communism!" as Hitler did to get power, we will turn over anything we have, including honor.

This folly I do not believe the American people support—yet.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

AN INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER FOUNDED JANUARY 1, 1876
JOHN S. KNIGHT, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER

Published daily by The Chicago Daily News, Inc., Chicago (5), Ill.
400 West Madison st. Tel. DEarborn 2-1111

AVERAGE NET CIRCULATION FOR THE SIX-MONTH PERIOD ENDED MARCH 31 { 565,574 DAILY 537,574 SATURDAY

Pulitzer gold medals awarded the Daily News for "most disinterested and meritorious public service" in 1938 and 1948.
The award for 1958 is the 10th Pulitzer Prize received by the Daily News or members of its staff since 1928.

EDITORIAL PAGE STAFF: A. T. Burch, Associate Editor
John M. Johnston Fred J. Pannwitt Van Allen Bradley Cecil Jensen Sydney J. Harris Louis Marisne

MONDAY, JUNE 30, 1958

LIBERAL AT LARGE

U.S. Ideas of 1776 Can Whip Marxism

BY HARRY BARNARD

ANYONE WHO cherishes the humanist values of Western culture, as I do, must oppose Marxian communism. Especially is this so concerning communism as it has evolved from the diseased soil of Russia.

One may hope that just as communism succeeded equally loathsome czarism, something better, even in our time, will emerge there. For the face of Soviet communism today is an ugly one—cold, mechanical, devoid of humor, brutal.

BARNARD

Liberals are especially sensitive to this face. J. Edgar Hoover (in the strongest point of his recent book) says:

"Make no mistake, Communists do not like liberalism; that is, the genuine liberalism of Western civilization. They denounce liberals ('liberal blockheads,' Lenin called them) and attempt by every means to destroy them."

* * *

PRECISELY SO. So long as liberalism is strong, thus offering hope for orderly correction of society's faults, the Communists are deprived of their strongest appeal.

Liberalism, then, is the one sure answer to communism. To the extent that our most vocal anti-Communists overlook or do not know this, they do not fight communism. They help it.

Brutal and amoral as communism now is, it is a mistake to base opposition to it wholly, or even largely, on these aspects. For these are not uniquely Communist aspects.

* * *

KEEPING in mind that, for all its ugliness, communism has achieved some good for the Russians, the Chinese and others, upon what, then, should an intelligent case against communism be based?

We should cease, I think, filling the air with cries about Communists being "godless," "cruel," "untrustworthy," "aggressive," "enslavers of mankind."

Obviously, it is no longer possible to say that communism cannot achieve economic and technological gains.

* * *

BUT THIS we can say: Communism represents a warped and mean view of human life. All its emphasis is on man as an economic being. Its key words are all concerned with economics—"the proletariat," "the bourgeois," "abolition of property," "distribution of wealth," "industrial power."

The Communist Man is the Economic Man. This is a dreary, degrading concept.

The West is against this concept—and so, too, are people of the East, perhaps more so. But we cannot make these points stick if our own propaganda is overweighted with key words that really are just capitalist variants of those the Communists use, like "private enterprise" and "private property."

This is what we have been doing. It explains why we are losing the cold war.

* * *

OUR SOCIETY'S meaningful words—have we forgotten?—are: "Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness." These words, representing what differentiates us, or should, from the Communists, illuminate a goal specifically stated in the one document, our Declaration of Independence in 1776, that makes every Communist manifesto from Marx to Khrushchev, a shabby mockery of human aspirations.

Mr. Dulles, Rep. Walter (D., Pa.) and lots of others really should read it.

With those classic American ideas on our banner, unfurled as if we meant them, we can wage the ideological fight with communism, not fearfully or apologetically, but with the optimism and inner security that assure victory—not only for us, but for all mankind, the Russians included.

FROM

SIDNEY L. BERNSTEIN

GRANADA THEATRES LIMITED

GRANADA TV NETWORK LIMITED

Transatlantic Pictures Corporation Limited

36 GOLDEN SQUARE LONDON W1

REGENT 8080

REVIEWS OF:
WATCH ON THE RUHR

EDINBURGH EVENING DESPATCH
30.7.58

Germans thinking and working hard

Scottish Television devoted an hour to discuss the problem of Germany, posed many questions, showed many interesting glimpses of life to-day, and inevitably left the answers in the air. It could not be otherwise.

U.S. commentator Edward R. Murrow offered a comprehensive survey of the problem, presented a balanced summary, and raised politically what one might say were all the right questions. While one view is that the German economy is very unstable, he was supported in the contention that Germany stands upright by one of the industrialists who refuted the old suggestion that if America sneezes Europe catches pneumonia; at the most Germany would have only a slight cold.

The Ruhr, 50 miles of blood and iron, was quoted as being more prosperous than under Hitler. Miners earn high wages and Krupps employ 91,000 men. Full cycle again, quite simply because N.A.T.O. needs the Ruhr and the Ruhr needs Krupps.

What was very impressive throughout this analysis was that the Germans almost everywhere are thoughtful of their position, are prepared to discuss it, and are thinking hard and working hard.

There was no desire expressed to break away from the West; indeed, the view was "if there is to be any future for Germany it is only if we remain alive with the free world."

As outspoken and serious as any were the university students and their divisions afforded a real insight into the perplexities of the country as a whole.

BIRMINGHAM MAIL 30.7.58

★ ★ ★

"WATCH on the Ruhr," Edward R. Murrow's investigation on Channel Eight, was a little disappointing. It gave an interesting picture of the rebuilding of Germany, but some of the interviews were confusing and inconclusive.

The frankness of the industrialist who spoke of the value of a recession in bringing "labour back to a more reasonable attitude" was a little startling. One can imagine the storm there would be if a British industrialist had made such a comment on television.

BRADFORD ARGUS 30.7.58

Reminder shamed the Germans

THERE was an unmistakable sense of shame and guilt revealed on the faces of a group of Germans seen on ITV last night. They were watching that strong anti-Nazi play "The Diary of Anne Frank," which tells of a Jewish girl in occupied Holland during the war and how she met her untimely and cruel death at the hands of the Germans.

A hidden camera was focussed on this German audience while they watched the more harrowing moments of the play. Many of those in that theatre were old enough to remember the atrocities of Belsen, and this vivid theatrical reminder—judging by their facial expressions and their leaving the theatre in complete and utter silence—must certainly have jogged their conscience.

Another side of this admirable feature, "Watch on the Ruhr," showed how the thorough and workmanlike German nation has rebuilt factories, flats and hotels and laid spacious gardens out of the wilderness of rubble. Would that we British, in bombed cities like Sheffield, had shown such determination to recreate.

This was an hour's film produced by United States commentator Edward R. Murrow, and although it had an American flavour, it achieved its firm purpose of making us think and ponder.

YORKSHIRE EVENING POST
30.7.58

ITV There were subtle variations in the atmosphere created by the extremely interesting documentary "Watch on the Ruhr;" sometimes it inspired confidence, and sometimes it was disturbing.

Obviously people in Britain have good reason for being a little mistrustful of the Germans, but there was in this programme an air of solid adherence to democracy that seemed to say we need have no more fear. Yet here and there were hints that the Hitler legend is not quite dead.

We saw the amazing vitality of the Germans, expressed in the gigantic feat of rebuilding they have accomplished since 1945, yet though there was a categorical assurance from Krupps that the greatest of all German steel plants would never again be used to produce weapons, one could not help feeling that with a change of political climate, here was the basis for a fearful new arms industry. F. G. L.

YORKSHIRE EVENING NEWS
30.7.58

ITV Murrow looks at Germany

A REELING, bomb - battered wreck of a country 13 years ago, Germany has fought back until she now "stands erect, on her own feet."

The quote is that of Edward R. Murrow, ace U.S. commentator, who put our ex-enemies under his microscope in "Watch on the Ruhr" and brought sharply into focus today's picture of a nation bursting with prosperity and fearless of the future.

Most publicised part of this documentary was the German audience reaction to the tragic play "The Diary of Anne Frank," but anyone expecting hysterical weeping from the watchers of this drama of a Jewish girl's ordeal under the Nazis would be disappointed.

Moving though the shots of the stony-faced audience leaving the theatre were, I was much more fascinated by the sight of a country with its coat off, sleeves rolled up and battling with that familiar Teutonic fervour to make a name for itself.

The question Murrow posed "Can we trust the Germans?" was I thought left unanswered.

This absorbing study so well photographed and skilfully narrated left me so full of thought that I hardly noticed the following show, "Summertime," although the brilliant monologue of American comic Shelley Berman broke in enough to give me my one big laugh of the evening—and I really felt I needed that laugh.—D.H.

BLACKBURN EVENING TELEGRAPH
30.7.58

The Ed Murrow interviews and documentaries have a deservedly high reputation which was at least maintained by "Watch on the Ruhr" (ITA) which caused the still disturbing question: "Can we trust the Germans?" It gets full marks, but so too, should the excellent daily commentaries of the BBC, such as "Behind the Headlines." S. D.

BOLTON EVENING NEWS 30.7.58

Televiewpoint — Edited by Cathode

B.B.C. NEWS SERVICE MAY LACK VERVE, BUT...

THE Ed. Murrow interviews are all excellently contrived, and last night he gave us a valuable 60-minute analysis of the modern Germans in "Watch on the Ruhr" (I.T.A.) At the same time, writes Cathode, I am bound to say that the B.B.C. news service is always, in a sober way, excellent.

It may lack some of the verve of the service provided by the opposition, but is verve so very necessary? And is it to be preferred to the wider, more comprehensive service which the B.B.C. is able to give?

It is not only the news bulletin but the supporting background feature such as "Behind the Headlines" which makes the B.B.C. news service so good.

Last night, for example, "Behind the Headlines" gave us a picture of the position in the Lebanon which was first-rate.

G. W. Stonier's dramatic episode—it was that rather than a play—in the B.B.C.'s "Television Playwright" series was as notable as much for the technique as the content. Mary, thinking aloud to a background of her father's querulousness, the dramatic quality of the one-room setting which is capable of evoking, on television, the whole outside world.

The story began when Mary, looking out from the room in which she had to dance attendance upon her bedridden father, saw a murder committed. Not just any murder, though that would have been dramatic enough, but one which, as flashbacks showed, involved her too.

Mary, I thought, was superbly played by Jessica Dunning and the disappointment was in the support given her.

Alan Webb was not sharp enough for an invalid pukha sahib, and Richard Leech seemed too mildly impersonal for someone who had just killed his wife.

On the whole it more than deserved its place in a series designed to encourage writing for television.

ONLY ONE INTERRUPTION FOR THE COMMERCIALS

Tuesday night on ITV is morons' night, I said last week, because of the succession of feather-light offerings dished up, writes R.L. But not last night—thanks to Edward R. Murrow's "Watch on the Ruhr." This was an extremely informative, intelligent programme.

Congratulations to Granada for screening it, and for acknowledging its importance by interrupting the hour-long documentary only once with commercials.

"Watch on the Ruhr" showed how Germany, grovelling in the ashes of total defeat 13 years ago, has become an immensely prosperous phoenix. West Germany's steel industry, and the country's economic position were highlighted and discussed in frank interviews with political and industrial leaders.

The programme gave a remarkable insight into the character of the new Germany, its problems and achievements.

LIVERPOOL ECHO. 30.7.58

TELE'RIT

EDWARD R. MURROW is undoubtedly television's ablest commentator to-day. Although we are lucky to be able to hear him in the infrequent Columbia Broadcasting System productions that come across the Atlantic to us, I often find myself wishing that we had a few of his calibre in our own television studios.

His "Watch on the Ruhr" last night presented by Granada TV, was a shining example of all that is excellent in television commentary on events of the day. Into one tight hour, Murrow hammered a dramatic survey of the spectacular and thought-provoking rise of Germany from the grim days of 1945 when all that was left was a battered shell of a nation.

From the uncouth sprawl of devastated towns, disembowelled industries and wrecked economy, from the paralysing horror of Belsen, a new Germany has risen in the brief span of thirteen years.

Last night we saw a vivid picture of it. A Germany which eats well, dresses well, works hard, plays hard, and which has its own air force and army again.

There was some evidence that the German conscience is still troubled by memories of the war. The cameras showed us the faces and the clenched hands of a theatre audience watching a play about the destruction of a Jewish family by the Nazis. Was there shame and compassion in some of those faces?

And what goes on in the minds of the young German soldiers who told us what they thought of the late German Fuhrer? There seemed to be no strong desire to remember Hitler as a monster.

It is disturbing to think that the German Army of to-morrow may be led by men who will remember Hitler because he solved the unemployment problem—conveniently forgetting that he solved it largely by liquidating the Jews and his political opponents.

"Watch on the Ruhr" was an intelligently provocative programme. And Murrow's off-screen commentary was a masterpiece of economic journalism. N.C.

MANCHESTER EVENING CHRONICLE 30.7.58

ITV

The serious type of programme came nowhere. But last night one which beat the lot held the screen—and my attention—for nearly 60 minutes.

The report on West Germany, "Watch on the Ruhr," was one of the most effective and thought-provoking programmes I have seen for a long time. I admit it had its touch of propaganda value and I didn't like the concentration camp shots.

But it was a tremendous tribute to a country which was a shambles only 13 years ago.

LIVERPOOL EVENING EXPRESS 30.7.58

Ed Murrow discovers what Fritz is thinking

WHEN Ed. Murrow asked the question, "Can you trust the Germans?" he didn't intend to answer it himself. Instead he gave us last night an excellent review of post-war Germany and left it to us to decide what Fritz had in mind.

Like every other Ed. Murrow assignment, "Watch On The Ruhr" was thorough, painstaking and scrupulously fair. We saw Germany's remarkable recovery from the havoc she brought down on herself during the war, we saw an extract from an anti-Nazi play, and we heard politicians and industrialists gently disclaiming warlike intentions.

But we also saw the new German army, minus the jack-boots, it is true—wearing the same tightlipped, set expression, roaring out their marching songs and looking every inch the soldiers upon whom Hitler relied to conquer the world.

"The memory of Adolf Hitler should not be entirely bad," said one young warrior. "He gave us the autobans and pensions for old people.

"He also gave them death and the concentration camps, and Ed Murrow included in his programme a sickening glimpse of one of them. The young soldier was little more than a babe in arms when such atrocities were being committed in his name.

The impression the programme gave was that as long as Germany remains prosperous and if she can achieve unity in a reasonable period of time, we have little to fear from the former Master Race.

But should unemployment come there is still a danger that the moment might produce the man, and the whole beastly business might start all over again.

Here's looking forward to a prosperous, united Germany and the next absorbing Ed Murrow report.

MANCHESTER EVENING NEWS 30.7.58

Out of the rut

RIGHT out of the rut was Ed Murrow's investigation into the new Germany on ITV last night. We have heard about the tremendous industrial upsurge in the Ruhr, but to see the vast steel plants, stretching for miles and miles, makes it much more real—and in view of economy—brings the danger much closer.

Murrow was trying to find out if we could trust the Germans; the programme didn't tell us, but it certainly made us wonder.

By comparison the rest of the evening's viewing paled, which was a pity, because for once the standard kept to a high level.

DAILY HERALD 30.7.58

Germany mourns and weeps

By Philip Phillips

THERE were two moving moments in last night's Ed Murrow I T V programme on present-day Germany.

One showed hundreds of Germans standing in front of a mass grave of Belsen victims.

Somewhere among the bodies was that of 14-year-old Ann Frank. The Germans had brought spring flowers to lay on the grave of the girl they murdered with eight million other Jews.

The other moment, caught with hidden cameras, showed, the audience near to tears as it came out of a Dusseldorf theatre showing "The Diary of Ann Frank."

There were other things which stuck in the memory. There was the senior German officer who said the new German Army was no longer a danger to democracy because "they now wear helmets like the Americans and have rubber soles to their army shoes—not hobnails."

The first part of the programme dealt with the human side of post-war Germany. The second, which was concerned with the complex political situation, probably bored all viewers except the specialists on German affairs.

NEWS CHRONICLE
30.7.58

Ed Murrow's The Watch on the Ruhr (ITV) was a vivid and momentously important report on Western Germany after 10 years of the miraculous Deutsches mark. There was prosperity, remorse, more prosperity.

"Can we trust the Germans?" asked Murrow. Oddly enough the shot of young German soldiers reciting a kind of catechism of democracy by heart was not the most encouraging of the answers.

A generation which needs to itemise the evils of totalitarianism is half way to forgetting those evils. But the hard-headed idealism of all those bull-necked politicians was refreshing.

PHILIP PURSER

DAILY MAIL 30.7.58

IT used to be held that the purest television was the outside broadcast.

It has now been overtaken in prestige by the Current Affairs programme, which is becoming TV's major justification and opportunity.

Last night's ITV report (at peak time!) by Ed Murrow on the Germans, Watch on the Ruhr, was a fascinating example of Current Affairs TV at its best.

Vivid comment

It told the story of the last 13 years in Western Germany; at one end ruins to the horizon and Belsen; at the other endless double-decked trains of Volkswagens, plump matrons eating pastries under the hair-dryers in beauty parlours, young conscripts pointing out how Hitler had improved the roads

All this was put across with brilliantly selected photography and a typically vivid and laconic commentary by Murrow.

Here is his eight-word sketch of Dusseldorf, the boom town of the Ruhr: "A combination of soft ruins and hard currency."

Gradually, a collective German face was built up; well fleshed, intelligent, energetic, imparting urgency to the programme's sub-title, Can You Trust The Germans?

The programme left no doubt in anybody's mind that a wrong guess on this point might be a decisive calamity.

Altogether the film was a sobering record of events since 1945 in a world that could not afford to deal in right and wrong, only in expediences.

YORKSHIRE DAILY POST 30.7.58.

* ON TELEVISION LAST NIGHT *

By JOHN MARSHALL

PICTURES of a West German audience watching a play about a Jewish family who, after years of fear and hiding, were arrested by the Gestapo and murdered in Belsen, were the most memorable feature of a 60-minute American film on ITV entitled "Watch on the Ruhr." There was no doubt that the audience, photographed by a hidden camera, was visibly shaken as it saw these Jews being taken away to a concentration camp. Later, as they quietly left the theatre without applauding, there was a sense of communal shame in the air.

But the report did not only deal with Germany's humiliation. A considerable portion was devoted to economic prosperity and the apparent stability of democratic government. But from the facts and figures one other significant feature emerged, comments on Hitler by young men in the new German Army. They did not idolise the dictator, but some stressed that he did good things and that the evil should be forgotten.

SHEFFIELD STAR
30.7.58

WHAT was the cry at VE-Day? Germany is done for, never will the mighty nation rise again from the ashes of World War II. And we all believed it.

Edward R. Murrow, the ace American commentator, brought to the Granada screens a frightening picture of Germany 1958.

The Ruhr factories are once again working at full blast—they indeed have risen from the Ashes; the young Germans are once again training for military service; and about the whole country there is an air of progress and, let's face it, a touch of the old arrogance.

One gained the impression the Nazis are gone for ever, but the Germans are so subtle at the arts of deception and diplomacy that one really cannot judge what they think.

At any rate they are on our side, but as for being beaten? One judges they have already forgotten 1945—we mustn't!

REVIEWS ON
WATCH ON THE RUHR

RYENOLDS NEWS
3.8.58

CAN you trust the Germans? The question nagged its way through Ed Murrow's ITV report, Watch on the Ruhr.

Germany's public figures, even the general manager of Krupps, were most convincing with their professions of peaceful intent.

Then . . . on marched a platoon of young German soldiers singing a marching song.

It wasn't until those taut-faced robots recited a creed which, while acclaiming their devotion to democracy, worked in a respectful tribute to Hitler for building autobahns. that this viewer got the impression Ed Murrow was trying to tell me not to trust the Germans.

SUNDAY TIMES
3.8.58

ITV did very well to show Ed Murrow's absorbing report, "Watch on the Ruhr." The scriptless three-day courtroom serials, "The Verdict Is Yours," are working out much better than some which have, or are said to have, the advantage of a script.

THE OBSERVER.
3.8.58

NEWS that the famous Edward R. Murrow "See It Now" C.B.S. series, pearl of American TV documentary, has come to an end because United States advertisers won't support it enough could send one into a black fume of despair. (Chorus of misanthropes throughout the ages yelling "What did we tell ya!" Diogenes bumps a tattoo on the roof of his tub. Thersites carves another thumbs-down sign on the wall of his cave.) Fortunately, the shock is buffered by reports that Murrow is making more, though possibly shorter, programmes.

Anyway, just how good these detailed C.B.S. eye-probes are, and how they surpass, for thoroughness and perspicacity, anything else in the current affairs field, we saw last Tuesday when ITV showed the last "See It Now" programme, Watch on the Ruhr. This was a survey of West German progress since the war with a focus on Dusseldorf, its astonishing commercial recovery, its rather garish hedonism. The vividness and condensation of significant detail was quite remarkable. The overtone, expressed in the sub-title, was "Can You Trust the German?"

The answer was never stated explicitly. I thought it was meant to be: "probably not." But the facts were weighed with scrupulous balance. There was no attempt to prove a case or demonstrate the persistence of traditional patterns. You got an overall impression of the new State as a whole, as well as of individual manifestations.

THE STAR 30.7.58

EDWARD MURROW'S Watch On The Ruhr on ITV was an object lesson in TV reporting.

It set out to be only a "casual examination" of West Germany today, but the subject was tackled with almost Teutonic thoroughness.

The visual side—so often submerged by weight of words in such documentaries—was particularly effective.

Vivid shots of a giant Volkswagon transporter plane; a row of factory chimneys crashing down to make way for the new; the expressive hands of people being interviewed. All these told their story eloquently.

DAILY MAIL 30.7.58

IT used to be held that the purest television was the outside broadcast.

It has now been overtaken in prestige by the Current Affairs programme, which is becoming television's major justification and opportunity.

Last night's ITV report (at peak time!) by Ed Murrow on the Germans, Watch on the Ruhr, was a fascinating example of current affairs TV at its best.

☆

It told the story of the past 13 years in Western Germany.

At one end ruins to the horizon and Belsen, at the other, endless double-decked trains of Volkswagens, plump matrons eating pastries under hair-driers in beauty parlours, and young conscripts pointing out how Hitler had improved the roads and cured unemployment.

All this was put across with brilliantly selected photography and a typically vivid and laconic commentary by Murrow.

Here is his eight-word sketch of Düsseldorf, the boom town of the Ruhr: "A combination of soft ruins and hard currency."

Gradually a collective German face was built up . . . well fleshed, intelligent, energetic, imparting urgency to the programme's sub-title, Can You Trust the Germans.

The programme left no doubt in anybody's mind that a wrong guess on this point might be a decisive calamity.

Altogether the film was a sobering record of events since 1945 in a world that could not afford to deal in right and wrong, only in expediences.

DAILY MIRROR 30.7.58

LAST NIGHT'S TV

Germans—for export

SEVERAL faces of modern Germany came out of ITV's "Watch on the Ruhr" with a lot of soft answers to hard questions.

American commentator Ed Murrow asked the 64-dollar question: "Can we trust the Germans?"—and the question was still unanswered after 100,000ft. of film had been shot.

The programme, however, was a four-star contribution to current affairs on a problem that is too easily by-passed nowadays. It was obvious that West Germany is fatly prosperous, still scarred mentally by the last war—and democratic on the surface.

Its soldiers still looked like automatons, its politicians still rant. But apart from the German audience—who were watched by a hidden camera—I had the feeling that every manjack of them were only too aware they were being filmed for export.

They are a nation to be reckoned with once again.

NEWS CHRONICLE
30.7.58

You cannot mix the two.

Ed Murrow's "The Watch on the Ruhr" (ITV) was a vivid and momentously important report on Western Germany after 10 years of the miraculous Deutschmark. There was prosperity, remorse, more prosperity.

"Can we trust the Germans?" asked Murrow. Oddly enough the shot of young German soldiers reciting a kind of catechism of democracy by heart was not the most encouraging of the answers.—P.P.

[COMMITTEE PRINT]

83D CONGRESS, 2d Session | SENATE | REPORT No. —

REPORT

OF THE

SELECT COMMITTEE TO STUDY CENSURE CHARGES

UNITED STATES SENATE

EIGHTY-THIRD CONGRESS

SECOND SESSION

PURSUANT TO THE ORDER ON

S. Res. 301

AND AMENDMENTS

A RESOLUTION TO CENSURE THE SENATOR FROM WISCONSIN, MR. McCARTHY

Printed for the use of the Select Committee To Study Censure Charges

UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
53288 WASHINGTON : 1954

SELECT COMMITTEE TO STUDY CENSURE CHARGES

ARTHUR V. WATKINS, Utah, Chairman

EDWIN C. JOHNSON, Colorado, Vice Chairman

JOHN C. STENNIS, Mississippi
FRANK CARLSON, Kansas
FRANCIS CASE, South Dakota
SAM J. ERVIN, Jr., North Carolina

E. WALLACE CHADWICK, Counsel
GUY G. DE FURIA, Assistant Counsel
JOHN M. JEX, Clerk
JOHN W. WELLMAN, Staff Member
FRANK GINSBURG and R. RAY MCGUIRE, Members of Senator Watkins' Staff on Loan to the Committee

[COMMITTEE PRINT]

83d Congress, 2d Session } SENATE { Report No. ——

REPORT ON RESOLUTION TO CENSURE

Mr. Watkins, from the Select Committee To Study Censure Charges, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany S. Res. 301]

The Select Committee To Study Censure Charges, consisting of—

Arthur V. Watkins (chairman)
Edwin C. Johnson (vice chairman)

John C. Stennis
Frank Carlson
Francis Case
Sam J. Ervin, Jr.

to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 301) and amendments, having considered the same, reports thereon and recommends that the resolution be adopted with certain amendments.

Introduction

On August 2 (legislative day, July 2), 1954, Senate Resolution 301, to censure the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCarthy, submitted by Senator Flanders on July 30, and amendments proposed thereto, was referred to a select committee to be composed of 3 Republicans and 3 Democrats and named by the Vice President. By said order the select committee was authorized—

(1) To hold hearings;

(2) To sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate;

(3) To require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as is deemed advisable.

The select committee was instructed to act and to make a report to the Senate prior to the adjournment sine die of the Senate in the 2d session of the 83d Congress.

The order of the Senate is set forth in the hearing record, page 1 et seq.

The Vice President, on August 5, 1954, acting on the recommendations of the majority leader and the minority leader, made the following appointments of members of the select committee: From the majority, the Senator from Utah (Mr. Watkins), the Senator from Kansas (Mr. Carlson), and the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. Case). From the minority, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Johnson), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Stennis), and the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Ervin). The select committee chose the Senator from Utah (Mr. Watkins) as chairman, and the Senator from Colorado (Mr. Johnson) as vice chairman.

The select committee, on August 24, 1954, served upon the junior Senator from Wisconsin, and other interested persons, a notice of hearings, setting forth 5 categories containing 13 specifications of charges from certain of the proposed amendments, establishing the general procedural rules for the hearings before the select committee, and formally requesting the appearance of Senator McCarthy. The notice of hearings will be found in the hearing record, page 8.

All testimony and evidence taken and received by the select committee was at public hearings attended by Senator McCarthy and his counsel. No testimony or evidence was taken or received in executive session, except the testimony of the Parliamentarian, which was taken with the knowledge and consent of the attorney for Senator McCarthy. The public hearings were held in accordance with said notice of hearings, on August 31, September 1, 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 13, 1954. The entire testimony, evidence, and proceedings at said public hearings is in the printed record of the hearings and made part of this report by reference.

At the commencement of the hearings, on August 31, 1954 (p. 11 of the hearings), the chairman stated:

Statement of Purposes of Committee Made at Commencement of Hearing

Now, at the outset of this hearing, the committee desires to state in general terms what is involved in Senate Resolution 301 and the Senate order on it, which authorized the appointment of the select committee to consider in behalf of the Senate the so-called Flanders resolution of censure, together with all amendments proposed in the resolution.

The committee, in the words of the Senate order was "authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, to require by subpena, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as it deems advisable, and that the committee be instructed to act and make a report to this body prior to the adjournment sine die of the Senate in the second session of the 83d Congress."

That is a broad grant of power, carrying with it a heavy responsibility—a responsibility which the committee takes seriously. In beginning its duties, the committee found few precedents to serve as a guide. It is true that there had been other censure resolutions before the Senate in the past, but the acts complained of were, for the most part, single occurrences which happened in the presence of the Senate or one of its committtees. Under such circumstances, prolonged investigations and hearings were not necessary.

It should be pointed out that some forty-and-odd alleged instances of misconduct on the part of Senator McCarthy referred to this committee are involved and complex, both with respect to matters of fact and law. With reference to the time element, the incidents are alleged to have happened within a period covering several years. In addition, 3 Senate committees already have held hearings on 1 or more phases of the alleged incidents of misconduct. Obviously, with all this in mind, the committee had good reason for concluding it faced an unprecedented situation which would require adoption of procedures, all within the authority granted it in the Senate order, that would enable it to perform the duties assigned within the limited time given by the Senate.

The committee interprets its duties, functions, and responsibilities under the Senate order to be as follows:

1. To analyze the charges set forth in the amendments and to determine—

(a) If there were duplications which could be eliminated.

(b) If any of the charges were of such a nature that even if the allegations were established as factually true, yet there would be strong reasons for believing that they did not constitute a ground for censure.

2. To thoroughly investigate all charges not eliminated under No. 1 in order to secure relevant and material facts concerning them and the names of witnesses or records which can establish the facts at the hearings to be held.

In this connection the committee believes it should function as an impartial investigating agency to develop by direct contacts in the field and by direct examination of Senate records all relevant and material facts possible to secure.

When Senate Resolution 301 and amendments offered were referred to the committee, the committee interprets this action to mean that from that time on the resolution and charges became the sole responsibility of the Senate. To state it another way, the Senator, or Senators, who offered Resolution 301, and proposed amendments thereto, have no legal responsibility from that point on for the conduct of the investigations and hearings authorized by the order of the Senate. The hearings are not to be adversary in character. Under this interpretation, it became the committee's duty then to get all the facts and material relevant to the charges irrespective of whether the facts sustained the charges or showed them to be without foundation.

The foregoing statement seems to be necessary in view of a widespread misunderstanding that the Senator who introduced the resolution of censure into the Senate and the Senators who offered amendments thereto, setting up specific charges against the Senator from Wisconsin, are the complaining witnesses, or the parties plaintiff, in this proceeding. That is not true, as has been explained. However, because of the fact that they had made some study of the situation, the committee did give them an opportunity to submit informational documentation of the charges they had offered. Also they were asked to submit the names of any witnesses who might have firsthand knowledge of the matters charged and who could give relevant and material testimony in the hearings.

Since matters of law also will be involved in reaching evaluation of the facts developed, pertinent rules of the Senate and sections of law, together with precedents and decisions by competent tribunals, should be briefed and made a part of the hearing record, the committee believes.

3. To hold hearings where the committee can present witnesses and documentary evidence for the purpose of placing on record, for later use by the Senate, the evidence and other information gathered during the preliminary investigation period, and for the development of additional evidence and information as the hearings proceed.

The resolution of censure presents to the Senate an issue with respect to the conduct and possible punishment of one of its Members. The debate in the Senate preceding the vote to refer the matter to a select committee made it abundantly clear that the proceedings necessary to a proper disposal of the resolution and the amendments proposed, both in the Senate and in the select committee, would be judicial or quasi-judicial in nature, and for that reason should be conducted in a judicial manner and atmosphere, so far as compatible with the investigative functions of the committee in its preliminary and continuing search for evidence and information bearing on all phases of the issues presented.

Inherent in the situation created by the resolution of censure and the charges made, is the right of the Senator against whom the charges were made to be present at the hearings held by the select committee. He should also be permitted to be represented by counsel and should have the right of cross-examination. This is somewhat contrary to the practice by Senate committees in the past, in hearings of this nature, but the present committee believes that the accused Senator should have these rights. He or his counsel, but not both, shall be permitted to make objections to the introduction of testimony, but the argument on the objections may be had or withheld at the discretion of the chairman. The Senator under charges should be permitted to present witnesses and documentary evidence in his behalf, but, of course, this should be done in compliance with the policy laid down by the committee in its notice of hearing, which is a part of this record.

In general, the committee wishes it understood that the regulations adopted are for the purpose of insuring a judicial hearing and a judicial atmosphere as befits the importance of the issues raised. For that reason, and in accordance with the order the committee believes to be the sentiment of the Senate, all activities which are not permitted in the Senate itself will not be permitted in this hearing.

4. When the hearings have closed, to prepare a report and submit it to the Senate. Under the order creating this committee, this must be done before the present Senate adjourns sine die.

By way of comment, let me say that the inquiry we are engaged in is of a special character which differentiates it from the usual legislative inquiry. It involves the internal affairs of the Senate itself in the exercise of a high constitutional function. It is by nature a judicial or semijudicial function, and we shall attempt to conduct it as such. The procedures outlined are not necessarily appropriate to congressional investigations and should not, therefore, be construed as in any sense intended as a model appropriate to such inquiries. We hope what we are doing will be found to conform to sound senatorial principles and traditions in the special field in which the committee is operating.

It has been said before, but it will do no harm to repeat, that the members of this committee did not seek this appointment. The qualifications laid down by the Senate order creating the commission, said the committee should be made up of 3 Democrat Senators and 3 Republican Senators. This was the only condition named in the order. However, in a larger sense the proper authorities of the Senate were charged with the responsibility of attempting to choose Members of the Senate for this committee who could and would conduct a fair and impartial investigation and hearing. Members of the committee deemed their selection by the Senate authorities as a trust.

We realize we are human. We know, and the American people know, that there has been a controversy raging over the country through a number of years in connection with the activities of the Senator against whom the resolution is directed. Members of this committee have been conscious of that controversy; they have seen, heard, and read of the activities, charges, and countercharges, and being human, they may have at times expressed their impressions with respect to events that were happening while they were happening.

However, each of the Senators who make up this special select committee are mature men with a wide background of experience which should enable them to disregard any impressions or preconceived notions they may have had in the past respecting the controversies which have been going on in public for many years.

We approach this matter as a duty imposed upon us and which we feel that we should do our very best to discharge in a proper manner. We realize the United States Senate, in a sense, is on trial, and we hope our conduct will be such as to maintain the American sense of fair play and the high traditions and dignity of the United States Senate under the authority given it by the Constitution.

As the investigations and the hearings progressed, the committee found that the period of time allotted to perform the task assigned would not be sufficient if all the charges were given thorough investigation and hearings were held thereon. The committee also was aware of the practical situation that required that its task be completed sufficiently early to permit the Senate to consider its report before that body must adjourn sine die.

Procedure for Committee Hearings Established in Notice of Hearings

All testimony and evidence received in the hearings shall be such as is found by the select committee to be competent, relevant, and material to the subject matters so under inquiry, with the right of examination and cross-examination, in general conformity to judicial proceedings and in accordance with said order of the Senate.

The select committee will admit, subject to said order, as competent testimony for the record, so far as material and relevant, the official proceedings and pertinent actions of the Senate and of any of its committees or subcommittees, taking judicial notice thereof, and using official reprints when convenient. Following

Senate tradition, witnesses may be examined by any member of the committee, and they may be examined or cross-examined for the committee by its counsel. Witnesses may be examined or cross-examined either by Senator McCarthy or his counsel, but not by both as to the same witness.

Senator McCarthy was permitted to and made an opening statement in his own behalf at the commencement of the first hearing, on condition that it be relevant and material, and not to be received as testimony (hearing record, p. 14).

By unanimous vote of the members of the select committee taken after the issuance of the notice of hearings, it was decided to proceed with hearings only upon the 13 specifications set forth in the 5 categories contained in the notice of hearings, to which reference is hereby made (hearing record, p. 8).

I

Category I. Incidents of Contempt of the Senate or a Senatorial Committee

A. GENERAL DISCUSSION AND SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The evidence on the question whether Senator McCarthy was guilty of contempt of the Senate or a senatorial committee involves his conduct with relation to the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. An analysis of the three amendments referring to this general matter (being amendment (3) proposed by Senator Fulbright, amendment (a) proposed by Senator Morse, and amendment (17) proposed by Senator Flanders) reveals these specific charges:

(1) That Senator McCarthy refused repeated invitations to testify before the subcommittee.

(2) That he declined to comply with a request by letter dated November 21, 1952, from the chairman of the subcommittee to appear to supply information concerning certain specific matters involving his activities as a Member of the Senate.

(3) That he denounced the subcommittee and contemptuously refused to comply with its request.

(4) That he has continued to show his contempt for the Senate by failing to explain in any manner the six charges contained in the Hennings-Hayden-Hendrickson report, which was filed in January 1953.

We have decided to consider and discuss in our report under this category the incident with reference to Senator Hendrickson, since the conduct complained of is related directly to the fact that Senator Hendrickson was a member of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections. This incident is referred to in the amendment proposed by Senator Flanders (30), the specific charge being:

(5) That he ridiculed and defamed Senator Hendrickson in vulgar and base language, calling him: "A living miracle without brains or guts."

The report referred to as the Hennings-Hayden-Hendrickson report is the report of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections to the Committee on Rules and Administration, pursuant to Senate Resolution 187, 82d Congress, 1st session, and Senate Resolution 304, 82d Congress, 2d session, filed January 2, 1953, made part of this report and printed in the appendix. The select committee admitted in evidence the Hennings-Hayden-Hendrickson report for the limited purposes of showing the nature of the charges before that subcommittee, as bearing upon the question of jurisdiction of that subcommittee, and what was the subject matter of the investigation (pp. 55, 121, and 524 of the hearings).

As stated by the chairman (p. 17 of the hearings), the select committee did not construe this category as involving in any way the truth or falsity of any of the charges against Senator McCarthy considered by that subcommittee. These charges, as shown by its report and as stated briefly by the chairman, Senator Hennings, in a letter to Senator McCarthy under date of November 21, 1952 (Hennings-Hayden-Hendrickson report, p. 98), were:

> Pursuant to your request, as transmitted to us through Mr. Kiermas, we are advising you that the subcommittee desires to make inquiry with respect to the following matters:
>
> (1) Whether any funds collected or received by you and by others on your behalf to conduct certain of your activities, including those relating to "communism," were ever diverted and used for other purposes inuring to your personal advantage.
>
> (2) Whether you, at any time, used your official position as a United States Senator and as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, the Joint Housing Committee, and the Senate Investigations Committee to obtain a $10,000 fee from the Lustron Corp., which company was then almost entirely subsidized by agencies under the jurisdiction of the very committees of which you were a member.
>
> (3) Whether your activities on behalf of certain special interest groups, such as housing, sugar, and China, were motivated by self-interest.
>
> (4) Whether your activities with respect to your senatorial campaigns, particularly with respect to the reporting of your financing and your activities relating to the financial transactions with, and subsequent employment of, Ray Kiermas involved violations of the Federal and State Corrupt Practices Acts.
>
> (5) Whether loan or other transactions which you had with the Appleton State Bank, of Appleton, Wis., involved violations of tax and banking laws.
>
> (6) Whether you used close associates and members of your family to secrete receipts, income, commodity, and stock speculation, and other financial transactions for ulterior motives.

The evidence taken by the select committee under this category consisted of letters and documents, oral testimony by Senator McCarthy and oral testimony by Senator Hayden, and by the Parliamentarian. As to the statement regarding Senator Hendrickson, there is the testimony of a reporter. There is no material contradiction in any of the testimony relating to this category. The sending and receipt of the correspondence is admitted. There is no contradiction of the verbal testimony of Senator McCarthy with reference to his conversations with Chairman Gillette, or of that of Chairman Hayden with reference to the constitution of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections and the filing of its report, or of that of Parliamentarian Watkins, discussed fully hereinafter.

The evidence shows that the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was proceeding to investigate and report on Senate Resolution 187; that Senator McCarthy was invited to appear to testify before the subcommittee on five separate occasions extending from September 25, 1951, to November 7, 1952, and formally requested to appear by letter and telegram of November 21, 1952; that Senator McCarthy could not appear at the times specified in the request because of his absence in Wisconsin; that Senator McCarthy did not appear before the subcommittee in answer to the matters under investigation regarding his own conduct, but did appear on one occasion in support of his Senate Resolution 304 directed against Senator Benton; that Senator McCarthy accused the subcommittee of acting without power and beyond its jurisdiction, of wasting vast amounts of public money for improper partisan purposes, of proceeding dishonestly, of aiding the cause of communism, and that these accusations were directed toward an official subcommittee of the Senate. The uncontradicted testimony further shows that Senator McCarthy directed and gave to the press an abusive and insulting statement concerning Senator Hendrickson, calculated to wound a colleague, solely because Senator Hendrickson was a member of the subcommittee and performing services required by the Senate.

Senate Resolution 187, introduced by Senator Benton, was not voted upon by the Senate, but when the jurisdiction of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections and the integrity of its members was attacked, the Senate by its vote of 60 to 0 in Senate Resolution 300, affirmed and ratified both.

Counsel for Senator McCarthy advanced the contention that these specifications relating to "Incidents of contempt of the Senate or a senatorial committee" were legally insufficient on their face as a predicate for the censure of Senator McCarthy because (1) there has never been a case of censure upon a Member of Congress for conduct antedating the inception of the Congress which is hearing the censure charges (p. 18 of the hearings), and (2) because the subcommittee acted unlawfully and beyond its jurisdiction (pp. 53 to 58 of the hearings).

B. FINDINGS OF FACT

From the evidence and testimony taken with reference to the first category, the select committee finds the following facts:

1. On August 6, 1951, Senate Resolution 187, 82d Congress, 1st session, was introduced by Senator Benton and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration (p. 20 of the hearings).

2. In turn, this resolution was referred by the Committee on Rules and Administration to its Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections (p. 280 of the hearings).

3. This resolution provided, inter alia, that whereas "any sitting Senator, regardless of whether he is a candidate in the election himself, should be subject to expulsion by action of the Senate, if it finds such Senator engaged in practices and behavior that make him, in the opinion of the Senate, unfit to hold the position of United States Senator,": Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules and Administration of the Senate is authorized and directed to proceed with such consideration of the report of its Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections with respect to the 1950 Maryland senatorial general election, which was made pursuant to Senate Resolution 250, 81st Congress, April 13, 1950, and to make such further investigation with respect to the participation of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy in the 1950 senatorial campaign of Senator John Marshall Butler, and such investigation with respect to his other acts since his election to the Senate, as may be appropriate to enable such committee to determine whether or not it should initiate action with a view toward the expulsion from the United States Senate of the said Senator Joseph R. McCarthy.

It will be noted that this proposed resolution authorized and directed such investigation as may be appropriate "with reference to his other acts since his election to the Senate."

4. Senator McCarthy was elected to the Senate in the fall of 1946, and took his seat in January 1947.

5. Among the charges pending before and investigated by that Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, charges (1), (2), (3), and (4) related to matters since Senator McCarthy's election to the Senate in 1946, and charges (5) and (6) may or may not have referred to matters since his election to the Senate, or to matters both before and after his election.

6. Senator Guy M. Gillette was chairman of that Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections until his resignation on September 26, 1952 (p. 22 of the hearings).

7. By letter of Senator McCarthy to Chairman Gillette dated September 17, 1951, Senator McCarthy stated that he intended to appear to question witnesses and that the subcommittee, without authorization from the Senate was undertaking to conduct hearings in the matter (p. 280 of the hearings).

8. By letter of September 25, 1951, Chairman Gillette notified Senator McCarthy that the Benton resolution (S. Res. 187) would be taken up by the subcommittee on September 28, 1951, and that Senator McCarthy could be present to hear Senator Benton in executive session and make his own statement also, if time permitted (p. 23 of the hearings).

9. Senator McCarthy did not reply to this letter.

10. By letter of October 1, 1951, Chairman Gillette advised Senator McCarthy that Senator Benton had appeared and presented a statement in support of his resolution looking to action pertaining to the expulsion of Senator McCarthy from the Senate, that the subcommittee had taken action to accord to Senator McCarthy the opportunity to appear and make any statement he wished to make concerning the matter, and that the subcommittee "will be glad to hear you at an hour mutually convenient," before the 10th of October, if Senator McCarthy desired to appear (p. 23 of the hearings).

11. Under date of October 4, 1951, Senator McCarthy wrote to Chairman Gillette, in reply to the latter's letter of October 1, 1951, that "I have not and do not even intend to read, much less answer, Benton's smear attack" (p. 23 of the hearings).

12. By letter of December 6, 1951, Senator McCarthy advised Chairman Gillette (p. 24 of the hearings).

(a) That the "Elections Subcommittee, unless given further power by the Senate, is restricted to matters having to do with elections.

(b) That "a horde of investigators hired by your committee at a cost of tens of thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money, has been engaged exclusively in trying to dig up on McCarthy material covering periods of time long before he was even old enough to be a candidate for the Senate—material which can have no conceivable connection with his election or any other election."

(c) That the "obvious purpose is to dig up campaign material for the Democrat Party for the coming campaign against McCarthy.

(d) That "when your Elections Subcommittee, without Senate authorization, spends tens of thousands of taxpayers' dollars for the sole purpose of digging up campaign material against McCarthy, then the committee is guilty of stealing just as clearly as though the Members engaged in picking the pockets of the taxpayers and turning the loot over to the Democrat National Committee."

(e) That "if one of the administration lackies were chairman of this committee, I would not waste the time or energy to write and point out the committee's complete dishonesty."

(f) That instead of obtaining the necessary power from the Senate, "your committee decided to spend tens of thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money to aid Benton in his smear attack upon McCarthy."

(g) That "I cannot understand your being willing to label Guy Gillette as a man who will head a committee which is stealing from the pockets of the American taxpayer tens of thousands of dollars and then using this money to protect the Democrat Party from the political effect of the exposure of Communists in Government."

(h) That "to take it upon yourself to hire a horde of investigators and spend tens of thousands of dollars without any authorization from the Senate is labeling your Elections Subcommittee even more dishonest than was the Tydings committee."

13. Chairman Gillette replied to Senator McCarthy by letter of December 6, 1951 (p. 26 of the hearings), stating that the subcommittee did not seek its unpleasant task, but that since Senate Resolution 187 was referred by the Senate to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and by it to its Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, its duty was clear and would be discharged "in a spirit of utmost fairness to all concerned and to the Senate."

14. In the same letter, Chairman Gillette informed Senator McCarthy, "your information as to the use of a large staff and the expenditure of a large sum of money in investigations relative to the resolution is, of course, erroneous."

15. By letter from Senator McCarthy to Chairman Gillette dated December 7, 1951, information was requested of the number and salaries of employees of the subcommittee (p. 26 of the hearings).

16. Chairman Gillette gave this information to Senator McCarthy under date of December 11, 1951 (p. 27 of the hearings).

17. Under date of December 19, 1951, Senator McCarthy wrote to Chairman Gillette stating that: "the full committee appointed you chairman of an Elections Subcommittee, but gave you no power whatsoever to hire investigators and spend vast amounts of money to make investigations having nothing to do with elections. Again, may I have an answer to my questions as to why you feel you are entitled to spend the taxpayers' money to do the work of the Democratic National Committee" (p. 27 of the hearings).

18. In the same letter, Senator McCarthy stated: "You and every member of your subcommittee who is responsible for spending vast amounts of money to hire investigators, pay their traveling expenses, etc., on matters not concerned with elections, is just as dishonest as though he or she picked the pockets of the taxpayers and turned the loot over to the Democratic National Committee."

19. In the same letter, Senator McCarthy stated: "I wonder if I might have a frank, honest answer to all the questions covered in my letter of December 7. Certainly as a member of the Rules Committee and as a Member of the Senate, I am entitled to this information. Your failure to give this information highlights the fact that your subcommittee is not concerned with dishonestly spending the taxpayers' money and using your subcommittee as an arm of the Democratic National Committee" (p. 28 of the hearings).

20. On December 21, 1951, Chairman Gillette wrote Senator McCarthy, advising him as follows:

(a) "I shall be very glad to give you such information as I have or go with you, if you so desire, to the rooms occupied by the subcommittee and aid you in securing any facts that are there available, relative to the employees of the subcommittee or their work," and stating further that:

(b) Previous correspondence had been printed in the public press, even before receipt by Chairman Gillette.

(c) That it was improper to discuss matters pertaining to pending litigation in the public press.

(d) That a meeting of the subcommittee was being called for January 7, 1952, to consider the Benton resolution.

(e) That if Senator McCarthy cared to appear before the subcommittee, he would be glad to make the necessary arrangements as to time and place.

(f) That he would be glad to confer with Senator McCarthy personally as to matters concerning the staff and the work of the subcommittee.

(g) That neither the Democratic National Committee nor any person or group other than an agency of the United States Senate has had or will have any influence on his duties and actions as a member of the subcommittee, and that no other member of the subcommittee has been or will be so influenced (p. 28 of the hearings).

21. Senator McCarthy wrote to Chairman Gillette on January 4, 1952, asking: "the simple question of whether or not you have ordered the investigators to restrict their investigation to matters having to do with elections, or whether their investigations extend into fields having nothing whatsoever to do with either my election or the election of any other Senator" (p. 29 of the hearings).

22. Chairman Gillette replied to Senator McCarthy by letter dated January 10, 1952, informing him that the staff of the subcommittee had just submitted a report on the legal question raised by Senator McCarthy, that this was being studied, and the subcommittee would then determine what action, if any, they would take (p. 29 of the hearings).

23. Because Senator McCarthy questioned the jurisdiction of the subcommittee, the subcommittee adopted a resolution, approved by a majority of the Committee on Rules and Administration, that Senator McCarthy be requested to bring to the floor of the Senate a motion to discharge the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections (p. 30 of the hearings).

24. Senator Hayden, chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, informed Senator McCarthy that the purpose would be to test the jurisdiction and integrity of the members of the subcommittee (p. 30 of the hearings).

25. Under date of March 21, 1952, Senator McCarthy wrote to Senator Hayden, chairman of the parent Committee on Rules and Administration, that he thought it improper to discharge the subcommittee for the following reasons:

The Elections Subcommittee unquestionably has the power and, when complaint is made, the duty to investigate any improper conduct on the part of McCarthy or any other Senator in a senatorial election.

The subcommittee has spent tens of thousands of dollars and nearly a year making the most painstaking investigation of my part in the Maryland election, as well as my campaigns in Wisconsin. The subcommittee's task is not finished until it reports to the Senate the result of that investigation, namely, whether they found such misconduct on the part of McCarthy in either his own campaigns or in the Tydings campaign to warrant his expulsion from the Senate.

I note the subcommittee's request that the integrity of the subcommittee be passed upon. As you know, the sole question of the integrity of the subcommittee concerned its right to spend vast sums of money investigating the life of McCarthy from birth to date without any authority to do so from the Senate. However, the vote on that question cannot affect the McCarthy investigation, in that the committee for a year has been looking into every possible phase of McCarthy's life, including an investigation of those who contributed to my unsuccessful 1944 campaign.

As you know, I wrote Senator Gillette, chairman of the subcommittee, that I considered this a completely dishonest handling of taxpayers' money. I felt that the Elections Subcommittee had no authority to go into matters other than elections unless the Senate instructed it to do so. However, it is obvious that insofar as McCarthy is concerned this is now a moot question, because the staff has already painstakingly and diligently investigated every nook and cranny of my life from birth to date. Every possible lead on McCarthy was investigated. Nothing that could be investigated was left uninvestigated. The staff's scurrilous report, which consisted of cleverly twisted and distorted facts, was then "leaked" to the left-wing elements of the press and blazoned across the Nation in an attempt to further smear McCarthy.

A vote of confidence in the subcommittee would be a vote on whether or not it had the right, without authority from the Senate, but merely on the request of one Senator (in this case Senator Benton) to make a thorough and complete investigation of the entire life of another Senator. A vote to uphold the subcommittee would mean that the Senate accepts and approves this precedent and makes it binding on the Elections Subcommittee in the future.

A vote against the subcommittee could not undo what the subcommittee has done in regard to McCarthy. It would not force the subcommittee members to repay into the Treasury the funds spent on this investigation of McCarthy. A vote against the subcommittee would merely mean that the Senate disapproves what has already been done insofar as McCarthy is concerned, and therefore, disapproves an investigation of other Senators like the one which was made of McCarthy. While I felt the subcommittee exceeded its authority, now that it has established a precedent in McCarthy's case, the same rule should apply to every other Senator. If the subcommittee brought up this question before the investigation had been made, I would have voted to discharge it. Now that the deed is done, however, the same rule should apply to the other 95 Senators.

For that reason, I would be forced to vigorously oppose a motion to discharge the Elections Subcommittee at this time.

I hope the Senate agrees with me that it would be highly improper to discharge the Gillette-Monroney subcommittee at this time, thereby, in effect, setting a different rule for the subcommittee to follow in case an investigation is asked of any of the other 95 Senators (p. 30 of the hearings).

26. In view of Senator McCarthy's refusal to make the requested motion in the Senate, Chairman Hayden, of himself, and for the other four members of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections (Senators Gillette, Monroney, Hennings, and Hendrickson), submitted Senate Resolution 300, 82d Congress, 2d session, on April 8, 1952 (p. 31 of the hearings).

27. Senate Resolution 300 provided that whereas Senator McCarthy in a series of communications addressed to Chairman Gillette between December 6, 1951, and January 4, 1952, had charged that the subcommittee lacked jurisdiction to investigate such acts of Senator McCarthy as were not connected with election campaigns, and attacked the honesty of the members of the subcommittee, charging that in their investigation of such other acts, the members were improperly motivated and were guilty of stealing just as clearly as though the members engaged in picking the pockets of the taxpayers, and whereas the subcommittee adopted a motion, as the most expeditious parliamentary method of obtaining an affirmation by the Senate of its jurisdiction of this matter and a vote on the honesty of its members, that Senator McCarthy be requested to raise the question of jurisdiction and of the integrity of the members of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, by making a formal motion on the floor of the Senate to discharge the committee, and that unless Senator McCarthy did so, the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration or the chairman of the subcommittee would present such a motion, and since Senator McCarthy in effect had declined so to do, therefore, to determine the proper jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules and Administration and to express the confidence of the Senate in its committee in their consideration of Senate Resolution 187, be it resolved that the Committee on Rules and Administration be, and it hereby is, discharged from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 187 (p. 31 of the hearings).

28. The Senate voted upon this resolution on April 10, 1952, and the resolution was rejected by a vote of 0 to 60, with 36 Members not voting (p. 32 of the hearings).

29. Senator McCarthy is recorded as not voting but he stated in the Senate that he could not wait for the vote and if present would have voted against the discharge of the subcommittee (p. 378 of the hearings).

30. Chairman Gillette wrote to Senator McCarthy on May 7, 1952, fixing May 12, 1952, as the time for public hearing on Senate Resolution 187, informing him that the first charge to be heard would be the matter concerning the Lustron Corp. booklet, and extending to Senator McCarthy "the opportunity to appear at the hearings for the purpose of presenting testimony relating to this charge. The hearings in this case will probably continue for several days, and we shall make whatever arrangements for your appearance as are most convenient for you" (p. 32 of the hearings).

31. Under date of May 8, 1952, Senator McCarthy wrote to Chairman Gillette, acknowledging receipt of the letter of May 7, 1952, asking on what point the subcommittee desired information, and giving a statement of facts with reference to the Lustron Corp. booklet, in argumentative fashion, and charging the subcommittee with knowingly allowing itself to serve the Communist cause, and stating:

> The Communists will have scored a great victory if they can convince every other Senator or Congressman that if he attempts to expose undercover Communists, he will be subjected to the same type of intense smear, even to the extent of using a Senate committee for the purpose. They will have frightened away from this fight a vast number of legislators who fear the political effect of being inundated by the Communist Party line sewage.
>
> If you have evidence of wrongdoing on McCarthy's part, which would justify removal from the Senate or a vote of censure by the Senate, certainly you have the obligation to produce it. However, as you well know, every member of your committee and staff privately admits that no such evidence is in existence. It is an evil and dishonest thing for the subcommittee to allow itself to be used for an evil purpose. Certainly the fact that the Democrat Party may temporarily benefit thereby is insufficient justification. Remember the Communist Party will benefit infinitely more (p. 32 of the hearings).

32. Senator McCarthy again wrote to Chairman Gillette on the same day, May 8, 1952, demanding expeditious action in the Benton case (p. 35 of the hearings).

33. Chairman Gillette wrote to Senator McCarthy under date of May 10, 1952, informing him that the subcommittee had concluded to take testimony on May 12, 1952, and that it was the courteous thing to do to invite him to attend, to present evidence in refutation or explanation, and that the opportunity would continue to be that of Senator McCarthy to present such matter as he might wish in connection with the hearing and to attend if he so desired (p. 43 of the hearings).

34. On May 11, 1952, Senator McCarthy wrote to Chairman Gillette, Senator Monroney, and Senator Hennings jointly, a sarcastic letter, the meaning and intention of which can be understood only by reading it in its entirety (p. 43 of the hearings).

35. The chief counsel for the subcommittee wrote to Senator McCarthy on November 7, 1952, inviting Senator McCarthy to appear before a subcommittee in executive session, in connection with Senate Resolution 187, during the week of November 17, 1952, and asking to be advised of the date of Senator McCarthy's appearance (p. 44 of the hearings).

36. The administrative assistant to Senator McCarthy replied for Senator McCarthy by letter of November 10, 1952, stating that Senator McCarthy was away and that he did not know when he would return to Washington, stating, however, that if the subcommittee would let him know what information was desired, he would be glad to try to be of help (p. 45 of the hearings).

37. Chairman Hennings, of the subcommittee, then wrote a letter to Senator McCarthy under date of November 21, 1952, which because of its importance is set forth in full:

DEAR SENATOR MCCARTHY: As you will recall on September 25, 1951, May 7, 1952, and May 10, 1952, this subcommittee invited you to appear before it to give testimony relating to the investigation pursuant to Senate Resolution 187.

Under date of November 7, 1952, the following communication was addressed to you:

"DEAR SENATOR MCCARTHY: In connection with the consideration by the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections of Senate Resolution No. 187, introduced by Senator Benton on August 6, 1951, as well as the ensuing investigation, I have been instructed by the subcommittee to invite you to appear before said subcommittee in executive session. Insofar as possible, we would like to respect your wishes as to the date on which you will appear. However, the subcommittee plans to be available for this purpose during the week beginning November 17, 1952.

"It will be appreciated if you will advise me at as early a date as possible of the day you will appear, in order that the subcommittee may arrange its plans accordingly.

"Very truly yours,

"PAUL J. COTTER, Chief Counsel."

On November 14, 1952, the subcommittee received the following communication, dated November 10, 1952:

"DEAR MR. COTTER: Inasmuch as Senator McCarthy is not now in Washington, I am taking the liberty of acknowledging receipt of your letter of November 7.

"I have just talked to the Senator over the telephone and he does not know just when he will return to Washington. It presently appears that he will not be available to appear before your committee during the time you mention. However, he did state that if you will let him know just what information you desire, he will be glad to try to be of help to you.

"Sincerely yours,

"RAY KIERMAS,"
"Administrative Assistant to Senator McCarthy."

The subcommittee is grateful for your offer of assistance, and we want to afford you with every opportunity to offer your explanations with reference to the issues involved. Therefore, although the subcommittee did make itself available during the past week in order to afford you an opportunity to be heard, we shall be at your disposal commencing Saturday, November 22, through but not later than Tuesday, November 25, 1952.

This subcommittee has but one object, and that is to reach an impartial and proper conclusion based upon the facts. Your appearance, in person, before the subcommittee will not only give you the opportunity to testify as to any issues of fact which may be in controversy, but will be of the greatest assistance to the subcommittee in its effort to arrive at a proper determination and to embody in its report an accurate representation of the facts.

Pursuant to your request, as transmitted to us through Mr. Kiermas, we are advising you that the subcommittee desires to make inquiry with respect to the following matters:

(1) Whether any funds collected or received by you and by others on your behalf to conduct certain of your activities, including those relating to "communism," were ever diverted and used for other purposes inuring to your personal advantage.

(2) Whether you, at any time, used your official position as a United States Senator and as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, the Joint Housing Committee, and the Senate Investigations Committee, to obtain a $10,000 fee from the Lustron Corp., which company was then almost entirely subsidized by agencies under the jurisdiction of the very committees of which you were a member.

(3) Whether your activities on behalf of certain interest groups, such as housing, sugar, and China, were motivated by self-interest.

(4) Whether your activities with respect to your senatorial campaigns, particularly with respect to the reporting of your financing and your activities relating to the financial transactions with and subsequent employment of Ray Kiermas, involved violations of the Federal and State Corrupt Practices Acts.

(5) Whether loan or other transactions which you had with the Appleton State Bank, of Appleton, Wis., involved violations of tax and banking laws.

(6) Whether you used close associates and members of your family to secrete receipts, income, commodity and stock speculation and other financial transactions for ulterior motives.

We again assure you of our desire to give you the opportunity to testify, in executive session of the subcommittee, as to the foregoing matters. The 82d Congress expires in the immediate future and the subcommittee must necessarily proceed with dispatch in making its report to this Congress. To that end, we respectfully urge you to arrange to come before us on or before November 25, and thus enable us to do our conscientious best in the interests of the Senate and our obligation to complete our work. We would thank you to advise us immediately, so that we may plan accordingly.

This letter is being transmitted at the direction and with the full concurrence of the membership of this subcommittee.

Sincerely yours,

THOMAS C. HENNINGS, Jr., Chairman.

(P. 45 of the hearings.)

38. This letter was delivered by hand to the office of Senator McCarthy in Washington on November 21, 1952 (p. 47 of the hearings).

39. On the same day, November 21, 1952, Chairman Hennings sent the following telegram addressed to Senator McCarthy at Appleton, Wis.:

Today you were advised by letter delivered by hand to your office of the principal matters which the subcommittee desires to interrogate you in furtherance of your express desire transmitted to the committee by your administrative assistant, Mr. Ray Kiermas, under date of November 10. The subcommittee appreciates your willingness to help in the completion of the work in connection with the investigation of Resolution 187 and the investigations predicated thereon. Your prompt appearance before the subcommittee can save the Government much effort and expense. We are sure that you want to be of help to us in arriving at a proper determination of the issues in controversy. We are therefore at your disposal in executive session and for your convenience suggest that the subcommittee is available to you commencing with tomorrow, Saturday, November 22, but not later than Tuesday the 25th, to enable the committee to hear you and allow time thereafter to prepare the subcommittee report.

Senator Benton has also been notified to appear by similar communication. This action is being taken at the direction and with the full concurrence of the committee members (p. 47 of the hearings).

40. The copy of the telegram in the H-H-H Report, designated "Exhibit No. 42" at page 99 thereof, was not sent to Senator McCarthy and was inserted as an exhibit by error in place of the foregoing telegram of November 21, 1952, as shown by the fact it is not dated and as appears in the index of appendix, page 55, wherein exhibit No. 42 is described as "Telegram dated Nov. 21, 1952, from Senator Hennings to Senator McCarthy . . . . Page 99" (p. 51 of the hearings).

41. On November 21, 1952, Senator McCarthy was deer hunting in northern Wisconsin (p. 298 of the hearings).

42. Senator McCarthy wrote to Chairman Hennings on November 28, 1952, stating that he had just received the wire of November 22, and that, as Senator Hennings had been previously advised, Senator McCarthy was not expected to return to Washington until November 27, on which date he did return (p. 49 of the hearings).

43. Senator McCarthy did not see the letter or telegram dated November 21, 1952, until November 28, 1952 (p. 299 of the hearings).

44. Senator McCarthy wrote to Chairman Hennings under date of December 1, 1952, stating as follows:

Senator THOMAS C. HENNINGS, Jr.,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections,
Senate Office Building.

DEAR MR. HENNINGS: This is to acknowledge receipt of yours of November 21 in which you state that your object is to reach an "impartial and proper conclusion based upon the facts" in the Benton application which asks for my removal from the Senate.

I was interested in your declaration of honesty of the committee and would like to believe that it is true. As you know, your committee has the most unusual record of any committee in the history of the Senate. As you know two members of your staff have resigned and made the public statement that their reason for resignation was that your committee was dishonestly used for political purposes. Two Senators have also resigned. One, Senator Welker, in the strongest possible language indicted your committee for complete dishonesty in handling your investigation. Senator Gillette also resigned without giving any plausible reason for his resignation from the committee. Obviously, he also couldn't stomach the dishonest use of public funds for political purposes. For that reason it is difficult for me to believe your protestations of the honesty of your committee.

I would, therefore, ordinarily not dignify your committee by answering your letter of November 21. However, I decided to give you no excuse to claim in your report that I refused to give you any facts. For that reason you are being informed that the answer to the six insulting questions in your letter of November 21 in "No." You understand that in answering these questions I do not in any way approve of nor admit the false statements and innuendoes made in the questions.

I note with some interest your reference to my "activities on behalf of certain special-interest groups, such as housing, sugar, and China." I assume you refer to my drafting of the comprehensive Housing Act of 1946, which was passed without a single dissenting vote in the Senate, either Democrat or Republican. Neither you nor any other Senator has attempted to repeal any part of that Housing Act. Or perhaps you refer to the slum-clearance bill which I drafted and introduced in 1948, which slum-clearance bill was adopted in toto by the Democrat-controlled Senate in 1949.

When you refer to sugar, I assume you refer to my efforts to do away with your party's rationing of sugar, as I promised the housewives I would during my 1946 campaign. If that were wrong, I wonder why you have not introduced legislation in the Democrat-controlled Senate to restore sugar rationing. You have had 2 years to do so.

I thought perhaps the election might have taught you that your boss and mine—the American people—do not approve of treason and incompetence and feel that it must be exposed.

You refer to the above as "special interests." I personally feel very proud of having drafted the Housing Act in 1948 which passed the Congress without a single dissenting vote—a Housing Act which contributed so much toward making it possible for veterans and all Americans in the middle- and low-income groups to own their own home. Likewise, I am proud of having been able to fulfill my promise to American housewives to obtain the derationing of sugar. I proved at the time that rationing was not for the benefit of the housewives but for the commercial users.

I likewise am double proud of the part I played in alerting the American people to your administration's traitorous betrayal of American interests throughout the world, especially in China and Poland.

You refer to such activities on my part as "activities for special interests." I am curious to know what "special interests" you mean other than the special interest of the American people.

This letter is not written with any hope of getting an honest report from your committee. It is being written merely to keep the record straight.

Sincerely yours,

JOE MCCARTHY.

(P. 51 of hearings.)

45. Senator McCarthy appeared before the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections once only, on July 3, 1952, in connection with his charges against Senator Benton under Senate Resolution 304, without requiring a subpena (pp. 52, 290, and 375 of hearings).

46. Senator McCarthy did not appear before that subcommittee, at any other time, nor make any explanation in defense, except as shown in the foregoing correspondence, in connection with the charges pending against him, either before or after the Senate action in Senate Resolution 300 (pp. 52 and 375 of hearings).

47. Senator McCarthy did make an explanation of the Lustron matter on the floor of the Senate, on August 2, 1954 (p. 53 of hearings).

48. Senate Resolution 187, introduced by Senator Benton, was not voted upon by the Senate, although it was considered by the Senate in its vote on April 10, 1952, upon Senate Resolution 300 to test the jurisdiction of the subcommittee and the integrity of its members.

49. The vote of the Senate upon Senate Resolution 300 notwithstanding any previous question of the jurisdiction of the Hennings subcommittee, was a grant of authority to that subcommittee to proceed with its investigation of the charges pending against Senator McCarthy, since his election to the Senate.

50. Senate Resolution 187, introduced by Senator Benton, confined the subcommittee to activities of Senator McCarthy subsequent to his election in 1946.

51. Senator McCarthy's position was that he would not appear before the Hennings subcommittee upon the charges pending against him unless he was ordered to appear (p. 288 of hearings).

52. Senator McCarthy did not say in any of the correspondence relating to the hearings and his appearance, that he would not appear before the subcommittee unless he was ordered to do so, but testified that he so notified Chairman Gillette orally (p. 288 of hearings).

53. Senator McCarthy advised Chairman Gillette that unless he was given the right to cross-examine, that he had no desire to appear before the subcommittee but that he would appear if ordered to do so (p. 288 of hearings).

54. At the hearings before the select committee, Senator McCarthy testified that the subcommittee knew that a witness was mentally incompetent "and they were going to call him solely for the purpose of doing a smear job" (p. 296 of hearings).

55. At the hearings before the select committee, Senator McCarthy testified that the insertion of the undated telegram, exhibit No. 42 in the Hennings report (found by this select committee to be a clerical error), "was completely dishonest," insisting upon this conclusion when the chairman asked whether it could not have been a mistake (pp. 299, 384, and 385 of hearing record).

56. Senator McCarthy told Chairman Gillette "that I would not appear unless I was ordered to appear or subpenaed. I forget which word I used. I told him I had no desire to appear before that committee and that his extending an opportunity meant nothing to me" (p. 305 of the hearing).

57. The report of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was filed January 2, 1953 (p. 306 of the hearings).

58. On that day, Senator McCarthy, according to his own testimony, called Senator Hendrickson, a member of that subcommittee, by telephone and told him that it was completely dishonest to sign a report that was factually wrong (p. 306 of the hearings).

59. That evening Senator McCarthy gave a statement to the press regarding Senator Hendrickson, a member of that subcommittee, stating:

"This report accuses me either directly or by innuendo and intimation of the most dishonest and improper conduct.

"If it is true, I am unfit to serve in the Senate. If it is false, then the three men who joined in it—namely, Hendrickson, Hennings, and Hayden—are dishonest beyond words.

"If those 3 men honestly think that all of the 4 things of which they have accused me, they have a deep, moral obligation tomorrow to move that the Senate does not seat me as a Senator.

"If they think the report is true, they will do that. If they know the report is completely false and that it has been issued only for its smear value, then they will not dare to present this case to the Senate.

"This committee has been squandering taxpayers' money on this smear campaign for nearly 18 months. If they feel that they are honest and right, why do they fear presenting their case to the Senate?

"I challenge them to do that. If they do not, they will have proved their complete dishonesty.

"I can understand the actions of the leftwingers in the administration, like Hennings and Hayden. As far as Hendrickson is concerned, I frankly can bear him no ill will.

"Suffice it to say that he is a living miracle in that he is without question the only man in the world who has lived so long with neither brains nor guts" (pp. 67 and 68 of hearing record).

60. By letter of September 10, 1952, Chairman Gillette of the subcommittee wrote to Chairman Hayden, of the Committee on Rules and Administration, suggesting that the membership of the subcommittee be reduced from 5 members to 3, as it was originally, to facilitate the work of the subcommittee (p. 294 of the hearings).

61. Senator Welker resigned as a member of the subcommittee on September 9, 1952 (p. 291 of the hearings).

62. Chairman Gillette resigned as a member of the subcommittee on September 26, 1952 (p. 294 of the hearings).

63. After consultation with the Parliamentarian, Senator Hayden, chairman of the parent Committee on Rules and Administration, decided it was unnecessary to appoint 2 Members of the Senate to take the places of those who had resigned, because it was a committee of 5 with a majority of 3, and because the Senate not being in session, it was very difficult to obtain Senators who were members of the Committee on Rules and Administration (p. 361 of the hearings).

64. Senator Monroney, who was in Europe, resigned as a member of the subcommittee, on November 20, 1953 (p. 361 of the hearings).

65. On November 20, 1952, Senator Hayden made it a matter of record by writing to the clerk of the Committee on Rules and Administration that he was appointing himself a member of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections in place of Senator Monroney (p. 362 of the hearings).

66. The subcommittee, with Senator Hennings as chairman, and Senators Hendrickson and Hayden as members, continued to function until January 16, 1953 (pp. 362 and 367 of the hearings).

67. Since January 1953 the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections has had but three members (p. 362 of the hearings).

68. The suggestion of Senator Gillette that the membership of the subcommittee be reduced to three members was given consideration by both the Committee on Rules and Administration and the subcommittee (p. 362 of the hearings).

69. Senators Hennings, Hayden, and Hendrickson signed the subcommittee report pursuant to Senate Resolution 187 and Senate Resolution 304 (p. 363 of the hearings).

70. It was the opinion of Chairman Hayden, of the Committee on Rules and Administration, that without reducing the subcommittee to 3 members, the subcommittee could continue to function as a committee of 5 with but 3 members (p. 365 of the hearings).

71. It was the opinion of Chairman Hayden, that the Senate not being in session, it was not necessary for him as chairman of the parent committee to obtain confirmation by the parent committee of appointments to the subcommittee (p. 365 of the hearings).

72. Chairman Hayden testified that there was immediate important work for the subcommittee to do and that there was no one other than himself on the Committee on Rules and Administration who could be appointed to the subcommittee (p. 365 of the hearings).

73. This manner of conducting the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was consistent with its practice since before the 81st Congress and did not violate any rule of the parent committee (p. 366 of the hearings).

74. Chairman Hayden continued as chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and Chairman Hennings of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections continued in office until about January 16, 1953 (pp. 367 and 369 of the hearings).

75. At the hearings before the select committee, Senator McCarthy testified when asked whether he had any evidence to support his written statements that the subcommittee was spending tens of thousands of dollars and as guilty as though engaged in picking the pockets of the taxpayers to turn the loot over to the Democrat National Committee, that he had produced this evidence in letters to the subcommittee (p. 377 of the hearings).

76. No such evidence appears in the letters.

77. When asked whether he had any evidence that the subcommittee had spent tens of thousands of dollars illegally, Senator McCarthy testified that, "They were spending a vast amount of money illegally, I don't know the exact figure" (p. 378 of the hearings).

78. When asked whether he knew that the matters pending before the subcommittee reflected seriously upon his character and activities and were of sufficient moment ordinarily to justify making some reply, Senator McCarthy testified that: "They were six insulting questions asked by the committee—by a Senator, not by a legal committee. I answered his questions. I told him the answer was 'No'." (p. 383 of the hearings). (But note that the above answer was contained in a letter from Senator McCarthy to Senator Hennings dated December 1, 1952, addressed to the latter as chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections) (pp. 51–52 of the hearings).

79. At page 384 of the hearings, Senator McCarthy was asked whether it was his position that when matters of that serious nature are pending against a Member of the United States Senate, instead of appearing and making an answer, he can call them "insulting" and need not appear, and Senator McCarthy testified in reply that: "They are no more 'matters' than the 46 statements made by Senator Flanders."

80. On January 2, 1953, Senator McCarthy bitterly criticized Senator Hendrickson with reference to the latter's work with the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, and then gave to the press a statement that Senator Hendrickson was "a living miracle in that he is without question the only man who has lived so long with neither brains nor guts" (pp. 66 and 425 of the hearings). (See also Finding of Fact No. 59.)

81. At the hearings before the select committee, when given the opportunity by Senator Case to withdraw or modify his remarks about Senator Hendrickson, a member of the subcommittee, Senator McCarthy indicated he had no desire to change his position (p. 425 of the hearings).

C. LEGAL QUESTIONS INVOLVED IN THIS CATEGORY

Several legal questions are involved and were considered in this part of the inquiry. They may be stated briefly as follows:

1. Is the Senate a continuing body?
2. Does the Senate have the power to censure a Senator for conduct occurring during his prior term as Senator?
3. Was it necessary for Senate Resolution 187 to be adopted by the Senate?

4. Was the Gillette-Hennings subcommittee acting beyond its power and jurisdiction?

5. Was it a lawfully constituted subcommittee?

6. Was it necessary for that subcommittee to subpena Senator McCarthy?

7. Was Senator McCarthy repeatedly invited to appear?

8. Was it the duty of Senator McCarthy to appear without an order or subpena to appear and was his failure to appear obstructive?

9. Was the request to Senator McCarthy to appear a legal basis for contempt, and was his reply contumacious?

10. Was Senator McCarthy's conduct toward that subcommittee contemptuous, independently of his failure to appear?

11. Did Senator McCarthy "denounce" the subcommittee?

12. Has the conduct of Senator McCarthy been contumacious toward the Senate by failing to explain the six charges contained in the subcommittee's report?

13. Did the reelection of Senator McCarthy in 1952 make these matters moot?

DISCUSSION OF LEGAL QUESTIONS

1. The Senate is a continuing body

The fact that the Senate is a continuing body should require little discussion. This has been uniformly recognized by history, precedent, and authority. While the rule with reference to the House, whose Members are elected all for the period of a single Congress may be different, the Senate is a continuing body, whose Members are elected for a term of 6 years, and so divided into classes that the seats of one-third only become vacant at the end of each Congress. Senate Document No. 99, 83d Congress, 2d session, Congressional Power of Investigation, page 7.

The continuity of the Senate was questioned at the beginning of the 83d Congress, and the issue was decided in favor of the precedents. Congressional Record, Senate—January 6, 1953, pages 92–114. Senate rule XXV (2) provides that each standing committee shall continue and have power to act until their successors are appointed. Senate rule XXXII provides that the legislative business of the Senate shall be continued from session to session, and that the legislative business which remains undetermined at the close of the next preceding session of that Congress shall be resumed as if no adjournment had taken place. This rule makes it clear that all legislative business continues from session to session. See Senate Document No. 4, 1953, 83d Congress. The rule that the Senate is a continuing body has been recognized by the Supreme Court, in McGrain v. Daugherty (273 U. S. 135, 182 (1927)), where the Court said:

> This being so, and the Senate being a continuing body, the case cannot be said to have become moot in the ordinary sense.

2. The Senate has the power to censure a Senator for conduct occurring during his prior term as Senator

The contention has been made by Senator McCarthy that since he was reelected in 1952 and took his seat for a new term on January 3, 1953, the select committee lacks power to consider any conduct on his part, occurring prior to January 3, 1953, as the basis for censure. His counsel based this contention on several cases cited as authority for this proposition (p. 19 of the hearings), being Anderson v. Dunn (6 Wheat. 204); Jurney v. McCracken (294 U. S. 125); and U. S. v. Bryan (339 U. S. 323). The argumentative basis for this contention is that the power to censure is part of the power of the Senate to punish for contempt, and that any limitations on the latter power must necessarily limit the power to censure. This contention is without foundation for at least two reasons: (1) The power to censure is an independent power and may be exercised by the Senate for conduct totally unrelated to any act or acts which may be contemptuous; and (2) even assuming that the power to censure is limited to the extent of the power to punish for contempt, the authorities cited do not sustain the proposition advanced.

The case of Anderson v. Dunn (6 Wheat. 204 (1821)) was an action in trespass for an assault and battery and false imprisonment against the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives. The Supreme Court held that the defendant Sergeant at Arms had a proper and lawful defense by showing that he acted under the orders of the Speaker and had taken the plaintiff into custody for a high contempt of the dignity of the House. The only possible relevancy of the opinion to the matters now pending before the select committee appears in the opinion by Mr. Justice Johnson, at page 231, that the duration of the imprisonment for contempt of the House is limited when the legislative body ceases to exist on the moment of its adjournment, and the imprisonment must terminate with that adjournment. It is clear that this was dictum, applies to the House and not to the Senate, does not involve a case of censure of a Member of the Senate, and was the law only until Congress by statute made contempt of either House a criminal offense.

In the case of Jurney v. MacCracken (294 U. S. 125 (1935)) the defendant, a lawyer, was arrested by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, pursuant to a resolution of the Senate, for contempt in failing to produce and permitting the removal and destruction of certain papers, after they had been subpenaed by the special Senate committee investigating ocean and airmail contracts. The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of the defendant's writ of habeas corpus holding that where the offending act was of a nature to obstruct the legislative process, the fact that the obstruction has since been removed or that its removal has become impossible is without significance; that the enactment of Revised Statute 102 did not impair the right of Congress to punish for contempt; and that whether a recalcitrant witness has purged himself of contempt is for Congress to decide and cannot be inquired into by a court by a writ of habeas corpus. It is evident that this case does not deal with any question of censure or punishment of a Member of the Senate. MacCracken did contend that the Senate was absolutely without power itself to impose punishment for a past act, and that such punishment must be inflicted by the courts, as for other crimes, and under the safeguard of all constitutional provisions, but this contention was dismissed by the opinion of the Supreme Court, delivered by Mr. Justice Brandeis, at page 149.

The case of United States v. Bryan (339 U. S. 323 (1950)) involved a criminal trial for contempt of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, and the refusal of the defendant to produce certain records under subpena from that committee. In the opinion of the Supreme Court, by Mr. Chief Justice Vinson, mention is made of Revised Statutes, section 102 (2 U. S. C., sec. 192), enacted in 1857. It is clear that one of the purposes of the act was to permit the imprisonment of a contemnor beyond the expiration of the current session of Congress. The Supreme Court states unequivocally that the judicial proceedings under the statute are intended as an alternative method of vindicating the authority of Congress to compel the disclosure of facts which are needed in the fulfillment of the legislative function. The select committee was advised by its counsel that this case has no apparent bearing upon the contention of Senator McCarthy in these proceedings with reference to his failure to appear before the Gillette-Hennings subcommittee. Counsel further advised that it is inappropriate to cite cases of criminal contempt as the basis for the law of censure by the Senate of one of its Members.

It seems clear that if a Senator should be guilty of reprehensible conduct unconnected with his official duties and position, but which conduct brings the Senate into disrepute, the Senate has the power to censure. The power to censure must be independent, therefore, of the power to punish for contempt. A Member may be censured even after he has resigned (2 Hinds' Precedents 1239, 1273, 1275 (1907)). Precedents in both the Senate and House for expulsion or censure for conduct occurring during a preceding Congress may be found in Hinds (op. cit., 1275 to 1289). Precedents in the House cannot be considered as controlling because the House is not a continuing body.

In this connection, it must be remembered that the report of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was filed on January 2, 1953, and since the new Congress convened the next day, there was not time for action in the prior session.

While it may be the law that one who is not a Member of the Senate may not be punished for contempt of the Senate at a preceding session, this is no basis for declaring that the Senate may not censure one of its own Members for conduct antedating that session, and no controlling authority or precedent has been cited for such position.

The particular charges against Senator McCarthy, which are the basis of this category, involve his conduct toward an official committee and official committee members of the Senate. These committees continue from session to session and there is no lapse in their legislative business.

The reelection of Senator McCarthy in 1952 was considered by the select committee as a fact bearing on this proposition. This reelection is not deemed controlling because only the Senate itself can pass judgment upon conduct which is injurious to its processes, dignity, and official committees.

In the Senate on April 8, 1952 (Congressional Record, Senate, April 8, 1952, p. 3753), at the request of Senator Hayden, there were ordered printed Senate Expulsion, Exclusion, and Censure Cases Unconnected with Elections, 1871–1951.

A résumé of precedents on expulsion, exclusion, and censure cases since the organization of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is printed at page 73 of the Hennings-Hayden-Hendrickson report. Another collection of Senate precedents appears in the Congressional Record, Senate, August 2, 1954, page 12361, being a study prepared by William R. Tansill, of the Government Division of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, printed on motion of Senator Morse. In election cases, the Senate, of course, considers conduct occurring before the commencement of the term of the Senator involved. Senator Morse, in the same day, had printed in the same Congressional Record at page 12371 certain pertinent material from Hinds' Precedents, and at page 12373 certain pertinent material from Cannon's Precedents.

From an examination and study of all available precedents, the select committee is of the opinion that the Senate has the power, under the circumstances of this case, to elect to censure Senator McCarthy for conduct occurring during his prior term in the Senate, should it deem such conduct censurable.

3. It was not necessary for Senate Resolution 187 to be adopted by the Senate

Senate Resolution 187, introduced by Senator Benton on August 6, 1951, was not actually a resolution for the expulsion of Senator McCarthy. In the resolution paragraph, the Committee on Rules and Administration is authorized to make an investigation—> as may be appropriate to enable such committee to determine whether or not it should initiate action with a view toward the expulsion from the United States Senate of the said Senator, Joseph R. McCarthy.

In the regular order of Senate business, after this resolution was introduced, it was referred by the President of the Senate, without a vote by the Senate, to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, in section 102, which incorporates rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate, provides that among the standing committees to be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise, there shall be a Committee on Rules and Administration, to which committee shall be referred all proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to * * * credentials and qualifications. By section 134–A of the same act, each standing committee of the Senate, including any subcommittee of such committee, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and adjourned periods of the Senate, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses * * * as it deems advisable. It is further provided in the same section that each such committee may make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction and report such hearings as may be had by it.

As stated by Senator Case (at p. 61 of the hearings) reference is made on page 71 of the Hennings report, being the report of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections to the Committee on Rules and Administration pursuant to Senate Resolutions 187 and 304, that investigations with reference to alleged misconduct by a Senator may be undertaken by the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections with or without specific Senate authorization or direction. That report states at the page indicated:

> The old Committee on Privileges and Elections was presented with five cases of expulsion or exclusion unconnected with an election. In three of these cases, those of Smoot, Burton, and Gould, the Senate adopted resolutions directing an investigation of the charges against the respective Senators. In the other two cases, those of La Follette and Langer, the petitions and protests of private citizens were referred by the presiding officer to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which then conducted investigations without obtaining resolutions of authorization from the Senate.

These precedents indicate that the legal power of the subcommittee to conduct investigations of its own motion is not subject to question; and, also, that the subcommittee may act under a resolution formally adopted by the Senate.

It is the opinion of the select committee, in addition to the conclusion made evident by the foregoing precedents, that the vote of the Senate on April 10, 1952, upon Senate Resolution 300, 82d Congress, 2d session, introduced by Senator Hayden for himself and Senators Gillette, Monroney, Hennings, and Hendrickson, to obtain the sense of the Senate upon the right and power of the Committee on Rules and Administration and its Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections to proceed with the investigation of Senator McCarthy under Senate Resolution 187, and to obtain a vote of confidence from the Senate in the integrity of the committee members, carried all the implications, and was to the same effect, as if the Senate by vote had directed that committee and subcommittee, on August 6, 1951, to proceed with the investigation sought by Senate Resolution 187.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the select committee that it was not necessary for Senate Resolution 187 to have been adopted by the Senate.

4. The Gillette-Hennings Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was not acting beyond its power or jurisdiction

The action of the Senate upon Senate Resolution 300 must be considered as an affirmance that as of April 10, 1952, when the actions of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections and the integrity of its members were ratified and approved by a vote of 60 to 0, the committee and subcommittee were acting within its power and jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was not limited to the conduct of Senator McCarthy connected with elections only but extended to acts totally unconnected with election matters, but which were relevant in inquiries relating to expulsion, exclusion, and censure. The debate in the Senate and the vote of the Senate makes this abundantly clear. (See Congressional Record, Senate, April 8, 1952, pp. 3701, 3753–3756.) One of the principal purposes of the introduction of Senate Resolution 300 was to affirm or deny the contention of Senator McCarthy that the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections lacked jurisdiction to investigate such acts as were not connected with elections and campaigns. Senate Resolution 187, introduced by Senator Benton, provided for an investigation with reference to the other acts of Senator McCarthy since his election to the Senate (in the fall of 1946), as might be appropriate to carry out the purposes of the resolution. It is clear, therefore, that the subcommittee had the right and power to investigate the acts of Senator McCarthy at least since January 1947. While Senate Resolution 187 did not itself specify any charges against Senator McCarthy, the charges pending upon the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections were known to Senator McCarthy and were disclosed to him in detail in the correspondence between him and the chairman of the subcommittee. Most of the six charges referred clearly to activities of Senator McCarthy after January 1947. It may be, although this select committee is not in a position to so decide, that some parts of the investigations and proceedings of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections were concerned with matters arising before January 1947, but it is the judgment of this select committee that this extension of power and authority did not ipso facto nullify the power and jurisdiction of that subcommittee to proceed with its lawful duties and powers.

It is, therefore, the judgment of the select committee that for purposes of the present inquiry, it can be stated that the Gillette-Hennings Subcommitee on Privileges and Elections was not acting beyond its power and jurisdiction so far as forming a basis for the possible censure of Senator McCarthy by reason of his conduct in relation with and toward that subcommittee.

5. The Gillette-Hennings Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was a lawfully constituted committee

As shown by the testimony taken in this proceeding, the subcommittee originally had five members. After the resignations of Senators Welker and Gillette, and the reduction of the number of acting members to 3, Senator Hayden, chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, the parent committee, decided that it was not necessary to fill the 2 vacancies, and that the work of the subcommittee would be better performed by the smaller number. After that time, Senator Monroney resigned, and Senator Hayden then appointed himself to that vacancy, so that the subcommittee continued with three members.

Senator Hayden testified that there was no rule of the parent committee or subcommittee which was contrary to the procedure adopted in this case, and that the procedure was consonant with the practice both before and after 1952. As a matter of fact, the subcommittee since 1952 has consisted of three members.

With the approval of Senator McCarthy and his counsel, testimony was taken from Charles L. Watkins, the Senate Parliamentarian, upon the status and legality of the Gillette-Hennings subcommittee. This testimony appears on page 535 of the hearings, and may be epitomized as follows:

1. The three-member subcommittee, as constituted by Senator Hayden, after the resignation of Senator Monroney, by appointing himself as the third member, was a legal committee for the discharge of regular business under the rules and precedents of the Senate.

2. There was no mandatory requirement for a chairman to fill a vacancy on a subcommittee.

3. Chairman Hayden of the parent Committee on Rules and Administration had the right to appoint himself a member of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, without submitting the appointment to the Committee on Rules and Administration, for prior approval or subsequent ratification.

4. This was particularly true when the Senate was not in session.

5. Chairman Hayden had the right to recognize Senator Hennings as chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, and had the right to appoint the chairman of the subcommittee.

6. The subcommittee of 3 members had the right to designate 1 member as a legal quorum for the purpose of taking testimony.

7. The subcommittee of 3 members was authorized and had the duty to make a report to the full committee, signed by its 3 members, Senators Hennings, Hayden, and Hendrickson, and file the report with the full Committee on Rules and Administration, with Senator Hayden as chairman.

8. In a quasi-judicial proceeding such as an expulsion matter, although 3 of the original 5 members of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections have resigned, although 2 of the vacancies have not been filled, and the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration has appointed himself to the third vacancy on the subcommittee, that subcommittee of 3 members had the right to file a valid legal report with the parent committee, when less than half of its original 5 members have heard the evidence.

6. It was not necessary for the subcommittee to subpena Senator McCarthy

A question has been raised in these proceedings whether it was necessary for the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections to subpena Senator McCarthy to appear before it.

According to his testimony, he had no desire to appear before the subcommittee and advised the chairman that he would not appear before it to answer the charges made against him and pending before that subcommittee, unless he was ordered so to do. The provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act, above referred to, make it clear that the subcommittee had the power and right to require the attendance of Senator McCarthy for purposes of investigation and examination "by subpena or otherwise." It can be stated, therefore, categorically, that it was not necessary for the subcommittee to issue its subpena for him. Section 134–A of the Legislative Reorganization Act does refer to "requiring" the attendance of witnesses, and the select committee is of the opinion that an invitation to appear, is not such action indicating a requirement to appear as is contemplated by the act. It is the opinion of the select committee that a request to appear, such as the letter and telegram from the subcommittee to Senator McCarthy dated November 21, 1952, was sufficient (aside from any question whether Senator McCarthy received them in time) to meet the requirements of the law. The related questions whether Senator McCarthy was repeatedly invited to appear, and whether he should have appeared even without invitation and without request or subpena, are considered hereinafter.

7. Senator McCarthy was repeatedly invited to appear

The select committee has carefully considered all the letters in evidence between Senator McCarthy and the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, and all the testimony relating to his appearance before the subcommittee. The facts relating to whether or not Senator McCarthy was repeatedly invited to appear before that subcommittee in order to make answer to the very sericus charges against his character and his activities in the Senate have already been found by the select committee and incorporated hereinabove as finding of fact. This evidence and this testimony, upon analysis, has convinced the select committee that Senator McCarthy was invited by that subcommittee to appear before it in order to aid its investigation and to give answer to the charges made against him and pending before that subcommittee. It must be remembered that Senator McCarthy wrote to Chairman Gillette under date of September 17, 1951, stating that he intended to appear to question witnesses (see finding of fact No. 7). Senator McCarthy was invited to appear before the subcommittee by letter of September 25, 1951 (finding of fact No. 8), by letter of October 1, 1951 (finding of fact No. 10), by letter of December 21, 1951 (finding of fact No. 20), by letter of May 7, 1952 (finding of fact No. 30), by letter of May 10, 1952 (finding of fact No. 33), and by letter of November 7, 1952 (finding of fact No. 35).

8. It was the duty of Senator McCarthy to accept the repeated invitations by the subcommittee and his failure to appear was obstructive of the processes of the Senate, for no formal order or subpena should be necessary to bring Senators before Senate committees when their own honor and the honor of the Senate are at issue

The matters against Senator McCarthy under investigation by the Gillette-Hennings subcommittee were of a serious nature. Apparently, Senator McCarthy knew the nature of these matters since he testified:

> I know all about this matter: I have been living with it. It had been underway. They had been going far beyond the resolution, investigating things they had no right to investigate; going back beyond the time that I was even old enough to run for Senator, investigating the income-tax returns of my father, who died before I was elected. So I knew those facts (p. 385 of the hearings).

Furthermore, Chairman Gillette specified one of the matters against Senator McCarthy (that of the Lustron payment), in his letter of May 7, 1952, to Senator McCarthy (p. 32 of the hearings), and Chairman Hennings specified all six of the matters in his letter to Senator McCarthy of November 21, 1952 (p. 45 of the hearings).

The mere reading of these matters (p. 46 of the hearings) without deciding or attempting to decide whether they are true or not, makes it clear that the honesty, sincerity, character, and conduct of Senator McCarthy were under inquiry. It is the opinion of the select committee that when the personal honor and official conduct of a Senator of the United States are in question before a duly constituted committee of the Senate, the Senator involved owes a duty to himself, his State, and to the Senate, to appear promptly and cooperate fully when called by a Senate committee charged with the responsibility of inquiry. This must be the rule if the dignity, honor, authority, and powers of the Senate are to be respected and maintained. This duty could not and was not fulfilled by questioning the authority and jurisdiction of the subcommittee, by accusing its members of the dishonest expenditure of public funds, or even by charging that the subcommittee was permitting itself to be used to serve the cause of communism. When persons in high places fail to set and meet high standards, the people lose faith. If our people lose faith, our form of Government cannot long endure.

The appearance which we believe was necessary was before a subcommittee of the Senate itself, to which subcommittee the Senate, through its normal processes, had confided a matter affecting its own honor and integrity. In such a case legal process was not and should not be required.

9. The request of November 21, 1952, to Senator McCarthy to appear did not form a legal basis for contempt, but his reply of December 1, 1952, was, in itself, contumacious in character

As appears from the findings of fact, Senator McCarthy was formally requested to appear by letter and by telegram from Subcommittee Chairman Hennings, dated November 21, 1952. The request was that he appear before the subcommittee between November 22 and November 25, 1952 (p. 46 of the hearings).

Senator McCarthy testified that he was in Wisconsin, on a hunting trip, and that he did not see the letter or telegram until November 28, 1952 (p. 298 of the hearings). The select committee accepts this testimony as true.

Considering this request as a formal request, and Senator McCarthy being unable to appear in the dates fixed because he did not know of the request in time, we believe that this request, considered independently, would not be contempt in the ordinary legal sense, but we think the letter which he wrote in reply to the request was contumacious in its entire form and manner of expression when directed at a committee of the Senate seeking to act upon a matter referred to it (p. 51 of the hearings).

10. The conduct of the junior Senator from Wisconsin toward the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections was contemptuous, independently of his failure to appear

We have considered carefully all of the correspondence and all the conduct, relation, and attitude of Senator McCarthy toward the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections. We believe it fair to say on the evidence in this record that the junior Senator from Wisconsin did not intend to appear before that subcommittee for examination.

He first questioned the jurisdiction of the subcommittee to inquire into any but election charges. Later he contended that the subcommittee was investigating conduct preceding his election to the Senate, and that, therefore, its activities were illegal.

He also stated that he would not appear unless he were given the right to cross-examine witnesses. We feel that this right should have been accorded to him and that upon proper request, either to the Committee on Rules and Administration, of which Senator McCarthy was a member (p. 27 of the hearings), or to the Senate itself, he could have obtained this right, but that in any event, this cannot be a justification for contemptuous conduct.

The letters of Senator McCarthy to the respective chairmen of the subcommittee dated December 6, 1951 (p. 24 of the hearings), December 19, 1951 (p. 27 of the hearings), March 21, 1952 (p. 30 of the hearings), May 8, 1952 (p. 32 of the hearings), May 8, 1952 (p. 35 of the hearings), May 11, 1952 (p. 44 of the hearings), and December 1, 1952 (p. 51 of the hearings), are clearly contemptuous, disregarding entirely his duty to cooperate, ridiculing the subcommittee, accusing these committee officers of the Senate with dishonesty and impugning their motives, and making it impossible for them to proceed in orderly fashion, or to complete their duties.

The same attitude was expressed in the statement given to the press by Senator McCarthy on January 2, 1953 (p. 68 of the hearings).

The letters to Senator McCarthy from Chairman Gillette, later from Chairman Hennings, and the letter from Chairman Hayden, were uniformly courteous and cooperative, as one Senator should have the right to expect from colleagues. There is no justification in this record for the harsh criticisms directed by Senator McCarthy to the subcommittee, in letters apparently sometimes given to the press before receipt by the person to whom directed (p. 27 of the hearings).

It is the opinion of the select committee that this conduct of Senator McCarthy was contemptuous, independently of his failure to appear before the subcommittee.

11. The junior Senator from Wisconsin did "denounce" the Senate Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections without justification

We feel that the fact that Senator McCarthy denounced the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections is established by reference to a few of the letters in the exchange of correspondence. In his letter of December 6, 1951 (p. 24 of the hearings), to Chairman Gillette, Senator McCarthy states that when the subcommittee, without Senate authorization, is "spending tens of thousands of taxpayers' dollars for the sole purpose of digging up campaign material against McCarthy, then the committee is guilty of stealing just as clearly as though the members engaged in picking the pockets of the taxpayers and turning the loot over to the Democrat National Committee." Such language directed by a Senator toward a committee of the Senate pursuing its authorized functions is clearly intemperate, in bad taste, and unworthy of a Member of this body.

These accusations by Senator McCarthy are continued and repeated in his letter to Chairman Gillette dated December 19, 1951 (p. 27 of the hearings). Under date of March 21, 1952 (p. 30 of the hearings), Senator McCarthy wrote to Senator Hayden, chairman of the parent Committee on Rules and Administration that: "As you know, I wrote Senator Gillette, chairman of the subcommittee, that I consider this a completely dishonest handling of taxpayers' money." Similar language is used in Senator McCarthy's letters down to the last dated December 1, 1952 (p. 51 of the hearing).

If Senator McCarthy had any justification for such denunciation of the subcommittee, he should have presented it at these hearings. His failure so to do leaves his denunciation of officers of the Senate without any foundation in this record.

The members of the subcommittee were Senators representing the people of sovereign States. They were performing official duties of the Senate. Every Senator is understandably jealous of his honor and integrity, but this does not bar inquiry into his conduct, since the Constitution expressly makes the Senate the guardian of its own honor.

It is the opinion of the select committee that these charges of political waste and dishonesty for improper motives were denunciatory and unjustified.

In this connection, attention is directed to the charges referred to this committee relating to words uttered by the junior Senator from Wisconsin about individual Senators.

It has been established, without denial and in fact with confirmation and reiteration, that Senator McCarthy, in reference to the official actions of the junior Senator from New Jersey, Mr. Hendrickson, as a member of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, questioned both his moral courage and his mental ability.

His public statement with reference to Senator Hendrickson was vulgar and insulting. Any Senator has the right to question, criticize, differ from, on condemn an official action of the body of which he is a Member, or of the constituent committees which are working arms of the Senate in proper language. But he has no right to impugn the motives of individual Senators responsible for official action, nor to reflect upon their personal character for what official action they took.

If the rules and procedures were otherwise, no Senator could have freedom of action to perform his assigned committee duties. If a Senator must first give consideration to whether an official action can be wantonly impugned by a colleague, as having been motivated by a lack of the very qualities and capacities every Senator is presumed to have, the processes of the Senate will be destroyed.

12. The conduct of Senator McCarthy has been contumacious toward the Senate by failing to explain three of the questions raised in the subcommittee's report

The report of the subcommittee was filed on January 2, 1953. Since that time Senator McCarthy has given to the Senate, on the Senate floor, an explanation of the Lustron matter only. Of the other 5 matters, mentioned in the November 21, 1952, letter by Chairman Hennings, 3 are of a serious nature, reflecting upon Senator McCarthy's character and integrity, and have not been answered either before the Senate or before any of its committees.

It is our opinion that the failure of Senator McCarthy to explain to the Senate these matters: (1) Whether funds collected to fight communism were diverted to other purposes inuring to his personal advantage; (2) whether certain of his official activities were motivated by self-interest; and (3) whether certain of his activities in senatorial campaigns involved violations of the law; was conduct contumacious toward the Senate and injurious to its effectiveness, dignity, responsibilities, processes, and prestige.

13. The reelection of Senator McCarthy in 1952 did not settle these matters

This question is answered in part by our conclusions that the Senate is a continuing body and has power to censure a Senator for conduct occurring during his prior term as Senator, and in part by the fact that some of the contumacious conduct occurred after his reelection, notably the letter of December 1, 1952. The Senate might have proceeded with this matter in 1953 or earlier in 1954 had the necessary resolution been proposed.

Some of the questions, notably the use for private purposes of funds contributed for fighting communism, were not raised until after the election. The people of Wisconsin could pass only upon what was known to them.

Nor do we believe that the reelection of Senator McCarthy by the people of Wisconsin in the fall of 1952 pardons his conduct toward the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections. The charge is that Senator McCarthy was guilty of contempt of the Senate or a senatorial committee. Necessarily, this is a matter for the Senate and the Senate alone. The people of Wisconsin can only pass upon issues before them; they cannot forgive an attack by a Senator upon the integrity of the Senate's processes and its committees. That is the business of the Senate.

D. CONCLUSIONS

It is therefore, the conclusion of the select committee that the conduct of the junior Senator from Wisconsin toward the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, toward its members, including the statement concerning Senator Hendrickson acting as a member of the subcommittee, and toward the Senate, was contemptuous, contumacious, and denunciatory, without reason or justification, and was obstructive to legislative processes. For this conduct, it is our recommendation that he be censured by the Senate.

II

Category II. Incidents of Encouragement of United States Employees To Violate the Law and Their Oaths of Office or Executive Orders

A. SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The committee, pursuant to the category 2, "Incidents of encouragement of United States employees to violate the law and their oaths of office or Executive orders," received evidence and took testimony regarding:

1. Amendment proposed by Mr. Fulbright to the resolution (S. Res. 301) to censure the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCarthy, viz:

> (5) The junior Senator from Wisconsin openly, in a public manner before nationwide television, invited and urged employees of the Government of the United States to violate the law and their oath of office.

2. Amendment proposed by Mr. Morse to the resolution (S. Res. 301) to censure the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCarthy, viz:

> (e) Openly invited and incited employees of the Government to violate the law and their oaths of office by urging them to make available information, including classified information, which in the opinion of the employees could be of assistance to the junior Senator from Wisconsin in conducting his investigations, even though the supplying of such information by the employee would be illegal and in violation of Presidential order and contrary to the constitutional rights of the Chief Executive under the separation-of-powers doctrine.

This category involves alleged statements of Senator McCarthy made at and during the hearings before the Special Subcommittee on Investigations for the Committee on Government Operations of the United States Senate pursuant to Senate Resolution 189, and reveals the following specific charges:

1. That Senator McCarthy openly, in a public manner before nationwide television, invited, urged, and incited employees of the Government to violate the law and their oaths of office.
2. That he invited, urged, and incited such employees to give him classified information.
3. That the supplying of such classified information by such employees would be illegal, in violation of Presidential orders and contrary to the constitutional rights of the Chief Executive.

53288—54——5

The committee received documentary evidence in the form of excerpts from the printed record of the testimony taken and published by the Special Subcommittee on Investigations for the Committee on Government Operations, oral testimony by Senator McCarthy in his own behalf, and received documentary evidence offered by him from the reports of the Internal Security Subcommittee and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate wherein Government workers were invited to supply certain information to congressional committees.

From the aforementioned relevant and competent evidence and testimony so adduced, the select committee regards the following as having been established:

That at the hearings of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations for the Committee on Government Operations, following an attempt by Senator McCarthy to question Secretary Stevens about the "2½-page document," and following questioning by certain members of that subcommittee, relative to the legality of his receiving and using the document, the Senator made the replies or statements which are the subject of this category of charges.

At those hearings Senator McCarthy took the position that:

> * * * I would like to notify those 2 million Federal employees that I feel it is their duty to give us any information which they have about graft, corruption, communism, treason, and that there is no loyalty to a superior officer which can tower above and beyond their loyalty to their country * * * (hearing record, p. 87).
>
> Again, I want to compliment the individuals who have placed their oaths to defend the country against enemies—and certainly Communists are enemies—above and beyond any Presidential directive * * * (hearing record, p. 87).
>
> * * * I think that the oath which every person in this Government takes, to protect and defend this country against all enemies, foreign and domestic, that oath towers far above any Presidential secrecy directive. And I will continue to receive information such as I received the other day * * * (hearing record, p. 87).
>
> * * * that I have instructed a vast number of these employees that they are dutybound to give me information even though some little bureaucrat has stamped it "secret" to protect himself (hearing record, p. 87).
>
> I don't think any Government employee can deny the people the right to know what the facts are by using a rubber stamp and stamping something "secret" (hearing record, p. 89).
>
> * * * while I am chairman of the committee I will receive all the information I can get about wrongdoing in the executive branch (p. 89 of the hearings).
>
> I think that oath to defend our country against all enemies foreign and domestic, towers above and beyond any loyalty you might have to the head of a bureau or the head of a department (p. 90 of the hearings).
>
> I am an authorized person to receive information in regard to any wrongdoing in the executive branch. When you say "classified documents," Mr. Symington, certainly I am not authorized to receive anything which would divulge the names of, we will say, informants, of Army Intelligence, anything which would in any way compromise their investigative technique, and that sort of thing. * * * (p. 91 of the hearings).
>
> * * * no one can deny us information by stamping something "classified" (p. 92 of the hearings).
>
> Any committee which has jurisdiction over a subject has the right to receive the information. The stamp on the document, I would say, is not controlling * * * (p. 92 of the hearings).
>
> * * * anyone who has evidence of wrongdoing, has not only the right but the duty to bring that evidence to a congressional committee (p. 92 of the hearings).

That the Senator, at the hearings of the select committee, admitted making some of the foregoing statements charged against him (pp. 261–263 of the hearings), and did not deny having made the others. At these hearings, Senator McCarthy took an affirmative position relative to the following question of Senator Ervin:

Senator, when you made the statement which Mr. de Furia characterized as an invitation to the employees of the executive departments, did you mean to invite those employees to bring to you, as chairman of the investigating subcommittee, information relating to corruption, wrongdoing, communism, or treason in Government, even though such employees could find such information only in documents marked "classified" by the department in which such employees were working?

By Senator McCarthy. Yes (hearing record p. 417).

In addition to the foregoing, which the committee believes to have been established, the select committee received the following additional evidence and testimony:

Senator McCarthy testified in his own behalf that—

* * * I was not asking for general classified information. I was only asking for evidence of wrongdoing. I was asking these people to conform with the criminal code which requires they give that evidence (p. 262 of the hearings).

* * * When I invited them to give the chairman of that committee evidence of wrongdoing, I am inviting them not to violate their oath of office but to conform to their oath of office * * *" (pp. 263 and 264 of the hearings).

I confined this information with regard to illegal activities on the part of Federal employees. It did not include general classified material * * * that as chairman of the Government Operations Committee and the investigation committee, if I did not try to get that information, then I should be subject to censure (p. 265 of the hearings).

* * * I feel very strongly that if someone in the executive knows of wrongdoing, of a crime being committed, and they do not bring it to someone who will act on it they are almost equally guilty * * * and let me emphasize again I am not asking for general classified information; I am merely asking for evidence of wrongdoing. I maintain that you cannot hide wrongdoing by using a rubber stamp, stamping "Confidential," "Secret," or "Top Secret"—I don't care what classification they stamp upon it—as long as it is evidence of wrongdoing (p. 266 of the hearings).

I am referring here, obviously, to valid information (p. 394 of the hearings).

The Senator contended that the following statutes permitted, even imposed a duty upon, Federal employees to give to him the information so requested:

Title V, United States Code, section 652 (d) (p. 264 of the hearings).
Title XVIII, United States Code, section 4 (p. 265 of the hearings).
Title XVIII, United States Code, section 798 (p. 395 of the hearings).

Senator McCarthy further stated that the position which he took was not new or unprecedented, but that the Vice President (then Congressman), Nixon, took a position much stronger, and the then Senator Hugo Black in 1934 took a similar position to the one presently taken by him (p. 267 of the hearings). He introduced into the record excerpts from a report of the Committee on the Judiciary, 1951. "Subversive and Illegal Aliens in the United States," wherein the subcommittee invited the employees of the Immigration and Naturalization Service to report to the subcommittee laxity in enforcement of immigration laws or other matters affecting national security; and also parts of a report of the Internal Security Subcommittee, "Interlocking Subversion in Government Departments," wherein Government workers were invited to supply information of subversion to the Federal Bureau of Investigation or the congressional committees (pp. 418 and 419 of the hearings).

B. LEGAL ISSUES INVOLVED

The select committee believes that the charges in this category, and the evidence and testimony thereunder adduced, give rise to the following legal or quasi-legal question:

1. Whether Senator McCarthy openly invited, incited, and urged employees of the Government of the United States to report to him information coming to their attention without disinction to whether or not contained in a classified document; and thereby to violate (a) their oath of office, (b) the law of the United States, (c) Executive orders and directives.

Senator McCarthy contended at the hearings of the select committee, and by a brief submitted to the committee by his counsel, that he had not requested "classified" information, but only information relating to "graft, corruption, Communist infiltration and espionage" and that such information "could not be insulated from exposure by a rubber stamp." He asserts that by statute (U. S. C., title V, sec. 652 (9)) Federal employees are not precluded from furnishing such information to a Member of Congress; indeed, by virtue of United States Code, title XVIII, section 4, such employees have a duty to give such information. He further contends that as chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, a duty is imposed upon him by the Senate itself to get such information, and that in seeking this information he was doing no more than had been done in the past by other Senators and senatorial committees.

The committee believes that from a reading of the entire section 652 of title V, it will appear that this portion of the Civil Service Act of 1912 does no more than affirm that Federal employees do not lose or forfeit any of their rights merely be virtue of their Federal employment. A study of title XVIII, section 4, by the committee leads it to the conclusion that it applies only to persons possessing actual personal knowledge of the actual commission of a felony, as distinguished from information obtained by reviewing files.

As to the alleged precedents of other Senators and senatorial committees, the committee has taken note of the statements contained in the reports of certain senatorial committees cited by Senator McCarthy, as expressing the official opinion of the members of such committees. The committee was of the opinion that any similar statements of other Senators are expressions of individuals and do not establish senatorial precedent unless confirmed by official action.

The charges contained in this category involve the right of the legislative branch of the Government to investigate the executive branch and to be informed of the operations of that branch. This committee believes that the principles, frequently enunciated by the Senate and its committees, sustaining the right of the Congress to be informed of all pertinent facts with respect to the operations of the executive branch should not be relaxed; and any contrary view is hereby disavowed. These principles certainly embrace information of wrongdoing in the executive branch of a general nonclassified nature, and the right of employees to inform the Congress of the same.

The precedents do show with certitude, however, that the Congress has the constitutional power to investigate activities in the executive branch to determine the advisability of enacting new laws directed to such activities, or to determine whether existing laws directed to such activities are being executed in accordance with the congressional intent. To these ends, the Congress may make investigations into allegedly corrupt or subversive activities in executive agencies or departments. The power to investigate such activities necessarily carries with it the power to receive information relating to such activities.

By the Reorganization Act of 1946, the Congress conferred upon the Senate Committee on Government Operations express authority to study "the operation of Government activities at all levels with a view to determining its economy and efficiency," and also that "Each such (standing) committee may make investigations into any matter within its jurisdiction."

In so doing, Congress delegated, in part, to the Senate Committee on Government Operations its constitutional power to make investigations into alleged corruption or subversion in executive agencies or departments. The Senate Committee on Government Operations elected to exercise this delegated power through its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, whose chairman was Senator McCarthy.

The committee is immediately concerned with the conduct of Senator McCarthy rather than with the conduct of employees of the executive branch. The President no doubt has power to safeguard from public dissemination, by Executive order or otherwise, information affecting, for example, the national defense, notwithstanding that the regulations might indirectly interfere with any secret transmission line between the executive employees and any individual Member of the Congress. But the President, we think, cannot (nor do we believe he has sought by any order or directive called to our attention) deny to the Congress, or any duly organized committee or subcommittee thereof, and particularly the Committee on Government Operations of the Senate, any information, even though classified, if it discloses corruption or subversion in the executive branch.

This, we think, is true on the simple basis that the Congress is entitled to receive such information in the exercise of its investigatory power under the Constitution. The Congress, too, is charged with the responsibility for the welfare of the Nation.

What the executive branch may rightfully expect is that the coequal legislative branch, or its authorized committees, will inform the President, or his specially designated subordinate (ultimately the Attorney General) of the request, and that the desired information will be supplied subject to the protectives customarily thrown around classified documents by such committees.

In receiving such information, however, the Congress should refrain from thwarting or impeding the proper efforts of executive agencies, charged with duties incident to discovering, prosecuting, or punishing corruption or subversion in Government, or charged with safeguarding secrets involving the national defense.

However, the committee is equally of the view that the manner of approaching this important aspect of investigation in the light of the peculiar dangers of this hour, must be taken into account. The executive branch is initially peculiarly charged with inquiry into and suppression of insidious infiltrations of subversives into its own departments and agencies; this responsibility is a delicate and necessarily confidential one, because it involves the clearing of loyal personnel as well as the identification and elimination of disloyal employees. It also involves techniques of investigation which must be kept secret to be effective.

For this reason, there has been developed, under pressure of necessity, a system by which certain information, involving the national security, is protected in the executive branch by a machinery of classification, to insure that such information will remain confidential, as against unauthorized revelation or publication by employees, officers, or other agents of the executive branch.

If this system, which has expanded during recent years to keep step with the danger, were to be presented to the Congress as an iron curtain, denying to properly authorized agencies or persons (in which class the Congress and its committees are to be placed first) any right of access, a situation would be presented against which this committee would protest with all its power, as other committees have protested in the past. This we would regard as a challenge to the coequal powers of the legislative branch.

If on the other hand the Executive has recognized the prerogatives of the Congress, and incidentally other agencies of Government, even in the executive department itself, to be informed of classified material or information, by orderly and formal application to responsible heads of departments or to the Presidential office itself, then the committee believes another problem of orderly constitutional government may be presented, and that the Senate itself would be the first to respect the necessary right of the Executive to protect its special functions, so long as the equally important powers of the legislative branch are not unduly impeded thereby.

We would be of the view that for the executive department, even the President himself, to deny to a properly constituted committee or subcommittee of the Senate or any Senator operating with authority in the matter, facts involving wrongdoing in any executive department, might well offer a proper ground for challenging such decision, on the broadest and soundest constitutional grounds. But by the same token, a failure of the Congress or any Member to adapt itself or himself, to reasonable regulations by the President or his authorized department heads (for example, the Department of Defense or the Federal Bureau of Investigation), with respect to matters involving national security, might readily expose the Congress to an equally sound criticism.

In this connection, it is apparent that Congress itself, by specific legislation, has expressed an intent to protect documents relating to national security, and to prevent unauthorized disclosures of such information contained therein. At the same time, the executive branch, by departmental orders and Presidential directives ("not inconsistent with law") has expressed a cooperative attitude, by providing an orderly method of disclosing such information to proper authorities, including, of course, the Congress, in a reasonable prescribed manner, not harmful to the Nation's interest.

(For a further consideration and discussion of these authorities by this committee, reference is made to the legal discussion contained in pt. IV, category 3B of this report.)

If the invitation of Senator McCarthy to the Federal employees is more a solicitation of general information of wrongdoing, this committee would believe that he was within his senatorial prerogative, as there appears to be no law or Presidential order prohibiting employees of the Federal Government from giving such information to the Congress or members thereof. Indeed, there is law which affirmatively imposes a duty upon such employees to disclose to proper authorities any actual knowledge of the commission of a felony.

A more difficult legal question is presented if the invitation of the Senator goes beyond general information of wrongdoing, and includes within its scope classified information and documents, such as the 2½-page document and the information contained therein. The law hereinbefore mentioned and Presidential orders would seem to prevent the receipt or disclosure of such information or documents except through established orderly procedures.

The task of considering the allegations embodied in category I is a perplexing one because of the ambiguity of the statements made by Senator McCarthy as well as because of the difficulty of distinguishing between the constitutional power of the Congress to investigate the executive branch and the constitutional power of the President to withhold information from the Congress.

The statements of Senator McCarthy are susceptible of alternative constructions.

The first construction is that Senator McCarthy merely invited employees of the executive branch to bring to him as chairman of the Senate Committee on Government Operations and as chairman of its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, information acquired by them in the ordinary course of their employment having a logical tendency to disclose corrupt or subversive activities in governmental areas.

The second construction is that Senator McCarthy in effect urged employees of the executive branch to ransack confidential files of executive agencies or departments regardless of whether they had lawful access to those files, and bring to him classified documents the confidential retention of which in those files was necessary to enable the executive agencies charged with such duties to discover, prevent, or bring to justice persons guilty of corrupt or subversive activities in governmental areas.

If his statements were susceptible of the second construction alone, Senator McCarthy might well merit the censure of the Senate upon the allegations embodied in category I for the conduct reflected by the second construction would evince an irresponsibility unworthy of any Senator and particularly of a Senator occupying the chairmanship of the Senate Committee on Government Operations and its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

Since his statements admit of the alternative construction set out above, however, the select committee feels justified in giving Senator McCarthy the benefit of the first or more charitable construction.

In receiving information relating to corruption or subversion in the executive branch under the circumstances delineated in the first construction, that is, without irregular and possibly illegal use of classified documents, the chairman of the Senate Committee on Government Operations and of its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations would be exercising the investigatory power vested in the Congress by the Constitution. This would be true even though employees of the executive branch should communicate such information to him in disobedience to Presidential orders.

The committee does not overlook the allegation that the statements of Senator McCarthy were tantamount to incitement to employees of the executive branch to violate the provisions of the Espionage Act embraced in 18 United States Code 793 (d) (e), which are couched in this language:

> (d) Whoever having lawful possession of * * * any * * * information relating to the national defense which information the possessor has reason to believe could be used to the injury of the United States * * *, willfully communicates * * * the same to any person not entitled to receive it * * * shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.
>
> (e) Whoever having unauthorized possession of * * * any * * * information relating to the national defense which information the possessor has reason to believe could be used to the injury of the United States * * *, willfully communicates * * * the same to any person not entitled to receive it * * * shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

These statutory provisions do not define who is entitled to receive information relating to the national defense. Moreover, the code leaves to conjecture the question whether the definition embodied in 18 United States Code 798 (b) applies to 18 United States Code 793 (d) (e). Since it is a cardinal rule of statutory construction that statutes defining crimes are to be construed strictly against the Government and it does not appear that the chairman of the Senate Committee on Government Operations and its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations is a "person not entitled to receive" information relating to the national defense, within the purview of 18 United States Code 793 (d) (e), the select committee is of the opinion that the statements of Senator McCarthy cannot assuredly be deemed, under all the facts before us, to constitute an incitement to employees of the executive branch to violate the provisions of the Espionage Act embraced in 18 United States Code 793 (d) (e).

C. FINDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE

After carefully considering, evaluating, and weighing the evidence and testimony presented at the hearings, and construing the applicable legal principles involved, the select committee is of the opinion—

1. That insofar as Senator McCarthy invited Federal employees to supply him with general information of wrongdoing, not of a classified nature, he was acting within his prerogative as a United States Senator and as head of an investigative arm of the United States Senate, and was not inviting such employees to violate their oath of office, Presidential orders, or any law.
2. That the invitation of Senator McCarthy, made during the hearings before the Special Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations, and affirmed and reasserted at the hearings before the select committee, is susceptible to the interpretation that it was sufficiently broad by specific language and necessary implication to include information and documents properly classified by executive department heads as containing information affecting the national security.
3. However, the select committee is convinced that the invitation so made, affirmed, and reasserted by Senator McCarthy was motivated by a sense of official duty and not uttered as the fruit of evil design or wrongful intent.

4. That were the invitation as made, affirmed, and reasserted to be acted upon by the Federal employees, as to classified material affecting the national security, the orderly and constitutional functioning of the executive and legislative branches of the Government would be unduly disrupted and impeded, and this select committee warns such employees that such conduct involves the risk of effective penalties.

D. CONCLUSIONS

The select committee feels compelled to conclude that the conduct of Senator McCarthy in inviting Federal employees to supply him with information, without expressly excluding therefrom classified documents, tends to create a disruption of the orderly and constitutional functioning of the executive and legislative branches of the Government, which tends to bring both into disrepute. Such conduct cannot be condoned and is deemed improper.

However, the committee, preferring to give Senator McCarthy the benefit of whatever doubts and uncertainties may have confused the issue in the past, and in recognition of the Senator's responsibilities as chairman of the Committee on Government Operations and its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, does not feel justified in proposing his acts in this particular to the Senate as ground for censure.

The committee recommends that the leadership of the Senate endeavor to arrange a meeting of the chairman and the ranking minority members of the standing committees of the Senate with responsible departmental heads in the executive branch of the Government in an effort to clarify the mechanisms for obtaining such restricted information as Senate committees would find helpful in carrying out their duly authorized functions and responsibilities.

III

Category III. Incidents Involving Receipt or Use of Confidential or Classified Document or Other Confidential Information From Executive Files

A. SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

The evidence adduced before this committee relating to this charge was evolved from the testimony before the Special Subcommittee on Investigations for the Committee on Government Operations (Mundt committee), together with some testimony taken at hearings of this select committee.

The charge is based upon the specifications contained in amendment (d) proposed by Senator Morse (hearing record, p. 3) and amendment (13) proposed by Senator Flanders (hearing record, p. 6).

The charge or charges inherent in these specifications are—

1. That Senator McCarthy received and used confidential information unlawfully obtained from an executive department classified document, and failed to restore the document.

2. That in so doing he was in possible violation of the Espionage Act.

3. That he offered such information to a Senate subcommittee in the form of a spurious document.

The evidence supporting these charges was in part derived in documentary form from the record of the Mundt subcommittee hearings held in April, May, and June 1954 and in part oral testimony presented before the select committee.

It is the opinion of the select committee that competent, relevant, and material testimony has been submitted before the committee to support the charge that Senator McCarthy, before the Mundt subcommittee, produced what purported to be a copy of a letter from J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, to Major General Bolling, Assistant Chief of Staff, G2, Army, bearing the typed words "Personal and Confidential via Liaison," asserting it had been in the Army files (hearing records, pp. 95 and 96) and suggesting this was one of a series of letters from the FBI to the Army complaining "about the bad security setup at" the Fort Monmouth Signal Corps Laboratory, and giving information on certain individuals (hearing record, p. 96); that Mr. Hoover, after examining the "letter," which was dated January 26, 1951, declared that the "letter" was not a carbon copy or a copy of any communication prepared or sent by the FBI to General Bolling (hearing record, p. 99) but that "the letter" contained information identical in some respects with that contained in a 15-page interdepartmental memorandum from the FBI to General Bolling of the Army, dated January 26, 1951, marked "Confidential via Liaison"; also that Mr. Hoover had stated that "confidential" was the highest classification that could be put on a document by the FBI (hearing record, p. 110). It is also established that Senator McCarthy urged that the document, 2¼ pages in length, which he had received from an Army Intelligence officer be made available to the public (hearing record, p. 111).

It is further established that Attorney General Brownell on May 13, 1954, advised Chairman Mundt by letter that the 2¼-page document was not authentic; that portions of the 2¼-page document which were taken verbatim from the 15-page interdepartmental memorandum are classified "confidential" by law; this means they must not be disclosed "in the best interests of the national security * * *. It would not be in the public interest to declassify the document or any part of it at the present time" (hearing record, p. 116). The Attorney General further stated that "if the 'confidential' classification of the FBI reports and memoranda is not respected, serious and irreparable harm will be done to the FBI" (hearing record, p. 116).

Despite the fact that the Attorney General had ruled that the document was a classified document, Senator McCarthy insisted that all security information had been deleted from it, and a request was made by his attorney as follows:

> Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to read it, sir, because there is no security information in it.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Are you offering it in evidence?
>
> Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes (p. 314 of the hearings).

but Senator McCarthy suggested that the names contained in the document be deleted (p. 326 of the hearings). This committee received the document into the possession of the chairman, without making public the contents (p. 327 of the hearings) upon the advice of the Attorney General that the document was a security document and could not be declassified (p. 327 of the hearings). This committee thereupon ruled that the 2¼-page document is a security document and that the information contained in it should be kept classified (p. 328 of the hearings).

Clifford J. Nelson, of the Internal Security Division of the Department of Justice, testified that in January 1951 the word "confidential" was the only classification officially recognized by the FBI (p. 510 of the hearings); and that there was no regulation requiring any particular way of imprinting the classification designation on the document or paper (p. 511 of the hearings); and that it was not necessary for Government agencies "to go through their files and * * * declassify restricted information" when a new classification order was promulgated (p. 513 of the hearings).

Senator McCarthy's position was that the names contained in the document were not security information (p. 389 of the hearings); he requested that, in accordance with the rule of his committee, the names be deleted if the document be made public, "unless * * * the individual named can appear * * * and answer the charges against him" (p. 389 of the hearings). His position also was that he had presented the document to the Mundt committee in good faith believing it was a copy of a letter in the Army files, it being self-evident that certain information had been deleted (pp. 397 and 417 of the hearings). Finally he insisted that the document and the information contained therein were not classified until Attorney General Brownell "classified it during the McCarthy hearings"; and "that it was not classified from the time I received it until the time that Brownell either classified it or attempted to classify it" (p. 432 of the hearings); "It did not disclose any secrets of our national defense of any kind" (p. 433 of the hearings).

B. LEGAL ISSUES INVOLVED

1. What were the statutes, Executive orders, and directives applicable to the 2¼-page letter or document?

2. Was the 2¼-page letter or document or the information therein classified?

3. Was it proper for Senator McCarthy to attempt to make the 2¼-page letter or document public?

Congress has long recognized the need for providing legislation authorizing the heads of executive departments to make regulations relative to records and papers within their departments. As early as the act of June 22, 1874 (R. S., sec. 161, U. S. C., title 18, sec. 22), the Congress authorized the heads of executive departments to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, controlling the conduct of its officers and clerks, and the custody, use, and preservation of its records and papers.

This early act is cited by the Department of Justice Order No. 3229, filed May 2, 1946 (11 Fed. Reg. 4920, 18 Fed. Reg. 1368), protecting official files, documents, records, and information in the offices of the Department, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation, as "confidential," by providing that "no officer or employee may permit the disclosure or use of the same for any purpose except in the discretion of the Attorney General."

To the same effect, Presidential directive of March 13, 1948, 13 Federal Register 1359, which was apparently in effect in May and June 1953; and the subsequent Executive Order No. 10290 of September 24, 1951, setting up a system of classification "to the extent not inconsistent with law." The regulations promulgated by such order expressly apply only to classified security information, which term is restricted to official information which requires safeguarding in the interest of national security. It restricts the dissemination of classified information outside the executive branch, but authorizes the Attorney General on request to interpret such regulations, in connection with any problem arising thereunder.

Of particular import is the Department of Justice order of April 23, 1948, directed to the "Heads of all Government Departments, Agencies and Commissions" (see testimony of Clifford J. Nelson, of the Department of Justice, hearing record, p. 512) providing as follows:

> As you are aware, the Federal Bureau of Investigation from time to time makes available to Government departments, agencies and commissions information gathered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation which is of interest to such departments, agencies or commissions. These reports and communications are confidential. All such reports and communications are the property of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and are subject at all times to its control and to all privileges which the Attorney General has as to the use or disclosure of documents of the Department of Justice. Any department, agency or commission receiving such reports or communications is merely a custodian thereof for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the documents or communications are subject to recall at any time.
>
> Neither the reports and communications nor their contents may be disclosed to any outside person or source without specific prior approval of the Attorney General or of the Assistant to the Attorney General or an Assistant Attorney General acting for the Attorney General.
>
> Should any attempt be made, whether by request or subpena or motion for subpena or court order, or otherwise, to obtain access to or disclosure of any such report or communication, either separately or as a part of the files and records of a Government department, agency or commission, and reports and communications involved should be immediately returned to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in order that a decision can be reached by me or by my designated representative in each individual instance as to the action which should be taken.

This order, providing that all reports and communications are confidential and shall remain the property of and in the control of the FBI, was effective in January of 1951.

Executive Order 10501, dated November 5, 1953, also undertakes to safeguard official information in the interest of national defense, and also commits to the Attorney General the interpreting of the regulations in connection with the problems arising out of their administration.

We mention in this connection the Espionage Act of June 25, 1948 (ch. 645, 62 Stat. 736; 18 U. S. C., secs. 793 (d) and (e); also ch. 645, 62 Stat. 736, 18 U. S. C. 792; also 18 U. S. C. sec. 4, ch. 645, 62 Stat. 684; also ch. 645, 62 Stat. 811, amended May 24 1949, ch. 139, sec. 46, 69 Stat. 96, 18 U. S. C. 2387). (a) (1) (2) and (b) (cited in the brief of committee counsel, supplement to the record, p. 545 of hearing record) as showing a legislative intent to protect documents relating to national security, to prevent concealment of felonies; to forbid publications or disclosures not authorized by law by any officer or employee of the United States of information coming to him in the course of his employment or official duty.

These statutes are referred to here as affirmative evidence of congressional cooperation with the Executive, in a common effort to discourage unauthorized disclosures of confidential documents or information relating to the national defense, or obtained in the course of official duties; and to prevent interference with or impairment of the loyalty or discipline of the Armed Forces.

All the cited statutes, Executive orders and directives are applicable to the 2¼-page letter or document.

In determining whether the letter or document was classified or contained classified information, reference must be made to the facts which have been established that the contents of this letter or document were taken from the 15 page interdepartmental memorandum dated January 15, 1951, from the FBI to the Army marked and classified confidential; that the letter or document in some respects contained identical language with that of the 15-page memorandum; and that Senator McCarthy knew in May of 1953 when he acquired the 2¼-page letter or document that it had been in part extracted from a document containing security information and, therefore, a classified document. It must be admitted, and in fact was so admitted by Senator McCarthy's counsel, that the material copied from a classified document retains the same classification as the document from which it is copied (hearing record, p. 753). It follows that the 2¼-page document retains the character of a classified document. While Senator McCarthy contends that the deletion of certain information from the 2¼-page document renders it an unclassified document, this position overlooks the legal necessity that declassification can only be effected by a legally constituted authority. Furthermore, the Attorney General has formally ruled that the document still contains security information. The committee, after examining the document, likewise has agreed that the 2¼-page document contains security information.

Apart from these considerations, the established facts show that Senator McCarthy attempted to make public over nationwide television the contents of a document which he believed emanated from the Federal Bureau of Investigation to the Intelligence Department of the Army regarding possible espionage in a defense installation and which bore a classified or confidential marking. This conduct on his part shows a disregard of the evident purpose to be served by such a document and overlooks the serious import which attaches to a document affecting the national defense, and the dangers flowing from causing such information to become public knowledge. This transgression is nonetheless grave even though the Senator personally may have been, as he contends, of the opinion that the document did not contain security information. This disposition on the part of Senator McCarthy to determine for himself what is or is not security information regardless of the evident classified marking on a document, confirmed by the opinion of a duly constituted agency authorized to make such a ruling, evidences a lack of regard for responsibility to the laws and regulations providing for orderly determination of such matters. This conduct on the part of Senator McCarthy is all the more serious when considered in the light of the act of June 25, 1948 (ch. 645, 62 Stat. 736, title 18, sec. 793 (d) and (e)) which provides that whoever having lawful or unauthorized possession of any document relating to national defense or information relating to the national defense which information the possessor has reason to believe could be used to the injury of the United States, attempts to communicate the same to persons not entitled to receive it, is an offender against the criminal laws of the country.

We believe under the facts and our conception of the law that the 2¼-page document was a legally classified document entitled to the protection and respect legally surrounding such a document, and binding on all civil and military officers of the Government, as well as on all employees of the Government.

Such a conclusion is not inconsistent with the further view that representatives of the legislative branch have a complete legal right to obtain access to such documents by using the methods available to them to get such information by formal request to the classifying agency or to the Attorney General or to the President himself. It is only when such orderly methods are rebuffed that an issue between two coequal branches of the Government can or should develop.

It follows that any attempt to make public the contents or any portion of this 2¼-page document, affecting national security, would be a transgression upon authority. When Senator McCarthy offered to make public this document, which he knew involved information irregularly obtained and which on its face carried a classification of "confidential" by the FBI, it was an assumption of authority which itself is disruptive of orderly governmental processes, violative of accepted comity between the two great branches of our Government, the executive and legislative, and incompatible with the basic tenets of effective democracy.

C. FINDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. During the hearings before the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations, Senator McCarthy, in the course of the development of his defense, offered to make public the contents of a document bearing the markings of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, "Personal and Confidential via Liaison," which contained classified information relating to the national defense. This offer was not accepted by the committee.

2. In offering to make the contents of the document public, Senator McCarthy acted in the bona fide belief that the document was a valid rather than a spurious instrument and offered it in evidence as such.

D. CONCLUSIONS

The committee concludes that in offering to make public the contents of this classified document Senator McCarthy committed grave error. He manifested a high degree of irresponsibility toward the purposes of the statutes and Executive directives prohibiting the disclosure to unauthorized persons of classified information or information relating to the national defense. He should have applied in advance to the Attorney General for express permission to use the document in his defense under adequate safeguards, or to the committee to receive its contents in evidence in an executive rather than an open session. The committee recognizes, however, that at the time in question Senator McCarthy was under the stress and strain of being tried or investigated by the subcommittee. He offered the document in this investigation, which was then being contested at every step by both sides. The contents of the document were relevant to the subject matter under inquiry, in our opinion.

These mitigating circumstances are such that we do not recommend censure on the specifications included in category III.

It is the opinion of this committee that it will not serve the necessary purposes of this inquiry to make public the 2¼-page document or any part of the contents thereof. If the committee had been of different opinion, the chairman would have been authorized, in light of the opinions of the Attorney General, still adhered to by the latter officer (p. 116 of the hearings), to direct a request to the President for authority to declassify the same. Pending the final action of the Senate in this matter, the committee has directed its chairman to retain physical possession of this document, in confidence. Unless the Senate otherwise directs, it will be surrendered to the Federal Bureau of Investigation for such disposition as shall be proper after the Senate has concluded its consideration of Senate Resolution 301.

IV

Category IV. Incidents Involving Abuses of Colleagues in the Senate

A. GENERAL DISCUSSION AND SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

Pursuant to the category designated by the select committee, "Incidents Involving Abuses of Colleagues in the Senate," it received evidence and took testimony relating to—

Amendment proposed by Mr. Flanders to the resolution (S. Res. 301) to censure the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCarthy, viz:

(30) He has ridiculed his colleagues in the Senate, defaming them publicly in vulgar and base language (regarding Senator Hendrickson—"a living miracle without brains or guts"; on Flanders—"Senile—I think they should get a man with a net and take him to a good quiet place").

Amendment proposed by Mr. Morse to the resolution (S. Res. 301) to censure the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCarthy, viz:

(b) Unfairly accused his fellow Senators Gillette, Monroney, Hendrickson, Hayden, and Hennings of improper conduct in carrying out their duties as Senators.

The alleged abuses of senatorial colleagues, considered in this category, result from certain oral and written statements of Senator McCarthy directed by him to and about certain fellow Members of the Senate, and center around the following specific charges:

1. That Senator McCarthy publicly ridiculed and defamed Senator Hendrickson in vulgar and base language by calling him "* * * a living miracle without brains or guts."

2. That Senator McCarthy publicly ridiculed and defamed Senator Flanders in vulgar and base language by saying of him, "Senile—I think they should get a man with a net and take him to a good quiet place."

3. That Senator McCarthy unfairly accused Senators Gillette, Monroney, Hendrickson, Hayden, and Hennings of improper conduct in carrying out their senatorial duties.

As relating to this category, the select committee received documentary evidence in the form of correspondence between Senator McCarthy and the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, testimony taken before and published by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Government Operations, being part of the Army-McCarthy hearings, the testimony of two reporters, certain other record evidence, and the testimony of Senator McCarthy in his own behalf.

We point out that for convenience, and by reason of related subject matter, the select committee has already considered and disposed of two of the charges contained in this category, being the charge that Senator McCarthy publicly ridiculed and defamed Senator Hendrickson, in vulgar and base language, being No. 1 above-mentioned, and the charge that Senator McCarthy unfairly accused Senators Gillette, Monroney, Hendrickson, Hayden, and Hennings of improper conduct in carrying out their senatorial duties, being No. 3 above-mentioned. These two charges have already been considered and reported upon in this report under I—"Incidents of Contempt of the Senate or a Senatorial Committee." The discussion under this category IV, therefore, will be restricted to the one charge contained in the amendment proposed by Senator Flanders (30), that Senator McCarthy publicly ridiculed and defamed Senator Flanders, in vulgar and base language, by calling him "senile."

The evidence shows that on June 11, 1954, Senator Flanders walked into the Senate caucus room where Senator McCarthy was testifying before a vast television audience in the Army-McCarthy hearings, and unexpectedly gave Senator McCarthy notice of an intended speech attacking Senator McCarthy which he proposed forthwith to deliver on the Senate floor; that shortly thereafter Senator McCarthy was asked by the press to comment on Senator Flanders' intended speech; that Senator McCarthy thereupon made this remark concerning Senator Flanders:

> I think they should get a man with a net and take him to a good quiet place; and that on occasions prior to that time Senator Flanders made provocative speeches in respect to Senator McCarthy on the Senate floor.

B. CONCLUSIONS

The remarks of Senator McCarthy concerning Senator Flanders were highly improper. The committee finds, however, that they were induced by Senator Flanders' conduct in respect to Senator McCarthy in the Senate caucus room, and in delivering provocative speeches concerning Senator McCarthy on the Senate floor. For these reasons, the committee concludes the remarks with reference to Senator Flanders do not constitute a basis for censure.

V

CATEGORY V: INCIDENT RELATING TO RALPH W. ZWICKER, A GENERAL OFFICER OF THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

A. GENERAL DISCUSSION AND SUMMARY OF EVIDENCE

This category refers to the question whether Senator McCarthy should be censured for his treatment of Gen. Ralph W. Zwicker, in connection with General Zwicker's appearance before the Senator as a witness.

The pertinent proposed amendments are that of Senator Fulbright:

(4) Without justification, the junior Senator from Wisconsin impugned the loyalty, patriotism, and character of General Ralph Zwicker; and that of Senator Morse:

(c) As chairman of a committee, resorted to abusive conduct in his interrogation of Gen. Ralph Zwicker, including a charge that General Zwicker was unfit to wear the uniform, during the appearance of General Zwicker as a witness before the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Senate Committee on Government Operations on February 18, 1954; and that of Senator Flanders:

(10) He has attacked, defamed, and besmirched military heroes of the United States, either as witnesses before his committee or under the cloak of immunity of the Senate floor (General Zwicker, General Marshall).

The select committee restricted its hearings to the case of General Zwicker. Its reasons for not inquiring into the case of remarks made against General Marshall appear in part VI of this report.

In his capacity as chairman on the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, Senator McCarthy held hearings to determine whether there were espionage activities in the radar laboratory at Fort Monmouth. General Zwicker was summoned as a witness and appeared on February 18, 1954, at a hearing held in New York, N. Y.

The evidence on this phase consisted of the records of both a public and executive hearing, the testimony of William J. Harding, Jr., who was a spectator at the public hearing, the testimony of Senator McCarthy and of General Zwicker, the testimony of Gen. Kirke B. Lawton, and of Capt. William J. Woodward, a medical officer who accompanied General Zwicker to the hearings, and of James M. Juliana and C. George Anastos, of the staff of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

There is no dispute concerning the reported testimony of General Zwicker and the questions, statements, and comments of Senator McCarthy during the hearings. General Zwicker attended a public hearing, as a spectator, in the morning of February 18, 1954, and testified as a witness at an executive session late that afternoon. There is dispute as to the attitude and truthfulness of General Zwicker, the statements made to and about him by Senator McCarthy at the conclusion of the executive session, and concerning alleged utterances of General Zwicker prior to his testimony.

Gen. Kirke B. Lawton testified to a conversation which he had with General Zwicker at Camp Kilmer scmetime before General Zwicker was called as a witness. It was charged that General Lawton was "gagged" by his military superiors, but after General Lawton testified, it became clear that his inability to give details of his conversation with General Zwicker was not the result of any military secrecy order but was the result of his inability to remember any of the details of the conversation. General Lawton testified that General Zwicker gave him the impression of being generally opposed to Senator McCarthy or the Senator's method in investigation. He could not remember any words used by General Zwicker but was permitted to testify to his general impression and conclusion as to the effect of General Zwicker's remarks.

William J. Harding, Jr., who was a spectator at the morning public session of the hearing held by Senator McCarthy in New York on February 18, 1954, testified that he was seated near General Zwicker. In the morning session, General Zwicker also was a spectator. Mr. Harding stated that Senator McCarthy addressed a question to General Zwicker, who was then seated in the audience, and that General Zwicker replied to the question. As General Zwicker seated himself, after replying to the Senator's question, Mr. Harding testified that the general muttered under his breath the letters "S. O. B." with reference to Senator McCarthy.

James M. Juliana and C. George Anastos, members of the staff of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, were called as witnesses by the select committee. Mr. Juliana testified that he saw General Zwicker at Camp Kilmer on February 13, 1954, 5 days before the appearance of General Zwicker as a witness before Senator McCarthy in New York. On February 13, 1954, Mr. Juliana received from General Zwicker a copy of the Army order directing the honorable discharge of Maj. Irving Peress. In the New York hearing, Senator McCarthy tried to establish who was responsible for the advancement of Peress from captain to major, and who was responsible for his separation and discharge from the military service, the latter having occurred after he had claimed the protection of the fifth amendment as to his Communist connections and activities, at a hearing before Senator McCarthy. (The separation order was read into the record at these hearings before the select committee.) Mr. Juliana also testified that his copy of the Peress separation order was produced at the hearing of February 18, 1954, and handed by him either to Senator McCarthy, or to Roy M. Cohn, counsel for the subcommittee.

Under examination by counsel for Senator McCarthy, Mr. Juliana stated that when he talked to General Zwicker, General Zwicker said that he had been in contact with Washington, prior to discharging Major Peress on February 2, 1954, relative to the Peress matter, and that he, Mr. Juliana, had so informed Senator McCarthy prior to February 18, 1954.

C. Georges Anastos testified that he talked with General Zwicker about the Peress case, by telephone on January 22, 1954. General Zwicker gave him the name of Peress, and stated that the file showed there was information that Peress and his wife was or had been a Communist, and that in August 1953 Peress had refused to answer a loyalty questionnaire. There was reference made also, according to Mr. Anastos, to an Army effort to get Peress out of the service. This testimony is in contrast with that of General Zwicker that he did not give to Mr. Anastos any information contained in the Peress classified personnel file. The next day, according to Mr. Anastos, General Zwicker called him voluntarily and told him of the Peress separation order.

Major Peress was examined by Chairman McCarthy on January 30, 1954. He had been promoted on November 2, 1953. He received an honorable discharge on February 2, 1954.

It was the contention of Senator McCarthy that General Zwicker was most arrogant, very irritating, and evasive, that he was untruthful in his testimony, and that he was "covering up" for his superiors. General Zwicker stood upon his testimony and contended that he had been truthful in all respects and as frank as he could be in view of the military restrictions upon his testimony. General Zwicker also contended that Senator McCarthy had full knowledge of General Zwicker's attitude and conduct with reference to the Peress case, and that this made Senator McCarthy's treatment of him unjustified and unwarranted. General Zwicker appeared as a witness at the invitation of the select committee.

B. FINDINGS OF FACT

From the evidence and testimony taken with reference to this fifth category, the select committee finds the following facts:

1. In connection with this incident, Senator McCarthy was acting as chairman of the Senate Committee on Government Operations and chairman of its Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations (pp. 69 and 182 of the hearings).

2. Ralph W. Zwicker is a brigadier general of the Army of the United States, a graduate of West Point Military Academy, and an Army officer since 1927 (p. 80 of the hearings).

3. From July 1953 to August 1954, General Zwicker was the commanding officer at Camp Kilmer, an Army separation center (pp. 70 and 81 of the hearings).

4. Senator McCarthy began looking into the Peress matter in November 1953 (p. 182 of the hearings).

5. In late November or December 1953, General Zwicker had a conversation with Gen. Kirke B. Lawton, and gave General Lawton the impression that he was antagonistic toward Senator McCarthy (p. 438 of the hearings).

6. On January 22, 1954, C. George Anastos, a member of the staff of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, talked to General Zwicker by telephone; the general gave him the name of Peress and made some reference to the latter's Communist connections (p. 519 of the hearings).

7. This information was reported to Roy Cohn and Frank Carr of the subcommittee staff (p. 519 of the hearings).

8. On February 13, 1954, General Zwicker talked to James C. Juliana, another member of the subcommittee's staff, and gave to Mr. Juliana a copy of the Peress separation order (p. 515 of the hearings).

9. This copy was available to Senator McCarthy at the New York hearing of February 18, 1954 (pp. 79, 515, and 516 of the hearings).

10. On the same date, General Zwicker also told Mr. Juliana that he was opposed to giving Peress an honorable discharge and had been in touch with Washington about the matter (p. 517 of the hearings).

11. This was reported by Mr. Juliana to Senator McCarthy some days before February 18, 1954 (pp. 188, 189, 333, and 517 of the hearings).

12. Major Peress was summoned to appear before the permanent subcommittee by request made on January 26, 1954, and appeared on January 30, 1954 (p. 183 of the hearings).

13. Senator McCarthy and General Zwicker met for the first time on February 18, 1954 (p. 330 of the hearings).

14. They had a pleasant social conversation during the lunch intermission (p. 456 of the hearings).

15. There was a public hearing during the morning of February 18, 1954, attended by General Zwicker as a spectator (p. 455 of the hearings).

16. During this morning session, William J. Harding, Jr., testified, after General Zwicker had answered a question of Senator McCarthy, that he heard General Zwicker mutter under his breath, "You S. O. B.," and (turning to his companions) said, "You see. I told you what we'd get" (p. 179 of the hearings).

17. General Zwicker testified he had no recollection of and knew of no reason for making such an utterance (p. 456 of the hearings).

18. Senator McCarthy did not know of the Harding incident when he examined General Zwicker (p. 204 of the hearings).

19. General Zwicker was called as a witness at an executive session before Senator McCarthy, sitting as a subcommittee of one, about 4:30 p. m. on February 18, 1954 (pp. 69 and 190 of the hearings).

20. At the beginning of the hearing, under examination by Mr. Cohn, General Zwicker testified that if he were in a position to do so, that he would be glad to tell what steps he took "and others took at Kilmer to take action against Peress a long time before action was finally forced by the committee," and that the information would not reflect unfavorably on General Zwicker or "on a number of other people at Kilmer and the First Army (p. 70 of the hearings).

21. Senator McCarthy then took over the examination of General Zwicker in an effort to bring out that the general's information, if given in evidence, "would reflect unfavorably on some of them, of course" (p. 70 of the hearings).

22. Senator McCarthy then ordered the witness to reply to the question whether somebody kept Peress on, knowing he was a Communist, and General Zwicker responded that he respectfully declined to answer since he was not permitted to do so under the Presidential directive (p. 70 of the hearings).

23. General Zwicker tried unsuccessfully to have this Presidential directive read at the hearing before Senator McCarthy (p. 354 of the hearings).

24. Senator McCarthy stated that he was familiar with the provisions of the Presidential directive (p. 354 of the hearings).

25. The Presidential directive of March 13, 1948, provided:

> * * * in order to insure the fair and just disposition of loyalty cases * * * reports rendered by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other investigative agencies of the executive branch are to be regarded as confidential * * * and files relative to the loyalty of employees * * * shall be maintained in confidence * * *.—HARRY S. TRUMAN.

(P. 457 of the hearings.)

26. Senator McCarthy then asked General Zwicker whether he knew on the day an honorable discharge was signed for Peress that Peress had refused to answer certain questions before the subcommittee, and General Zwicker replied: "No, sir; not specifically on answering any questions, I knew he had appeared before your committee" (p. 70 of the hearings).

27. When asked whether he "knew generally that he (Peress) had refused to tell whether he was a Communist," General Zwicker replied: "I don't recall whether he refused to tell whether he was a Communist" (p. 71 of the hearings).

28. General Zwicker testified that he had read the press releases about Peress, and knew that Peress had taken refuge in the fifth amendment, but that he did not know specifically that Peress had refused to answer questions about his Communist activities (p. 71 of the hearings).

29. Senator McCarthy then told the witness: "General, let's try and be truthful. I am going to keep you here as long as you keep hedging and hemming" (p. 71 of the hearings).

30. The following then occurred:

General ZWICKER. I am not hedging.

The CHAIRMAN. Or hawing.

General ZWICKER. I am not hawing, and I don't like to have anyone impugn my honesty, which you just about did.

The CHAIRMAN. Either your honesty or your intelligence; I can't help impugning one or the other, when you tell us that a major in your command who was known to you to have been before a Senate committee, and of whom you read the press releases very carefully—to now have you sit here and tell us that you did not know whether he refused to answer questions about Communist activities. I had seen all the press releases, and they all dealt with that. So when you do that, General, if you will pardon me, I cannot help but question either your honesty or your intelligence, one or the other. I want to be frank with you on that.

Now, is it your testimony now that at the time you read the stories about Major Peress, that you did not know that he had refused to answer questions before this committee about his Communist activities?

General ZWICKER. I am sure I had that impression.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you aware that the major was being given an honorable discharge * * *.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you also read the stories about my letter to Secretary of the Army Stevens in which I requested or, rather, suggested that this man be court-martialed, and that anyone that protected him or covered up for him be court-martialed?

General ZWICKER. Yes, sir. (Pp. 71 and 72 of the hearings.)

31. As to the Peress discharge, General Zwicker testified:

The CHAIRMAN. Who ordered his discharge?

General ZWICKER. The Department of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. Who in the Department?

General ZWICKER. That I can't answer.

Mr. COHN. That isn't a security matter?

General ZWICKER. No. I don't know. Excuse me.

Mr. COHN. Who did you talk to? You talked to somebody?

General ZWICKER. No; I did not.

Mr. COHN. How did you know he should be discharged?

General ZWICKER. You also have a copy of this. I don't know why you asked me for it. This is the order under which he was discharged, a copy of that order.

And also:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you take any steps to have him retained until the Secretary of the Army could decide whether he should be court-martialed?

General ZWICKER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it occur to you that you should?

General ZWICKER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you have taken such steps?

General ZWICKER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, there is nothing you could have done; is that your statement?

General ZWICKER. That is my opinion (p. 72 of the hearings).

32. The Peress discharge order was dated January 18, 1954, was received by General Zwicker on January 23, 1954, and provided:

a. That Peress be relieved from active duty and honorably discharged.

b. That this be at the desire of Peress "but in any event not later than 90 days from date of receipt of this letter" (p. 454 of the hearings).

33. Major Peress asked for his discharge on February 1, 1954, and he was discharged the next day (p. 483 of the hearings).

34. Senator McCarthy had read the Peress discharge order, and knew about it on February 2, 1954 (pp. 199 and 333 of the hearings).

35. Senator McCarthy then examined General Zwicker as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask this question. If this man, after the order came up, after the order of the 18th came up, prior to his getting an honorable discharge, were guilty of some crime—let us say that he held up a bank or stole an automobile—and you heard of that the day before—let's say you heard of it the same day that you heard of my letter—could you then have taken steps to prevent his discharge, or would he have automatically been discharged?

General ZWICKER. I would have definitely taken steps to prevent discharge.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, if you found that he was guilty of improper conduct, conduct unbecoming an officer, we will say, then you would not have allowed the honorable discharge to go through, would you?

General ZWICKER. If it were outside the directive of this order?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, yes; let's say it were outside the directive.

General ZWICKER. Then I certainly would never have discharged him until that part of the case——

The CHAIRMAN. Let us say he went out and stole $50 the night before.

General ZWICKER. He wouldn't have been discharged.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think stealing $50 is more serious than being a traitor to the country as part of the Communist conspiracy?

General ZWICKER. That, sir, was not my decision.

The CHAIRMAN. You said if you learned that he stole $50, you would have prevented his discharge. You did learn something much more serious than that. You learned that he had refused to tell whether he was a Communist. You learned that the chairman of a Senate committee suggested that he be court-martialed. And you say if he had stolen $50 he would not have gotten the honorable discharge. But merely being a part of the Communist conspiracy, and the chairman of the committee asking that he be court-martialed, would not give you grounds for holding up his discharge. Is that correct?

General ZWICKER. Under the terms of this letter, that is correct, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. That letter says nothing about stealing $50, and it does not say anything about being a Communist. It does not say anything about his appearance before our committee. He appeared before our committee after that order was made out.

Do you think you sound a bit ridiculous, General, when you say that for $50, you would prevent his being discharged, but for being a part of the conspiracy to destroy this country you could not prevent his discharge?

General ZWICKER. I did not say that, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let's go over that. You did say if you found out he stole $50 the night before, he would not have gotten an honorable discharge the next morning?

General ZWICKER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. You did learn, did you not, from the newspaper reports, that this man was part of the Communist conspiracy, or at least that there was strong evidence that he was. Didn't you think that was more serious than the theft of $50?

General ZWICKER. He has never been tried for that, sir, and there was evidence, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Don't you give me that doubletalk. The $50 case, that he had stolen the night before, he has not been tried for that.

General ZWICKER. That is correct. He didn't steal it yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you wait until he was tried for stealing the $50 before you prevented his honorable discharge?

General ZWICKER. Either tried or exonerated.

The CHAIRMAN. You would hold up the discharge until he was tried or exonerated?

General ZWICKER. For stealing the $50; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. But if you heard that this man was a traitor—in other words, instead of hearing that he had stolen $50 from the corner store, let's say you heard that he was a traitor, he belonged to the Communist conspiracy; that a Senate committee had the sworn testimony to that effect. Then would you hold up his discharge until he was either exonerated or tried?

General ZWICKER. I am not going to answer that question, I don't believe, the way you want it, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I just want you to tell me the truth.

General ZWICKER. On all of the evidence or anything that had been presented to me as Commanding General of Camp Kilmer, I had no authority to retain him in the service.

And also:

The CHAIRMAN. You say that if you had heard that he had stolen $50, then you could order him retained. But when you heard that he was part of the Communist conspiracy, that subsequent to the time the orders were issued a Senate committee took the evidence under oath that he was part of the conspiracy, you say that would not allow you to hold up his discharge?

General ZWICKER. I was never officially informed by anyone that he was part of the Commmunist conspiracy, Mr. Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, let's see now. You say that you were never officially informed?

General ZWICKER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. If you heard that he had stolen $50 from someone down the street, if you did not hear it officially, then could you hold up his discharge? Or is there some peculiar way you must hear it?

General ZWICKER. I believe so, yes, sir, until I was satisfied that he had or hadn't, one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not need any official notification so far as the 50 bucks is concerned?

General ZWICKER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. But you say insofar as the Communist conspiracy is concerned, you need an official notification?

General ZWICKER. Yes, sir; because I was acting on an official order, having precedence over that.

The CHAIRMAN. How about the $50? If one of your men came in a half hour before he got his honorable discharge and said, "General, I just heard downtown from a police officer that this man broke into a store last night and stole $50," you would not give him an honorable discharge until you had checked the case and found out whether that was true or not; would you?

General ZWICKER. I would expect the authorities from downtown to inform me of that or, let's say, someone in a position to suspect that he did it.

The CHAIRMAN. Let's say one of the trusted privates in your command came in to you and said, "General, I was just downtown and I have evidence that Major Peress broke into a store and stole $50." You wouldn't discharge him until you had checked the facts, seen whether or not the private was telling the truth and seen whether or not he had stolen the $50?

General ZWICKER. No; I don't believe I would. I would make a check, certainly, to check the story (pp. 73–74 of the hearings).

36. The examination then proceeded on a further hypothetical basis as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think, General, that anyone who is responsible for giving an honorable discharge to a man who has been named under oath as a member of the Communist conspiracy should himself be removed from the military?

General ZWICKER. You are speaking of generalities now, and not on specifics—is that right, sir, not mentioning about any one particular person?

The CHAIRMAN. That is right.

General ZWICKER. I have no brief for that kind of person, and if there exists or has existed something in the system that permits that, I say that that is wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not talking about the system. I am asking you this question, General, a very simple question: Let's assume that John Jones, who is a major in the United States Army——

General ZWICKER. A what, sir?

The CHAIRMAN. Let's assume that John Jones is a major in the United States Army. Let's assume that there is sworn testimony to the effect that he is part of the Communist conspiracy, has attended Communist leadership schools. Let's assume that Maj. John Jones is under oath before a committee and says, "I cannot tell you the truth about these charges because, if I did, I fear that might tend to incriminate me." Then let's say that General Smith was responsible for this man receiving an honorable discharge, knowing these facts. Do you think that General Smith should be removed from the military, or do you think he should be kept on in it?

General ZWICKER. He should be by all means kept if he were acting under competent orders to separate that man.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us say he is the man who signed the orders. Let us say General Smith is the man who originated the order.

General ZWICKER. Originated the order directing his separation?

The CHAIRMAN. Directing his honorable discharge.

General ZWICKER. Well, that is pretty hypothetical.

The CHAIRMAN. It is pretty real, General.

General ZWICKER. Sir, on one point; yes. I mean, on an individual; yes. But you know that there are thousands and thousands of people being separated daily from our Army.

The CHAIRMAN. General, you understand my question——

General ZWICKER. Maybe not.

The CHAIRMAN. And you are going to answer it.

General ZWICKER. Repeat it.

The CHAIRMAN. The reporter will repeat it.

(The question referred to was read by the reporter.)

General ZWICKER. That is not a question for me to decide, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You are ordered to answer it, General. You are an employee of the people.

General ZWICKER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You have a rather important job. I want to know how you feel about getting rid of Communists.

General ZWICKER. I am all for it.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. You will answer that question, unless you take the fifth amendment. I do not care how long we stay here, you are going to answer it.

General ZWICKER. Do you mean how I feel toward Communists?

The CHAIRMAN. I mean exactly what I asked you, General; nothing else. And anyone with the brains of a 5-year-old child can understand that question.

The reporter will read it to you as often as you need to hear it so that you can answer it, and then you will answer it.

General ZWICKER. Start it over, please.

(The question was reread by the reporter.)

General ZWICKER. I do not think he should be removed from the military.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, General, you should be removed from any command. Any man who has been given the honor of being promoted to general and who says "I will protect another general who protected Communists," is not fit to wear that uniform, General. I think it is a tremendous disgrace to the Army to have this sort of thing given to the public. I intend to give it to them. I have a duty to do that. I intend to repeat to the press exactly what you said. So you know that. You will be back here, General (pp. 75 and 76 of the hearings).

37. At page 77 of the hearings, the following occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you at any time ever object to this man being honorably discharged?

General ZWICKER. I respectfully decline to answer that, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You will be ordered to answer it.

General ZWICKER. That is on the grounds of this Executive order.

The CHAIRMAN. You are ordered to answer. That is a personnel matter.

General ZWICKER. I shall still respectfully decline to answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever take any steps which would have aided him in continuing in the military after you knew that he was a Communist?

General ZWICKER. That would have aided him in continuing, sir?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

General ZWICKER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever do anything instrumental in his obtaining his promotion after knowing that he was a fifth-amendment case?

General ZWICKER. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever object to his being promoted?

General ZWICKER. I had no opportunity to, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever enter any objection to the promotion of this man under your command?

General ZWICKER. I have no opportunity to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. You say you did not; is that correct?

General ZWICKER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. And you refuse to tell us whether you objected to his obtaining an honorable discharge?

General ZWICKER. I don't believe that is quite the way the question was phrased before.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, answer it again, then.

General ZWICKER. I respectfully request that I not answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. You will be ordered to answer.

General ZWICKER. Under the same authority as cited before, I cannot answer it.

38. At the hearings before the select committee, Senator McCarthy testified that General Zwicker was evasive (p. 193 of the hearings), that he changed his story (p. 192 of the hearings), that he was difficult to examine (p. 192 of the hearings), that it was "a long, laborious truth-pulling job," and that he was "most arrogant" (pp. 193 and 204 of the hearings).

39. As stated by the chairman and other members of the select committee, these were matters of argument (p. 195 of the hearings).

40. The transcript of the New York hearing shows that Senator McCarthy said to General Zwicker: "Then, General, you should be removed from any command. Any man who has been given the honor of being promoted to general and who says, 'I will protect another general who protected Communists', is not fit to wear that uniform, General," and Senator McCarthy testified he was referring to the uniform of a general (pp. 202 and 332 of the hearings).

41. General Zwicker did not make any such statement.

42. Senator McCarthy testified that General Zwicker had said in effect: "It is all right to give Communists honorable discharges" (p. 202 of the hearings).

43. There is no testimony in this record which justifies such a conclusion.

44. When asked to give the facts on which he based his testimony that General Zwicker was an unwilling witness, arrogant and evasive, Senator McCarthy reiterated his conclusion that: "All I can say is, the full attitude was one of complete arrogance, complete contempt of the committee" (p. 204 of the hearings).

45. Senator McCarthy testified that he was justified in his treatment of General Zwicker solely by the latter's conduct at the hearing in New York (p. 330 of the hearings).

46. He testified further that he had not criticized General Zwicker and it was: "just a method of cross-examination, trying to get the truth" (p. 331 of the hearings).

47. Senator McCarthy refused to draw any inference but that General Zwicker was not telling the truth (specifically excluding perjury, p. 337 of the hearings), as follows:

Mr. DE FURIA. Now, assuming, Senator, that for the sake of this question, anyhow, that General Zwicker did testify in what we might call a stilted fashion, don't you think that the fair inference, rather than to say that the general was deliberately telling an untruth, or stalling, or distorting facts, that the fair, judicious inference was that he couldn't do very much else in the face of the Presidential orders and the other orders of his superiors; isn't that the fair way to look at it, Senator?

Senator McCarthy. No, Mr. de Furia. When a general comes before me first says, "I didn't know this man refused to answer any questions," then after he is pressed under cross-examination, he says, "Yes, I knew he refused to answer questions, but I didn't know he refused to answer questions about Communist activities"—then, after further cross-examination, he says, "Yes, I know that he refused to answer questions about Communist activities"—I can't assume that is the result of any Presidential directive. We cannot blame the President for that.

48. Before examining General Zwicker, Senator McCarthy knew that General Zwicker was opposed to giving Peress an honorable discharge (p. 342 of the hearings) and Senator McCarthy had received a long letter from the Secretary of the Army giving a full explanation of the Peress case (pp. 459 and 462 of the hearings).

49. Senator McCarthy contended at the hearings before the select committee that matters in the Peress personnel file could be revealed by General Zwicker (p. 344 of the hearings) and that General Zwicker was not relying on any Presidential order (p. 344 of the hearings).

50. Later, Senator McCarthy testified that General Zwicker was relying on Presidential and Executive orders, and that he, Senator McCarthy, had copies of them (pp. 347 and 354 of the hearings).

51. Immediately after General Zwicker had testified in New York, Senator McCarthy gave to the press his version of what had occurred at the executive hearing (p. 348 of the hearings).

52. Senator McCarthy could not recall whether he told the press that the Zwicker hearing had been held principally for the benefit of Secretary of the Army Stevens, did not think so, was reasonably certain he had not said so (p. 348 of the hearings).

53. On his right to reveal to the press what had been testified to at the Zwicker executive hearing, Senator McCarthy testified:

Mr. de Furia. Senator, were you authorized by either the major committee or your Subcommittee on Permanent Investigations to reveal what transpired at the Zwicker executive hearing?

Senator McCarthy. I discussed the matter with the representatives of the two Senators who were present and we agreed, in view of the Stevens' statement, it should be released.

Mr. de Furia. You say you discussed it with the representatives of the two Senators?

Senator McCarthy. That is correct.

Mr. de Furia. In spite of the rules of your own committee that all testimony taken in executive session shall be kept secret and will not be released or used in public session without the approval of the majority of the subcommittee?

Senator McCarthy. I felt that the two men who were present were representing the Senators and they constituted a majority. There were only four Senators on the committee at that time.

Mr. de Furia. In a matter involving a general of the United States, then, you permitted an administrative assistant to exercise the prerogatives of the United States Senate?

Senator McCarthy. I think I have recited the facts to you (pp. 349 and 350 of the hearings).

And also:

Senator McCarthy. May I say further, Mr. de Furia, in answer to your question, that General Zwicker had already released a distorted version of the testimony, through Bob Stevens, in affidavit form. I felt under the circumstances that the correct version should be released.

Mr. de Furia. Why, Senator, you released this first 2 or 3 minutes after your hearing concluded, did you not?

Senator McCarthy. No; I did not. It was the transcript.

Mr. de Furia. You called in the press, did you not, right away?

Senator McCarthy. I did not.

Mr. de Furia. To tell them what had happened in the executive session?

Senator McCarthy. Mr. de Furia, if you want to know what the practice was here, and what the practice is——

Mr. de Furia. I do not want the practice.

Senator McCarthy. I did not release the transcript.

Mr. de Furia. I am not talking about the transcript. But you did tell the press what happened in the closed executive session, within a few minutes after that session ended?

Senator McCarthy. I gave them a résumé of the testimony; yes.

Mr. de Furia. Sir, I am asking you, upon what authority, or by what right, you did that?

Senator McCarthy. Because that has been our practice.

Mr. de Furia. In spite of the rule of your own committee?

Senator McCarthy. That has been the practice of the committee.

Mr. de Furia. General Zwicker's affidavit was not made until 2 days later; isn't that right, Senator? It is dated February 20.

Senator McCarthy. I don't know what date it is dated, but the transcript was not released until after the distorted version of the testimony given by Zwicker.

Mr. Williams. Do you have the rule, there, Mr. de Furia?

Mr. de Furia. Yes, I have the rule, and I would like to have it in evidence, if the chairman please.

The Chairman. It will be received (p. 350 of the hearings).

54. The rules of the Senate Committee on Government Operations, adopted January 14, 1953, provided:

> 6. All testimony taken in executive session shall be kept secret and will not be released or used in public session without the approval of a majority of the subcommittee (p. 352 of the hearings).

55. At that time the subcommittee consisted of seven members (p. 353 of the hearings).

56. During the executive session, Senator McCarthy said with reference to General Zwicker: "This is the first fifth-amendment general we've had before us" (p. 451 of the hearings).

57. After the executive session, Senator McCarthy said to General Zwicker:

> General, you will be back on Tuesday, and at that time I am going to put you on display and let the American public see what kind of officers we have (p. 451 of the hearings).

58. The facts concerning Peress' Communist connections were known to General Zwicker's superior officers when he was directed to discharge Peress (p. 492 of the hearings).

59. General Zwicker was not responsible in any way for promoting or discharging Peress and was very much opposed to both (pp. 505 and 506 of the hearings).

60. Major Peress was not in a sensitive position so far as intelligence, or classified information or material was concerned (p. 505 of the hearings).

C. LEGAL QUESTIONS INVOLVED IN THIS CATEGORY

The legal questions arising with reference to the incident relating to General Zwicker may be stated briefly as follows:

1. Is there any evidence that General Zwicker was not telling the truth in testifying before Chairman McCarthy?
2. Is there any evidence that General Zwicker was intentionally irritating or evasive or arrogant?

3. What is the law governing the treatment of witnesses before congressional committees?

4. Was the conduct of Senator McCarthy toward General Zwicker proper under the circumstances?

1. There is no evidence that General Zwicker was not telling the truth in testifying before Chairman McCarthy

We have analyzed carefully the testimony of General Zwicker, of Senator McCarthy, and of the other witnesses relating to this question. We have concluded that General Zwicker, when he appeared as a witness before Senator McCarthy, on February 18, 1954, was a truthful witness. We feel that it was evident that his examination was unfair, and that General Zwicker testified as fully and frankly as he could do, in view of the Presidential and Army directives which restricted his freedom of expression. These directives were known to his examiners, and however much they may have been out of sympathy with the directives, the fact remains that this was no excuse for berating General Zwicker and holding him up to public ridicule.

General Zwicker testified before the select committee. He underwent a vigorous and taxing cross-examination from Senator McCarthy's counsel. A reading of his testimony and examination makes it clear that in no material respect was it necessary for General Zwicker to modify or change his testimony from that given on February 18, 1954, and that the double exposure of his evidence under searching examination revealed no distortion of fact or untruth.

2. There is no evidence that General Zwicker was intentionally irritating, evasive, or arrogant

General Zwicker was initially examined at the New York hearing by Mr. Cohn, counsel for the subcommittee. It is evident that this examination was mutually courteous and satisfactory. Mr. Juliana and Mr. Anastos, of the staff of the subcommittee, both found General Zwicker to be cooperative and helpful. Even in his examination by Senator McCarthy, the record shows that the general was courteous and respectful throughout the hearing. We find in the record no single instance which supports the conclusion that he was intentionally irritating. Some questions General Zwicker refused to answer and in his answers to some of the questions, apparently, he meticulously sought to avoid the disclosure of material or information in the classified personnel file of Peress, or involving intra-Army discussions and policies, which he was under orders not to reveal. It should not have been difficult to meet this situation in a fair and reasonable way. Senator McCarthy said he was familiar with the Presidential order and the Army directives. A few moments could have been taken to analyze them, and so frame the questions propounded to the witness as to avoid any difficulty. The insistence that the witness answer long hypothetical questions and questions that are not clear even upon careful inspection and reflection, was much more the source of any resulting irritation on the part of the examiner than any conduct on the part of the witness.

Moreover, when he was before this committee, General Zwicker was subjected to a long and vigorous cross-examination and manifested great patience and candor and a complete lack of any tendency toward arrogance or irritability.

3. The law governing the treatment of witnesses before congressional committees

The law and precedent on this subject has been stated many times. Senate Document No. 99, 83d Congress, 2d session, 1954, on Congressional Power of Investigation gives an excellent summary of the law and procedure. Pertinent articles in current legal literature on the subject may be found in American Bar Association Journal, September 1954 at page 763, The Investigating Power of Congress: Its Scope and Limitations; Ohio Bar, August 9, 1954, at page 607, A Comparison of Congressional Investigative Procedures and Judicial Procedures With Reference to the Examination of Witnesses; and Federal Bar Journal, April–June 1954, page 113, Executive Privilege and the Release of Military Records. These articles are mentioned only as source material and do not necessarily express or contain the views of the select committee.

There are no statutes and few court decisions bearing on the subject (Dimock, Congressional Investigation Committees, p. 153 (1929)). There are few safeguards for the protection of the witness. His treatment usually depends and must depend upon the skill and attitude of the chairman and the members. Since an investigation by a committee is not a trial, the committee is under no compulsion to make the hearing public.

We call attention to three cases in the Federal courts discussing this subject. Barksy v. United States (167 F. (2d) 241 (1948)) was a prosecution for failure to produce records before a congressional committee pursuant to subpena. The court stated at page 250:

(14–17) Appellants press upon us representations as to the conduct of the Congressional committee, critical of its behavior in various respects. Eminent persons have stated similar views. But such matters are not for the courts. We so held in Townsend v. United States, citing Hearst v. Black. The remedy for unseemly conduct, if any, by the Committees of Congress is for Congress, or for the people; it is political and not judicial. "It must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts." The courts have no authority to speak or act upon the conduct by the legislative branch of its own business, so long as the bounds of power and pertinency are not exceeded, and the mere possibility that the power of inquiry may be abused "affords no ground for denying the power." The question presented by these contentions must be viewed in the light of the established rule of absolute immunity of governmental officials, Congressional and administrative, from liability for damage done by their acts or speech, even though knowingly false or wrong. The basis of so drastic and rigid a rule is the overbalancing of the individual hurt by the public necessity for untrammeled freedom of legislative and administrative activity, within the respective powers of the legislature and the executive.

In Townsend v. U. S. (95 F. (2d) 352 (1938)), the defendant was convicted of failure to appear before a congressional committee.

In affirming the conviction, the court said at page 361:

(14–17) A legislative inquiry may be as broad, as searching, and as exhaustive as is necessary to make effective the constitutional powers of Congress. McGrain v. Daugherty (273 U. S. 135, 47 S. Ct. 319, 71 L. Ed. 580, 50 A. L. R. 1). A judicial inquiry relates to a case, and the evidence to be admissible must be measured by the narrow limits of the pleadings. A legislative inquiry anticipates all possible cases which may arise thereunder and the evidence admissible must be responsive to the scope of the inquiry, which generally is very broad. Many a witness in a judicial inquiry has, no doubt, been embarrassed and irritated by questions which to him seemed incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and impertinent. But that is not a matter for a witness finally to decide. Because a witness could not understand the purpose of cross-examination, he would not be justified in leaving a courtroom. The orderly processes of judicial determination do not permit the exercise of such discretion by a witness. The orderly processes of legislative inquiry require that the Committee shall determine such questions for itself. Within the realm of legislative discretion, the exercise of good taste and good judgment in the examination of witnesses must be entrusted to those who have been vested with authority to conduct such investigations. Hearst v. Black, 66 App. D. C. 313, 87 F. 2d 68.

Under these authorities, the Senate alone can review this record and determine, in justice to itself and to General Zwicker, whether the bounds of propriety, consonant with the lawful purpose of the subcommittee's investigation and fair and reasonable standards of senatorial conduct, were transgressed by Senator McCarthy in his examination of the general at New York on February 18, 1954, and later in his testimony before this committee.

The select committee is of the opinion that the very fact that "the exercise of good taste and good judgment" must be entrusted to those who conduct such investigations places upon them the responsibility of upholding the honor of the Senate. If they do not maintain high standards of fair and respectful treatment the dishonor is shared by the entire Senate.

4. The conduct of Senator McCarthy toward General Zwicker was not proper under the circumstances

In the opinion of this select committee, the conduct of Senator McCarthy toward General Zwicker was not proper. We do not think that this conduct would have been proper in the case of any witness, whether a general or a private citizen, testifying in a similar situation.

Senator McCarthy knew before he called General Zwicker to the stand that the Judge Advocate General of the Army, who was the responsible person under the statutes, had given the opinion that a court-martial of Major Peress would not stand under the applicable regulations and that General Zwicker had been directed by higher authority to issue an honorable discharge to Peress upon his application.

Senator McCarthy knew that General Zwicker was a loyal and outstanding officer who had devoted his life to the service of his country, that General Zwicker was strongly opposed to Communists and their activities, that General Zwicker was cooperative and helpful to the staff of the subcommittee in giving information with reference to Major Peress, that General Zwicker opposed the Peress promotion and opposed the giving to him of an honorable discharge, and that he was testifying under the restrictions of lawful Executive orders.

Under these circumstances, the conduct of Senator McCarthy toward General Zwicker in reprimanding and ridiculing him, in holding him up to public scorn and contumely, and in disclosing the proceedings of the executive session in violation of the rules of his own committee, was inexcusable. Senator McCarthy acted as a critic and judge, upon preconceived and prejudicial notions. He did much to destroy the effectiveness and reputation of a witness who was not in any way responsible for the Peress situation, a situation which we do not in any way condone. The blame should have been placed on the shoulders of those culpable and not attributed publicly to one who had no share in the responsibility.

D. CONCLUSIONS

The select committee concludes that the conduct of Senator McCarthy toward General Zwicker was reprehensible, and that for this conduct he should be censured by the Senate.

VI

Charges Not Included in the Public Hearings

Senate Resolution 301 provides that the committee—> shall be authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as it deems advisable, and that the committee be instructed to act and make a report * * *"

At the outset of our deliberations, the committee decided, preliminarily, that it was advisable to proceed with hearings upon 13 of the charges in the various proposed amendments, classified into the 5 major categories outlined in the notice of hearing. The other charges, however, remained pending before the committee and its staff. We have studied them in the light of the law and testimony developed in the hearings and have also investigated the evidence suggested in the charges. The committee thereafter confirmed its tentative decision not to conduct hearings on these other items. The committee believes it desirable under the resolution from which its powers and duties stem, to express its reasons for determining that formal hearings need not be conducted on these remaining charges.

The committee eliminated some of the charges for reasons of legal insufficiency, having concluded that the particular conduct charged was not in its judgment a proper basis for Senate censure. The determination of what constituted "legal insufficiency" in the context of a charge intended to support a proposed motion to censure a Member of the United States Senate was the most difficult task imposed upon this committee. No precedents found by the committee were particularly helpful in connection with this task. The path is narrow and the guideposts few.

Only three Senators have previously been censured by the Senate. Two, Senators McLaurin and Tillman, in 1902, for abusive and provocative language and engaging in a physical altercation on the floor of the Senate. The third, Senator Hiram Bingham, was censured in 1929 for having brought into an executive session of the Finance Committee's meeting on the tariff bill, as his aide, the assistant to the president of the Connecticut Manufacturers Association. The Senate found this action by Senator Bingham, "while not the result of corrupt motives" to be "contrary to good morals and senatorial ethics * * * (tending) * * * to bring the Senate into dishonor and disrepute * * *". The very paucity of precedents tends to establish the importance placed by the Senate on its machinery of censure.

Obviously, with such limited precedents the task of this committee in undertaking to determine what is and what is not censurable conduct by a United States Senator was indeed formidable. Individuals differ in their view and sensitivities respecting the propriety or impropriety of many types of conduct. Especially is this true when the conduct and its background present so many complexities and shadings of interpretations. Moreover, it is fairly obvious that conduct may be distasteful and less than proper, and yet not constitute censurable behavior.

We begin with the premise that the Senate of the United States is a responsible political body, important in the maintenance of our free institutions. Its Members are expected to conduct themselves with a proper respect for the principles of ethics and morality, for senatorial customs based on tradition, and with due regard for the importance of maintaining the good reputation of the Senate as the highest legislative body in the Nation, sharing constitutional responsibilities with the President in the appointment of officials and judges through advice and confirmation and participating in the conduct of foreign affairs through the ratification of treaties.

At the same time we are cognizant that the Senate as a political body imposes a multitude of responsibilities and duties on its Members which create great strains and stresses. We are further aware that individual Senators may, within the bounds of political propriety, adopt different methods of discharging their responsibilities to the people.

We did not, and clearly could not, undertake here to establish any fixed, comprehensive code of noncensurable conduct for Members of the United States Senate. We did apply our collective judgment to the specific conduct charged, and in some instances to the way a charge was made and the nature of the evidence preferred in support of it. And on the basis of the precedents and our understanding of what might be deemed censurable conduct in these circumstances, we determined whether, if a particular charge were established, we would consider it conduct warranting the censure of the Senate.

In concluding that certain of the charges dropped were legally insufficient for Senate censure, we do not want to be understood as saying that this committee approves of the conduct alleged. Yet disapproval of conduct does not necessarily call for official Senate censure.

The decision to eliminate any of the charges was arrived at only following extremely careful and thorough consideration. Unquestionably, one consideration underlying the elimination of these charges was the overall time factor. Under Senate Resolution 301 the select committee was directed by the Senate to hold its hearings and file its report prior to the sine die adjournment of the Senate in the 2d session of the then 83d Congress. And it was expressly contemplated that the Senate should be able to meet and consider such report at an appropriate time prior to such adjournment.

In order to abide by this direction and conform to such purpose it was necessary to narrow and confine the scope of its deliberations, and particularly of its formal hearings. The committee's study developed 12 major reasons which, singly or cumulatively, led to the elimination of these other charges from the committee's formal hearings. Only a few of these reasons, in addition to the ground of legal insufficiency, involved the passing of judgment upon the merits of any particular charge. The other reasons deal with the feasibility of the committee's attempting to investigate, document, and receive suitable testimonial evidence upon such specifications.

We set forth here the 12 general grounds upon which the other charges were dropped. Following that will be set forth, and appropriately identified, each charge eliminated, with the reasons for the omission of that particular charge indicated by a number or numbers in the right margin of the page. The numbers in the right margin correspond to the numbers of the 12 reasons for eliminating charges.

The 12 reasons applied as appropriate for eliminating particular charges are—

1. Charges which, even if fully supported and established, would not in the judgment of the committee constitute censurable conduct.
2. Charges which, even if fully supported and established after investigation, would in the judgment of the committee be of doubtful validity as a basis for censure.
3. Charges which are too vague and uncertain, or which were too broad in apparent scope to justify formal hearings by the committee.
4. Charges reflecting largely personal opinion rather than delineating specific, concrete conduct upon which a judgment of censure could properly be based.
5. Charges which, in order to determine properly, would have required more time to investigate, document, and take testimony upon, than was practically available to this committee.
6. Charges which were substantially covered or duplicated by other charges upon which the committee actually held hearings and received evidence.
7. Charges concerning statements made on the floor of the Senate about public officials, with which statements we may disagree, but which, if held censurable, would tend to place unwarranted limitations on the freedom of speech in the Senate of the United States.
8. Charges involving such matters as the receipt by a member of a committee of payments not corresponding to the value of services rendered, from persons subject to the jurisdiction of such committee (which might be reprehensible if true, because of some implication of improper influence), but which the committee believed were not susceptible of satisfactory proof in this forum.
9. Charges of improper treatment of a particular committee witness who is presently undergoing confidential security investigation by the executive department.
10. Charges involving misconduct of the staff of a standing committee of the Senate, over which that committee as a whole has jurisdiction and primary responsibility.
11. Charges concerning matters over which other committees have already acquired jurisdiction.
12. Charges on which no substantial evidence was submitted and none could be found by the committee.

Reason why eliminated

The charges eliminated, and the reasons therefor, are:

Amendments proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. Fulbright:

(1) The junior Senator from Wisconsin, while a member of the committee having jurisdiction over the affairs of the Lustron Co., a corporation financed by Government money, received $10,000 without rendering services of comparable value. 8

(2) In public hearings, before the Senate Permanent Investigations Subcommittee, of which he was chairman, the junior Senator from Wis- 9

Reason why eliminated

consin strongly implied that Annie Lee Moss was known to be a member of the Communist Party and that if she testified she would perjure herself, before he had given her an opportunity to testify in her own behalf.

(6) The junior Senator from Wisconsin in a speech on June 14, 1951, without proof or other justification made an unwarranted attack upon Gen. George C. Marshall. 7

Amendments proposed by the Senator from Oregon, Mr. Morse:

(f) Attempted to invade the constitutional power of the President of the United States to conduct the foreign relations of the United States by carrying on negotiations with certain Greek shipowners in respect to foreign trade policies, even though the executive branch of our Government had a few weeks previously entered into an understanding with the Greek Government in respect to banning the flow of strategic materials to Communist countries; and 2, 5

(g) Permitted and ratified over a period of several months in 1953 and 1954 the abuse of senatorial privilege by Mr. Roy Cohn, chief counsel to the Permanent Investigations Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Government Operations of which committee and subcommittee the junior Senator from Wisconsin is chairman. Mr. Cohn's abuse having been directed toward attempting to secure preferential treatment for Pvt. David Schine by the Department of the Army, at a time when the Army was under investigation by the committee. 10

Amendments proposed by the Senator from Vermont, Mr. Flanders:

(1) He has retained and/or accredited staff personnel whose reputations are in question and whose backgrounds would tend to indicate untrustworthiness (Surine, Lavinia, J. B. Matthews). 4, 5

(2) He has permitted his staff to conduct itself in a presumptuous manner. His counsel and his consultant (Messrs. Cohn and Schine) have been insolent to other Senators, discourteous to the public, and discreditable to the Senate. His counsel and consultant traveled abroad making a spectacle of themselves and brought discredit upon the Senate of the United States, whose employees they were. 4, 5, 10

(3) He has conducted his committee in such a slovenly and unprofessional way that cases of mistaken identities have resulted in grievous hardship or have made his committee, and thereby the Senate, appear ridiculous. (Annie Lee Moss, Lawrence W. Parrish, subpenaed and brought to Washington instead of Lawrence T. Parish.) 3, 4, 10

(4) He has proclaimed publicly his intention to subpena citizens of good reputation, and then never called them. (Gen. Telford Taylor, William P. Bundy, former President Truman, reporters Marder, Joseph Alsop, Friendly, Bigrant, Phillip Potter.) 1

(5) He has repeatedly used verbal subpenas of questionable legality. (Tried to prevent State Department granting visa to William P. Bundy on ground that he was under "oral subpena.") 2, 5

(6) He has attempted to intimidate the press and single out individual journalists who have been critical of him or whose reports he has regarded with disfavor, and either threatened them with subpena or forced them to testify in such a manner as to raise the possibility of a breach of the first amendment of the Constitution. (Murray Marder of Washington Post, the Alsops, James Wechsler.) 4, 5

(7) He has attempted "economic coercion" against the press and radio, particularly the case of Time magazine, the Milwaukee Journal, and the Madison Capital Times. (On June 16, 1952, McCarthy sent letters to advertisers in Time magazine, urging them to withdraw their advertisements.) 2, 3, 5

(8) He has permitted the staff to investigate at least one of his fellow Senators (Jackson) and possibly numerous Senators. Such material has been reserved with the obvious intention of coercing the other Senator or Senators to submit to his will, or for the purpose of inhibiting them from expressing themselves critically. (Cohn said he would "get" Senator Jackson.)—Washington News, June 14, 1954. 4, 10

Reason why eliminated

(9) He has posed as savior of his country from communism, yet the Department of Justice reported that McCarthy never turned over for prosecution a single case against any of his alleged "Communists." (The Justice Department report of December 18, 1951.) Since that date not a single person has been tried for Communist activities as a result of information supplied by McCarthy. 1

(11) He has used distortion and innuendo to attack the reputations of the following citizens: Former President Truman, Gen. George Marshall, Attorney General Brownell, John J. McCloy, Ambassador Charles E. Bohlen, Senator Raymond Baldwin, former Assistant Secretary of Defense Anna Rosenberg, Philip Jessup, Marquis Childs, Richard L. Strout of the Christian Science Monitor, Gen. Telford Taylor, and the three national press associations. 3, 4, 5

(12) He has disclosed restricted security information in possible violation of the espionage laws. (McCarthy has made public portions of an Army Intelligence study, Soviet Siberia, which compelled the Army to declassify and release the entire document.) 4, 6, 12

(15) He has used his official position to fix the Communist label upon all individuals and newspapers as might legitimately disagree with him or refuse to acknowledge him as the unique leader in the fight against subversion. (Deliberate slips such as calling Aldai Stevenson "Alger"; saying that the American Civil Liberties Union had been "listed" as doing the work of the Communist Party; calling the Milwaukee Journal and Washington Post local "editions of the Daily Worker.") 3, 4, 5

(16) He has attempted to usurp the functions of the executive department by having his staff negotiate agreements with a group of ship owners in London; and has infringed upon functions of the State Department, claiming that he was acting in the "national interest." 2, 3, 5

(18) He has made false claims about alleged wounds which in fact he did not suffer. (Claims he was a tailgunner when, in fact, he was a Marine Air Force Ground Intelligence officer * * * claims he entered as buck private, when he entered as commissioned officer.) 1

(19) His rude and ruthless disregard of the rights of other Senators has gone to the point where the entire minority membership of the Permanent Investigating Subcommittee resigned from the committee in protest against his highhandedness (July 10, 1953). 2

(20) He has intruded upon the prerogative of the executive branch, violating the constitutional principles of separation of powers. (Within a single week (February 14–20, 1953) McCarthy's activities against the Voice of America forced the State Department three times to reverse administrative decisions on matters normally considered internal operating procedures: 5

((1) The Department had authorized the use of certain writings by pro-Communist authors as part of their program to expose Communist lies and false promises. McCarthy compelled the State Department to discontinue this practice; (2) the Department authorized its employees to refuse to talk with McCarthy's staff in the absence of McCarthy himself. It was compelled to cancel this directive; and (3) John Matson, a departmental security agent who had "cooperated" with McCarthy, was transferred so as to be put out of reach of the Department's confidential files. McCarthy compelled the Department to return Matson to his original position.)

(21) He has infringed upon the jurisdiction of other Senate committees, invading the area of the Internal Security Subcommittee and other committees of the Congress. 1, 3

(22) He has failed to perform the solid and useful duties of the Government Operations Committee, abandoning the legitimate and vital functions of this committee. 3

(23) He has held executive sessions in an apparent attempt to prevent the press from getting an accurate account of the testimony of witnesses, and then released his own versions of that testimony, often at variance with the subsequently revealed transcripts, and under circumstances in which the witness had little opportunity to correct or object to his version. 3, 4, 5

Reason why eliminated

(24) He has questioned adverse witnesses in public session in such a manner as to defame loyal and valuable public servants, whose own testimony he failed to get beforehand, and whom he never provided a comparable opportunity for answering the charges. 3, 5

(25) He has barred the press and general public from executive sessions and then permitted unauthorized persons whom his whim favored to attend, in one case, a class of schoolgirls, thus holding the very principle of executive sessions up to ridicule. 3

(26) His conduct has caused and permitted his subcommittee to be incomplete or incapacitated in its normal work for approximately 40 percent of the time that he has been its chairman. (During his 19 months as chairman of the subcommittee, his refusal to recognize their rights—later acknowledged by him—caused the minority members to leave the subcommittee on July 10, 1953, and they did not return until January 25, 1954. His personally motivated quarrel with the United States Army necessitated the interruption of the subcommittee's work and its exclusive preoccupation with the Army-McCarthy hearings from April 22, 1954, to June 17, 1954.) 2, 4, 10

(27) He has publicly threatened publications with the withdrawal of their second-class mailing privilege because he disagreed with their editorial policy. (Washington Post, Wall Street Journal, Time magazine.) Letter to Postmaster General Summerfield made public August 22, 1953. See Washington Post, August 23, 1953. 12

(28) He has exploited his committee chairmanship to disseminate fantastic and unverified claims for the obvious purpose of publicity. (McCarthy's hint that he was in secret communication with Lavrenti P. Beria and would produce him as a witness when Beria was on the verge of execution in Moscow.) Washington News, September 21, 1953 (announcement of plan to subpena Beria). 2

(29) He has denied Members of Congress access to the files of the committee, to which every Member of Congress is entitled under the Reorganization Act (title II, sec. 202, par. d). 3, 11

(31) He has announced investigations prematurely, subsequently dropping these investigations so that the question whether there was ever any serious intent to pursue them may be justifiably raised, along with the inevitable conclusion that publicity was the only purpose. (Central Intelligence Agency, Beria, and so forth.) 3

(32) Checking through hearings, one will note that favorable material submitted by witnesses will usually have the notation "May be found in the files of the subcommittee," whereas unfavorable material is printed in the record. 3, 4, 5

(33) He has permitted changing of committee reports and records in such a way as to substantially change or delete vital meanings. (Senator Margaret Chase Smith felt compelled to object to the filing of his 1953 subcommittee reports without their first being sent through the full committee.) 3

VII

Bush Amendment

Senate Resolution 301 submitted to the select committee for consideration contains not only the charges for censure, but also contains the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Bush, in regard to proposed changes in rules and procedure for Senate committees.

The select committee is aware of the fact that the Subcommittee on Rules of the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration has held extensive hearings on this subject.

Many witnesses appeared before that subcommittee, including Senator Bush, and we are advised that this committee expects to have a report ready for the opening of the next session of Congress.

It is the firm conviction of the select committee that this is a subject which requires much study before affirmative action is taken on a general change in the rules and procedure of committees and subcommittees of the Senate. However, after hearing the evidence and the testimony presented at the hearing before our committee, we are of the opinion that had certain rules of committee procedure been in effect, much of the criticism against investigative committee hearings would have been avoided. For this reason, we report a separate resolution on the subject of the Bush amendment, to read as follows:

Resolved, That subsection 3 of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(c) No witness shall be required to testify before a committee or subcommittee with less than two members present, unless the committee or subcommittee by majority vote agrees that one member may hold the hearing, or the witness waives any objection to testifying before one member.

"(d) Committee interrogation of witnesses shall be conducted only by members and authorized staff personnel of the committee and no person shall be employed or assigned to investigate activities until approved by the committee.

"(e) No testimony taken or material presented in an executive session shall be made public, either in whole or in part or by way of summary, unless authorized by majority vote of the committee.

"(f) Vouchers covering expenditures of any investigating committee shall be accompanied by a statement signed by the chairman that the investigation was duly authorized and conducted under the provisions of this rule."

And we recommend that this amendment to the rules be approved by the Senate to be effective January 3, 1955.

VIII

Recommendations of Select Committee Under Senate Order Pursuant to Senate Resolution 301

For the reasons and on the facts found in this report, the select committee recommends:

1. That on the charges in the category of "Incidents of Contempt of the Senate or a Senatorial Committee," the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCarthy, should be censured.
2. That the charges in the category of "Incidents of Encouragement of United States Employees To Violate the Law and Their Oaths of Office or Executive Orders," do not, under all the evidence, justify a resolution of censure.
3. That the charges in the category of "Incidents Involving Receipt or Use of Confidential or Classified or Other Confidential Information From Executive Files," do not, under all the evidence, justify a resolution of censure.
4. That the charges in the category of "Incidents Involving Abuse of Colleagues in the Senate," except as to those dealt with in the first category, do not, under all the evidence, justify a resolution of censure.
5. That on the charges in the category of "Incident Relating to Ralph W. Zwicker, a general officer of the Army of the United States," the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. McCarthy, should be censured.
6. That with reference to the amendment to Senate Resolution 301 offered by the Senator from New Jersey, Mr. Smith, this report and the recommendations herein be regarded as having met the purposes of said amendment.

7. That with reference to the amendment to Senate Resolution 301 offered by the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. Bush, that an amendment to the Senate Rules be adopted in accord with the language proposed in part VII of this report.

The chairman of the select committee is authorized in behalf of the committee to present to the Senate appropriate resolutions to give effect to the foregoing recommendations.

O

SUMMING UP THE HEARINGS: H. H. WILSON

THE Nation

July 3, 1954
20¢

Every American Should Go To Jail!

A MODEST PROPOSAL

For Pacifying the Public Temper

by ARTHUR MILLER

EVERY WEEK SINCE 1865

Trial by Violence — Fredric Wertham

Russia's Rhine Maidens — Carolus

special consideration for their psychological warfare — anti-McCarthy side. No one with an ounce of sensitivity

THE Nation Bulletin Board:

"LUSCIOUS red strawberry guavas, yellow guavas, and loquats grow wild and are free for the picking. Fresh garden vegetables are one cent a pound, also nice bananas. Oranges, the best we have ever seen, are seasonal and cost six cents a dozen. Watermelons, cantelopes, papayas, and avocados are cheap in their seasons. We have a year-round climate unsurpassed anywhere in the world—the temperatures ranging from 48 to 82 degrees."

Sound like Paradise? It's the nearest place to it, according to a letter just received from Nation subscriber R. E. Moore, who pulled up stakes two years ago and hied himself to Norfolk Island in the South Pacific. Norfolk, incidently, is the island where the mutineers of Bounty fame wound up and Mr. Moore says that some 50 per cent of the island's 1000 population are their descendants.

"There is much personal liberty here," Mr. Moore concludes, "and very little abuse of it. The freedom from McCarthyism and loyalty boards is wonderful."

Paradise indubitably!

THIS HAS BEEN an interesting week for philatelists on The Nation's staff. M. O. M. Maduagwu writes from Merchants College in Oba, Onitsha, Nigeria: "Yesterday in a friend's house I saw and read copies of The Nation sent to him by an American friend. It interested me because I am concerned with the fight for freedom and human rights. I could see that The Nation would always be at my service. That's why I want to become a regular reader."

And from Delhi, India, Satish Kumar Arora of the Indian Institute of Public Opinion, writes: "It is now four years since I started reading The Nation (while attending Oberlin College) and I do not think I have missed any week of it. I sincerely believe there is a dire need of The Nation being circulated in India. Friends who are interested in the United States and world affairs and who saw copies were extremely impressed with it. They hardly believed there were periodicals like yours in the United States."

Closer home, Mrs. Hilda Lipkin of New York, who recently received a subscription to the magazine, said: "It helps keep my blood pressure down and my hopes up. You all write such sense that it's a comfort."

IT ALL BEGAN with a brief plug in this column for Eric Sander's "McCarthy for Führer" buttons. Seems the idea has really caught on. June 21 the San Francisco Chronicle ran a feature story on the nationwide growth of the campaign—particularly among college students, many of whom had seen the original announcement in The Nation. Now John Thomas of Los Angeles tells me that he gave a button to a woman college instructor he knew. "She passed it on to a gentleman who is administrative assistant to a top government official. He flew into Washington the same afternoon for a conference with the President. The President saw it and now he owns it.

"Since the President does not 'deal in personalities' he is probably not wearing the button openly," says Mr. Thomas. "But at least he must have it tucked away in a desk drawer ready for occasional furtive peeks."

THE DEMAND for copies of the Federation of American Scientists' Loyalty Committee report on the army-McCarthy situation at Fort Monmouth is steady. A limited number of these are available through The Nation and if you want one I urge you to act quickly. Just send 75 cents for your postpaid copy. It's a shocker.

MARTIN SOLOW

Letters

On Waldo Frank

[In publishing Waldo Frank's "Anti-Communist Peril" in our June 19 issue, we prophesied that it would provoke extensive controversy among our readers. The mails have proved us right, as the sampling below shows. We invite further comment on the important issues raised by Mr. Frank.]

Dear Sirs: Bravo to Waldo Frank for his clear and succinct analysis! This article should be read and debated by all. Not communism, not decadent reaction, but man is the issue today.

NATHAN L. SHAINBERG
Memphis, Tennessee

Dear Sirs: I have read with attention Waldo Frank's earnest and scholarly article, "Anti-Communist Peril," and found myself half-persuaded—until I took the time to think it over and realize its implications. He tells us, in substance, that there are two perils threatening the country, one of them communism and the other anti-communism, and it appears that he equates these two evils. To clear up his point of view I respectfully ask him to answer a few questions.

Communism is represented by the Soviet Union, which has seized nine countries of Central Europe and parts of two others and reduced them to satellite police-states by methods of terror and scientifically devised torture. Anti-communism is represented by the United States of America, which during the past half century has given freedom and democratic institutions to Cuba, Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and Japan. Does Waldo Frank equate these two opponents?

Communism armed the North Koreans and sent them forth to seize South Korea. Anti-communism resisted this invasion. Does Waldo Frank equate these two procedures? The same pattern is reproducing itself in Indo-China; the French have promised independence to these three states, and the Chinese Reds are ready with their "brain-washing." Are these two to be equated?

Communism is embodied for us by Malenkov, who has some fifteen millions of his political opponents in slave-labor camps and has murdered God alone knows how many more. The worst of anti-communism is typified to us by Senator McCarthy, who has lied recklessly about his political opponents, but has not been able to jail anybody, and has not murdered anybody so far as the record shows. Are these two to be equated?

UPTON SINCLAIR
Monrovia, California

Dear Sirs: The article by Waldo Frank in your June 19 issue is an attractive and courageous piece of rhetoric. Nevertheless, without disputing his criticisms, I wonder if he is not making the same kind of essential omission as those whom, as types, he has so effectively attacked.

Mr. Frank refers several times to "the Judaeo-Christian tradition." I do not know what his relation to this tradition is. It is worth pointing out, however—for others' benefit if not for his—that the only fact that gives final significance to this "tradition" is its insistence on the supremacy of God, whose creature and subject man is. Neither Judaism nor Christianity, as such, is an ethical system, to be made use of in isolation from its central assertion; any pretense that this is possible is glib sentimentality.

The defect which capitalism and communism share, at this time—and with them most types of socialism, and world

(Continued on page 19)

Volume 179, Number 1
New York, Saturday, July 3, 1954

THE Nation
EVERY WEEK SINCE 1865

EDITORIALS

Summing Up the Hearings . . by H. H. Wilson

McCarthy maxim: "One should start kicking at the other person as fast as possible below the belt until the other person is rendered helpless."

Prosecutor Jenkins: "If I became a candidate for the Senate in Tennessee and Senator McCarthy magnanimously tendered his services . . . I would say frankly as of this moment I would accept his offer."

NO one could have expected the McCarthy subcommittee to conduct hearings that could, or would, seriously attempt to resolve the questions of fact involved in the dispute between the Senator and the army. Apart from the inherent weaknesses of a Congressional committee attempting to perform a judicial function, the personnel of the subcommittee hardly compounded confidence in the probable outcome. The acting chairman, Senator Karl Mundt, and the other Republicans, Dirksen, Potter, and Dworshak, had rather clearly identified themselves as McCarthy disciples. McClellan, Symington, and Jackson, the Democrats on the subcommittee, constituted a moderately effective challenge to a complete whitewash, but they had no position of principled opposition to the witch hunt. This meant that they were constantly on the defensive and could only protest their equal devotion to "anti-communism."

As counsel the subcommittee selected an unbelievable Tennessee trial lawyer, a self-declared "Taft Republican" who lived up to what one would expect of a politically ambitious individual who had no public record of support or opposition to the Wisconsin Senator and whose personal qualities made him Senatorial material in the eyes of the discerning Everett Dirksen. Once rebuked by McCarthy for being too strenuous with G. David Schine, Jenkins subsequently toadied to Joe in the most obvious fashion. Throughout the hearings from the very first day, he served as straight man and sounding board for the peculiar McCarthy-Cohn interpretation of history.

Despite such inauspicious circumstances the hearings probably served to convince several million Americans that Secretary of the Army Robert T. Stevens and John G. Adams, army counsellor, reflecting Eisenhower policy, had gone to inordinate lengths to appease McCarthy and Cohn. Similarly there can be no doubt that McCarthy-Cohn used every conceivable pressure to win special consideration for their psychological-warfare expert, G. David Schine. Many will feel that Senator Charles E. Potter's suggestion for perjury prosecutions and the dismissal of employees on both sides of the dispute is too limited, but that it is at least a necessary beginning. Beyond this the hearings revealed, as Senator McClellan underscored in his summary, a weak, fumbling, ineffectual Executive which had tolerated or encouraged the most abject behavior on the part of the Secretary of the Army. Apparently advised that McCarthy could be useful in gaining votes for Republicans, President Eisenhower refused to display any leadership when it might have prevented this whole fiasco.

IT appears that Senator McCarthy has suffered a temporary setback in his drive for personal power. His arrogance, patent contempt for Administration leaders, fellow Senators, the law, and the Constitution seem at last to have registered even with members of the Eisenhower inner circle. He has succeeded in warning the most wilfully obtuse of his long-range intentions. He has antagonized those who for years tolerated his attacks on powerless individuals. It is indicative of the state of American democracy that official indignation was not sparked until he attacked a brigadier general. Now even those who thought to use him to disrupt the Democratic Party and to destroy popular attachment to the New Deal are fearful that they may not be able to check the Senator to their own purposes.

It is certainly a positive gain that in recent days a number of Republicans have finally, however temporary their virtue, found courage to attack McCarthy directly. In addition to Potter's proposal, Senator Flanders is sponsoring a resolution to deprive him of chairmanships. Allen Dulles condemned McCarthy charges against the C. I. A. as completely "false"; Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., attacked the McCarthy network of personal spies in government agencies; and President Eisenhower warned the United States against nameless "demagogues greedy for power."

While retaining a certain amount of skepticism regarding the meaning of the public-opinion polls, it is probably valid to conclude that a large number of those who once held "no opinion" have shifted over to the anti-McCarthy side. No one with an ounce of sensitivity

In This Issue

EDITORIALS

Summing up the Hearings by H. H. Wilson 1

Leading from Strength 3

ARTICLES

War Against the U. N. by J. Alvarez del Vayo 3

A Modest Proposal by Arthur Miller 5

Oregon Upset? by Douglas McKean 8

Russia's Rhine Maidens: Bonn Looks to the East by Carolus 10

Trial by Violence: Peril for the Innocent by Fredric Wertham 12

BOOKS

Two Men and Two Presidents by Charles A. Madison 14

Quaker Oats by Isaac Rosenfeld 15

In Defense of Reason by Bert James Lowenberg 15

Baron Munchausen's Dam by Richard L. Neuberger 16

New Books in Brief 17

THEATER by Harold Clurman 18

RECORDS by B. H. Haggin 19

CROSSWORD PUZZLE No. 574 by Frank W. Lewis 20

LETTERS opposite 1

Editorial Board

Freda Kirchwey — Editor and Publisher
Carey McWilliams — Editorial Director
Lillie Shultz — Director, Nation Associates
Victor H. Bernstein — Managing Editor
J. Alvarez del Vayo — Foreign Editor

Martin Solow — Assistant to the Publisher

Harold Clurman — Theater
B. H. Haggin — Music
Gladys Whiteside — Copy Editor
Caroline Whiting — Assistant Literary Editor
Mary Simon — Advertising Manager

Contributing Editors: Andrew Roth, Alexander Werth, Howard K. Smith, Carolus, Keith Hutchison, H. H. Wilson, W. Macmahon Ball, Maxwell Geismar, Bruce Catton.

The Nation, July 3, 1954. Volume 179, No. 1

The Nation, published weekly and copyright, 1954, in the U. S. A. by The Nation Associates, Inc., 333 Sixth Avenue, New York 14, N. Y. Entered as second-class matter, December 13, 1879, at the Post Office of New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879. Advertising and Circulation Representatives for Continental Europe: Publicitas.

Subscription Prices: Domestic—One year $7; Two years $12; Three years $17. Additional postage per year: Foreign and Canadian $1.

Change of Address: Three weeks' notice is required for change of address, which cannot be made without the old address as well as the new.

Information to Libraries: The Nation is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature, Book Review Digest, Index to Labor Articles, Public Affairs Information Service, Dramatic Index.

could have failed to be revolted by the bully-boy tactics of the Senator.

Without minimizing the positive gains which have been made in crystallizing opposition to the ineffable Wisconsin Senator, these hearings can in no sense be interpreted as weakening the hold of McCarthyism, or anti-democracy, in the United States. In fact this phenomenon, characterized by irrationality, anti-intellectualism, contempt for law, and denial of the integrity of the human personality, has been revealed as the prevailing doctrine even among those nominally opposed to the Senator. Throughout the hearings it was apparent that all participants, including the counsel for both sides, had accepted McCarthy's premises and permitted him to define the meaning of communism, treason, subversion, and corruption. In this regard nothing more clearly reveals the pervasiveness of McCarthyism than the statement to Senator McCarthy by army counsel Joseph N. Welch: "You do good work. I admire the work you do when it succeeds." Not a voice was raised to protest the repeated attacks on individuals or organizations until counsel Welch countered McCarthy's gratuitous attack on his young law associate. It is a measure of our degradation that a man could become a national hero by condemning such "cruelty" while remaining silent about the maligning of loyal citizens who continue as members of the same legitimate professional group. Never has it been more apparent that one should diagnose the sickness of a sick society, not by taking the pulse of the political delinquents who attract the headlines, but by examining the condition of its "healthy" members.

Walter Lippmann has pertinently observed that McCarthy's "power will cease to grow and will diminish as and when, but only as and when, he is resisted, and it has been shown to our people that those to whom we look for leadership and to preserve our institutions are not afraid of him." The fact is, of course, that leaders of this society, in government and out, have long accepted the essence of McCarthyism. College presidents and heads of professional organizations have permitted the primitives to define the qualifications for membership in professional bodies. The army, presumably the immediate victim of McCarthy wrecking tactics, has itself taken over his standards and practices. If more evidence were needed to establish the acceptance of irrationality as a standard of conduct it has been provided by the Oppenheimer case.

It is unreasonable to criticize the American people for revealing confusion and doubt when so-called "good" leaders, anti-McCarthy spokesmen, concede the validity of his premises. Thus Senator Stuart Symington, aggressively hostile to Wisconsin's junior Senator, boasted that when he was Secretary of Air and when he was a private employer, the mere receipt of an F. B. I. report containing "unevaluated" derogatory information was sufficient to justify the immediate dismissal of an employee without benefit of hearing. No one protested the constant reiteration of the false McCarthy-Cohn-Carr charges of "espionage at Fort Monmouth." One waited in vain for a protest by "learned lawyers" at the use of the insidious phrase "Fifth Amendment Communists," or the implication of guilt to Owen Lattimore, though great care was taken not to impugn the integrity and patriotic devotion of McCarthy's bunkomen.

Whatever their spokesmen may conclude as a result of the investigation of the army-McCarthy dispute, the American people have not only been warned, they have for weeks looked at the faces and observed the behavior of those who seek to destroy the institutions and undermine the philosophy of a free society. From this day on no one of the millions of witnesses can plead ignorance if they persist in supporting fascism in this country.

Leading from Strength

WHILE no formal statement had come from the White House it was evident as the week began that every effort was being made to knit up the raveled fabric of British-American understanding. The journey to Washington of Britain's present and future Prime Ministers itself testified to both the widening rift and the desire to heal it.

However, understanding is one thing and agreement is another. The differences between London and Washington are not the sort to be talked out of existence over a week-end. The important point to note is that the British leaders came not to accept a ready-made plan for an East Asia defense pact, as the State Department had so prematurely claimed, but to explain why from their point of view Asian defense must be linked to a broad policy of conciliation and non-aggression pacts with the Communist powers. Before they left London Mr. Eden had taken the precaution of stating this position in Parliament and demonstrating the overwhelming support it had among the British people, and in the opposition as well as in the government party. In a word, what Sir Winston and Mr. Eden came to say was that Britain could not be committed to a course that might lead to war and almost certainly would wreck the Commonwealth in Asia.

Meanwhile in New Delhi Messrs. Chou En-lai and Jawaharlal Nehru were providing the counterpoint to this theme. At the very least the meeting between the Indian and Chinese leaders was an announcement that Nehru could be counted out of any American-made NATO in East Asia. At the same time France's bold new Premier, Pierre Mendès-France, was contributing to the almost global offensive against Washington's Far Eastern policy by hastening the negotiations for a compromise settlement in Indo-China.

In sum, the Administration is suffering a series of jolting diplomatic defeats. The day is passed when Uncle Sam could regard the rest of mankind from the vantage point of the world's greatest heap of industrial power, an A-bomb in one hand and an H-bomb in the other, and assume an allegiance based primarily on economic need. Differences between America and its allies have come up in the past and been dispelled at least superficially by thunder out of Washington. The reason this is not happening today is to be found in the growing economic strength—and thus the growing political independence—of the European nations. No longer is Britain or France in the role of pensioner of the United States. They can disagree and expect their views to carry weight in Washington. This, we think, is one of the most hopeful facts in this extremely difficult hour.

WAR AGAINST THE U.N.

The Guatemala Chapter . . by J. A. del Vayo

United Nations, June 28

AT this writing it is not certain whether the unexpected resignation of Guatemala's President, Jacob Arbenz, will prove a victory for the United States and for the rebel forces under Castillo Armas, or merely for the army junta which forced the President out of office. It is not even clear whether the development marks the end of the tragi-comic sitzkrieg situation or the beginning of real fighting. Until Arbenz was obliged to step down the rebels' talkative leader, despite the formidable strength attributed to him, had been able to report only one military development indisputably in his favor—the appointing of himself as a general. Therefore whatever pressures prompted the army junta to turn upon Arbenz, the fear of military defeat at the hands of the rebels was not among them.

The true nature of the pressures at work are perhaps better explainable by the diplomatic and political developments which occurred in the forty-eight hours preceding Arbenz's resignation. Under the leadership of the United States delegation, the Security Council divested itself of any immediate official interest in Guatemala's fate. Instead the Inter-American Peace Committee, which naturally has no Soviet member, dispatched a commission to investigate Guatemala's charges of aggression against Honduras and Nicaragua. Simul-

May 7, 1954

Gentlemen:

Mr. Murrow has received your mimeographed letter of April 25, 1954 and the enclosed pamphlet.

He has instructed me to inform you that he is not interested to receive correspondence or literature from your organization, nor has he ever requested that it be sent to him. Would you, therefore, please remove his name from your mailing list.

Sincerely yours,

Dorothy McDonough
Secretary to Mr. Murrow

Communist Party, U.S.A.
P.O.Box 87
Cooper Station
New York 3, New York

The American Way

TO

- Jobs
- Peace
- Democracy

5¢

A NOTE TO THE READER

This Draft Program is offered by the Communist Party as a statement of its proposals for meeting the critical problems now facing the American people.

In line with its own long-standing democratic practice and policy, the Communist Party offers this Program as a draft, to be weighed in the light of the nation's most burning needs, to be subjected to frank and constructive criticism—not only by Communist Party members but, as the Draft Program urges, by "all groups concerned with saving our nation from fascism and war." The Party warmly welcomes the participation in this discussion, which will continue through June, of "all Americans, no matter what our past relations or present differences," and pledges publicly to acknowledge all serious and constructive criticism. It urges both members and sympathizers, and all progressive and democratic forces, to study the Program carefully and to re-examine their activities and habits of work and thought in the light of the Program's objectives.

Letters, articles, proposals, criticisms, and all forms of opinion bearing on the Draft Program, should be mailed to the National Office, C.P.U.S.A., 268 Seventh Avenue, New York 1, N. Y. They will receive serious attention and consideration. In its final form, as it will be hammered out by the best collective thought, and having the full approval of the Party, the Communist Program will be re-published to serve the people's continuing fight for jobs, peace and democracy.

Published by

NEW CENTURY PUBLISHERS, 832 Broadway, New York 3, N. Y.

April, 1954 09 PRINTED IN THE U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN WAY
To Jobs • Peace • Democracy

DRAFT PROGRAM OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY

I. Introduction

Our country and its people rapidly are approaching a crisis.

—The storm clouds of a major economic depression are nearly upon us.

—Our nation's foreign policy has led us into a blind alley.

—Our traditional liberties are vanishing, being replaced with the ugly menace of McCarthyism.

The American people face the danger that everything they believe in, everything they want this great land to be, is being turned into its opposite.

At a time of great national fear and anxiety the Communist Party submits this Program as an appeal to reason, an appeal to the common sense of our fellow Americans. The crisis of our nation cannot be resolved by any one group alone. Therefore, we offer this Program for the consideration of the workingclass and all Americans who are concerned with the welfare of our country.

We are convinced that only the widest unity of the American people can avert the disaster of economic ruin, fascism and war. Only the most open-minded and deep-going democratic debate can produce such unity.

Toward that end we submit this Program.

II. The Looming Depression—The Danger of Hard Times

Ours is a great land. The American people are proud of its inventive genius, its technical know-how, its tremendous industrial machine and vast natural resources. One would, therefore, expect to find among the people a sense of confidence in the future. But such is not the case. Whether in the huge shops of Detroit or the vast farmlands of Nebraska, there is a gnawing fear of impending economic ruin.

There is indeed cause for alarm. Signs of an approaching economic crisis are increasing. Production is falling. Unemployment is growing. Weekly earnings are declining as over-time pay disappears. The farmers are once again being caught in the desperate squeeze between high production costs and falling farm income. Small business bankruptcies are multiplying. Warehouses are loaded with $80 billions of unsold goods, while the American people still owe the unprecedented amount of $27 billions on installment purchases.

Human needs could easily absorb all that America can produce. But human needs and fabulous profits are opposite things. The corporations reap huge profits from the people's skill and labor. Corporation profits rose from $6½ billions in 1939 to $45 billions in 1953. In contrast, the Government's Bureau of Labor Statistics admits that more than one-half of all American families cannot afford to buy the minimum requirements for decent, healthful living.

Since World War II, big business and the Government considered renewed arms production as the panacea to prevent depression and to keep profits high. Military expenditures have increased more than twenty times since 1939.

But this is no answer. The increased expenditures for armaments and war are paid for by increased taxes and higher prices taken from the pockets of the people. Taxes today are more than twelve times higher than in 1939. The cost of living has more than doubled. Thus the real wages and buying power of the workers and farmers have been cut. "Cold war" politics also led to an embargo on trade with one-third of the world—the Soviet Union, China and Eastern Europe. This reduced the ability to sell American goods abroad. Finally, the over-expansion of the armament industries makes ever larger appropriations necessary to keep them going.

The arms economy is proving to be not the road to prosperity, but to economic ruin.

Big Business has no remedy for the chronic threat of economic crisis. It knows only one way to keep its industrial plants running and its lush profits flowing—by bigger war preparations, leading to ever more barbaric wars. The "cure" it offers is worse than the disease.

The arms economy is strengthening the big monopolies at the expense of the nation—particularly of labor, the working farmers and small and middle-sized business. A few giant corporations have a stranglehold on the nation's industries. This hold is even further strengthened by the Administration's "give-away" program to the monopolists.

There is an ever greater subordination of government to big business. The Eisenhower Administration is an administration of, by and for big business. Corporate wealth—General Motors, U.S. Steel, Standard Oil and du Pont—America's biggest, richest and greediest trusts, run the U.S. Government just as surely as they run their own corporations, and for the same end of ever more exorbitant profits.

The monopolists are planning to turn the approaching economic crisis to their own advantage. They are preparing to put the American people through the wringer. They will throw millions of workers on the streets and attempt to cut the wages of those employed. They strive to reduce their own taxes while keeping them high for lower income brackets. They want to crush and wipe out little business, to force millions of small farmers off the land, to push the small owner to the wall and to foreclose on his home and property. They want to intensify the exploitation and oppression of the Negro people and to put more of our youth into uniforms. In short, they want to place the burden of hard times on the backs of the "little people." This is what they mean when they speak of "limited recession" or "economic readjustment."

Above all, the monopolists will seek to use the approaching economic crisis to accelerate their drive for more and more armaments and for ultimate war.

But the American people are no longer going to accept hard times as just "hard luck," or as the process by which individuals are made "rugged" under capitalism. They refuse to blame themselves or fate for mass unemployment. They expect the economic system and the Government to guarantee them jobs at a living wage as workers, and a living income as farmers.

This very dread of economic depression is cleverly utilized by Wall Street to sell its "defense" program to the country as one to prevent depression and to safeguard peace. However, big business now fears the indignation and wrath of the people when they learn that they have been hoodwinked.

III. The Crisis in U.S. Foreign Policy—The Danger of War

This nation's foreign policy since World War II can only lead to disaster. It is a policy without a future.

This policy has failed because it represents neither the national interests of the American people nor the cherished aspirations of all mankind for peace, national freedom and higher living standards.

The Wall Street trusts and cartels have set their course on completely dominating the nations, the markets and the resources of the entire globe. This they aim to do by a combination of bribery, cajolery, intimidation and ultimate war. This is the real cause for our Government's reactionary foreign policy.

This explains the building of air bases and military installations around the world. It explains the aggressive NATO war alliance and our headlong rush to rearm Germany and Japan. It explains our intervention in Korea, and our military and financial aid to the oppressors and butchers of the peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

Our country, which won its national freedom in a great revolutionary war against despotic colonialism, now strives to prevent other peoples from having their 1776. Our economic royalists shout "Communism," but what they are after is the tungsten of Korea, the rubber of Indo-China, the oil of Iran and Venezuela, the diamonds and gold of South Africa, the sugar of Cuba and Puerto Rico, the bauxite of Guiana, the fruit of Guatemala, the nitrate and copper of Chile, the tin of Bolivia, and the immense super-profits derived from cheap colonial labor everywhere.

No longer are the democratic forces of the world our allies and friends. Our new found "friends" are the Nazis of Germany, the militarists of Japan, the Franco fascist regime of Spain, the Chiang Kai-shek clique in Formosa, the white-supremacists of South Africa, and the military dictators of Latin America.

To call U.S. foreign policy one of "strengthening democracy and the free world," is to make a hollow and cynical mockery of words.

Powerful social forces are at work in the world that will not accept Wall Street dictation or domination. One third of mankind is emancipated from imperialist oppression and capitalist exploitation and has taken the path of socialism. The rise of the Soviet Union, its tremendous industrial and cultural advance, the victory of the Chinese people and the peoples of Eastern Europe, prove that socialism is here to stay and is indestructible.

At the same time, the colonial and dependent countries refuse to continue to live in conditions of national oppression. They refuse to continue to let their resources be exploited for the benefit of imperialism.

The more economically advanced capitalist countries are likewise impelled to assert their national independence, to break away from the grip of Wall Street. They desperately need foreign markets to keep their industries running. U.S. capitalism cannot provide these. Instead, Wall Street seeks to monopolize all capitalist world markets for itself. Thus, these other capitalist nations are compelled to enter into ever fiercer competition with U.S. capital and to seek profitable trade with the Soviet Union and the other socialist countries.

The present crisis in U.S. foreign policy arises from the refusal of the ruling class to accept this new relationship of forces in the world. The "cold war" is the attempt to turn back the clock of history, to prepare a war for world domination behind the myth of Soviet aggression. Wall Street has done all in its power to build a world-wide coalition against the Soviet Union. But this coalition is now falling apart. Wall Street has no real allies. Even its present so-called allies cannot deliver on their commitments. The people of the world, including the American people, do not intend to goose-step to the martial music of Wall Street. They are tired of constant war tension, unbearable armament burdens, the threat of atomic devastation, and of both "hot" and "cold" wars. They want peace.

These defeats suffered by Wall Street's foreign policy, especially the ending of the Korean war, have led to a certain easing of world tension. This opens the possibility of putting an end to the "cold war" altogether. But to realize this possibility the American people must be on guard against those ruling circles who pay lip-service to the need for a negotiation of differences but in reality place obstacles in the path of such peaceful settlement. The American people must demand an end to all world tension and the "cold war"!

IV. The Menace of McCarthyism—The Growing Danger of Fascism

Hand in hand with the drive toward war has been the attack on our democratic heritage. This grave danger to our democratic liberties is becoming understood by more and more Americans.

McCarthyism is on a rampage. It is trying to brow-beat into submission every independent point of view, every thinking person. It burns books and destroys art and culture. It aims to smash the labor movement, to further enslave the Negro people, to stir up racism and anti-Semitism, to gag the young generation, and to wipe out all vestiges of liberty. McCarthyism seeks to turn America into a land of yes-men, a land where patriotism is replaced with jingoism, independent thought with conformity, courage with servility.

The victims of the witch-hunt are many. They are in the first place Communists, but they also include men and women of varied political views. They are leaders of labor and the Negro people. They are the foreign born. They are men and women of science, gifted writers and artists, prominent churchmen and educators.

The gradual whittling away of our basic democratic liberties is not some post-war madness which will pass of itself. It represents an ominous and monstrous trend toward a full-fledged police-state and fascism. The McCarthys and McCarrans are not merely publicity-seeking demagogues. They are the conscious creatures of powerful ultra-reactionary monopoly interests. McCarthyism is the ugly face of American Hitlerism, American fascism.

The attack upon democratic liberties these past years has been an integral part of the preparations of Wall Street for its war for world domination. It was designed to divide the country, to break up the popular majority that stood for President Roosevelt's policy of peaceful coexistence with the Soviet Union.

The attack on the Communists, the witch-hunt, the attack on the whole New Deal and Fair Deal has nothing to do with the nation's security. It is an expression of ruling class fear of the re-emergence of the progressive majority in which the American Communists were a part and a stimulating force.

To take this country through a depression and into a war, the ruling class needs fascist conformity, apathy, terrorized and submissive Americans. This is the meaning of McCarthyism.

Why has McCarthyism made such alarming inroads in American life? The last convention of the United Auto Workers, C.I.O., correctly noted that "under the guise of protecting us from the Communists," the worst villainy has become possible. McCarthy's shady financial deals, Nixon's slush funds, the big business looting of the public treasury in lush defense contracts and in tax, property, land and oil steals, have all been gotten away with under the guise of fighting Communism. Anti-Communism has become the biggest and best paying racket in the country. The American people are paying for this. They may pay for it even more dearly—with their very lives and liberties.

It is the Big Lie that the Soviet Union menaces this nation that has made possible the inroads of McCarthyism. McCarthyism has been able to utilize this lie to frighten and intimidate the country. The responsibility for this rests largely on those who helped cultivate and perpetuate this Big Lie. This includes the Truman Administration and the A. F. of L. and C.I.O. top leadership. By their propagation of the hoax of the Communist menace, they have helped transform McCarthyism from an insignificant contemptible worm into a dangerous and venomous rattlesnake.

Accepting the Big Lie, many of McCarthy's opponents say that they challenge only his fascist "methods" while agreeing with his anti-Communist "objectives." This stands everything on its head. McCarthy's objective is fascism; his method anti-Communism.

The danger which confronts this country is that of McCarthyism, of fascism. It can be defeated only when progressive Americans, whether they like or dislike Communism, begin to realize that Communism is not the issue in this country today or in the near future. The false issue of Communism has been cunningly injected and kept alive in order to distract the people from the real issue which confronts them, the imminent black-out of all constitutional liberties and the brutal imposition of an American type of fascism. This was the method of Hitlerism. It is the method of McCarthyism.

McCarthyism is trying to win complete political power through the present Republican Administration which is increasingly embracing the methods of McCarthyism.

Thus it aims to impose fascism on the country, to take it over through a program of unbridled intimidation and demagogy. It aims to transform the present increasingly reactionary Republican Administration into an outright fascist government. This is the objective of McCarthyism.

Thus the danger of McCarthyism, of American fascism, is real, grave and growing. To defeat this menace, to safeguard the democratic rights and precious liberties of the American people is the first task of the hour.

V. The Communist Program Against Depression—For Jobs, Peace, Democracy

The American Communists propose for our nation a five-point program of Human Welfare, Democratic Freedoms, and Peaceful Coexistence.

1. Raise the Purchasing Power of the People and Curb the Power and Profits of the Trusts!

• To combat depression we urge the defeat of all wage-cut attempts and a militant struggle by labor to raise wages on all levels, to shorten the work-week without a reduction in weekly earnings, and to curb speed-up. We advocate the lowering of consumer prices, an end to rent gouging, and a shift of the tax burdens to the rich.

• An anti-depression program requires government protection of home owners, small farmers and small business from mortgage foreclosures and bankruptcy. It requires a government guarantee of 100 per cent price parity and crop insurance for small and middle-sized farmers, and Government loans and credit at low interest rates to small business and needy farmers.

• To end the economic backwardness of the South and to raise the purchasing power of the people of that region, the Government should institute agricultural reform measures aimed at helping the sharecroppers and tenant farmers, Negro and white, to become independent producers who own the soil they till. The wage differentials between North and South and between men and women workers should be ended and equal pay for equal work guaranteed to all, regardless of race, nationality, religion, sex, age or political belief.

2. Spend for Human Welfare, not Warfare; for Homes and Schools, not Bombs and Battleships!

• The Government has the responsibility to guarantee jobs and living standards. The giant plants which have been erected for the production of planes, tanks, atom and hydrogen bombs for war, need not be shut down. They can be converted to peacetime uses. For example, the giant war-time aircraft plants can be converted into huge factories for producing pre-fab homes on an assembly line basis. A Government-supported program of this kind can produce a minimum of 1,500,000 additional modern private dwellings a year. This would help wipe out the rat-infested fire-traps in which so many of our people live and die. The Government which built these giant war producing plants with the people's money must guarantee their continued operation, but for peaceful purposes. If private industry cannot or will not do so, the Government can and must!

- We propose a substantial increase in unemployment and old-age benefits; special measures to keep our youth from becoming a jobless generation and to guarantee all our youth free and equal educational opportunities; a federal health program; and a large-scale federal program of flood control, conservation, power dam development and rural building.

3. End the "Cold War" and Promote Friendship and Trade!

There can be no hope for a lasting peace and world disarmament without accepting the principle of peaceful coexistence between the capitalist U.S.A. and the socialist Soviet Union. This is necessary whether one agrees or disagrees with socialism, whether one likes or dislikes the Soviet Union.

Peaceful coexistence does not preclude, but includes, a peaceful competition between the different social systems. It does exclude, however, a settlement by force of arms of the dispute as to which social system is superior.

To ease world tension and to restore the United Nations as an instrument for lasting peace we propose:

- A return to President Roosevelt's policy of big power negotiation and agreement. This must include People's China, the established and effective government of the great Chinese nation.
- An end to the arms race and to the policy of encircling the globe with U.S. military bases. What is needed is a world ban on the use of all atomic weapons and an agreement for a drastic reduction in all types of armaments. We oppose the militarization of our youth and Universal Military Training.

• The widest promotion of peaceful world trade. Our country, in its own interests, must take advantage of the immense markets for American goods available in the Soviet Union, China and Eastern Europe. These markets can provide millions of jobs for American workmen for years to come. We favor the extension of credit to bolster world trade and to help overcome the hunger and under-development of the colonial lands. The colonial and semi-colonial countries need machine tools, agricultural implements and farm products. But they rightfully reject fraudulent "Point 4" programs which aim at robbing them of their natural resources and keeping them as backward hinterlands.

• An end to the policy of remilitarizing Germany and Japan. The lessons of World War II prove that a re-militarized Germany is a threat to world peace and to the security of the U.S. We stand for a united, democratic and peaceful Germany.

• No intervention in the internal affairs of other nations and the recognition of the right of all nations to govern themselves. This means an end to the Dulles policy of instigating civil wars in other countries and of aiding the oppressors of the colonial peoples of Indo-China and of all Africa and Asia. This means hands off Guatemala. We favor the right of full and unconditional independence for Puerto Rico; full equality and democratic rights for Hawaii; and complete political and economic freedom for the Philippines. The right of all nations to restrict and control all foreign investments on their territories should be recognized and respected. We favor a policy of the good neighbor to the Latin American lands and to all nations.

4. Defend and Strengthen Democracy!

We call for the defense of the Constitution and its Bill of Rights, for an end to the "dictatorship of fear," and for a turning back of the evil tide of McCarthyism. This requires the defense of the constitutional rights of all, including the Communists. To deny the Communists their constitutional rights is the first step to denying these rights for all Americans. This is the lesson of Nazi Germany. It is the lesson for the witch-hunt in this country. Labor leaders and former New Dealers are learning that they cannot obtain immunity from the witch-hunters by crawling on their knees and Red-baiting. In the words of Benjamin Franklin, "They that can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

- We urge an end to the witch-hunting, the abolition of all Congressional witch-hunt committees, and a halt to the Gestapo-like political activities of the FBI. Political arrests and deportations must cease. Amnesty must be granted to Eugene Dennis, Benjamin J. Davis, Gus Hall, and the other Communist leaders and victims of McCarthyism. The attempts to outlaw the Communist Party and to deprive Communists of their citizenship rights must be defeated. The Smith and McCarran Acts should be repealed.
- Labor's right to organize and strike must be protected and all anti-labor legislation such as the infamous Taft-Hartley Act must be repealed and defeated. Strike-breaking by court injunctions or government decrees should be stopped.
- Academic freedom and freedom of inquiry should be restored for America's youth. Young people should be given the right to vote at 18. The time has come to end bookburning and know-nothingism, to put a stop to the cult of violence in our movies, TV and literature, and to promote culture for peace and democracy.

5. Win Equal Rights for the Negro People!

Democracy is only as strong as its weakest link. All progressive forces should give full support to the valiant fight of the Negro people for their rights. This is necessary because the fight for the liberation of the Negro nation, for the rights of all the Negro people is an integral part of the fight for democracy, for peace, for the rights and living standards of labor and all the people.

If there were no oppression of the Negro people in our land, there would be no wage differentials between the North and the South. Thus, Southern white workers, together with their Negro brothers, would receive higher wages, while Northern labor could put an end to run-away shops and Southern cheap labor competition. In this way wage levels could be raised for the whole country.

If there were no oppression of the Negro people there would be no poll-tax congressmen. Without poll-tax congressmen it would have been far more difficult for the reactionaries to pass the Taft-Hartley, the Smith and the McCarran Acts.

If there were no poll-tax Dixiecrat congressmen in Washington there also would be a better chance to get improved social security legislation, price and rent controls, more federal aid to education, a federal housing program, greater aid for the unemployed and the aged, and far more equitable tax laws.

Thus, the American people are paying for the shame of Jim Crow. This price is added to the humiliation and oppression heaped upon the Negro people. The Negro people should have their freedom because that is right. They should have it also because all America has a stake in it, stands to gain by it. Democracy, like peace, is indivisible.

• We urge prompt federal action to wipe out every form of discrimination in employment and job opportunities for Negro workers, Mexican, Puerto Rican, Indian and Jewish workers, and for women and young people. This can help end the practice of hiring Negro workers last and firing them first, of denying them opportunities for advancement as skilled workers, or of employment as white-collar workers or professionals. A federal FEPC, strictly enforced, can help prevent the corporations from pitting one group of workers against another and from reducing wage standards for all workers.

• We further urge federal civil rights legislation to outlaw the poll-tax, lynching, segregation and Jim Crow. Equal educational opportunities and the right to full representation should be guaranteed the Negro people, North and South.

• • •

We call upon wage workers, working farmers, the Negro people, small business and professional people, upon the women and the youth, to join hands in a common fight against the ravages of economic depression, against the menace of McCarthyism—for jobs, peace, and freedom. We urge support for the anti-depression demands of the A. L. of L. and C.I.O., for the farm demands of the National Farmers' Union, for the democratic demands of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, for every proposal, every action, which can help save our people from threatening economic ruin, fascism, and war.

VI. What Has To Be Done—The Road Ahead

This Program for Jobs, Peace and Democracy is a program for America. It can be realized. It corresponds to the needs of the people under circumstances in which their liberties and living standards are in imminent danger of complete destruction and in which they are not prepared to accept socialism as the way out.

The program outlined here cannot do away with the planlessness and recurring economic crises of capitalism. Only socialism can do that. This Program can help, however, to delay the outbreak of an economic depression and to cushion its blow upon the people. It can save America from the clear and present danger of McCarthyism—can block war and fascism, save U.S. living standards, and maintain democracy.

No one group in America can achieve these things. The unity of all democratic and peace-loving forces is needed—unity on one issue, or a score of issues—unity irrespective of ideological and political differences on other questions and on longer range goals.

If democratic unity is to be welded, and in time, a major responsibility rests upon the organized labor movement. It must become the propelling force of a popular coalition movement which unites labor, the working farmers, the Negro people, small and middle-sized business and those groups of capital opposed to the McCarthy program of fascism and war. Such an alliance must also include the nation's professionals and intellectuals; its women, youth and nationality groups. This alliance, if it is to become fully effective, must include the Left and the Communists who have a vital and indispensable contribution to make.

Labor does not play its full role today. It does not give a clear and firm lead because it is unclear and divided itself, because its own ranks are infected with Red-baiting and the "cold war," because its top leaders still play the part of errand boys to big business politicians.

The responsibility for this rests on the official leadership of the major trade union centers, the A. F. of L., C.I.O., Railroad Brotherhoods and Mine Workers. By their support of Wall Street's foreign policy and the anti-Communist drive they have misled the workers.

The labor movement must change its course if it is to save itself and help save the nation. It should practice the slogan, "an injury to one is an injury to all." This should govern the relationship of one section of labor to another, and of the labor movement to the farmers, the Negro people, the professionals, intellectuals, and small business people. This can be achieved only by an alert and active rank and file.

There are signs of a new awakening in our land. Larger sections of the people are beginning to speak up for peace and for a program of peace-time jobs. They are becoming alarmed over the menace of McCarthyism. Their opposition to the Eisenhower Administration is growing. The bitter fruits of the war drive are bound further to dispel many illusions. The people are compelled to enter more energetically and consciously into the struggle to defend their living standards, their democratic liberties, and their peace. The collision between the people and the foreign and domestic policies of McCarthyism must grow in volume and intensity.

Important sections of the labor movement are becoming increasingly conscious of the life-and-death need for labor unity. Some of these are also beginning to point in the direction of increased independent political action, are beginning to think in terms of forming a great political alliance under labor's leadership.

The immediate objective in 1954 must be to prevent the Eisenhower Administration and Congress from taking the country further down the road of McCarthyism. Defeating McCarthyism requires the turning of the present Administration out of political power, first by changing the composition of Congress in 1954 and then by electing a new Administration in 1956. This requires a new political majority so strong that it not only changes Administrations but imposes on a new Congress and a new Administration a new course in domestic and foreign affairs.

The answer to our present national plight is not a switch-back to another Truman-type Administration. The Truman Administration, by departing from Roosevelt's foreign and domestic policies, only paved the way for the Republicans to grab political power and for McCarthyism to ride roughshod over the nation. What is needed is a new Administration which starts to build again where the New Deal left off.

Only the prospect of such a new Administration can inspire and rally the many millions of independent voters in the ranks of labor, the Negro people, the farmers, and the city middle classes, who, when acting together, constitute a new political majority.

To unite a new political majority for 1954 and 1956 requires recognition that the two-party system remains the form through which the overwhelming majority of the American people now express themselves in politics. Except in special local and state situations, there is no immediate prospect that decisively large masses will break away from the existing two-party structure. This is particularly true since the struggle between the McCarthy and anti-McCarthy forces is likely to be very close. Under these circumstances the decisive sections of organized labor, without which a mass third party is impossible, will first attempt to fight out the issues within the ranks of the Democratic Party.

The key to both the crucial 1954 and 1956 elections lies in the ability of organized labor to come forward as a distinct political force even within the framework of the present two-party system. Labor must come forward with its own clear-cut progressive program for the nation, its own ties and alliances with other independent electoral forces, and its own highly organized and efficient election machinery. Its objective must be to help bring about a regrouping and realignment within the Democratic Party nationally and within the Republican Party in local areas.

The liberal and independent voters cannot create a new majority and defeat McCarthyism by giving the political bosses a blank check, for McCarthyism exists in both major parties and must be fought in each. They must, therefore, exert every effort to make their independent weight felt in the determination of program and the selection of candidates, including, where necessary, the running of independent candidates. Organizations such as the Progressive Party and the American Labor Party, by pursuing correct unity policies and running candidates where necessary, can help clarify the issues and greatly strengthen the common struggle against McCarthyism.

The 1954 elections are crucial in determining the path America will take. McCarthy already has thrown down the gauntlet to the American people. What is needed is unity of every decent, honest force of our people, of all independent-minded voters, whether Democrats, Republicans, or Progressives. Such unity must set itself the objective of electing an anti-McCarthy Congress by defeating every McCarthy-McCarran-Dixiecrat type of candidate, every pro-fascist and rabid war monger. It is also necessary to bring into the halls of Congress a bloc of articulate and uncompromising opponents of McCarthyism, of courageous spokesmen for a further relaxation of world tension and for the defense of the people from the ravages of economic depression. Labor and Negro representation in Congress must be strengthened by electing a larger number of trade union and Negro candidates. This will facilitate the election of a new Administration in 1956.

Only in the course of sustained struggle along these lines will the perspective of a mass third party of the people, led by labor and its allies, materialize. Labor will find that the many important battles it must wage within the Democratic Party, decisive as they may be in checking the immediate danger of McCarthyism, will not transform that Party into a farmer-labor party. Labor must set its sights in the direction of a great party of its own, a party without Wall Street financiers, corrupt underworld racketeers, or Southern Dixiecrats—in short, a true united front party of labor and the common man.

As the American people succeed in electing a new Administration and blocking the immediate menace of fascism and war, a new stage of the struggle will begin to unfold. It is then that the perspective of subsequently electing a new type of government, a farmer-labor government, will begin to arise in our country. Such a people's government, based on a farmer-labor party, will represent the militant advance of the great majority. It will be a government in which the working class plays a leading role, serving the interests of the common people, and directed at curbing the power of the trusts.

VII. Communist Aims and Perspectives

The Communist Party, basing itself on the scientific principles of Marxism-Leninism, believes in socialism as the ultimate solution for the problems of our nation. Modern industrial production under capitalism is a vast social process, but it is operated for private enrichment and not for the public good. It is this contradiction that socialism would resolve. Socialism alone would utilize to the fullest the immense scientific and technical know-how of the American people, including atomic energy. It would forever end the scourge of economic crisis, unemployment, racial discrimination, fascism and war. It would build a land of peace and plenty, of knowledge and culture, of freedom and opportunity for all.

At the same time, the Communist Party emphasizes that the issue at the present time is not communism. The choice before our people today is peace, security, democracy versus the grip which the monopolists have on the country and their plans of fascism and war.

But while the issue today is not communism, the true nature of the Communist Party and the role which it plays in American life is very much an issue. The American people must know the truth about this issue lest the monstrous deception now practiced on them lead to the loss of the democracy and freedom they prize so dearly.

What is the truth about the Communist Party?

The Communist Party advocates a peaceful path to socialism in the U.S. It brands as a lie the charge that it advocates the use of force and violence in the pursuit of any of its immediate or long range goals. It declares that socialism will come into existence in the United States only when the majority of the American people decide to establish it. The Communist Party affirms its deep and abiding faith in the American people and their ultimate decision to establish socialism. The needs of our nation cannot be served by any sect or conspiracy. For no progress, whether of a minimum or of a more far-reaching nature, can come other than through the will and action of a majority of the American people.

The Communist Party has no blueprint for the path to socialism in the U.S. The American people will move along the path to socialism as inevitably as other peoples and nations have done because ultimately there is no other solution to their problems. But they will do so in a form and manner which will be determined by the history, the traditions and the specific needs of the American people. No social system can be imported from abroad. Nor do we propose to do so.

Basing itself on these fundamental propositions, the path to socialism in the United States which is advocated by the Communist Party envisions: the unity of the majority of the people to block the present imminent threat of McCarthyism, thereby upholding and defending the Constitution and the Bill of Rights; and then, the forward march of that majority toward a strengthening of democracy and the election of a new type of government, a farmer-labor, anti-monopoly government. The election of such an Administration and Congress would then open up the possibility for a peaceful advance of the American people to socialism.

The Communist Party of the United States has its roots deep in the history and struggles of the American people and its labor movement. It is the inheritor and continuer of the best in American democratic, radical and labor thought and traditions. Its devotion to the true national interests of the American people is the source of its deep and abiding patriotism. That patriotism has been sealed in the blood of hundreds of members of the Communist Party who have died in defense of our country and our people.

American Communists believe in the defense of their country, and the people and territory of their country. We deny that the Soviet Union or any country led and ruled by working people threatens our country, or could threaten our country. We resolutely oppose "police actions," wars of aggression, or wars of intervention in the affairs of peoples fighting to shape their own way of life as they see fit.

The false and despicable charge that Communists are "agents of a foreign power," or "spies," emanates from the monopolists who want, thereby, to cover up their own betrayal of the true national interests of the American people. It is the monopolists who are the agents of a foreign power—the power of the international cartels and trusts which they dominate and to whose greedy manipulations they subordinate and betray the interests of our country. Not what is good for our country, but what is good for General Motors determines the loyalty of the monopolists.

The Communist Party declares that it seeks no conflict with any church or any American's religious beliefs. On the contrary, we stretch out our hand in the fellowship of common struggle for our mutual goal of peace, democracy and security to all regardless of religious belief. We stand on the fundamental principle of the Constitution which guarantees religious freedom by separating church and state, and, in the same spirit, we oppose the intervention of any church in political affairs.

The Communist Party considers the emergence of a powerful trade union movement during these past two decades as the most important and positive development in our national life. We are proud to have helped built it and to be a part of it. As a working class political party we strive to influence the policies of the labor movement and deem it our right and duty to speak out against policies which we believe are harmful to labor and the nation. But we deny any intent to dominate or control the trade union movement and recognize and respect its organizational autonomy and political independence.

We proclaim our fraternity with all peoples who have pioneered the new frontiers of human history toward socialism, with all peoples struggling to achieve their independence and national development. We affirm the good will and solidarity of our people with all those who stand for peace and progress. We seek to realize Abraham Lincoln's saying: "The strongest bond of human sympathy, outside of the family relation, should be one uniting all working people, of all nations, and tongues and kindreds."

We are ready to work with all Americans, no matter what our past relations or present differences may be, to block war and fascism, to save U.S. living standards, to restore free exchange of ideas and debate on the great issues facing the nation. We propose a coming together of all progressive and democratic forces to consult with each other and to make such consultation and working together a habit. The grave problems of our nation cannot be solved otherwise.

We call upon all progressive and democratic forces to re-appraise their policies and activities in light of the nation's crisis. The American Communists pledge to do the same.

We urge mutual and friendly criticism among all groups concerned with saving our nation from fascism and war. We invite criticism of ourselves and of this Draft Program, and are prepared to publicly acknowledge all criticism that is just.

We urge upon all our members and sympathizers a most careful study of this Program and a re-examination of their daily activities, habits of work and thought, to bring them in line with it.

In full confidence that the objectives of this Draft Program can be realized, we call upon all members and friends, upon all anti-fascists, to spare no effort to realize this program of jobs, peace and democracy for America.

What the Communist Party Stands For

NEW OPPORTUNITIES IN THE FIGHT FOR PEACE AND DEMOCRACY

By Andrew Stevens

A brilliant analysis of the new stage in the struggle against war and fascism, and the tasks ahead. $ .25

NEXT STEPS IN THE STRUGGLE FOR NEGRO FREEDOM

By Hugh Bradley

Tasks in the fight for equal rights and the decisive role of the Negro people today. $ .15

THIRTEEN COMMUNISTS SPEAK TO THE COURT

Speeches of the defendants in the second Foley Square Smith Act trial, before hearing sentence. $ .35

THE COMMUNIST PARTY

By Pettis Perry

Summation speech to the Jury on the Party's role as vanguard fighter for peace, democracy, security and socialism. $ .25

COMMUNISTS AND THE PEOPLE

By Elizabeth Gurley Flynn

Summation speech on the roots of the Communist Party in American history and its ties with the American people. $ .25

READ—

THE DAILY WORKER THE WORKER (WEEKLY)

LABOR'S OWN FIGHTING NEWSPAPERS WHICH

— Battle Daily for Jobs, Peace, Democracy
— Defend All Labor's Interests
— Champion Equal Rights for the Negro People

Price 10 cents

For information about subscription rates write to:

PUBLISHERS FREE PRESS • 35 East 12th St., New York 3, N. Y.

Communist Party, U.S.A.

P. O. Box 87 • Cooper Station • New York 3, N. Y.

• • •

April 25, 1954

Dear Friend:

Our country stands at the crossroads. One path leads to economic catastrophe, fascism and world war; the other leads to jobs, democracy and peace.

Everywhere the American people—of all classes, creeds, colors, religions and national origins—are pondering the way ahead. There is widespread concern at growing depression and unemployment, mounting alarm at the assault of McCarthyism on democratic rights. The horror of the hydrogen bomb has filled with fear the American people and the peoples of all countries.

All of us are seeking a way out of the dilemma with which we are faced. This is the time for the most searching debate, in which all Americans have the responsibility and duty to participate. Only in this manner can we arrive at the steps required to solve our problems.

Of one thing all of us may be certain: a united people can solve all their problems, a disunited people stand helpless before exploiters, demagogues and misleaders. The times call for the resolving of differences, not their sharpening. The American people must and can find their way to unity around a common program which, when realized, will guarantee a land free of fear and poverty, of Jim Crow and indignity, of witch-hunting and foreboding of war.

These are the considerations which lead us to direct this letter to you and to enclose the Draft Program of the Communist Party, a Draft Program which suggests, we believe, as its title indicates, "The American Way to Jobs, Peace, Democracy." We ask, in the best traditions of American democratic conduct, that this Draft Program be studied candidly and carefully—despite the anti-Communist propaganda barrage of the present period.

Only working together will bring this land the unity it needs, and only the broadest and widest discussion will produce that program which will save it. The Communist Party offers this Draft as its contribution toward the stimulating of that discussion. We hope that you will express, in whatever way you may feel is best, your own opinions and criticisms of this Draft Program. We hope, too, that you may wish to share with us directly your suggestions, comments and recommendations so that, counseling together, we may create that program best suited to bringing the blessings of freedom, equality, prosperity and peace to our country and to all of our people.

Sincerely yours,

For the National Committee, CPUSA

Wm Z. Foster

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn

Pettis Perry

Pg 6

McCARTHY:

His War on American Reds, and the Story of those Who Oppose Him

by

JOHN T. FLYNN

Author of The Roosevelt Myth, While You Slept, The Lattimore Story

•

"I urge all Communist Party members, and all anti-fascists to yield second place to none in the fight to rid the country of the fascist poison of McCarthyism."

—GUS HALL, Nat'l Sec'y of the Communist Party, in the Communist Daily Worker, May 4, 1950.

Published by

AMERICA'S FUTURE, INC.

210 East 43rd Street, New York 17, N. Y.

Foreword

On May 2, 1954, I attempted in my regular weekly broadcast over the Mutual Broadcasting System, to identify the forces and interests behind the attacks on Senator McCarthy and to describe what the Senator has accomplished. In the pamphlet which follows I have reproduced the substance of that broadcast, but expanded and fortified by a more extensive collection of facts than was possible in a single 15-minute radio commentary.

A controversy of this kind is necessarily entangled with the political struggles of the time and the ambitions of politicians and parties. For myself, let me say I am not interested in the politics or the politicians. I do not speak for any party. As a matter of fact, this controversy cuts across party lines. Enemies and defenders of Senator McCarthy can be found in both our major parties. My own theory about the great struggle we are in is that it is in no sense a battle between two sets of politicians or two parties, but is essentially a revolutionary struggle, pressed forward on one side by socialist and Communist revolutionaries and resisted on the other by Americans of all parties devoted to our American heritage.

JOHN T. FLYNN

Copyright 1954, John T. Flynn

McCARTHY:

HIS WAR ON AMERICAN REDS, AND THE STORY OF THOSE WHO OPPOSE HIM

By JOHN T. FLYNN

As is so often the case, the debate raging around the person of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy is hopelessly obscured in a cloud of angry blasts and counter-blasts which has enveloped the whole battle in a fog. It is, therefore, impossible to have an intelligent opinion about this row unless one sees and understands clearly the battleground, the scenery, the cast of characters and the basic quarrels and hatreds involved in it. My object here is to dispel the fog and describe the characters so that any intelligent American will be able to see clearly what the fight is all about.

This story involves the menace of communism in the United States. But one of the greatest difficulties in explaining this menace is the inability of the normal, decent American to fully understand the peculiar nature of Communist methods. Before we attempt to tell this story, it is essential that we understand clearly the landscape and scenery within which this grave menace to our civilization operates and prospers. First, therefore, we must have a quick look at the normal American.

He is accustomed to our American way of doing things. He sees two political parties arguing over offices and jobs and policies. The rest of us are busy with our jobs, our families, our homes, our social activities. We differ about all sorts of things. We discuss and argue these differences; we count heads and make decisions. But we all agree on the principles of our free way of life, of business, of politics. We do not want to upset this. We want to make it work better.

But among us is a sizeable number of people — estimated by the FBI at about 500,000 — who take a wholly different view of all this. They hate our American way. They want to end our free system and introduce a system more nearly resembling that of Russia. The State (the government) will be supreme. It will own all the large industries — railroads, power plants, banks, and all the great basic industries such as steel, coal, aluminum, copper, lumber and so forth and, eventually, everything. This is socialism. Another name for it is communism. Remember, they are essentially the same, save that communism is socialism in a hurry. In addition to their plan to make us a socialist government, ruled by the all-powerful Central State, many of them also serve the interests of Soviet Russia in the world and in the United States.

But what can 500,000 people do in a free country with a population of nearly 160,000,000? Why should so many be afraid of so few? That is the heart of this whole issue. Republicans and Democrats argue with each other. They act in the open. And while they differ about policies, they are all agreed that our American way — our American Republic — should be preserved. The Communist and his socialist ally, however, cannot get anywhere just arguing. They seldom get elected to office. They cannot get power to act, at least not so long as they admit they are Communists. So their policy is to deny they are Communists or socialists and to insert themselves into influential positions in the Democratic or Republican parties and to get into bureaus where decisions on policy are made—such as the State Department, the Agricultural Department, the Treasury, the Army, the Atomic Energy bureaus and laboratories and so on. And there, always denying they are Reds, they use their weight to influence those policies of the government which will serve their ends and the ends of Soviet Russia.

Now how do they go about this? There is a Communist Party. But the Party is not the thing to be most feared. Decisions are not made in the Party. The whole war of communism on America is planned and directed by something called the Politburo – the political bureau—which acts in secret behind closed doors and never appears in public. This Politburo gets its instructions directly from Moscow. This is the thing we have to understand and to fear. And the first thing we have to realize is that these men are experts in this kind of revolution and that we are hopelessly ignorant of it.

The object of this Politburo is to influence every agency of opinion and action and decision in our country. The Red Politburo cannot take over our State Department. But it can get one of its agents into the department in a position of great influence where he can shape policy. A well-known case is that of Alger Hiss, who became head of the Department of Political Affairs in the State Department. Roosevelt and Stalin held a secret meeting at Yalta at which Roosevelt—then in an almost dying condition—made a series of surrenders to Stalin, one of them being the abandonment of Korea. Roosevelt's adviser at that session was Alger Hiss, now in jail. The dark fact is that thousands of these Reds had made their way into almost all of the most important spots in our government. A single example is that of Karl Fuchs and Julius Rosenberg in the atomic laboratories, where they stole the atomic secret and gave it to Russia. So you see, in this grave emergency we are not talking about old-time American political sins such as graft and incompetence and political skullduggery. We are talking about treason—treason which has cost this nation a terrible price, perhaps its very life.

To make all this clearer the reader should know how this got its start. It was in 1933 that these secret cells began to operate in the important agencies of our government on any serious scale. Harold Ware, the son of old Mother Bloor, had gone to Russia for a course in revolutionary indoctrination. He came back and got a post in our Agricultural Department under Henry Wallace. He used his position there to bring in others—Lee Pressman, a Communist lawyer, Nathaniel Weyl, Nathan Witt, John Abt, Alger Hiss and many others. So far as I know, this was the beginning. I saw most of these men at the time, but never dreamed they were Communist agents. After this, great numbers of these Reds—many of them able young lawyers and economists—secured positions in the other departments – State, Commerce, the Treasury. Ultimately they got into practically every department, including the Army, Navy, Air Force and their intelligence units.

They were organized into secret cells, forming what came to be known as the Communist underground. These people had no connection with the American Communist Party. This explains why so many, when asked, could swear they were not members of the Party. In time this underground, made up of men and women who were in most cases American citizens, became an immense network of highly educated and trained spies. There were a number of separate cells and each cell was known by the names of the men who headed and led them. The Ware cell was headed by Harold Ware. Another was the Silvermaster cell, headed by Nathan Gregory Silvermaster. Another was the Perlo cell, headed by Victor Perlo. The names of these men, the work of their cells and the names of many members are now all a matter of record because of various investigations and prosecutions. The members were employed in various important departments in Washington and other places, including our agencies abroad. Alger Hiss, in the Ware cell, was planted in the State Department. Donald Hiss, his brother, now a member of the Acheson law firm, was also in the Ware cell. Lauchlin Currie, an assistant to the President of the United States, worked with the Silvermaster cell. Thus they reached into the White House itself. They were in almost every important department, and they took their orders directly from agents of the Russian espionage system stationed in New York and Washington.

All this was brought out in a series of investigations in which the members of the House and the Senate who made the investigations were pilloried and denounced by the same newspapers and political leaders who are now denouncing Senator McCarthy. It was the influence of these cells which enabled the Soviet government, when World War II ended, to take over all of Eastern Europe and most of the continent of Asia, to penetrate our colleges, our public school system, many of our leading magazines and newspapers and news services. To complete this picture, we must not omit the part played by Communist agents in New York and their dupes in many leading newspapers in keeping up a constant barrage of attacks, denunciations and slanders against every American writer or political leader who dared to use his pen or his voice to unmask these treasons. The same writers and journals which attacked those who exposed Hiss and Lattimore and Duggan and Remington are now performing that same operation on Senator McCarthy.

Now, how did Senator McCarthy get into this row? As a Marine Intelligence Officer with a Marine Bombing Squad, he spent 13 months in the Pacific with his command during World War II. He had been elected as circuit judge in Wisconsin before he enlisted, and when he returned he ran for and was elected to the United States Senate from Wisconsin. He had given little attention to the long series of betrayals in Europe and Asia until he was alerted to the evil by the late Secretary of the Navy James Forrestal. As a result, he began to look into this subject, and in a Lincoln Day speech in 1950 in Wheeling, West Virginia, he charged that Communists in the State Department were helping to shape our policy in Asia and he put the number of Communists in a position to do this at 57. But he did not name them publicly. For this and a subsequent speech he was greeted by a storm of abuse from men like the extreme leftist Senator William Benton of Connecticut and the more conservative Millard Tydings of Maryland. Tydings was named head of a special committee appointed to investigate McCarthy's charges. But actually his committee investigated Senator McCarthy. Tydings boasted: "Give me three days of public hearings and McCarthy will never show his face in the Senate again." The hearings lasted 31 days, ending in a shameful and mendacious denunciation of McCarthy. However, Tydings' prophecy about McCarthy's face had a curious ending. Tydings was defeated for the Senate in Maryland and Benton was overwhelmingly defeated in Connecticut. These two faces, instead of McCarthy's disappeared from Washington. Incidentally, when McCarthy ran later for reelection he was elected by a large majority--over 150,000.

Now what of McCarthy's charges? He finally gave the Tydings Committee a total of 81 names of suspected Reds in various bureaus. And it was not McCarthy, but the Tydings Committee which made many of these names public. But the Tydings Committee cleared everybody. However, later the Loyalty Board summoned 57 of these cases and 54 of the accused confirmed McCarthy's charges by resigning under fire.

One of those named was Owen Lattimore, mainstay of the infamous Institute of Pacific Relations. This was a nest of Reds—over two dozen of them, many holding posts in sensitive government departments—which was the headquarters for the Communist conspiracy in America to betray China, Korea and all Asia to Russia. The Senate Committee on Internal Security, after nearly a year of hearings, branded this organization as a Red conspiracy. Owen Lattimore, McCarthy's most notorious case at that time, was spotted as a leader of this Red conspiracy and later indicted for perjury. He still awaits trial.

This was Senator McCarthy's most sensational contribution — up to this time—to the defense of America from these internal enemies. It must be said in all fairness that it takes a brave man to stand up against the savage abuse and the underground assaults which these Red conspirators pour out upon any loyal American who attempts to oppose them. These Red enemies of the American Republic have certainly given Senator McCarthy the works—aided by groups who, though not themselves Communists, have prospered by the aid Communists have been able to give them. It is impossible to withhold admiration for the undaunted stand he has taken against the malignant defenders of Russia and their confederates and dupes in the United States.

Now, in this first phase of Senator McCarthy's fight, did he accomplish anything? Let the Communist Daily Worker answer. April 5, 1950, this official organ of the Reds said:

> "Communists are keenly aware of the damage the McCarthy crowd is doing. They recognize that McCarthy's objective is destruction of the Bill of Rights, with its precious safeguards of freedom to think, to meet, and to express one's thoughts freely."

And they called on "all Communist Party members and all anti-fascists to yield second place to none in the fight to rid our country of the fascist poison of McCarthyism." What greater praise could any loyal American ask? Here is the Communist Party's official public declaration that McCarthy is the most dangerous foe of communism in America. In contrast with this is the published opinion of the Daily Worker of the broadcasts of Mr. Edward Murrow, who recently added his two-cents' worth to the war on McCarthy. Murrow, a commentator over the CBS network, is sponsored by the Aluminum Company of America, a great industrial corporation which would be one of the first victims of a socialist America. The Daily Worker says some of "Murrow's programs are honeys." It lauded Murrow's attack on what it called the Red-hunting Veterans of Foreign Wars in Norwalk. It said Murrow's programs were so popular "because they let in a corner of the truth that mass communication media has been blacking out. There is an underlying sentiment that runs through them which corresponds with what millions of Americans are obviously thinking and feeling." Thus in this tournament the Communist Daily Worker takes Murrow. Most good Americans, I think, will take McCarthy.

The next phase of Senator McCarthy's drive against Communists in government came when his party obtained control of the Senate. This made him chairman of the Senate Committee on Government Operations. The American government is a vast affair. The executive branch consists of over 2000 separate departments and bureaus employing 2,564,000 persons outside the armed services, and spending 53 billion dollars a year. Senator McCarthy's committee is charged with watching this vast bureaucracy — to spot graft, incompetence, extravagance and disloyalty. As chairman of this committee, it will be seen, he is merely carrying out his mandate in searching for cases of disloyalty inside the government. It is important to remember that he has not been carrying on this war on communism any place but inside the government of the United States.

This is a task of unimaginable difficulty. I am convinced that the Communist is given an extensive course in the art of testifying, lying and evasion before government agencies. As a witness he plays dumb, hems and haws, splits hairs, pretends to misunderstand and finally takes refuge in the Bill of Rights. The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution provides that no man can be compelled to give evidence against himself. He can be questioned, but if his answer will incriminate him he can refuse to answer. This is tantamount to a confession, but it saves him from prosecution for perjury. To question such witnesses day after day for months is a maddening experience which only a man of infinite patience can endure. Senator McCarthy would be a saint if he managed always to suppress his impatience or chagrin as these disloyal scoundrels pass before him clad in the protective armor of the Fifth Amendment.

Over 546 witnesses have been examined and 1200 have been interviewed by the staff of Senator McCarthy's committee. About 215 witnesses have been examined publicly and 79—over a third—have refused to answer. Of these, 76 have taken refuge in the Fifth Amendment. And remember, almost all of these were government workers at various levels of importance—and in bureaus or agencies peculiarly subject to secrecy. The evil McCarthy is shooting at is treason. The people he is stalking are traitors—most of them dedicated to the interest of our deadliest enemy at home and in the world, Communist Russia.

Now let us see just what Senator McCarthy has accomplished. It is a most impressive record. Neither Senator McCarthy nor any of those who support and admire him, claim that he alone has fought the Communists effectively. The first great attack in the last 20 years was made by Martin Dies when he launched his investigation of the Reds in 1937. In the first few days of hearings he revealed that shocking invasion of the labor unions—particularly the newly formed CIO which became in its early phases a mere weapon of the Reds. The work of that committee—the House Committee on Un-American Activities—was monumental, and amazing in its revelations. It first revealed to us the Communist method of working not through the Party or organizations labeled as Communist, but through what are called Communist-front committees and organizations that do not reveal on their face their Communist bias. As an example of the magnitude and malignance of this conspiracy, the Dies Committee revealed the names of over 1100 organizations formed to bring the Communist war into the schools, colleges, churches, book-publishing houses, religious and racial groups of all kinds, labor, the press, radio, the government. But Martin Dies, like all who followed him, was a marked man and his own administration joined with the Reds and their dupes to drive him out of Congress. He is back again, however, and once more sharpening his sword to engage his old enemies. I recall this first enterprise because it is difficult to credit the villainy of some of the schemes launched to liquidate Dies. This dark and cruel method of war on loyal Americans has been carried on against every man who followed in Dies' footsteps—Congressmen Thomas, Wood and Velde, and Senators McCarran, Jenner and of course now with even greater malignance, Senator Joseph McCarthy.

Now for Senator McCarthy's targets.

The Institute of Pacific Relations: I have already described Senator McCarthy's attack on Owen Lattimore and the Institute of Pacific Relations. It is now merely necessary to give the names of some of those caught in that web in order to show the extent of the invasion of government agencies. Below are the names of some of those who worked with the IPR, and the agency or federal activity in which they worked:

Treasury Department

Solomon Adler (Treasury Dept. in China)
Frank Coe (also in Foreign Economic Administration)
Irving Friedman (Assistant to Harry Dexter White)
Harry Dexter White (Asst. Secretary of the Treasury)

State Department

Robert W. Barnett

O. Edmund Clubb (head of the China Desk)

Lawrence Duggan

Alger Hiss (head of the Dept. of Political Affairs)

Phillip Jessup (State Dept. Adviser)

Owen Lattimore (Adviser on Far Eastern Affairs; also in OWI)

Lawrence K. Rosinger (Conferee on Far East)

Lawrence Salisbury (Foreign officer)

John Stewart Service (Foreign officer in China)

William T. Stone (Director of Information & Cultural Affairs)

John Carter Vincent (head of the Far Eastern Division)

Office of War Information

Joseph Barnes (later Foreign Editor of the N. Y. Herald-Tribune)

Philip Jaffe (arrested in Amerasia scandal and convicted)

To these must be added the names of Lauchlin Currie, who was assistant to the President of the United States, and Michael Greenberg, who was Currie's assistant. There are, of course, many others, but these samples will suffice.

None of these cases would have been known but for Senator McCarthy's attack on Owen Lattimore, which resulted in the investigations by the McCarran Sub-Committee on Internal Security and its astounding revelations.

We may now look at some of the more recent exposures made by the Senate Committee on Government Operations and its sub-committee on Investigations. Senator McCarthy became its chairman when the new administration came into power. It must be remembered that on this committee Senator McCarthy and his colleagues are charged with locating and exposing disloyal groups and activities within the government.

Government Printing Office: A great number of highly secret documents are printed in the Government Printing Office. The Senator found there persons with impressive records of Communist activity. The FBI had reported these persons repeatedly but nothing was done about it. One of those reported by the FBI was discharged and then rehired and then dismissed again when he was found stealing highly secret documents. Up to that time employees stealing secret documents were merely fined. As a result of Senator McCarthy's study the entire security panel in the department was removed and all the security regulations overhauled. The penalty was changed from a few days suspension to dismissal.

Fifth Amendment Communists: The Committee has sponsored legislation making mandatory the dismissal in any department of any employee invoking the Fifth Amendment and who refuses to answer the question of whether he or she is loyal or not.

The Voice of America: This is the apparatus set up to project to other nations by means of radio and other devices the attitude, the philosophy, the way of life, the beliefs and ideals of America. Senator McCarthy's Committee was looking for certain suspected extravagances which it found and stopped.

The International Information Service: In the course of its Voice of America investigation, the Committee came upon a far more shocking state of affairs. The International Information Service, a bureau in the State Department (as was the Voice of America at the time) had established libraries in many places in Europe and Asia. The purpose was to make available to intelligent persons abroad a true picture of the character, the manners, the ideals of the American people. It must be assumed the aim was to present a favorable picture of our people and their culture, since one of the purposes was to dispel Communist propaganda about America.

But Senator McCarthy's investigators were shocked at what they found. The Information Center libraries were loaded with Communist and pro-Communist books — a large part of them written by notorious American Reds. Many books were novels whose characters, conduct and conversation depicted America in its worst light as a land of selfishness, greed and exploitation of the masses. This was a sizeable operation. These libraries employed 8000 people. On their shelves were 30,000 books written by Communists and their sympathizers. Over 300 of the authors had notorious pro-Communist records. Twelve of them were identified as Soviet spies.

The top man in this whole operation was Mr. W. Bradley Connors, who admitted to the Committee that he knew little about communism, had no knowledge of the history and methods of the Communist movement and had never read a book about the Communist conspiracy. The field offices around the world were under the direction of Dr. William Johnstone, Jr., who had been identified by the Senate Sub-Committee on Internal Security as a Communist dupe. He was one of those dupes of Red philosophy who insisted on calling Communists "agrarian reformers." McCarthy's exposure of this scandal resulted in cleaning up these libraries.

Fort Monmouth and Defense Plants: The Committee conducted investigations at Fort Monmouth, N. J., where highly secret radar equipment is developed. This resulted in the suspension of 33 security risks from this very sensitive U. S. Army spot. Also a number of investigations of plants handling government contracts for secret material resulted in exposing Fifth-Amendment Communists in key posts in these plants. Some of the companies themselves ruled, following hearings, that witnesses who invoked the Fifth Amendment would be automatically dismissed.

Trade with Red China: The United States had placed a ban on all trade with Red China. But as usual our noble allies, France and Britain, wanted the business. Since June, 1952, two billion dollars' worth of goods passed between Russia and her satellites and France and England. Senator McCarthy's committee brought these facts to light and then induced one group in this trade, operating 327 vessels, to cease it—thus depriving our Red enemies of three and a half million tons of supplies.

The Case of Harry Dexter White: This case is now well known. The currency-plate phase of this case was exposed by Senator Mundt of Senator McCarthy's committee. Harry Dexter White, associated with an underground Communist cell, was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, ranking next to Secretary Morgenthau. It was White who, under instructions from Moscow, formulated the infamous plan to turn Germany "into a goat pasture" and provided for the division of Germany into East and West zones. When the United States armies were about to enter Germany, they faced the problem of having acceptable currency with which to buy supplies. Hence the Treasury printed a special invasion currency to be used by our army. At this point instructions came from Moscow to the Washington Red underground to get possession of these plates from the Treasury. This operation passed through several hands—Silvermaster, Frank Coe, Ullman, Glasser and White—all Red agents holding important posts inside the Treasury. White managed it and the metal plates were delivered to Moscow. From these, $220,000,000 of American currency was printed in Germany and used by the Red armies to buy supplies. These bills were all redeemable at the United States Treasury. Notwithstanding repeated warnings, White was retained in the Treasury and later transferred to an even more lucrative and dangerous post—after the FBI had warned President Truman that White was a Red spy. Recently Attorney General Brownell confirmed all this at a hearing before the Senate Sub-Committee on Internal Security.

There is much more to all this, but this will serve to give a clear picture of the great service Senator McCarthy has done for his country—knowing all the time that every man who has undertaken this difficult and dangerous task must face the attacks and abuse of those strange allies—the Communist Slander and Libel Squad, the politicians of both parties who in different ways and with different weapons bid for the aid of these Red revolutionists (who though not so numerous are masters of the art of defamation) and that curious collection of press and radio Pinks of varying shades. It is a task which calls for a truly patriotic soul and a brave heart.

The latest phase of this squalid drama came with what is known as the Peress case. Reports of Communist infiltration of government usually find their way to Senator McCarthy's Committee on Government Operations. In due time the case of Captain Irving Peress at Camp Kilmer came to its attention. The facts in this case cannot be contradicted. Here they are:

On October 15, 1952, Irving Peress was inducted by the draft route into the army and given the rank of captain. Later the army required all officers to sign a loyalty oath, declaring they were connected with no subversive organization. Peress received his blank, but instead of signing it, he wrote across the face that he claimed an exemption from taking a loyalty pledge "because of Constitutional privilege." This certainly was enough to have stopped him at that point. How this was ignored remains a mystery and it was not until April, 1953, that the case came to the attention of higher authority. Peress was in the medical department's dental corps at Camp Kilmer. In April, the Surgeon General of the Army recommended that Peress be dismissed. For some reason this curious specimen possessed a charmed life. Instead of being dismissed, he was recommended for a promotion and advanced to the grade of major the following month.

In December, 1953, this scandal was reported to the McCarthy Committee. After a full investigation it urged Peress' dismissal. But, oddly enough, the Army took no action despite the recommendation by the Surgeon General that he be cashiered. When questioned by Senator McCarthy, Peress refused to answer 33 questions on the ground that he might incriminate himself. Again the Senator notified the Army. At this point Peress applied for an honorable discharge, which was granted promptly by General Zwicker, commander at Camp Kilmer.

The next phase of this case is equally shameful. Senator McCarthy summoned General Zwicker and asked why he had acted as he did. Zwicker replied with a series of evasive answers. I have read his testimony. It was a pathetic performance. It is possible Zwicker was shielding someone. If so, who? Why? He mumbled that McCarthy was impugning his honesty. The Senator said:

> "I can't help impugning one or the other (your honesty or intelligence), when you tell us that a major in your command who was known to you to have been before a Senate Committee, and of whom you had read in the press releases very carfully . . . to now have you sit here and tell us that you did not know whether he refused to answer questions about his Communist activities. I have seen all the press releases, and they all dealt with that. So when you do that, General, if you will pardon me, I cannot help but question your intelligence or your honesty, one or the other. I want to be frank with you about that."

It was this statement which aroused the Army to say that McCarthy had made an attack on the Army — which is preposterous since his criticism was of the conduct of a single general. Zwicker is not the Army. The incident was used to spark the investigation of Senator McCarthy. And as a base for the attack the politicians who now rule the Army have formulated a specific indictment of the Senator. This indictment itself was almost beyond credence as a basis for attack. He was accused of trying to get his chief investigator, David Schine, commissioned as a second lieutenant. Mr. Schine can be classed as an expert in the dark and little-understood art of Communist treason. He has been responsible for uncovering many of the cases revealed by the McCarthy Committee. The Senator suggested to Secretary of the Army Stevens that, because of his experience, young Mr. Schine would be more useful in the Army as a second lieutenant charged with surveillance of Communist infiltration than as a buck private drilling in an Army camp.

Now what was wrong about that? Perhaps Schine ought not to be given a commission. But what is so shocking about the suggestion the Army could use an officer equipped to assist in keeping Reds out of its ranks? But the Daily Worker and that strange collection of dailies which so often agree with it, has blown this incident up into some monstrous assault on the Army for which Senator McCarthy is being pilloried. The shocking aspect of this was that Secretary of the Army Stevens should lend himself to this disreputable operation to discredit Senator McCarthy.

What is McCarthy's crime? He has been hunting Communists out of government, which is his duty. The crime, I fear, consists chiefly in his amazing success. He provoked the investigation of the Institute of Pacific Relations and the identification of it as a Red nest which managed the betrayal of China. He forced an investigation which identified and drove from top government posts over 50 Reds. He identified a group of Reds in the Government Printing Office and forced a reformation of its protective methods. He revealed the shocking currency conspiracy managed in the Treasury Department by Harry Dexter White, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and a Russian Communist agent. He revealed the infiltration by Reds of the Voice of America and the crowding on the shelves of our Libraries abroad of thousands of books by American Reds traducing our system of government. He exposed the trade with Red China engaged in by our so-called allies. And scarcely a week goes by that his Committee has not drawn aside the curtain from some un-American enterprise in government, including his recent exposure of 33 security risks in the secret radar installation of the Army. For these services to his country he is a marked man by the Reds and their incredible flock of dupes in the government as well as in the press.

The war on McCarthy has reached a stage of historic absurdity. Imagine if you can a more grotesque absurdity than the burlesque investigation of him. Imagine the population of America glued to their television and radio sets for days listening to the Secretary of the Army telling how McCarthy tried to get a commission for a patriotic young American as second lieutenant. This was told on the witness stand by Secretary Stevens with all the gravity of a man uncovering some monstrous conspiracy. What has happened to our sense of humor? Contrast this "crime" of McCarthy with the monstrous villainy McCarthy attacks — the betrayal of America by the Reds and their dupes in our government.

An informed America is a Free America! Keep informed . . .

Listen to JOHN T. FLYNN each week over your favorite Mutual Network Station . . .

SUNDAY 12:45 pm EST

(Consult your newspaper or MBS station for variations in this schedule)

This program is sponsored in New York and Chicago by America's Future, Inc.

WOR, New York — Sunday 12:00 Noon (local time)

WGN, Chicago — Sunday 9:00 P.M. (local time)

You will be performing a real public service by asking your friends to listen to JOHN T. FLYNN.

What YOU Can Do:

Listen to the JOHN T. FLYNN commentaries each Sunday over the Mutual Broadcasting System. Check your local newspaper for time. If John T. Flynn is not heard in your community, contact your local Station Manager and urge him to schedule these timely and informative broadcasts. . . . Ask your friends to do likewise. (This program is available to Mutual Stations as a public service, without cost.)

HELP DISTRIBUTE THIS PAMPHLET

Only if they have the FACTS can your friends, neighbors and associates resist the poisonous infiltration of Communist and socialist propaganda. The brave men in both parties who are fighting this menace in order to keep America free need your help. And you CAN help by bringing the facts to everyone within your reach.

Hand this pamphlet to a neighbor or friend and see that they read it.

BETTER STILL, SEND FOR ANOTHER COPY or as many more copies as you can afford and hand them or mail them to your acquaintances, your fellow club members, your fellow employees, your leaders.

PURCHASE IN BULK QUANTITIES

You can obtain additional copies by writing to America's Future, Inc., which will supply them in lots of any number at the prices listed below.

PRICES

1 copy 25 cents	50 copies $ 7.50
5 copies $1.00	100 copies $ 12.50
12 copies $2.00	1000 copies $100.00

Postpaid anywhere

At the above prices, for your convenience, we will send additional copies to friends and associates if you will enclose a list of names and addresses plus 3¢ per name to cover postage.

TEAR OFF AND USE ORDER BLANK BELOW

AMERICA'S FUTURE, Inc., 210 East 43rd Street, New York 17, N. Y.

Enclosed please find $.....for which send me post prepaid..... copies of McCARTHY.

Name.....

Street and No.....

City.....Zone.....State.....

Proceeds from the sale of this pamphlet are used to help defray the cost of radio broadcasts and to maintain and expand the educational activities of America's Future, Inc., a non-profit, non-partisan, educational foundation.

ENCYCLOPAEDIA BRITANNICA
342 MADISON AVENUE
NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

EXECUTIVE OFFICES
ROOM 702

June 16, 1954

Dear Mr. Murrow:

You'll be interested in the text of Dr. Louis Bean's recent study, in which he devotes 30 pages to Senator McCarthy, and to McCarthy's political effectiveness -- or lack of it. As you doubtless know, Bean is highly regarded as a political analyst by politicians as well as scholars.

One source of McCarthy's strength has been his alleged ability to influence votes throughout the country. He has intimidated his colleagues in Congress by threatening to campaign against them in their own states and districts.

This Bean study is the first systematic evidence that McCarthy's influence is influence-in-reverse. Bean shows that in 1952 there was a net advantage of 5.5 points to Democratic Senatorial candidates attacked by McCarthy.

Bean's findings are corroborated by a Gallup study indicating that, as of this April, McCarthy's support would cost a Republican candidate for the House or Senate five votes for every two votes it gained him.

(It's worth noting, in the analysis of the 1952 Connecticut results, on p. 23, which Bean does not note, that Benton's margin over the head of his ticket would have been more substantial if the Senate contest hadn't been a four-way race. McCarthy invaded Connecticut twice to campaign against Benton.)

I think it's a reasonable assumption that the recent moves by some Republican political leaders to pull back from McCarthy - and notably by the National Committee - are related to this study. It's even possible that we are seeing a rediscovery of the maxim that good principles make good politics!

Sincerely yours,

John Howe

John Howe
Assistant to William Benton

Mr. Edward Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

WAR JOBS PARITY
McCARTHY

By Louis H. Bean

25 CENTS

Influences in the 1954 Mid-Term Elections

PUBLIC AFFAIRS INSTITUTE
312 PENNSYLVANIA AVE., S.E. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Copyright 1954

Excerpts may be quoted from this book if proper credit is given the author and the Institute.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I. Mid-Term Elections and the Party in Power 2

II. Industrial-Agricultural Conditions and the Party in Power 5

III. International Conditions and the Party in Power 6

IV. The McCarthy Influence on Election Results 7
1. Is the Communist Issue Overrated? 8
2. McCarthy's Political Standing in Wisconsin, 1946, 1952 8
3. McCarthy's Wisconsin Support Largely Rural 14
4. McCarthy's Influence in 1952 Outside Wisconsin 18
5. McCarthy's Influence in 1952 in Two Selected States:
a. Benton in Connecticut 23
b. Kilgore in West Virginia 24
6. McCarthy's Influence in the 1950 Elections 25
Pennsylvania — Illinois
Ohio — Wisconsin
Indiana — Maryland
7. McCarthy's Opposition in 1954—A Help to Democrats 32
8. Conclusion 35

Appendix 37

PREFACE

Louis H. Bean is widely recognized as an authority in the statistical study of factors influencing the decision of the voters. His three books "Ballot Behavior" (1940), "How to Predict Elections" (1948), and "The Midterm Battle" (1950), have become classic fixtures in the literature of political science.

In these troubled times, we believe the 1954 elections to have more than usual significance for the people of this nation and the world. Consequently, we conceived the plan to conduct research and publish a brief study of the major factors at work in these elections. Four major factors are distinguishable, — midterm elections and their effect on the party in power; industrial-agricultural conditions which arouse voters; international events and their influence on voters who have so recently gone through world war; and McCarthyism. We sought to limit this study of these factors so far as possible to those which can be measured statistically.

The question of Senator McCarthy's influence on the election of 1952 has been discussed widely. When the issue of his probable influence on the forthcoming elections of 1954 was raised in both Republican and Democratic circles, with little beyond emotional utterances to prove or disprove the weight of that influence, we in the Public Affairs Institute felt that an objective, factual and impartial analysis of this factor was needed. Particularly it was hoped the studies would shed light on the controversial question as to McCarthy's influence in the 1950 and 1952 elections in Wisconsin and in the 1952 elections in other states where it is known he campaigned in behalf of Republican Senatorial candidates.

Mr. Bean was asked to bring his scientific knowledge and techniques to bear on this subject. The surprising results are brought together in this brief treatise. His findings based on the statistics of the 1952 election results are now being amply corroborated by national and local public opinion polls.

The Public Affairs Institute is dedicated to bringing forth scientifically determined facts and conclusions bearing on currently important issues. The Institute is a nonpartisan, nonprofit research organization. Its obligation is to select topics of broad general interest and choose research specialists of recognized ability to analyze and discuss them. The authors assume full responsibility for their assembly of facts and the conclusions drawn from them. We commend this study of "Influences in the 1954 Mid-Term Elections" to all who regard the fate and future of Democracy and its free political institutions so highly as to prize and exercise fully and intelligently their rights of citizenship in the year 1954.

DEWEY ANDERSON, Director
Public Affairs Institute

Influences in the 1954 Mid-Term Elections

Four broad considerations must be dealt with in judging the outcome of the 1954 mid-term elections: the international situation, the domestic economic situation, the usual let-down in voting interest in a mid-term election year and the communist-in-government issue. The first of these cannot be dealt with statistically and no attempt is made to do so here. The effect of business conditions and of the mid-term let-down in voting I have dealt with at some length in my earlier statistical investigations of presidential and congressional elections, particularly in the two books "How to Predict Elections" (1948) and "The Mid-Term Battle" (1950). The fourth factor popularly referred to as "McCarthyism" is new and for the moment uppermost in general political discussions. For that reason more space is devoted to the question of Senator McCarthy's past and prospective influence on election results than on the economic and mid-term factors. While the communist-in-government issue is relatively new, some statistical light as to its importance may be gleaned from the 1950 and the 1952 election results and from current indications in tests of public opinion.

It is now generally understood that a party in power is somewhat handicapped in a mid-term election year by the general falling off in voting interest. It is doubly handicapped by a rise in unemployment. In an election year, industrial unemployment in October means Congressional unemployment in November. In 1954, with more unemployment and lower farm prices and income than in 1952, the Republicans could lose more than the 25 to 30 seats they would normally lose because of reduced turnout in a mid-term year.

Until recently it has not been generally known that the Republicans may have an additional handicap, especially if they make use of McCarthy as a prominent campaigner. Statistical analysis of the 1952 Senatorial races reveals that while Democrats generally lost they did better than their national ticket in cases where McCarthy campaigned against them. On the average it appears that McCarthy was worth about 5 percentage points to the Democratic Senatorial candidates whom he opposed. This advantage would also have accrued to the Democrats had an election been held in January, 1954, and had McCarthy campaigned against them. This was indicated by a Gallup poll in which 26% of voters questioned said they would be less likely to vote for a McCarthy-sponsored candidate and 21% more likely. Since January, 1954, the possible margin of Democratic advantage has increased greatly. In April a similar Gallup poll indicated that 43% would be less likely to take McCarthy's recommendations and only 17% more likely, a possible loss of 5 votes for every 2 a Republican candidate might gain.

I. Mid-Term Elections and the Party in Power

Mid-term elections usually mean some sort of setback for the party in power. Certain Congressional and Senatorial seats, won with the help of a Presidential campaign, are endangered in the mid-term elections when voter interest flags and when glowing Presidential campaign promises have given way to disappointments. For these usual reasons some of the 1954 Republican Congressional candidates who won in 1952 may be expected to lose in 1954.

The persistence of this mid-term factor adverse to the party in power is shown clearly by Republican experience in the 1920's and by Democratic experience in the 1930's and 1940's.

The Republican Record of the 1920's is as follows:

REPUBLICAN CONGRESSMEN ELECTED IN PRESIDENTIAL AND MID-TERM ELECTIONS

Presidential Years		Congressional Years
Year	Number Elected	Year	Number Elected	Difference
1920	300	1922	225	—75
1924	247	1926	183	—63
1928	237	1930	195	—42
1932	117

The Republicans lost ground in each of the three mid-term elections during the period when they were last in power.

Many factors, of course, contributed to these setbacks, the two most important being unemployment and voting apathy. In each case fewer voters participated than in the Presidential years and in each case unemployment prevailed at election time.

The Democratic Record of the 1930's and 1940's is as follows:

DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN ELECTED IN PRESIDENTIAL AND MID-TERM ELECTIONS

Presidential Years		Congressional Years
Year	Number Elected	Year	Number Elected	Difference
1932	313	1934	322	+ 9
1936	333	1938	262	—71
1940	267	1942	222	—45
1944	243	1946	188	—55
1948	263	1950	236	—27
1952	214

The Democrats lost ground in five of the six mid-term elections during the period in which they were in power. The exception, 1934, is to be explained by the fact that the political momentum which brought Roosevelt into power was still very strong. The economic measures which Roosevelt sponsored served to lift the heavy burden of unemployment and far outweighed such disappointments as some may have felt in 1934 as a result of his failure to meet promises made in 1932; for example the promise to balance the budget.

The Democratic set-back, amounting to 71 seats in 1938, was definitely associated with the 1937-38 recession and increased unemployment as well as with the usual let-down in voting interest. Other factors may have included Roosevelt's effort to pack the Supreme Court and sit-down strikes. On the other hand the 1950 set-back occurred under conditions of high employment.

Statistical analysis of these experiences and those antedating 1920 permit the generalization that normally the party in power tends to lose 25 to 30 seats in mid-term elections. The 1950 experience was therefore in line with what might have been expected. It was on this basis chiefly that in my study

"The Mid-Term Battle", made early in 1950, I pointed to a possible loss of 25 to 30 Democratic seats. They won 27.

Normally the party in power is also weakened in the Senate by a mid-term election. For example the Democrats elected only 15 Senators in 1942 and 11 in 1946 as compared with 21 in 1940, 21 in 1944 and 23 in 1948. This experience led me to suggest early in 1950 that the Democrats, the party in power, might lose three or four seats. They actually lost five.

Applied to 1954 prospects, these experiences must be interpreted as pointing to a Republican loss, on a normal basis, of 25 to 30 Congressional seats and possibly more than that depending on the extensiveness of unemployment.

Indicative of this trend are results of nationwide and local polls in 1953 and early 1954 showing a substantial number of voters now uncertain how they would vote as between Eisenhower and Stevenson, although those with firm opinions divide about the same as in 1952. However, questioned as to their party preferences for the Congress, their answers indicate a definite falling off in Republican strength from that of 1952. One poll conducted toward the end of 1953 indicated a drop of several percentage points in four barometric areas across the northern tier of counties.

Interpreted in the light of past experience I judged those results to mean a possible loss of about 40 Republican seats had an election been held a year after the Eisenhower victory. Normally this relatively clear indication for the Lower House would also carry a definite clue as to Senatorial election results. But with more than the usual number of Democratic Senatorial candidates up for re-election in the states outside the South no positive conclusions could be arrived at from trend indications.

It should be pointed out that, on the basis of past statistical experience, general analyses of political trends such as these do not foretell which particular seats the party in power will lose. This is especially true of Senatorial elections where the personality factor is likely to determine the outcome or where special campaign efforts, unpredictable in nature and in influence, may be resorted to by either party.

II. Industrial-Agricultural Conditions and the Party in Power

Adverse industrial employment and agricultural price and income trends have, in the past, operated against the party in power. The most recent political experience with agricultural price trends is to be found in the 1948 and 1952 election. In 1948, declining prices and the fear that a Republican Administration would lower price support levels brought a sharp increase in Democratic strength in most rural areas and served to assure the Truman victory. In 1952 the Republicans, having learned a rural lesson from the 1948 election results, outpromised the Democrats and made it easy for farmers to respond to the appeal of Eisenhower's popularity.

The farm programs recommended by the Republicans are being criticized by some agricultural leaders and by farmers, particularly in the wheat, corn, dairy and cotton areas, as not in line with the 1952 promises. This has contributed to the reduced Republican standing found in the public opinion tests of party strength in Congressional races.

The effect of industrial unemployment in October on Congressional unemployment after the first week of November can be stated with reasonable quantitative accuracy. In the chapter "When Business Cycle Meets Political Cycle" in "How to Predict Elections" I gave the results of an analysis of 23 mid-term elections in the 92-year record from 1854 to 1946. Ten elections had occurred under conditions of declining business and in each the party in power had lost ground. A percentage point drop in business activity, on the average, cost the party in power a little more than one per cent of the total number of House seats, or, say, about 5 seats. Thirteen elections had occurred under conditions of rising business activity and in all but one (1934) the party in power also lost ground.

From these two sets of facts it can be deduced that a drop in business activity, such as took place between May, 1953 and May, 1954, of about 10%, could reduce the number of Republican held seats by 20 to 25 and thus add substantially to the normal losses due to the mid-term factor alone.

The question may be asked whether the level of business activity will drop still further by next October, or whether it might not by that time have passed the low point and started up. Even if it be assumed that industrial production will be rising next fall it does not mean that unemployment will settle back to the small figure of 1952-1953.

It may be instructive to observe what happened to industrial production and unemployment during the 1949-1950 period which the 1953-54 recession most nearly approximates.

Industrial production declined during the last half of 1948 and the first half of 1949 and then rose during the last half of 1949 and first half of 1950, a year before the Korean conflict broke out. However, unemployment which had risen to over 4 million by the fall of 1949, reached a peak of 4.7 in February, 1950.

If we assume that industrial production may continue to parallel the 1949-50 experience, we would conclude that unemployment, having risen to nearly 4 million by May, 1954, is not likely to be reduced before October, 1954. In other words, an optimistic assumption as to industrial activity for the balance of 1954 does not necessarily mean that the increase in unemployment that has already taken place during the past year, from 1.2 million to nearly 4 million, will disappear before the first week of November. The more realistic view is that unemployment next October will still be an adverse factor for Republicans in a number of Congressional districts.

III. International Conditions and the Party in Power

This is a particularly complex factor. It does not lend itself readily to statistical analyses. In the first place, it is difficult to define in any simple manner. In the second place, a given international problem in peacetime or war, cuts across in many diverse ways the reactions of our numerous groups with foreign origins, foreign cultural and economic ties. In the third place the international situation today is in flux.

In 1940 the international situation was one of approaching participation in World War II, not unlike the situation that developed during the 1916 political campaign. On the basis of that analogy it was possible to suggest as I did in my book "Ballot Behavior," that the Eastern and Western States would become more Democratic in support of Roosevelt, while the middle States, then referred to as the isolationist States, would shift to the Republican side. That actually happened.

In 1942 our being engaged in war resulted in an abnormally light voting turnout and nearly resulted in giving control in the lower House to the Republicans.

In 1944 the fact of our being engaged in war served to maintain the 1940 east-west Democratic shift against the middle States.

In 1950, United Nations reversals in Korea, immediately before the election is credited with part of the Republican gains.

In 1952, it is commonly believed the Eisenhower promise to go to Korea to try to end the Korean war brought additional support to an already popular candidate. In fact, some defeated Democrats claim they were just as much casualties at the front lines in their respective states as if they had been shot down in Korea.

As in other election years, it is difficult to foresee what particular international factor will emerge to help either party next November. Will it be Indo-China instead of Korea? And will it be such a development as will gain the support of voters who want no more military involvement, or the support of those who want a military instead of a diplomatic check to the spread of Communist rule in Southeast Asia.

IV. The McCarthy Influence on Election Results

In the popular mind, as well as in the calculations of political leaders, the communist-in-government issue is really a question of Senator McCarthy's influence on past and prospective election results. President Eisenhower has indicated that this is not to be an election issue and the Republican National Committee has changed its mind about making official use of Senator McCarthy as an active campaigner. But as of May, 1954, Senator McCarthy has given every indication that he means to carry on, contrary to Eisenhower's wishes, and will campaign wherever invited to do so.

It is therefore pertinent to examine what statistical evidence there may be to answer the question that many Senators, Congressmen, other politicians and the public in general have asked: Is Senator McCarthy's influence really as great as he and his friends claim; Is the Communist issue now really as important in the public mind as an election issue as Senator McCarthy and his friends claim and is his influence in election results really as great as he and his friends say it is and as many people fear it is?

1. Is the Communist Issue Overrated?

Without benefit of statistical analyses it is relatively easy to misinterpret election results in these or any other terms. A simple illustration of this fact is Senator McCarthy's claim that the election of Robert Morris to a judgeship in New York City in the November, 1953, city elections proves the potency of the communist issue for Republicans in the 1954 elections.

Morris, former counsel of the Jenner Sub-Committee on Internal Security, campaigned on the communist issue and won. Is this a case of cause and effect? An examination of that election, with benefit of a bit of historical perspective, shows that Morris won two Assembly Districts, one traditionally Republican, the other generally known as "the silk stocking district." He received 64.3% of the recorded vote but Republican Maxwell Shapiro, in 1950, also received 64.1% of the vote and Republican Pelham Bissell III, in 1951, received 54.5%.

The statistical examination of the McCarthy influence in the 1946 and 1952 elections in Wisconsin and the 1950 and 1952 elections in other states leads to similar questions as to the validity of the McCarthy claims and to similar conclusions that the claims do not stand up.

2. McCarthy's Political Standing in Wisconsin, 1946, 1952.

A county by county analysis of the 1952 elections in Wisconsin shows that McCarthy was the low man on the Republican ticket and therefore did not add anything to Eisenhower's victory in Wisconsin. If anything he may actually have cut down Eisenhower's margin since Eisenhower, like McCarthy,

WISCONSIN
McCARTHY'S GAINS AND LOSSES IN 1952 BY COUNTIES
(Compared with 1946)

FIGURES REPRESENT LOSSES IN METROPOLITAN COUNTIES

did less well than other Republican candidates running for state offices.

McCarthy, in 1952, ran behind his own record in 1946 as well as behind Eisenhower in most of the counties. He held his former position in a circle of counties round his home territory, Appleton and Green Bay. But those counties represent only about 15% of the population of voting age. He lost position in most of the other counties, with his greatest losses in those counties having population centers of 25,000 persons or more, particularly Milwaukee and Dane and neighboring counties, the areas more adequately covered by press and radio.

To obtain a quantitative view of McCarthy's standing as a political figure in Wisconsin we need to start with his own performance in the 1946 and 1952 elections. He won in a three-cornered race in the 1946 Republican primary election, was elected to the Senate in the 1946 Republican mid-term election and came in on the 1952 Eisenhower coat tail.

In the 1946 primary election, McCarthy, running against LaFollette, may have managed to squeeze into first place by a bit of third party interference in Milwaukee as well as by the special efforts among labor groups.

The votes cast in that primary were as follows:

McCarthy	207,953
LaFollette	202,557
Stearns	29,605

Having won the primary by a typical 3-man race, winning in the general election in November was relatively easy in view of the Republican landslide. Confusion in domestic policies exemplified by the sharp rise in prices and living costs, confusion in international policies exemplified by Henry Wallace's departure from the Truman Cabinet, and general mid-term apathy brought many accidental Republican victories.

In the 1946 general election in Wisconsin, Senator McCarthy was not top man among the Republican candidates. He was, in fact, close to the bottom of the list. He received 9% fewer votes than the leading Republican candidates for other offices. Among the 682,000 Republican voters who cast their ballots for Zimmerman as Secretary of State were 62,000 who refused to vote for McCarthy as Senator.

VOTES CAST FOR REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES IN WISCONSIN IN 1946

Attorney General (Martin)	683,000
Secretary of State (Zimmerman)	682,000
State Treasurer (Smith)	664,000
Governor (Goodland)	662,000
U. S. Senator (McCarthy)	620,000
Lieut. Governor (Rennebohm)	604,000

The 1952 election results show clearly a substantial drop in McCarthy's popularity in Wisconsin in spite of the fact that he was re-elected. But for the 1952 Eisenhower landslide, McCarthy undoubtedly would have lost. Contrary to statements from McCarthy and his followers, there is no objective evidence that McCarthy gave any help to Eisenhower. If he exerted any influence it must have resulted in cutting down the Wisconsin Eisenhower vote. This is shown both in the state totals of the votes cast and in the county by county figures.

McCarthy ran 169,000 votes, or 16%, below the top man, 110,000 below Eisenhower, and was at the bottom of the list.

VOTES CAST FOR REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES IN WISCONSIN IN 1952

Secretary of State (Zimmerman)	1,039,000
Governor (Kohler)	1,009,000
Lieut. Governor (Smith)	995,000
Treasurer (Smith)	992,000
President (Eisenhower)	980,000
U. S. Senator (McCarthy)	870,000

On a percentage basis McCarthy's standing in 1952 was 12 points below Zimmerman and 7 points below Eisenhower:

PER CENT OF TOTAL VOTE CAST FOR REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES IN WISCONSIN IN 1952

Secretary of State (Zimmerman)	66
Attorney General (Thompson)	64
State Treasurer (Smith)	64
Lieut. Governor (Smith)	64
Governor (Kohler)	63
President (Eisenhower)	61
U. S. Senator (McCarthy)	54

Another bit of evidence showing that the McCarthy elections of 1946 and 1952 were not the tremendous victories claimed is seen in a comparison of the Republican votes cast for Con-

WISCONSIN ELECTION RESULTS—1952 PERCENT OF TOTAL VOTE
66
62
58
54
50
66
64
64
64
63
61
54
F. R. ZIMMERMAN, Secretary of State
W. THOMPSON, Attorney General
W. R. SMITH, State Treasurer
G. M. SMITH, Lieutenant Governor
W. J. KOHLER, Governor
D. EISENHOWER, President
McCARTHY, Senate

gressmen and for Senator in the 1934, 1938, 1946 and 1952 elections:

REPUBLICAN PERCENTAGES OF FOUR CONGRESSIONAL AND SENATORIAL ELECTIONS IN WISCONSIN

	Congressmen	Senator
1934	26.0	24.1	—1.9
1938	44.6	48.2	+3.6
1946	66.3	62.1	—4.2
1952	61.6	54.2	—7.3

McCarthy didn't do as well in 1946 as the general Republican Congressional ticket, falling short by 4.2 percentage points; in 1952 he fell behind by 7.3 percentage points. On the basis of this record one might conclude that were McCarthy up for re-election in 1954 the normal mid-term decline in Republican strength from that of 1952, a decline, say, of at least 5 percentage points, would add McCarthy to the list of unemployed Senators next November.

An examination of the voter response to McCarthy, county by county, in both the 1946 and the 1952 elections throws considerable light on the general notions as to his popularity. Such an examination shows clearly not only that he fell behind but that he did not even have the following generally claimed for him in Catholic communities.

Between 1946 and 1952 he managed to retain his percentage of popularity or to pick up a few percentage points in about 16 of the 71 counties, showing an average gain in these counties of about 3 percentage points. But these 16 counties account for only 15% of the eligible voters of the state. The 110,000 Eisenhower voters and the 169,000 Zimmerman voters who refused to vote for McCarthy are located in the other 55 counties, mostly in the urban centers.

With the exception of the few counties in McCarthy's home territory, the counties which include Green Bay, Appleton and Wausau, it may be said that he lost ground in all counties with cities having more than 25,000 persons and the larger the population of a city or county the greater the shift away from McCarthy (see map). The inference to be drawn from this fact is that in these urban and metropolitan areas the net effect of the press and radio and other means of communication was to cut down McCarthy's rating.

3. McCarthy's Wisconsin Support Largely Rural.

The county by county analysis of the 1952 and 1946 election results shows that McCarthy probably would not have been re-elected except for the Eisenhower coat tail. It also indicates another misconception about McCarthy's strength. His following among the Catholic voters is actually not as solid or as extensive as is generally assumed. There is no denying that he rates more favorably among Catholics than among Protestants and Jews but that does not mean that his influence can sway the vote of a Catholic community without setting up counter reactions in that community or in other parts of a state. In 1952, McCarthy's relative losses were greatest in the metropolitan and urban centers with large concentrations of Catholics in the population, in spite of the fact that he held or improved his position in a few counties that are both rural and Catholic.

The following two tables summarize the relation of the Catholic factor and the population density factor in the McCarthy elections. In one table six groups of counties have been arranged according to an index of Catholic concentration in the population. In 1946 and in 1952 the counties with the largest Catholic concentrations gave McCarthy 7 and 5 percentage points less than did the counties with few Catholics. But the counties with the greatest Catholic percentages gave McCarthy, on the average, about the same percentage in 1952 as in 1946 whereas in the groups with few Catholics he lost, on the average, 3 to 5 percentage points.

WISCONSIN SENATORIAL ELECTIONS
1946 and 1952

For 6 Groups of Counties According to Index of Catholic Concentration in Population

		McCarthy Percentages in Group	Index of Catholic Concentration	1946 Primary Election	1946 Regular Election	1952 Regular Election	Change 1946 to 1952
1	67	39.6	62.9	62.6	— .3
2	55	44.3	65.0	62.2	—2.8
3	45	42.3	65.5	60.4	—5.1
4	34	42.6	68.1	63.6	—4.5
5	24	43.8	65.0	61.9	—3.1
6	16	43.5	70.2	66.7	—3.5
Difference between groups 6 and 1		—3.9	—7.3	—5.1	+3.2

The second table shows eight groups of counties arranged according to the number of potential voters and the 1952 decline in the McCarthy percentages below those he received in 1946 and those Eisenhower received in 1952. This factor of population density is much more striking than the Catholic factor in its relation to the McCarthy vote. Here the losses range from one tenth of a point to as much as 17 points. The greatest McCarthy losses are in Milwaukee and Dane counties, the smallest in the counties with smallest populations.

McCARTHY'S PERCENTAGES IN THE 1952 ELECTION BELOW HIS PERCENTAGES IN 1946 AND EISENHOWER'S IN 1952

(In 9 Groups of Counties According to Population of Voting Age)

THE McCARTHY 1952 ELECTION RELATED TO POPULATION DENSITY

For Eight Groups of Counties

County or Group	Potential Voters 1950	Average per County [1]	McCarthy's 1952 Percentage of Two Party Vote: Below his 1946 Percentage	McCarthy's 1952 Percentage of Two Party Vote: Below Eisenhower's Percentage
County		Thousands
1	Milwaukee	584	—12.6	—17.1
2	Dane	110	—12.2	— 9.7
County Group
3	50,000 — 100,000	59	— 6.4	— 6.4
4	30,000 — 50,000	42	— 5.1	— 4.0
5	20,000 — 30,000	25	— 4.1	— 3.9
6	14,000 — 20,000	16	— 2.8	— 3.3
7	10,000 — 14,000	12	— 1.8	— 1.4
8	6,000 — 10,000	8	— 2.2	— 4.1
9	2,000 — 6,000	5	— .1	— .1
	State		— 6.9	— 7.8

[1] Totals for Milwaukee and Dane counties.

Judging from the counties in which he gained ground in 1952 it appears that McCarthy finds support in farming areas, in low income areas, among the less educated. The nationality factor is difficult to appraise. Persons of German stock are to be found both in the counties in which he gained and in which he lost. There appear to be relatively more Czechs and Poles among his supporters and more Scandinavians among those who have shifted away from him.

These conclusions are drawn from a table in the Appendix which contains data on the economic and social characteristics of counties in which McCarthy improved his 1946 standing in 1952 and counties in which he lost by more than 6.5 points. These two groups of counties are set up, according to the magnitude of the gains and losses. For the counties in each group there is also provided a selection of economic and social data to determine what characteristics, if any, differentiate the counties of gain from those of loss. The characteristics included are: median income, proportion of employment in agriculture and manufacturing, education, median age, males and females in the working population, housing conditions, per cent of tenant farms, population of voting age, population change between 1940 and 1950 and nationality data based on country of origin of foreign born immigrants.

There is fairly clear indication that one of the dominant features differentiating the two groups of counties is economic status. The counties of McCarthy gains are counties with lower median incomes, with larger proportions of the population in agriculture, poor housing conditions, a somewhat lower level of education. This is essentially a rural-urban division, corroborated in part by the fact that the counties of gain are the counties of smaller population concentration.

The nationality data are not all one could wish for conclusive analyses but they are suggestive. The number of immigrants shown here as percentages of all immigrants by country of origin is only a partial index of nationality by counties. It does not cover the large number of first generation descendents of foreign born parents or those having one parent born abroad. Until more data become available it is worth noting that substantial portions of Germans appear in both groups, relatively more Poles and Czechoslovakians in the counties of McCarthy gains and relatively more Norwegians and Swedes in the counties of McCarthy losses.

4. McCarthy's Influence in 1952, Outside Wisconsin.

It may be argued that even though McCarthy's influence in the 1952 Wisconsin elections was not what he and his supporters claim since he did not do as well as in 1946, he may nevertheless have been of help to Republicans in other states. An examination of the election results in the states where McCarthy campaigned and the states where he did not shows that his outside influence, too, is overrated. According to available information McCarthy is known to have campaigned in thirteen states, twelve outside the South, and he may have campaigned in others less prominently.

It will probably surprise most people to learn that in all states where McCarthy pinpointed his charges against Democratic Senatorial candidates the Democratic candidates ran ahead of the general ticket. This was true in the twelve non-Southern states in which according to available information McCarthy campaigned, including his own. In 15 Northern states in which he did not campaign the Democratic Senatorial candidates received about the same percentage of the votes, on the average, as did the Presidential candidates. This was true in 1952 and in the three preceding Presidential election years. But in the 12 states where McCarthy did campaign against them and in the particular counties in those 12 states in which he actually spoke at least once the Democratic candidates did better than their national ticket and better, also, than the Democrats in the three preceding election years.

In a random selection of states you would expect to find, in any election year, that some Senatorial candidates did better than their tickets, some not as well. In other words, on the average the Democratic Senatorial candidates may be expected to get about the same percentage of the vote as, say, the Presidential candidate, with exceptions, of course, in particular cases of outstanding personalities or particularly weak opponents. For the election years 1940, 1944, 1948 and 1952, this generalization is borne out in the 15 Northern states where McCarthy did not campaign. In 1940 some Democratic Senatorial candidates got larger percentages than Roosevelt, others smaller, but they averaged only 1.4 percentage points less when all 15 states are taken together. In 1944 there was practically no difference in the average results. In 1948 we again find a difference of 1.3 points (minus); and in 1952, also a difference of only 1.0 points (plus).

The same comparisons hold for 1940, 1944 and 1948 in the 12 states in which McCarthy campaigned in 1952. In these earlier election years some of the Senatorial candidates ran ahead of their tickets, some fell behind, but on the average they came within 1.4 points of Roosevelt's percentage in 1940 and 0.5 points in 1944 and 0.4 in 1948.

But for 1952 we have an entirely different showing. Instead of some Senatorial candidates doing better than their tickets and some worse as you would expect on the basis of chance or on the basis of past experience, they did better in all eleven states. The chances of getting 12 pluses in 12 cases when either pluses or minuses are possible (or getting 12 heads in 12 throws when either heads or tails are possible) are only one in several thousands. We may, therefore, look upon this showing in the eleven states where McCarthy spoke against Democratic Senatorial candidates as statistically significant.

In these twelve states the average difference, the average advantage, of Senatorial over Presidential results was 6.6 points as compared with only +1.4, +.5 and +.4 for the 1940, 1944 and 1948 elections, respectively, or a net Democratic advantage of about 5.5 points.

In the particular counties in which McCarthy spoke we find the same advantage to the Democratic Senatorial candidates. In 1940 these 11 counties average 2.9 points over the Democratic ticket, in 1944 and 1948, 3.4; but in 1952, 7.7 points, or a net Democratic advantage of about 5 points.

AVERAGE NUMBER OF DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGE POINTS IN FOUR SENATORIAL ELECTIONS COMPARED WITH DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGES IN PRESIDENTIAL YEARS

	1940	1944	1948	1952
15 States in which McCarthy did not campaign in 1952	—1.7	+0.4	—1.3	+1.0
12 States in which McCarthy campaigned	+1.4	+0.5	+0.4	+6.6
11 Counties in 10 states in which McCarthy campaigned	+2.9	+3.4	+3.4	+7.7

NUMBER OF DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGE POINTS IN SENATORIAL ELECTIONS COMPARED WITH THE DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGES IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS, 1940-1952
12 STATES [1]

	1940	1944	1948	1952
Arizona	+ 8.1	+10.4		+ 7.0
Connecticut	+ .2	— .3		+ 1.7
Michigan	+ 2.6		+ 1.4	+ 5.0
Missouri	— 1.2	— 1.6		+ 4.8
Montana	+14.0		+ .4	+10.8
Nevada	+ .4	+ 1.8		+ 9.7
New Jersey	— 7.3	+ 1.5	— .3	+ 1.5
New Mexico	— .8		+ .4	+ 6.7
Washington	— 4.7	— 2.0		+11.3
W. Virginia	— .8		— .8	+ 1.7
Wisconsin		— 5.9		+ 6.9
Wyoming	+ 5.7		+ 4.5	+11.2
Average	+ 1.4	+ .5	+ .4	+ 6.6

[1] In which McCarthy campaigned.

NUMBER OF DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGE POINTS IN SENATORIAL ELECTIONS COMPARED WITH THE DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGES IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS, 1940-1952
15 STATES

	1940	1944	1948	1952
Delaware	— 2.9		+ 1.6	— 2.6
Indiana	0.0	+ 2.2		+ 5.8
Kentucky	+ .7	+ .4	— 6.8	— 1.5
Maine	— 7.5		—14.4	+ 3.5
Maryland	+ 7.1	+ 9.8		+ 3.3
Massachusetts	+ 3.1	—17.7	—10.0	+ 5.9
Minnesota	— 5.3		+ .2	— 1.6
Nebraska	— .7		— 2.5	— 2.1
New York	+ 1.5	— .7		— 4.4
North Dakota	— 3.5	+12.0		— 2.6
Ohio	— 4.6	— .1		+ 2.2
Pennsylvania	— 1.3	— 1.2		+ 1.2
Rhode Island	— 1.4		+ .8	+ 5.7
Utah	+ .4	— .6		+ 4.6
Vermont	—11.5	— 8.7		— .6
Average	— 1.7	— 0.4	— 1.3 [1]	+ 1.0

[1] Exclusive of Maine and Massachusetts.

The question may still be raised as to whether the better showing of Democratic Senatorial candidates in 1952, when compared with the Stevenson vote, may not actually mean that the Stevenson vote was depressed by McCarthy's campaigning in the selected states. This, however, is not the case. The Stevenson vote in these states was just about what was to be expected in view of the Eisenhower sweep and McCarthy's influence, on the average, appears to have been nil.

The statistical evidence for this conclusion stems from these facts: McCarthy's campaigning in 10 states had no perceptible influence on the Eisenhower-Stevenson vote either in the counties in which McCarthy spoke or in the states in which these counties are located. He did not hurt Stevenson nor help Eisenhower. Given the Eisenhower sweep, with the country as a whole shifting its Presidential vote from 45% Republican in 1948 to 55% Republican in 1952, the counties and the states in which McCarthy spoke voted almost exactly according to historical pattern. Only if they had voted differently would there be any basis for thinking that McCarthy's speeches made any noticeable difference.

The other fact, and the more surprising one, is that the Senatorial candidates against whom McCarthy pinpointed his attacks actually did better than might have been expected in view of the usual relation between voting for Senator and voting for President in the counties and states in which McCarthy spoke.

Historically the states and counties (11) in which McCarthy campaigned in 1952 cast their votes in Presidential elections in about the same way as does the country as a whole. The following comparison shows that 1952 was no exception:

PER CENT OF 2-PARTY VOTE

		U. S.	10 states [1]	11 counties
Roosevelt	1940	55.0	56.5	55.7
"	1944	53.8	53.5	53.7
Truman	1948	54.7 [2]	54.2	54.1
Eisenhower	1952	55.4	57.6	56.2

[1] In which McCarthy campaigned, excluding Michigan and Missouri.
[2] Includes Progressive and Dixiecrat vote.

Note particularly that in 1940, when Roosevelt won with 55% of the two-party vote, the 10 states and the 11 counties averaged 56.5% and 55.7% respectively. In 1952, when Eisenhower also was elected by about the same percentage, 55.5, the 10 states also gave him 57.6% of their vote and the 11 counties, 56.2.

Since McCarthy's campaigning did not, on the average, affect the Stevenson vote nor add to the Eisenhower vote, we are warranted in concluding that the Democratic Senatorial advantage over the general ticket in the states in which McCarthy campaigned may be taken as evidence that McCarthy hurt Republican Senatorial candidates more than he helped and, conversely, that the Democratic Senatorial candidates, even though some of them lost as a result of the Eisenhower landslide, received a larger vote, by about 5 percentage points, than they would have received if McCarthy had not campaigned against them.

This surprising conclusion has recently been confirmed by the American Institute of Public Opinion. As shown in the following pages, a Gallup nation-wide poll in January, 1954, found that about 26% of the persons interviewed would vote for a candidate opposed by McCarthy as compared with 21% who would follow his advice, a net advantage of 5 points for the candidate opposed by McCarthy.

5. McCarthy's Influence in 1952 in Two Selected States.

a. Benton Vote in Connecticut in 1952.

McCarthy's influence in campaigning against Benton in Connecticut is not discernible. Here, too, if he had any influence it must have been to Benton's advantage for Benton ran 1.7 points better than Stevenson in a state that usually gives Senatorial candidates practically the same vote it gives the Presidential candidate.

Isolating McCarthy's influence in a state so predominantly Catholic is not an easy statistical task. The state as a whole is approximately 50% Catholic and only two counties deviate noticeably from this average. Windham has the largest Catholic concentration with an index of about 76%, Middlesex, the smallest, with about 46%. In the 1950 election results there was a hint that the larger concentration of Catholics in Windham County may have reduced McMahon's percentage of the vote about 2 points below his 1944 percentage. In Middlesex County, with the smallest Catholic concentration, his percentage was improved by a point or two. There was no such indication in the case of Senator Benton, the other Democratic Senatorial candidate. In 1950 he was up for election for the first time and statistical comparison with earlier elections was, therefore, not possible.

In spite of the fact that the state is dominantly Catholic it is necessary to observe that as a whole the state did not vote in 1952 differently than it normally votes in a national election when religious issues are not involved. Thus in the 1920 Republican landslide, when the Democrats had only 36.1% of the national Presidential vote, Connecticut voted 34.5% Democratic, a difference of only 1.6 percentage points. In the 1952 Republican landslide, when the Democrats had 45% of the national vote, Connecticut voted 44% Democratic, again only a difference of 1 percentage point. However when the religious issue is a factor it does show up in a noticeable difference between voting in Connecticut and in the nation as a whole. The outstanding example was the 1928 election when many Catholic communities turned to Al Smith and Protestant communities went against him. The country as a whole cast 41.2% of its vote for Al Smith, but Connecticut gave him 45.9%, a greater percentage by 4.7 points as compared with a point or two less in the other Republican year.

Thus it is clear that the religious influence if present at all in 1952 was so small as to be quite undiscernible. We can further substantiate this conclusion by noting that Benton fared just as well in Windham County with a 76% Catholic concentration as in Middlesex with a 46% Catholic concentration. In Windham County the Democratic Presidential ticket was stronger than in Middlesex, 46.4% in the most Catholic county compared with 41.5% in the least Catholic county. Benton ran ahead of the ticket in both counties; 1.4 points in Windham, 1.8 in Middlesex, compared with 1.7 points ahead for the state as a whole. If McCarthy had any influence it must have been to stir up more voters for Benton, than against him.

b. The Kilgore Vote in West Virginia in 1952.

Senator Kilgore's victory in West Virginia in spite of McCarthy's effort to unseat him is another example of McCarthy's little influence. We have already noted that Senator Kilgore ran ahead of his ticket, not only in the counties where McCarthy spoke against him but also in the state as a whole. An examination of his possible influence among Catholics indicates no positive evidence that McCarthy's campaigning against Kilgore had any effect. If anything, the evidence points to Senator Kilgore's doing better in the counties of greater Catholic concentration than in other counties.

Take the four contiguous counties, Ohio, Brook, Marshall and Wetzel, which have widely different concentrations of Catholics: 46, 41, 28 and 4% respectively. In 1952, Senator Kilgore enlarged his share of the vote over his 1946 share by 5.7 points and 9.2 points in the first two counties (average, 7.4), and by 4.3 and 6.5 points in the last two (average, 5.4). On the average, then, he did better in the two counties with the greater proportion than in the two with the smaller proportion of Catholics.

The Kilgore vote in 1952 in relation to the rest of the ticket also fails to show any McCarthy influence in these Catholic counties. In the two counties of larger Catholic concentration he ran 1.7 and 1.5 percentage points ahead of the Congressional ticket. In the least Catholic county he ran .3 of a point behind. If the Catholic factor played any part here it served to increase his per cent of the vote by about 2 percentage points in relation to the Congressional ticket. In relation to the Presidential ticket, also, there is no evidence that Senator Kilgore received a smaller vote because of McCarthy's influence. In fact he ran 2.7 points ahead in the most Catholic county just as he ran 2.6 points ahead in the least Catholic county.

It should perhaps be noted that in 1946 Kilgore and Democrats in general did not do as well in Ohio County as in Wetzel by about 15 percentage points. This was also true in 1948 and in 1952, but in these two elections the difference was narrowed to about 4 and 5 points. This suggests that if the McCarthy-Catholic factor operated against Kilgore and other Democrats in 1946, its adverse influence has since been cut down by about two-thirds.

WEST VIRGINIA ELECTION RESULTS IN 1946, 1948 AND 1952

In Four Selected Counties

	County	Per Cent Catholic	Dem. Per Cent for Senator		Change	Dem. Per Cent for President
			1946	1952	1946-1952	1948	1952
1	Ohio	46	41.6	47.3	+5.7	52.8	44.6
2	Brook	41	52.5	61.7	+9.2	64.6	59.9
3	Marshall	28	45.9	50.2	+4.3	53.8	48.4
4	Wetzel	4	55.7	52.2	+6.5	57.5	49.6
	Difference between county 4 and 1		—14.1	— 4.9		— 4.7	— 5.0

6. McCarthy's Influence in the 1950 Elections.

The foregoing evidence of McCarthy's negative influence in the 1952 elections does not necessarily mean that his influence in 1950 may not have been more noticeable. The communist issue in the 1950 mid-term election was more pronounced than in 1952 when practically all issues played minor roles in comparison with the fact of Eisenhower's popularity.

If we assume that the communist issue and the McCarthy influence registered most definitely in areas of substantial Catholic concentration, we may then proceed to analyze the 1950 Senatorial election results with their own results in 1946, the year when they were last elected, and to relate the shifts between 1946 and 1950 to our indexes of Catholic concentration.

We find that Democratic candidates lost more heavily in counties with large concentrations of Catholic voters. This was true in the famous case of Senator Tydings in Maryland, and in other states, but it does not necessarily follow that some of the Democratic losses would not have occurred in any case, or that offsetting reactions may not have developed among non-Catholic groups. There is, for example, plausible though not conclusive statistical evidence suggesting that Tydings might have lost in any case since Congressional and Senatorial Democratic strength in Maryland had been on the decline in relation to the national trend ever since 1938. On the other hand, in the case of Pennsylvania it can be shown that in spite of greater losses sustained in Catholic communities, Senator Myers, even though he lost, did better than might have been expected on the basis of previous experience in Senatorial races in relation to the general trend.

The following illustrations are typical of what influence the Communist issue, working through the religious factor, may have exerted in some of the important Senatorial elections of 1950. They are drawn from studies of groups of counties in a number of states, each group consisting of a metropolitan or urban county and a number of contiguous counties reaching into rural areas. For each group county comparisons were made between the 1944 to 1950 shift in the Democratic percentage and the county indexes of Catholic concentration. The nature of the relationship is clearly indicated by the two counties in each group having the largest and smallest Catholic concentration.

Pennsylvania:

In Allegheny County (Pittsburgh), with a Catholic index of 52, Senator Myers' vote was 5 percentage points less than in 1944 whereas in Lawrence and Armstrong Counties, with indexes of 30 and 26, he gained 5 and 3 percentage points.

In Dauphin County (Harrisburg), with a Catholic index of 62, Myers lost 2 percentage points but gained 8 percentage points in nearby Cumberland County, with a Catholic index of 39.

In Philadelphia County (Philadelphia), with a Catholic index of 47, he lost 6 percentage points and gained a point in nearby Bucks County, having a Catholic index of 27.

Ohio:

In Cuyahoga County (Cleveland), with a Catholic index of 53, the vote for a Democratic Senatorial candidate (Ferguson) was 12 percentage points below that of 1944, but in Erie County, with a Catholic index of 38, the decline was 6 points.

In Lucas County (Toledo), with a Catholic index of 59, the Democratic percentage dropped 4 points, but in nearby Fulton County, with a Catholic index of 14, it increased 2 points.

In Montgomery County (Dayton), with a Catholic index of 32, the Democratic percentage dropped 11 points, but in nearby Green County, with a Catholic index of 11, the decline was only 3 points.

Indiana:

In Marion County (Indianapolis), with a Catholic index of 22, the 1950 Democratic percentage fell off 7 points below that of 1944 but increased 3 points in nearby Morgan County where there are practically no Catholics.

In St. Joseph County (South Bend) and Lake County (Gary), with Catholic index of about 50, the Democratic percentages fell off 3 and 7 points respectively. In nearby counties, with Catholic indexes of less than 10, the Democratic percentage remained practically unchanged or increased slightly.

Illinois:

In Cook and Lake Counties (Chicago), with a Catholic index of about 50, Lucas dropped about 9 percentage points below his 1944 position. In nearby Boon County, with a Catholic index of 15, his loss was only 2 points.

In Rock Island County (Rock Island), with a Catholic index of 37, he lost 12 percentage points but in nearby Carrol County, with a Catholic index of 10, he lost only 3 points.

In Champaign County (Champaign), with a Catholic index of 25, he lost 11 points but in neighboring Prat County, with a Catholic index of 6, he lost 6 points.

Wisconsin:

In the 4th and 5th Congressional Districts (Milwaukee), with a Catholic index of more than 60, the Democratic Senatorial candidate dropped 4 percentage points below 1944, but in the neighboring 6th District, with a Catholic index of 42, there was a Democratic gain of 3 points and in the nearby 2nd District, with a Catholic index of only 31, there was a gain of 11 points.

Maryland:

An analysis of Tydings' percentages in his election in 1944 and his defeat in 1950 shows that his percentage remained practically unchanged in one county but declined in all the rest. In one county, Prince Georges, the drop was as much as 26 percentage points. If these percentage point losses in position are related to the proportion of the Catholic population it appears that the greater losses are associated with the greater Catholic concentrations. Thus in a group of contiguous counties, including Prince Georges, Tydings' percentages averaged about 10 points below those of 1944 where there are practically no Catholics (Somerset and Worcester), and 19 and 26 percentage points where the Catholic concentration index approximates 30 (Anne Arundel and Prince Georges).

Similarly in a group of contiguous counties, including Baltimore City, Tydings' percentages dropped 4 points in Carroll County with a Catholic index of about 6, 13 points in Baltimore County having a Catholic index of 17 and 19 points in Baltimore City where the Catholic index is about 50. In a third group of counties the decline ranged from 2 points to 12 points with Catholic indexes ranging from 10 to 80.

While the Catholic factor thus has greater significance in certain areas of the state than in others, the direction of its influence appears to have been consistent, against Tydings.

TYDINGS' 1950 LOSSES BY COUNTIES RELATED TO THE INDEXES OF CATHOLIC CONCENTRATION
Three Groups of Contiguous Counties
DECREASE IN TYDINGS' PERCENTAGES—1944—50 0 —10%
—20%
—30%
0 10% 20% 30% 40%
50% 60%
70%
80%
90%
INDEX OF CATHOLIC CONCENTRATION
1 Allegany
2 Anne Arundel
3 Baltimore
4 Baltimore City
5 Calvert
6 Caroline
7 Carroll
8 Cecil
9 Charles 10 Dorchester
11 Frederick
12 Garrett
13 Harford
14 Howard
15 Kent
16 Montgomery
17 Prince Georges
18 Queen Anne
19 St. Mary's
20 Somerset
21 Talbot
22 Washington
23 Wycomico
24 Worcester

These relationships for the three groups of counties suggest the question as to whether Tydings might have won if the Catholic factor had not been present. In the first group of counties it is conceivable that he would have received about 10 percentage points less than in 1944; in the second, the most important group including Baltimore City and Baltimore County, he would have received about the same; and in the third, possibly a few points more. Even if in Baltimore City and in Baltimore County the influence of the Catholic factor had been only half what this analysis suggests, Tydings' losses from his strong position in 1944 would not have been great enough to unseat him.

On the other hand, if you study the political trend in Maryland in relation to the national trend it is possible to conclude that he might have been unseated anyway, possibly by a very small margin. If you compare both the Congressional and Senatorial votes in Maryland with the national Congressional vote, using Democratic percentages, you find Maryland on the decline. Ever since 1938, when it was unusually more Democratic than the nation as a whole, the Maryland trend has been declining relatively.

In the six Congressional elections from 1938 to 1948, the Maryland Democratic percentage exceeded the U. S. Democratic percentage as follows:

1938	+9.4
1940	+7.8
1942	+8.7
1944	+3.7
1946	+5.6
1948	+2.0
Decline 1938 to 1948	—7.4

The +9.4 margin in 1938 fell to +2.0 in 1948. A projection of this down trend in 1950 would have brought it just about to the national average, possibly somewhat below. Since the Democrats in the national Congressional election polled only a fraction over 50% in 1950, it is obvious that the Democrats in Maryland were, in 1950, waging a losing battle. They actually fell short by half a point of the national average in 1950 and, continuing the relative down trend, by 2 points in the 1952 election.

MARYLAND
DECLINE IN DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSIONAL AND SENATORIAL VOTE—1938—1952 IN RELATION TO THE U. S. DEMOCRATIC POPULAR VOTE FOR CONGRESSMEN
CONGRESSIONAL VOTE Percentage Points
SENATORIAL VOTE Percentage Points
+10
+8
+6
+4
+2
0
−2
−4 +20 +16
+12
+8
+4
0
−4
−8
1938
1940
1942
1944
1946
1948
1950
1952
1954
CONGRESSMEN
U. S. CONGRESSIONAL VOTE
SENATOR

The experience in Maryland Senatorial races was similar. In 1938, Tydings' very high percentage (70) exceeded the national average by +19.2 points and in 1940, by +12.8. In 1944 and 1946 it declined to +9.5. A projection of this trend into the 1950 election suggests that the Maryland Senatorial race might have run about a point or two below the national Democratic figure of 50.3. Tydings' vote of 46.5% actually fell nearly 4 percentage points below the national average.

From these two statistical analyses of the Tydings election the McCarthy influence may be argued either way; that it was the major factor in Tydings' defeat, or that Tydings would have lost in any event. However, the more realistic view, supported by the findings of the Congressional investigation of this most unusual election campaign, is that the McCarthy operation was more effective in Tydings' defeat than the underlying trends and intra-party conflicts.

7. McCarthy's Opposition in 1954—a Help to Democrats.

Our finding that in 1952 Democratic Senatorial candidates were not as a rule hurt by McCarthy's charges against them but, possibly, even helped, on the average, by about 5 percentage points, is interestingly corroborated by a Gallup poll of January, 1954, and by another in April. These polls indicate that there is a difference between popularity and influence and that political judgment, based on indexes of popularity alone may lead one far astray. The January, 1954, poll indicated, as do our 1952 election analyses, that while some voters are more likely to vote for a Republican candidate if urged by McCarthy to do so, more are likely to vote against him, the difference in the January Poll being about 5%. Since then a marked drop has occurred both in McCarthy's popularity and in his possible influence on voting. A poll in April, 1954, shows that 17 voters in 100 would be more likely to vote for a Republican candidate but 43 would be less likely to do so. In other words, as of April, 1954, McCarthy's possible influence had fallen to the point where, if he influenced two persons to vote for a Republican Congressman or Senator, he would drive 5 others away, most likely into the Democratic column.

About half the persons questioned about the beginning of 1954 indicated a favorable opinion toward McCarthy and that his popularity was somewhat greater among Catholics than among Protestants. On the question:

"In general would you say you have a favorable or unfavorable opinion of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy?" the two major religious groupings gave these results:

	Protestants	Catholics
Favorable	49	58
Unfavorable	28	23
No opinion	23	19

There has been a tendency to confuse evidence of popularity with power to influence elections. Actually there is a sharp difference. To test McCarthy's possible impact on election results the Gallup Poll also asked:

"Suppose next Fall, the Republican candidate for Congress in your district has McCarthy's support, would this make you more likely—or less likely—to vote for that Congressional candidate?" The result:

More likely	21%
Less likely	26%
	47%
Would make no difference	45%
No opinion	8%
	53%

This showing, taken at face value, says in effect that a candidate opposed by McCarthy is likely to gain rather than lose votes and that the net gain could, on the average, amount to 5 percentage points.

The same question asked in April produced these results:

More likely	17%
Less likely	43%
	60%
Would make no difference	34%
No opinion	6%
	40%

The group of voters who call themselves independents and, of course, the Democrats, show the greater proportions less likely to be swayed by McCarthy. Even among Republicans, about as many would be repelled as attracted:

	Republicans	Democrats	Independents
More likely	28%	10%	16%
Less likely	27%	56%	42%
No difference	42%	28%	36%
No opinion	3%	6%	6%

Furthermore, McCarthy's indicated influence, amounting to repelling two to three voters for every one he might attract, shows up in every major region:

	East	Midwest	South	Far West
More likely	20%	18%	13%	16%
Less likely	40%	49%	42%	37%
No difference	34%	27%	28%	44%
No opinion	6%	6%	7%	3%

About as convincing a pre-election test as any—illustrating that the McCarthy factor in the 1954 election may be insignificant—is contained in a recent poll on Senator McCarthy and Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine. Senator Smith is known for her stand against McCarthyism. She is being opposed by Robert L. Jones, who is known to have Senator McCarthy's support. In a poll conducted by the Boston Post (results published May 12), 2076 voters in nine metropolitan communities were asked whether they favored Smith or Jones in the primary fight, with these results:

For McCarthy	40.5 per cent
Against McCarthy	41.4 per cent
Undecided	18.1 per cent
	100.0 per cent
For Smith	85.5 per cent
For Jones	10.6 per cent
Undecided	3.9 per cent
	100.0 per cent

In spite of the fact that about as many favor McCarthy as are against him, very few from either group favor McCarthy's candidate. It is clear that what people think about McCarthy's investigations has practically no bearing on their attitude toward election candidates. In Lewiston, where as many as 47 per cent said they favored McCarthy, only 4 per cent favored Jones, his candidate, and 95 per cent favored Senator Smith. In Waterville, where as few as 26 per cent favored McCarthy, Jones, his candidate, was favored by 12 per cent and Senator Smith by 85 per cent. In the strongest McCarthy territory his candidate gets an eight point poorer rating, than in the weakest McCarthy territory. This is in line with the general findings in the 1952 election results and with the Gallup nation-wide polls. The fact that Senator McCarthy has been of no help to his candidate (in none of the nine cities did Jones score a rating of over 18 per cent, and Smith less than 80 per cent), and may in fact have been a hindrance, takes on an added significance in this case since Maine with 60 per cent of its church-going population belonging to the Roman Catholic church, is in the northern area where McCarthy is said to have his greatest influence.

8. Conclusion.

It is necessary to bear in mind that 1950 and 1952 are not comparable election years and that 1954 may differ greatly from the 1950 mid-term year. Normally the mid-term factor alone should be of some advantage to the candidates of the party out of power and 1954 is not likely to be an exception. The fact that the Republicans lost additionally in 1934 after the Democrats came to power so overwhelmingly in 1932 is no reason for thinking that the Democrats will also lose still a few more seats in 1954 following the Republican victory in 1952. The momentum of the New Deal was still very strong in 1934 and the measures then being proposed and the programs put into action met with general public and Congressional support. This was sufficient to offset the fact that 1934 was a mid-term election without benefit of Presidential coat tails.

The temper of the country in 1954 is not as it was in 1934. Politically it is more evenly divided and the gap between the high public regard for the President and public reaction to the Congress is much greater than in 1934. In 1934, Congress was busy legislating. In 1954, the public thinks of Congress as busily engaged in investigating.

The second fact that differentiates 1954 from 1934 is that unemployment in 1934 was being reduced whereas in 1954 it has increased. This increased unemployment is not likely to be reduced before the election campaign gets under way and so is likely to work to the disadvantage of Republican candidates.

The third factor, the McCarthy influence in 1954, must be considered in relation both to 1952 and to 1950. In 1952 his influence, if present at all, was practically imperceptible as a detriment to Democrats. The fact is that the 1952 election was universally an Eisenhower popularity contest. McCarthy apparently added little if anything to the Republican-Eisenhower sweep.

The 1950 election results lend substantial support to the contention that Catholic voters responded more than usual to Republican appeals. But it should be pointed out that more Catholic leaders now appear to be aware than in 1950 that the use of church and pulpit by McCarthy followers is likely to widen the cleavage between Catholics and Protestants which McCarthyism has already created.

Whether McCarthy's influence will be more noticeable in the 1954 elections without the excitement of the Eisenhower crusade will also depend on the outcome of the current conflict between McCarthy and Eisenhower and on the reaction of voters to McCarthy as they become more familiar with his methods, his tactics, his aims and particularly with his personality. Public opinion polls are already showing a decline in his popularity from the peak reached early this year. As of April, 1954, polls indicate that a Republican candidate seeking McCarthy's help would lose five voters for every two he might gain.

Perhaps the most significant feature of this analysis, in addition to establishing the fact of his weak political position in his own state and that his influence among Catholics appears to have been over-rated, is the extent to which metropolitan and urban centers turned away from him in 1952 and the extent to which they may turn against McCarthyism in 1954. The press in Wisconsin is undoubtedly partly responsible for his loss of political strength in the Milwaukee and Madison areas and his failure to make headway except in rural areas where knowledge as to his character and his methods is not widespread.

What role the press and radio over the country will play in revealing McCarthy to the public in all states is not susceptible to statistical appraisal. But judging from the Wisconsin analysis in this report and the general reaction to his current conflict with Eisenhower and the Army, more light on McCarthy by the press, radio and T.V. would further tend to minimize his influence in local elections.

Appendix

WISCONSIN—McCARTHY'S PERCENTAGE IN 1946 AND 1952 GENERAL ELECTIONS IN 35 SELECTED COUNTIES

Counties	1946 McC. as % of 2-Party Vote	1952 McC. as % of 2-Party Vote	Difference
16 Counties with Increase in McC. % of 2-Party Vote [a]
Kewaunee	71.1	76.8	5.7
Calumet	71.7	75.8	4.1
Longlade	60.5	64.4	3.9
Grant	72.6	76.4	3.8
Portage	50.5	54.0	3.5
Adams	63.5	67.0	3.5
Shawano	74.8	78.0	3.2
Vilas	67.4	70.2	2.8
Lafayette	63.3	66.0	2.7
Crawford	66.0	67.8	1.8
Waupaca	79.3	81.0	1.7
Clark	68.1	69.5	1.4
Brown	65.3	66.7	1.4
Forest	51.9	53.2	1.3
Fond du Lac	70.2	70.3	.1
Burnett	61.3	61.4	.1
19 Counties with Decrease in McC. % of 2-Party Vote [b]
Waukesha	73.9	54.4	19.5
Milwaukee	56.3	39.2	17.1
Ozaukee	69.6	56.7	12.9
Iron	51.9	39.1	12.8
Douglas	53.1	41.1	12.0
Jackson	64.9	53.6	11.3
Lincoln	72.3	62.1	10.2
Eau Claire	56.6	46.8	9.8
Dane	48.0	38.3	9.7
Washington	75.0	65.5	9.5
Sheyboygan	56.5	47.2	9.3
Rusk	67.1	58.0	9.1
La Crosse	66.7	57.8	8.9
Walworth	80.1	71.7	8.4
Marinette	69.0	61.0	8.0
Jefferson	67.1	59.2	7.9
Pierce	74.7	66.9	7.8
Buffalo	71.0	64.2	6.8
St. Croix	63.8	57.3	6.5

[a] All 16 counties in which McCarthy % of 2-party vote increased, included here.

[b] Only 19 of 53 counties in which McCarthy % of 2-party vote decreased, included here. Counties showing decreases of less than 6.5% not included.

WISCONSIN—ECONOMIC DATA FOR 35 SELECTED COUNTIES (1950 CENSUS)*

County	Income: Median ($)	Income: % $5000 or more	Employment: % Agric.	Employment: % Mfg.	Education (25 yrs.): % Under 5 Grades	Education (25 yrs.): Median School Yrs.	Age 1950: Median Yrs.
16 Counties with increase in McCarthy % of 2-Party Vote
Kewaunee	2323	8.3	48.7	23.7	14.2	8.4	29.9
Calumet	2654	12.7	40.5	23.9	6.8	8.6	29.2
Langlade	2523	12.4	31.2	17.8	12.8	8.7	28.1
Grant	2430	14.3	43.1	9.0	4.5	8.9	29.7
Portage	2823	15.7	27.7	20.0	17.1	8.7	28.7
Adams	1958	7.1	46.6	9.9	9.1	8.5	33.6
Shawano	2299	10.2	43.8	19.7	14.9	8.4	29.4
Vilas	2099	7.1	8.9	14.9	7.8	8.9	33.0
Lafayette	2417	9.7	56.6	6.4	6.3	8.7	29.6
Crawford	2250	8.0	43.6	15.8	7.2	8.7	28.0
Waupaca	2514	9.8	36.1	19.2	8.7	8.7	33.5
Clark	2073	10.6	59.9	9.0	9.1	8.6	30.2
Brown	3441	21.4	11.8	25.7	10.0	8.9	28.5
Forest	2012	6.5	25.9	26.5	17.2	8.5	26.8
Fond du Lac	3238	18.7	21.2	25.1	6.9	8.8	31.5
Burnett	1815	4.2	51.6	7.3	8.8	8.6	32.4
Average	2429	11.0	37.3	17.1	10.1	8.7	30.1
19 Counties with decrease in McCarthy % of 2-Party Vote
Waukesha	3656	24.9	13.1	33.5	4.2	10.1	30.6
Milwaukee	3926	30.0	0.6	42.8	6.6	9.6	32.5
Ozaukee	3636	24.9	22.0	36.5	4.2	8.8	30.7
Iron	2714	10.2	11.7	12.5	16.4	8.7	32.3
Douglas	3141	14.3	8.6	12.1	7.5	9.4	32.4
Jackson	1778	7.0	50.4	7.2	10.6	8.6	31.2
Lincoln	2549	9.6	28.3	30.2	9.0	8.7	30.8
Eau Claire	3366	19.0	13.5	29.2	5.9	9.3	30.1
Dane	3647	27.8	12.8	16.3	3.4	12.1	28.6
Washington	3242	19.0	27.5	34.2	5.2	8.7	30.3
Sheyboygan	3386	20.1	13.9	41.3	12.8	8.5	32.3
Rusk	2303	10.8	48.9	9.8	10.7	8.6	28.4
LaCrosse	3394	21.2	9.4	33.0	5.9	9.4	30.2
Walworth	3103	20.7	25.7	20.7	3.7	10.2	33.1
Marinette	2659	11.2	24.2	31.4	11.5	8.7	30.8
Jefferson	2970	16.8	25.9	31.0	6.7	8.9	33.9
Pierce	2294	10.0	47.1	8.9	5.8	8.7	30.1
Buffalo	2107	6.5	56.4	7.7	8.1	8.6	29.7
St. Croix	2622	14.9	43.0	13.7	6.3	8.8	30.5
Average	2973	16.8	25.4	23.8	7.6	9.2	31.0
STATE	$3256	20.3%	18.6%	30.6%	7.3%	8.9 yrs.	31.0

* Source: "County and City Data Book, 1952" Stat. Abs. Supp., Bur. Census 1953, Table 3.

WISCONSIN—ECONOMIC DATA FOR 35 SELECTED COUNTIES (1950 CENSUS)

County	Labor Force (14 yrs.) % Males	Labor Force (14 yrs.) % Females	Housing % H W, PB+T	Agriculture % Tenant Farms	Potential Voters 1950
16 Counties with increase in McCarthy % of 2-Party Vote
Kewaunee	84.3	36.2	44.0	5.5	10,653
Calumet	86.1	26.8	46.3	13.4	11,397
Langlade	77.0	23.3	41.4	3.3	12,700
Grant	77.7	24.5	38.4	33.1	25,338
Portage	78.6	27.7	44.0	6.3	20,709
Adams	79.5	17.7	24.3	9.9	4,953
Shawano	79.0	22.1	32.6	6.1	20,932
Vilas	76.5	19.5	38.3	2.8	5,926
Lafayette	81.6	23.3	35.4	46.4	11,039
Crawford	82.6	22.6	26.3	28.8	10,304
Waupaca	78.6	25.3	41.6	8.3	22,547
Clark	81.2	27.2	34.8	9.2	19,355
Brown	79.2	28.5	63.2	9.2	59,892
Forest	69.4	16.1	16.4	3.1	5,204
Fond du Lac	79.9	27.8	56.7	26.0	43,545
Burnett	78.7	17.7	13.5	6.9	6,302
Average	79.4	24.1	37.3	13.6	18,175
19 Counties with decrease in McCarthy % of 2-Party Vote
Waukesha	81.0	26.3	63.3	17.2	53,885
Milwaukee	82.1	33.5	81.5	14.8	583,764
Ozaukee	84.0	27.8	67.1	11.1	14,846
Iron	76.7	22.5	41.2	3.0	5,305
Douglas	75.9	25.6	54.0	3.5	29,479
Jackson	77.7	18.8	30.0	11.8	9,827
Lincoln	80.9	29.7	41.0	3.4	13,656
Eau Claire	80.2	28.2	55.4	12.4	34,015
Dane	74.8	36.0	64.9	33.3	110,080
Washington	83.9	29.8	51.9	15.0	21,463
Sheyboygan	83.2	27.4	63.6	11.9	52,459
Rusk	78.2	19.1	24.0	4.6	9,501
La Crosse	80.7	33.1	58.0	21.9	42,570
Walworth	78.7	25.6	58.5	27.7	27,107
Marinette	77.8	24.1	46.0	4.3	21,730
Jefferson	80.3	27.3	53.6	23.8	28,576
Pierce	76.5	21.4	36.9	15.0	13,259
Buffalo	82.6	20.7	38.9	19.1	8,926
St. Croix	80.7	23.7	44.4	16.0	16,042
Average	79.8	26.3	51.3	14.2	30,078
STATE	80.5%	28.9%	58.5%	15.6%	2,184,093

WISCONSIN—NATIONALITY DA

Ratio of Immigration from the Two M
White Population to Total I

Counties	Total All Coun-tries	Germany % Total	Poland % T	Czech-oslo-vakia % T	Au %
		19 Counties with Decrease
Waukesha	4,596	36.3		5.5
Milwaukee	83,322	28.6	16.1
Ozaukee	869	48.9			1
Iron	1,402
Douglas	5,587
Jackson	648	14.7
Lincoln	1,659	42.0
Eau Claire	1,876	25.8
Dane	7,860	16.9
Washington	956	52.0		8.8
Sheyboygan	6,134	37.3
Rusk	1,369		31.4	13.1
La Crosse	2,072	37.2
Walworth	2,693	30.2
Marinette	2,687	18.6
Jefferson	1,880	62.2
Pierce	673
Buffalo	370	34.1
St. Croix	1,288	16.5

*Source: 1950 Census of Population: "Wisconsin, General C

WISCONSIN—NATIONALITY DAT

Ratio of Immigration from the Two M
White Population to Total I

Counties	Total All Coun-tries	Germany % Total	Poland % T	Czech-oslo-vakia % T	Aus %
		16 Counties with Increase
Kewaunee	323	29.4		29.7
Calumet	378	50.3			6.
Langlade	1,093	25.5		22.8
Grant	661	37.5		13.2
Portage	1,524	17.2	49.1
Adams	403	23.3		18.6
Shawano	1,370	51.8	11.5
Vilas	792	20.5
Lafayette	580	17.1
Crawford	348	19.5
Waupaca	1,340	37.3
Clark	2,199	23.6	25.1
Brown	2,598	20.4	13.9
Forest	616	16.1	37.2
Fond du Lac	2,760	41.0
Burnett	692

DATA FOR 35 SELECTED COUNTIES*

o Major Countries of Birth of Foreign Born
l Immigration from all Countries

Austria % T	Norway % T	Sweden % T	Finland % T	USSR % T	Italy % T	Eng. Wales % T se McCarthy % of 2-Party Vote
10.7
			32.2		29.4
	16.9	22.8
	39.8
		7.9
	35.4
	28.3
				20.4
	19.9
		11.0
		12.3
						4.1
	24.4	21.8
	23.5
	28.6

l Characteristics", Table 42a.

ATA FOR 35 SELECTED COUNTIES

o Major Countries of Birth of Foreign Born
l Immigration from all Countries

Austria % T	Norway % T	Sweden % T	Finland % T	USSR % T	Italy % T	Eng. Wales % T
se McCarthy % of 2-Party Vote
6.9
			16.5
	19.0
	25.0
	17.5
	15.9	48.6		10.1

DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGE OF MAJOR PARTY VOTE
1940 ELECTIONS, BASED ON STATE WIDE TWO-PARTY VOTE*

State	1940[b] President %	U.S. Senator %	Representative %	Governor %
Arizona	63.8	71.9	71.1	66.0
California	58.1	—	44.6	—
Colorado	48.7	—	54.7	45.3
Connecticut	53.6	53.8	53.0	50.9
Delaware	54.8	51.7	51.4	46.4
Idaho	54.5	47.0 (U)	53.5	50.5
Illinois	51.2	49.7 (U)	48.8	46.9
Indiana	49.3	49.3	49.1	50.1
Iowa	47.8	—	45.2	47.2
Kansas	42.7	—	42.3	49.9
Kentucky	57.6	58.3 (U)	62.6	—
Maine	48.8	41.3	35.4	29.7
Maryland	58.8	65.9	60.9	—
Massachusetts	53.4	56.5	47.5	49.8
Michigan	49.8	47.2	48.9	53.2
Minnesota	51.9	46.6	46.7	47.8
Missouri	52.4	51.2	52.4	49.9
Montana	59.4	73.4	55.1	49.0
Nebraska	42.8	42.1	42.0	39.1
Nevada	60.1	60.5	64.5	—
New Hampshire	53.2	—	48.0	49.3
New Jersey	51.8	44.5	47.1	51.7
New Mexico	56.7	55.9	58.8	55.6
New York	51.8	53.3	51.0	—
North Dakota	44.5	41.0	32.8	63.1
Ohio	52.2	47.6	50.7	44.5
Oklahoma	57.6	—	66.6	—
Oregon	54.1	—	41.9	—
Pennsylvania	53.5	52.2	52.0	—
Rhode Island	56.6	55.2	55.6	55.9
South Dakota	42.6	—	38.9	44.9
Tennessee	67.5	70.8	73.6	72.1
Utah	62.4	62.8	60.6	52.2
Vermont	45.1	33.6	36.2	36.0
Washington	58.9	54.2	57.9	49.6
West Virginia	57.1	56.3	57.5	56.4
Wisconsin	50.9	13.2[f]	17.4[g]	19.3[h]
Wyoming	53.0	58.7	53.4	—

* F—Full Term; U—Unexpired Term.
 (10 Southern States omitted: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Missi sippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia.)
[b] Source: Gallup, "The Political Almanac 1952".
[f] 41.4 Republican Vote, 45.4 Progressive.
[g] 45.7 Republican Vote, 36.9 Progressive.
[h] 39.9 Progressive Vote, 40.8 Republican Vote.

DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGE OF MAJOR PARTY VOTE
1944 ELECTIONS, BASED ON STATE WIDE TWO-PARTY VOTE*

State	1944[b] President %	U.S. Senator %	Representative %	Governor %
Arizona	59.0	69.4	69.9	78.6
California	56.8	52.3	50.7	—
Colorado	46.6	43.6	42.8	47.6
Connecticut	52.7	52.4	51.1	48.4
Delaware	54.6	—	50.5	49.3
Idaho	51.7	51.1	51.5	52.6
Illinois	51.7	52.8	49.9	49.1
Indiana	47.1	49.3 (F) 47.5 (U)	46.8	48.6
Iowa	47.7	48.5	43.2	43.8
Kansas	39.4	41.3	37.0	33.0
Kentucky	54.6	55.0	54.7	—
Maine	47.5	—	29.3	38.7
Maryland	51.9	61.7	55.9	—
Massachusetts	52.9	35.2 (U)	47.0	53.9
Michigan	50.5	—	47.7	45.0
Minnesota	52.8	—	40.9	38.0
Missouri	51.5	49.9	52.5	51.0
Montana	54.7	—	60.4	43.4
Nebraska	41.4	—	33.0	23.9
Nevada	54.6	58.4	63.1	—
New Hampshire	52.1	49.1	47.4	46.9
New Jersey	50.7	49.2 (U)	46.5	—
New Mexico	53.5	—	55.5	51.8
New York	52.5	53.2	51.1	—
North Dakota	45.8	57.8	34.6	35.7
Ohio	49.8	49.7	47.2	51.8
Oklahoma	55.7	55.8	58.7	—
Oregon	52.5	39.3 (F) 42.5 (U)	38.5	—
Pennsylvania	51.4	50.2	50.7	—
Rhode Island	58.7	—	59.8	60.6
South Dakota	41.7	36.1	34.9	34.5
Tennessee	60.6	—	66.5	63.5
Utah	60.5	59.9	60.4	50.2
Vermont	42.9	34.2	37.6	34.1
Washington	57.4	55.4	53.1	51.7
West Virginia	54.9	—	54.2	54.4
Wisconsin	49.1	43.2[e]	31.6[d]	40.9[e]
Wyoming	48.8	—	44.3	—

* F—Full Term; U—Unexpired Term.
 (10 Southern States omitted: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia.)
[b] Source: Gallup, "The Political Almanac 1952".
[c] 50.9 Republican Vote, 5.9 Progressive Vote.
[d] 58.2 Republican Vote, 10.2 Progressive Vote.
[e] 5.8 Progressive Vote, 53.3 Republican Vote.

DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGE OF MAJOR PARTY VOTE
1948 ELECTIONS, BASED ON STATE WIDE TWO-PARTY VOTE*

State	1948[b] President %	U.S. Senator %	Representative %	Governor %
Arizona	56.0	—	61.7	59.6
California	52.6	—	40.6	—
Colorado	53.3	67.4	54.8	66.3
Connecticut	50.0	—	50.0	50.1
Delaware	49.7	51.3	49.2	53.7
Idaho	52.5	50.7 (F) 48.1 (U)	50.7	—
Illinois	50.4	55.2	52.3	57.3
Indiana	49.9	—	51.7	54.3
Iowa	52.0	58.2	44.8	44.0
Kansas	45.7	43.7	42.5	41.5
Kentucky	58.3	51.5	56.5	—
Maine	43.1	28.7	33.7	34.4
Maryland	50.1	—	55.7	—
Massachusetts	56.7	46.7	50.1	59.3
Michigan	50.3	48.9	50.0	53.9
Minnesota	59.8	60.0	49.8	45.9
Missouri	58.4	—	58.9	57.1
Montana	56.6	57.0	57.5	56.0
Nebraska	45.8	43.3	41.7	39.9
Nevada	52.8	—	50.6	—
New Hampshire	47.6	41.5	43.2	47.5
New Jersey	48.9	48.6	48.4	—
New Mexico	57.0	57.4	58.7	54.7
New York	53.7	—	53.7	—
North Dakota	47.5	—	17.9	37.9
Ohio	50.8	—	52.4	53.7
Oklahoma	62.7	62.5	67.4	—
Oregon	49.7	40.0	37.3	45.6 (U)
Pennsylvania	48.7	—	48.9	—
Rhode Island	58.5	59.3	60.8	61.4
South Dakota	48.2	40.7	43.6	38.9
Tennessee	62.9	66.1	65.5	66.9
Utah	55.0	—	58.1	45.0
Vermont	38.1	—	39.2	28.0
Washington	56.8	—	50.1	48.3
West Virginia	57.8	57.0	58.3	57.1
Wisconsin	53.2	—	43.2	44.9
Wyoming	52.6	57.1	48.5	—

* F—Full Term; U—Unexpired Term.
 (10 Southern States omitted: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia.)
[b] Source: Gallup, "The Political Almanac 1952".

DEMOCRATIC PERCENTAGE OF MAJOR PARTY VOTE
1952 ELECTIONS, BASED ON STATE WIDE TWO-PARTY VOTE*

1952[a]

State	President %	U.S. Senator %	Representative %	Governor %
Arizona	41.7	48.7	51.5	39.8
California	43.1	—	46.0	—
Colorado	39.3	—	44.7	42.6
Connecticut	44.1	45.8 (F) 48.7 (U)	46.2	—
Delaware	48.1	45.5	48.1	47.9
Idaho	34.5	—	40.6	—
Illinois	45.0	—	46.0	47.4
Indiana	41.4	47.2	43.2	43.9
Iowa	35.8	—	33.2	47.9
Kansas	30.7	—	40.6	42.5
Kentucky	50.01	48.5	52.2	—
Maine	33.8	37.3	32.9	39.1
Maryland	44.2	47.5	48.2	—
Massachusetts	45.6	51.5	46.8	49.7
Michigan	44.2	49.2	47.4	50.2
Minnesota	44.4	42.8	46.0	44.3
Missouri	49.2	54.0	52.2	52.7
Montana	40.3	51.1	43.5	49.0
Nebraska	30.8	28.7 (F) 36.4 (U)	31.8	38.6
Nevada	38.6	48.3	49.5	—
New Hampshire	39.1	—	36.9	36.9
New Jersey	42.5	44.0	42.6	—
New Mexico	44.4	51.1	51.9	46.2
New York	44.0	39.6	46.1	—
North Dakota	28.6	26.0	21.6	21.3
Ohio	43.2	45.4	44.5	55.9
Oklahoma	45.4	—	58.7	—
Oregon	39.1	—	38.7	—
Pennsylvania	47.0	48.2	47.8	—
Rhode Island	49.1	54.8	54.1	52.6
South Dakota	30.7	—	31.4	29.8
Tennessee	49.9	74.4	70.2	79.4
Utah	41.1	45.7	44.6	44.9
Vermont	28.3	27.7	38.2	43.3
Washington	45.1	56.4	43.5	47.4
West Virginia	51.9	53.6	53.9	51.5
Wisconsin	38.8	45.7	38.4	37.4
Wyoming	37.2	48.4	39.9	—

* F—Full Term; U—Unexpired Term.

 (10 Southern States omitted: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia.)

[a] Source: Republican National Committee "The 1952 Elections—A Statistical Analysis." October, 1953, Table V.

Recent PAI Publications

THE HARD MONEY CRUSADE

by Bertram Gross and Wilfred Lumer. $2.00. A 192 page book describing the history, meaning and impact of recent monetary and credit policies . . . a constructive alternative to both inflation and high interest rates is proposed . . . an appendix of 30 key and comprehensive statistical tables . . . "valuable . . . instructive"—Burton Crane, The New York Times.

THE ASSAULT ON THE UN

by Alexander Uhl. 25 Cents. The only complete analysis of organizations and individuals in the U.S. attacking either the United Nations or the specialized UN agencies—from the "hate" groups to the moderates. An attractive, concisely-written 44 page pamphlet by a veteran journalist. "Most excellent . . . fully documented . . . very moderate in expression."—Arthur Sweetser, former Washington Information Director, United Nations.

THE RUSSIA WE FACE NOW

by Dr. Ethan T. Colton and Associates. Paper cover—$1.25. Cloth cover—$1.75. A 100 page factual and penetrating report of Malenkov's Russia by a panel of experts. Dr. Colton, former director of YMCA foreign programs and author of "Forty Years with Russians" and "The XYZ of Communism" heads the panel. Insight into the new Russia with proper historical perspective.

MARTIN TURNELL'S "BAUDELAIRE"

—Wallace Fowlie

THE Commonweal

Sight, Sound and the Fury

by Marshall McLuhan

News on the Networks

by William Pfaff

Volume LX, No. 1 April 9, 1954 Twenty Cents

THE SCREEN

FATHER KNOWS BEST

WITHOUT messing around with any of Wordsworth's sentimentalities about youth, "The Lonely Night" gets right down to the business of illustrating that childhood is the time for working out problems. This extraordinary film, a sixty-five-minute documentary produced by Irving Jacoby (who also directed and wrote the script) and Willard Van Dyke, will remind you at times of "The Quiet One," that fine movie of several years ago which dealt with the psychological case history of a maladjusted Negro child. The main difference is that "The Lonely Night" has for its central character an adult, a woman who, although she doesn't realize she's hanging on to her therapist mainly out of fear of being rejected again, is well on the road to recovery by way of the fact that she recognizes that she has a problem and is seeking help.

What makes "The Lonely Night" so remarkable as a film is that this story is told not as an illustrated lecture on how psychotherapy works but through the cinema medium in which the visuals are as important as the narration. Effectively contrasted with the scenes showing the neurotic Caroline re-living her past with her psychotherapist, are short sequences in which the relationships of a normal family are worked out.

Another remarkable thing about "The Lonely Night" is its good cast, most of whom are non-professionals. Actress Marian Seldes gives a moving performance as the tortured Caroline. And I'm glad to report that the contrasting "normal family" scenes are not all sweetness and light; nor is a rosy, serene future predicted for Caroline even though she has grown emotionally and has learned that there's a right time to cry, laugh, be angry, and be in love.

ANOTHER new film that has other things to say about psychiatry is "Knock on Wood." The lady psychiatrist in this case is carrying on a romance with her male patient, played by Danny Kaye, who bubbles with his usual charm. When "Knock on Wood" has Danny carrying on with song and dance it is very funny indeed, but the picture gets bogged down by its complicated plot about spies and blueprints for a new weapon (blueprints which are hidden in the heads of ventriloquist Kaye's two dummies) and I found myself sitting through these lengthy espionage episodes only waiting for Kaye and the fun.

Written, produced and directed by Norman Panama and Melvin Frank, "Knock on Wood" shows Danny, a product of an unhappy home life, with a strong aversion to marriage—but of course it takes pretty Mai Zetterling, as the psychiatrist, no time at all to re-do Danny as well as his dummies. I wish "Knock on Wood" had more of Kaye doing his wonderful specialty numbers; the psychiatry sessions would have lent themselves well to his kind of double-talk nonsense. But perhaps I shouldn't gripe. The satirical ballet sequence is a riot, and Danny is in his best style singing the hilarious ballad by Sylvia Fine called "The Drastic, Livid History of Monohan O'Han."

ALLEN Rivkin had a good idea in writing the script of "Prisoner of War," but somehow the film makers got over-enthusiastic and the result, instead of being a semi-documentary on what happened to soldiers who were captured by the Reds in Korea, is a hopped-up melodrama about deprivation and torture with all the UN fighters standing as symbols of goodness and all the Koreans and Russians being the personification of evil.

The plot, in which Ronald Reagan is commissioned to be captured by the Reds to learn what the prison camps are like, is interesting enough; if Director Andrew Marton had allowed his good cast to carry on in a simple and realistic manner, this film could have been quite instructive. But piling cruelty on torture, the material becomes only a succession of grim details. Reagan, Steve Forrest, Dewey Martin, Oscar Homolka, Darryl Hickman and all the others in this large all-male cast do well enough with their roles, but the cards are stacked against them.

PHILIP T. HARTUNG.

COMMUNICATIONS

"THE MURROW SHOW"

Ithaca, N. Y.

TO the Editors: Although I admire Mr. Cogley's ability to criticize spokesmen on his own side of the political fence, I feel that I must take issue with "The Murrow Show" [March 26].

There is an essential difference between the methods employed in demonstrating positive evil in a particular situation and those used in indicating objectively the pros and cons of a given issue. It is not necessary, for instance, to point out the number of lives a doctor has saved while proving that he is an abortionist. An alleged murderer may be a kindly husband and father but this would have little relevance in a criminal proceeding. In the same manner Buchenwald adequately demonstrates the evils of the Hitler regime. McCarthy's abuse of a Congressional committee's investigative function and the consequent carnage to basic American liberties, if properly understood, would be condemned by all but the most totalitarian-minded of American citizens as such a positive evil.

Mr. Murrow's job in this case is to present these abuses as he sees them. If he can show a continuing pattern of abuse then no amount of morality in other aspects of the Senator's life has any bearing on his fitness to head a Congressional committee. Similarly, if it can be shown that he lacks personal integrity and will use any means to further his own political position, then no matter how well he looks as a bridegroom or how many Communists he has exposed, he is still unqualified to hold a Senate seat.

GEORGE A. SMITH.

Good point. But what bothered me was the precedent set for the use of selective film clips to illustrate a partisan political thesis. With this technique, commercially sponsored TV can become a deadly political weapon and can be used against anybody the sponsor or the commentator is out to "get."—J.C.

Pittsburgh, Penna.

TO the Editors: When is the McCarthy "pro" but mostly "con" issue to be ended in your magazine? Surely there are more important matters to be presented and more serious problems to be discussed. The moaning and groaning over "McCarthyism" might suggest that The Commonweal is becoming the Commonwail.

I have pretty well determined my judgment on McCarthy and so has The Commonweal. Let's on to new fields of discovery of solutions to many disturbing world affairs.

In reading "The Murrow Show," I thought that I detected an adoring attitude towards Mr. Murrow on the part of Mr. Cogley. Personally I think that Mr. Murrow has a sly manner in slanting news. . . .

T. B. LAPPAN.

As long as Senator McCarthy keeps up his headline-a-day pace, we're stuck with him; and so is the nation and the world.

THE EDITORS.

New York, N. Y.

TO the Editors: The "See It Now" program has not gotten by without comment on its potential danger. Jack Gould, the New York Times television reporter, in the March 21 issue of that paper also expressed concern over the possibility of selective accounts or views of the news being used by demagogic commentators. No doubt, the danger of this kind of abuse of the news is serious and will tempt the ingenious political reporter to make use of the carefully chosen word, the carefully selected newsreel sequence. That this method has been utilized before both on the radio and in the press cannot be denied. That it has been employed on television to a lesser degree is also manifest. It is inevitable that in the future this method of reporting will be used frequently on television. It can misinform the public; that is true. That it can present the truth is also true. Yet if the choice were to be given to the public, between the quiet, ordered type of dodging-the-issues broadcasting that has been sponsored in the past, and the method fostered by Mr. Murrow, I would choose Mr. Murrow's method. Television reporting has been serene long enough, delicately tiptoeing on all major issues and not hitting directly at the facts, not thoroughly evaluating the problems. Action was what was needed and action was what we got on "See It Now."

I am glad that John Cogley took the space to point out that reportorial abuses may be given impetus because of this telecast, but I am also glad that Edward R. Murrow took the time to say what he felt.

Although obviously motivated by a sense of fair play, the article painted an exaggerated picture of Senator McCarthy's being ill-treated by the "See It Now" presentation. It was said that McCarthy has no adequate defense against this type of programming. What else can McCarthy call on but his own words to defend himself? He has no defense. Whose speech did Murrow use but McCarthy's to illustrate his points? And if we were to see and read all of the words of Senator McCarthy, unchanged, we would still get the same impression of the man's methods emphasized by Mr. Murrow's selective film clippings. As for its being a one-man show, without the influence of any of those who disagreed with Murrow's evaluation of McCarthy, what else could it be at this time? Have we not had enough McCarthyism from which to draw upon for opposing opinions to be able to evaluate what Murrow did? I know Mr. Cogley is going to say he quarrels not with the ideas presented by Murrow but with the method of presentation. I think his fears, although plausible, are unwarranted in this particular case. The program was right for the time and should have been produced. The method used by Murrow will be abused, but that is the price we have to pay for action, the chance we have to take when we express ourselves.

ALEX KEMENY.

"RELIGION IN SPAIN"

Greenwich, Conn.

TO the Editors: The recent report on the state of religion among Spanish workers, as taken from Ecclesia and widely reported in the American press, is an unusually enlightening study for anyone genuinely interested in understanding Spain. I was, therefore, pleased to see you editorialize on this vital subject [February 19] because I felt that your interpretation would not only place this report in its proper perspective, but would also serve to assess its true significance.

However, after reading your comments, I find that I must disagree with your conclusions. Moreover, as you know, I have never been one to indulge in what you describe very appropriately as "the inordinate romanticizing done by some over Catholic Spain." I hope you will give me the opportunity to present what I believe is a more accurate interpretation of the meaning of Ecclesia's report. As authority for what I say, I offer two extensive visits to that country in the past year and considerable personal inquiry into the precise subject of your editorial.

First of all, may I mention that not more than six months ago, a prominent Spanish Jesuit told me exactly what Ecclesia has now said. I single him out because at that time I sensed a general reluctance, among both ecclesiastical and lay Catholics whom I interrogated in Spain, to recognize what is now reported regarding the workers' attitude towards religion. I believe the facts were quite apparent then, yet understandable shame seemed to prevent them from admitting the realities of this situation. Hence, the reaction was generally to minimize the problem and cite examples of tangible efforts that have been and are being made to correct this condition.

As I see it, Ecclesia's report is a rather remarkable development. It means that the Church has finally decided to bring this problem out in the open, admit its failure and work for new solutions to return the worker to religious practice. It seems to me that unless we realize what a departure this means—to recognize fallibility frankly and to recite at length how serious this problem is—we are not giving this report proper significance. It should be hailed as a healthy sign of self-criticism and prospective improvement.

Your editorial, after pointing out how discouraging Ecclesia's report is, goes on to say: "that it should not be surprising to anyone aware of the realities of social and economic life in Franco Spain." I wish this point had been spelled out more fully, because otherwise one is led to the conclusion, as I have been, that these realities are responsible for the continuation of this condition of irreligion in the Spanish proletariat. I think the conclusion drawn by you is an over-simplification of a very complex subject.

In the first place, the conditions about which Ecclesia talks are not really new. The loss of the vast majority of Spanish workers as practicing Catholics is a phenomenon that has been developing over a period of nearly one hundred years, under all types of governments: republics, constitutional monarchies, military dictatorships and finally, Franco. It is not a defense of the present regime to say that for many reasons, some perhaps idealistic, but mostly for self-preservation, it has done much to assist the Church (the propriety of these methods is not being discussed) in its efforts to restore the workers to a religious outlook.

Then, if we examine social and economic life conditions for workers under the present Government, it will be found that great stress is placed by it on wooing labor, which for the most part favored the Loyalist cause during the Civil War. It is true that free labor unions do not exist and that strikes are forbidden. However, the Government has endeavored to compensate for the loss of these rights by much labor and social legislation that has tangibly benefited this class of society. A point has been made to increase its purchasing power by compulsory wage increases and by keeping down the price of basic commodities, such as bread and oil. It is better off today, relatively speaking, than the white collar workers. In short, labor is, for the most part, a less than enthusiastic yet not an unwilling beneficiary of the Government's determination to avoid the recurrence of social and economic conditions that could lead to labor strife or an increase in Marxian activity.

You must pardon my rather lengthy description of social and economic conditions as they affect labor, because inadequate as they may be, the label "Franco" does not properly explain, as your editorial implies, the discouraging conditions Ecclesia reports. The loss of such a large percentage of workers as practicing believers is a characteristic phenomenon of most Latin countries. Remarkably similar reports on the working class would, I think, obtain for Italy and France, where democratic regimes are in power, and I believe you will agree that it would be most improper and illogical for us to attribute this condition to their present governments. In these countries also, the problem and its causes are not rooted so much in the present as in the past.

Responsibility would seem to lie rather with the Church itself. Gerald Brenan brings this out very forcefully in his Spanish Labyrinth when he points out that when the Church ceased to be the Church of the people, as it was in the days of Vittoria, Suarez and other illustrious defenders of the people's rights, unwittingly or otherwise, it became identified in the eyes of the masses as the spokesman or instrumentality of a particular class or classes, and it was precisely then that the Spanish worker began to stop practicing his religion and eventually fell prey to Marxian socialism, anarchism, syndicalism, communism, etc. A comparable development could be traced in Italy and France.

I think we should all applaud Ecclesia's forthright report and hope it will bring about a new approach to labor on the part of the Spanish ecclesiastical authorities, and that its example will encourage similar examinations of conscience and mea culpas in many other countries where the same problem exists and where it is customary to minimize its existence or to blame its prevalence on alien influences.

CHARLES HENRY LEE.

to the Senate, and the only recession the House made was with respect to the additional judges the Senate placed in the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. The Senate amendments provided for additional judges for instance in Oklahoma, Kansas, California, and the District of Columbia. Those are the ones who come to my recollection.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On request of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the consideration of the report will be delayed temporarily.

WAR CRIMES TRIAL IN AMERICAN-OCCUPIED EUROPE

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I should like to discuss in detail today a matter which I certainly do not enjoy discussing. I think it is a subject, however, which must be gone into in detail and brought to the attention of the Senate. It appears to me that it is especially appropriate to bring the matter up at this time while we are discussing the subject of giving financial aid to Europe. The subject I wish to discuss has to do with the conduct of our armed forces in meting out justice, or alleged justice, in the American occupied zones of Europe. It has to do with the investigation, or alleged investigation, by Army committees, and by one of our own Senate subcommittees.

Within the last 10 years this country has been involved in two major conflicts, both centering around the all-important issue of human rights—one, a fighting war with the totalitarian government of Hitler; the other, a cold war with the totalitarian government of Stalin.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] I know will wish to take exception to some of the things I am going to say, and for his convenience I give him a copy of my statement.

The first of those two major conflicts was the most expensive fighting war—in terms of the number of lives lost and the billions of dollars spent—that this country has ever fought. The second is the most expensive single project—in terms of dollars spent—that this country has ever embarked upon. Both of these conflicts have been concerned with stopping the spread of principles exactly opposite to ours. We have embarked upon both largely for the purpose of bringing to the people of the world the same standards of human rights that have been developed in this country. We have felt that it was a dangerous threat to our way of life to allow either of those governments, with their disregard for human rights, to move forward unchecked and force their set of standards on other people.

If then we feel it is this important to keep alive in the world the principle of the dignity of man, and our standards of justice and right; if we think it important enough to sacrifice the lives of hundreds of thousands of young men, and jeopardize the economy of our country by giving away billions of dollars, then it is of utmost importance that we demonstrate at all times to the people of the world that our form of government actually is what we say it is—that it is more fair, more honest, more decent than the governments they have known under Hitler or Stalin, and that our form of government stands for the rights of the individual over and above those of the state. In the face of what it has cost us to date to halt the spread of dictatorships and totalitarian governments, it is our duty to demonstrate by our actions the purpose behind these two great conflicts—our firm belief in the importance of the rights of the individual.

A very serious question has been raised as to whether a few incompetent and irresponsible men representing this country in western Europe today are not going a long way toward defeating this purpose.

The manner in which some of the war-crimes trials in Europe have been conducted does not in any way reflect the principles of fair play, decency, and honesty for which we Americans profess to stand. To look at the record of those trials it would appear that we have forgotten why we fought a war with Hitler and why we are spending billions of dollars abroad in an attempt to sell the democratic way of life over communism.

Regardless of the fact that the Nazis committed horrible acts of cruelty before and during the war, and regardless of the fact that those guilty of war crimes are entitled to no sympathy, the fact is that representatives of the American people and of the United States Army are guilty of sacrificing the basic principles of American justice, guilty of failing completely to protect the rights of the innocent and convict only the guilty, and guilty of adopting many of the very same tactics of which we accuse Hitler and Stalin. The cost of their ignorance, bungling, and incompetence has been to almost completely nullify any moral value which the war-crimes trials might have had.

The account which I am giving today will be an account of the manner in which members and hirelings of the United States Army conducted the war-crimes trials in western Europe and of the subsequent investigations of the conduct of these trials by two civilian judges, by an Army board, and by a subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee. It is not a picture of which the American people can be proud. As Bishop Theophilus Wurm of Stuttgart, the aged leader of German Protestantism, said in a blistering statement issued to the press on the onesidedness and the problematic character of the methods used in the war-crimes trials:

> Never will the people of the town of Schwabisch Hall, who in the nights heard the cries of pain of the tortured beyond the prison walls, be made to believe that these investigators were servants of justice and not servants of revenge.

In order to give a clear picture of this situation, it is necessary first to recall some recent history with which most of us are acquainted.

On the 16th day of December 1944 the German Army started its final all-out attempt to destroy the Allied armies in Europe. The first target was our main supply port of Antwerp. In a period of several weeks, they destroyed and captured a vast amount of American equipment and killed and wounded hundreds of thousands of Americans. This entire operation, in which the Germans penetrated the Allied lines approximately 70 miles, is known as the Battle of the Bulge.

A combat team under Lieutenant Colonel Peiper was one of the German units involved in this final push. Combat Group Peiper was assigned the task of reaching the Mass River within a period of 2 days. This meant breaking through the Allied lines and traveling many miles in Allied-held territory.

During the Battle of the Bulge many war crimes were charged against various units of the German Army—thirteen major incidents, plus a sizable number of minor incidents. One of the major incidents was the massacre of between 40 and 80 Americans at the Malmedy Crossroads. All of the trials for war crimes perpetrated during the Battle of the Bulge, however, have come to be classed in a group known as the "Malmedy Cases." These war crimes trials were held at Dachau. In referring to the "Malmedy Cases," the reference is not only to the actual Malmedy Crossroads massacre, but also to a great number of alleged war crimes that occurred during the entire Battle of the Bulge—some of them a great distance from the Malmedy Crossroads.

It seems to be definitely established that part of Peiper's group was responsible for the crossroads massacre. Apparently there is no question about it. Most of this group were killed by Allied soldiers as they pushed forward into the Allied lines. The few survivors of the Peiper group who were at the crossroads as well as the balance of the Peiper units were rounded up from various prison camps at the end of the war and charged with most of the atrocities that occurred during the Battle of the Bulge, such as the shooting of Belgian civilians as well as American prisoners of war.

After extended interrogation by members of the United States Army, practically all of the accused either signed confessions or signed statements implicating their coaccused. Seventy-four of the group were tried at Dachau and all convicted except one, who committed suicide during his questioning.

After the convictions, members of both the prosecution and defense teams who returned to this country made public statements to the effect that the methods used in getting convictions neither protected the rights of the innocent nor convicted the guilty, and that from the trial records there was no way of knowing whether guilty men or innocent men were being hanged.

One of the returning prosecuting attorneys, for example, stated that the deputy judge advocate in the European theater told the trial staff to "give the accused a fair trial and then hang them," and that the law member of the court ordered all members of the trial staff at Dachau in December 1946 to "pay less attention to the principles of American justice and jurisprudence in the trials of war criminals, and forget any knowledge of the spirit upon which our form of government was founded and fostered."

The claims of improper conduct on the part of American Army officers and civilians employed by the Army to obtain statements and confessions from the accused were so startling in nature that the then Secretary of the Army, Kenneth Royall, appointed two outstanding judges—Judge Edward Van Roden of Pennsylvania and Judge Gordon Simpson of Texas—to go to Europe and make a complete investigation of the vast welter of charges and countercharges and give him a report thereon.

After an investigation, the Van Roden-Simpson committee made a report, which perhaps can best be summarized in the words of Judge Van Roden, who said:

> From the conduct of these trials, it is impossible to know whether the men being hanged are guilty or innocent.

The two civilian judges who were chosen to head this committee because it was felt they could and would approach the problem in an objective and disinterested manner, brought back a sordid story—a story to the effect that the American interrogation team tortured the defendants by means of beatings, kickings, and other physical abuse, that they conducted mock trials and threatened harm to families of the accused in order to get the accused to sign confessions dictated by members of the interrogation team.

> Some of the statements and confessions—

The report states—> were obtained by the use of mock trials in which one or more persons attired as Army officers pretended to preside as judges and others attired in Army officers' uniforms pretended to be the prosecutor and defender of the accused.

The report and the statements of other disinterested witnesses describe in detail the weird proceedings which took place during a mock trial and which were designed to intimidate the accused and lead him to believe "it was his last chance to talk" and that he was actually on trial for his life.

If I may describe the mock trial—and on this there is practically no dispute between the defense and the prosecution—one of the members of the prosecution team would go to the cell where the accused, who might or might not be guilty, was being kept in solitary confinement. The accused, his head covered with a black hood, would be led into a small, dark room. In the center of the room was a table covered with a black cloth on which stood a crucifix and lighted candles.

Several members of the interrogation team, as I have said, were American citizens of very recent origin—German political refugees from Hitlerian Germany—employed by the Army, because of their hatred for the defendants, for the purpose of getting confessions from the accused. As one of them said, he would get a confession from any of the defendents that he murdered Abraham Lincoln, if such a confession were wanted.

The man would be brought up to the room where phony judges sat behind the table. There was a phony prosecution attorney, and there were phony witnesses. Then the defendant would be assigned a phony defense counsel.

Up to this point there is no dispute whatsoever in the testimony. After the trial was completed—and from this point on there is a difference of opinion—many of the witnesses give the remainder of the picture as follows: When the trial was completed, and after the defendant was sentenced to be hanged, the phony defense counsel who, during the trial, had won the confidence of the defendant, would go back to his cell and say, "If you will sign this confession which we have prepared, instead of hanging at sunrise we will get you off with 5 or 10 years."

There is evidence that at times phony priests and phony ministers were used. If those methods did not work, then another method was resorted to—a method, incidentally, which one member of the interrogation team, a Mr. Steiner, bragged about. In fact Mr. Steiner bragged so much about th confessions he obtained that an investigation was made. This investigation showed the situation was so bad that Steiner was discharged.

I do not condemn men like Steiner so much, because he had every reason to hate and dislike members of the German Army—his mother had been killed by the Germans. But I do condemn those who hired him to get confessions. He bragged about how he would take a man out, after a phony or mock trial, put a black hood over his head, lead him up three or four steps, put a rope around his neck and tighten it until he was unable to breathe, then loosen the rope and tell him that if he would sign a confession, he would get off with only 5 or 10 years imprisonment, instead of being executed. Of course it is not too difficult to get confessions under such circumstances.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I apologize for interrupting the Senator's remarks, but I must leave about 2:30. I should like to know who was the authority immediately responsible in Germany, whom the Senator claims tolerated or condoned or ordered such practices.

Mr. McCARTHY. I was coming to that.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am sorry to interrupt, but, as I have said, I have to leave about now.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is quite all right; I was coming to that point. I wish I did not have to discuss it, but obviously I must. The man primarily responsible is the present law partner of the chairman of the Senate subcommittee that is investigating the charges, a Major Fanton. He was the man directly in charge of the interrogation team during all the time of the alleged brutality.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Who was the commanding officer in that area?

Mr. McCARTHY. A Colonel Streit, I believe.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am trying to determine where the ultimate authority lodged in connection with these activities.

Mr. McCARTHY. The ultimate authority lodged in General Clay. But Colonel Streit was the intermediate authority.

The man who was directly in charge of the interrogation team, the man who hired the refugees from Hitlerian Germany to go into the cells and get the confessions and statements, the man who countenanced the beatings, the mock trials, and all the other medieval torture methods, is a young man from Connecticut named Fanton, who unfortunately is the law partner of the man the Senate assigned the job of making the "thorough and complete" investigation.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am sorry that I must leave now, but I have a meeting which I must attend. I shall read the remainder of the Senator's statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to determine the chain of authority, not particularly as to General Clay, but as to the Judge Advocate General's office.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I should like to advise the Senator from Iowa that the subcommittee which has been referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin has conducted a long series of investigations to determine who was responsible for the whole conduct of the trials. I would make available to the Senator from Iowa a very complete record of the testimony as to the chain of command.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I shall be glad to have that, but now I must leave.

Mr. BALDWIN. I simply wish to say that before accepting completely what the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin has said about the matter, I think it would be highly advisable for Senators to read the sworn testimony in the record as to the chain of command.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I have come to no conclusions whatsoever regarding this matter. Of course I am interested in the question of procedure.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield at any time to the Senator from Connecticut or to any other members of the subcommittee, to permit them to ask any questions or make comments, assuming that I may have unanimous consent to do so without thereby losing the floor. I assume that there may be some points which various Senators may wish to discuss as I proceed.

Beatings, kickings in the testicles, and other types of physical abuse of prisoners were also a part of the softening-up process employed by our questioners to get confessions from the accused despite the fact that it is one of the oldest established rules of Anglo-Saxon law that confessions secured by means of torture are absolutely worthless.

Obviously this system was effective in producing whatever type of confession or statement the questioner desired. It is an unquestioned fact that an innocent man will scream just as loudly as a guilty man when being tortured, and likewise that an innocent man will sign a confession the same as a guilty man if tortured enough.

The system was 100 percent productive in these cases. The trial records of this group of Dachau cases show that 74 of the accused were tried; 73 were convicted on the basis of confessions signed by the accused or statements by coaccused. The seventy-fourth man, incidentally, committed suicide during his questioning. If it had not been for that, so the chief prosecutor said, he would have had a "perfect record" and would have convicted all 74.

The Van Roden-Simpson Report, written by two civilian judges who had no personal interest whatsoever in the trials, was made public in January 1949.

Three months later, in March 1949, an Army board headed by Col. John Raymond concluded another investigation into the conduct of war-crimes trials of these cases and submitted its report thereon. This Army board was appointed to further investigate the charges, confirmed by the Van Roden-Simpson Committee, that physical torture, mock trials, mock hangings, and so forth, were employed to secure confessions with which to convict the accused.

The Raymond Board substantially confirmed the findings of the Van Roden-Simpson Committee. In fact, it added the findings that members of the Army's prosecution staff, under the guise of "taking care" of the husband's case, "fraternized"—for want of a better word—with wives of the accused who moved into the town of Dachau during the trials. The Raymond Army Report also stated that "representatives of the prosecution threatened harm to relatives of the accused if they would not confess." In fairness, however, it should be stated that several of the prosecution team who took the wives of some of the accused to the officers' club and got them liquored up, and so forth, were discharged, and were sent back to the United States.

As to charges of physical violence, the Raymond Board cited from an affidavit signed by Dr. Knorr, the dentist at Schwabisch Hall, which showed that he "treated 15 or 20 of the suspects for injuries to the mouth and jaw, apparently inflicted by blows."

After confirming the charges that convictions were secured by means of confessions and statements gotten from the accused as a result of torture, the Raymond Board concluded:

> The methods employed in interrogation, however, had a definite psychological effect on the defendants and resulted in their being more amenable to giving statements.

This statement in the Army report, as much as the charges of misconduct against the Army prosecution staff, greatly disturbed our Special Senate Investigating Committee and convinced our members that the matter should be investigated thoroughly and completely by a fair and impartial committee.

It was decided by a unanimous vote of our Special Senate Investigating Committee that we investigate the conduct of the war-crimes trials in American occupied Europe for the purpose of (1) recommending any changes we considered desirable or necessary in the judicial system under which these trials were conducted, and (2) determining the facts in regard to the alleged torture and duress used in obtaining confessions from accused and statements from witnesses, and to determine whether it was possible to know whether we were hanging the guilty or the innocent.

I very strongly felt that because of the actions of a group of vengeance-minded, irresponsible, and completely incompetent men representing this country in western Europe, our Government had been placed in the position of condoning a band of brutalitarianism worse than that practiced by the most morally degenerate in either Hitler's or Stalin's camp—as though morality and right could be determined by national tags.

I felt that if we in the United States Senate were to sit idly by and not raise a voice against the use of Hitlerian and communistic tactics by a group which is certainly not representative of the American Army or the American people, it could mean only one thing to the world. It could only mean that their ways were our ways and that the democratic way of life, which we are spending billions of dollars to sell to the people of the world, sanctioned a brand of justice that comparies unfavorably with the worst in history.

If the criminal phase of a judicial system protects the rights of the innocent and convicts and properly punishes the guilty, then it is a good system; otherwise, it is bad. If what the Van Roden-Simpson Committee and the Raymond Board said is true, then the American system of meting out justice in western Europe was neither effective in protecting the right of the innocent nor in convicting the guilty.

If the tactics used by our Army could be justified because they "created the right psychological atmosphere in which to secure confessions," then by the same rule either a Hitler or a Stalin could justify his actions in like manner.

After unanimously agreeing to conduct an investigation into the conduct of war-crimes trials in western Europe, it was decided by our Special Senate Investigation Committee to invite the Judiciary and Armed Services Committees to participate.

The chairman of the Armed Services Committee vigorously protested against such an investigation by our committee on the ground that the Armed Services Committee alone had jurisdiction to conduct the investigation. He, thereupon, appointed the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] chairman of a Special Armed Services Subcommittee to "investigate" the Dachau trials of those accused of war crimes during the Battle of the Bulge. Other members were the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT].

The selection of members to this Armed Services Subcommittee greatly disturbed those of us who were concerned with getting a fair and unbiased investigation. It was, of course, extremely unusual that a Republican Senator should have been appointed chairman of a committee which was controlled by the Democrats. The reason for this departure from the usual Senate rules was, however, rather easy to see. The selection of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] was even more unusual and questionable in view of the fact that he had previously indicated on the Senate floor on January 27, 1949, that he believed the charges of misconduct were "groundless." He did request an investigation, however, so as to give a certain "young man from Connecticut" an opportunity to answer these "groundless" charges.

It later developed that the "young man from Connecticut," who the chairman of this subcommittee defended on the Senate floor, was Dwight Fanton, the chairman's law partner.

Major Fanton was in command of the team that got the confessions and statements from the accused. He was in complete charge of those who both the Raymond Army Board and the judges' committee reported had used physical force, mock trials, and so forth, to get confessions. Whether these charges against Major Fanton were true or false—whether he was completely competent, as he claims, or shamefully incompetent as the above report and the testimony of some of the witnesses would indicate—was one of the very important matters upon which the committee would have to make a decision.

I felt that another investigation of this matter would be a complete waste of time and effort if it were not conducted in a completely fair and impartial manner. I felt that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], because of his close personal connection and his law partnership with Major Fanton, one of the men whose actions were to be investigated, and because of his previous statement on the Senate floor, labeling as "groundless" the charges found to be true by both the Van Roden-Simpson committee and the Raymond Army Board, was most assuredly not the man to head up an investigation which, if it were to be worth while, had to be impartial and unbiased.

When it was called to the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] that an investigation of his own law partner by him would be a farce since he had already in a speech on the Senate floor, in effect labeled Fanton simon-pure, BALDWIN did not step aside to let a disinterested Senator take over the chairmanship.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me go a little further first.

While I do not doubt that the Senator from Connecticut honestly felt that it was necessary for him to head this subcommittee so as to bring out what he considered to be the truth, it has long been the practice of judges and chairmen of committees to step aside under similar circumstances—not because they themselves felt they could not be fair, but because conditions were such that in the eyes of the public a fair hearing would be impossible. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, as the Senator from Wisconsin knows, the chairman of the subcommittee, the junior Senator from Connecticut, as well as the other two members of the committee, find themselves in a difficult position, because throughout this whole matter it is their duty and their purpose and desire to conduct themselves with the utmost impartiality in an effort to find the truth concerning the serious charges which have been made by the Senator from Wisconsin and others.

I think, however, Mr. President, it should appear in the RECORD at this particular point that the junior Senator from Connecticut offered on the floor of the Senate a resolution calling for an investigation of the trial of the perpetrators of the so-called Malmedy massacres. That came about for many reasons. One of them was, there had been filed in the Supreme Court of the United States by the chief of the defense counsel a petition for a new trial, or for other legal relief, to which were attached a number of extrajudicial affidavits drawn up by the condemned prisoners, making very serious charges. Others were by members of the prosecution, who had never, with one or two exceptions, been called before any of the reviewing boards to give their own direct testimony, but who, on one or two occasions, had submitted affidavits, to give to these men, who were members of the United States Army and who had conducted the investigation and the prosecution, an opportunity to present their point of view with reference to the situation.

There were other reasons behind it, too, the chief one being that I felt, as the junior Senator from Wisconsin feels, that these trials were extremely important; that the way in which they were handled had a tremendous significance not only to the Germans but to the whole world; that we were concerned with a very important experience in the matter of war crimes trials and their conduct, the prosecution, the make-up of the courts, the times at which the trials should be held, and all the many intricate details that enter into it.

So, Mr. President, I offered the resolution. It was referred to the Armed Services Committee, and the chairman of the committee appointed me to a subcommittee, with two colleagues on the committee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], to conduct the investigation called for by the resolution.

We began the conduct of the investigation. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was also tremendously interested in the matter. We felt in the Armed Services Committee, that since it pertained to the conduct of the Army, one of the branches of the armed forces, it was well within the province of our committee. So the subcommittee was appointed and began its hearing.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to yield at as great length as the Senator from Connecticut desires, without my losing the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, It is not my purpose to get into a debate with my colleague from Wisconsin over the subject at this time, because at the proper time we shall have a complete report, based upon sworn testimony taken by the committee, not only in this country but, I hope, abroad. But I think it is only fair to the committee and to the junior Senator from Connecticut and his colleagues on the subcommittee to make this statement.

We asked the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments if the members desired to have a representative sit with the committee. As I recall, I personally extended an invitation to the Senator from Wisconsin, because I knew of his interest in the matter, and he did sit as a member of the committee for a time. I desire to say, and I do not think he can successfully contradict the statement, that every single witness suggested by the junior Senator from Wisconsin was called by the committee.

The question regarding the relationship of the junior Senator from Connecticut, who was chairman of the subcommittee, to Major Fanton, who was a junior law partner in the firm of which the junior Senator from Connecticut had been a member for a great many years, except during the period of time when he was Governor of Connecticut, was raised with considerable vehemence by the junior Senator from Wisconsin. When it was raised I thought it wise and proper to take it up before the full Armed Services Committee. So I presented the matter to the committee and told the committee that I should be very glad to withdraw as the chairman of the subcommittee. The committee, however, saw no reason why, because of this particular individual connection with the matter, and in the light of the testimony of a great number of other witnesses who would be called——

Mr. McCARTHY. May I interrupt the Senator a moment? Do I correctly understand that the Armed Services Committee was informed that Major Fanton was in charge of the interrogation during all the alleged brutalities, that it was informed that he was the Senator's law partner, that he was the man who was principally to be investigated, and that the Armed Services Committee took the position that it was perfectly proper for the Senator to act as chairman of the subcommittee investigating his own law partner?

Mr. BALDWIN. I do not recall the exact details of the conversation. It may be that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] recalls them, for he was present at the time. The matter was presented and the importance of the young man's connection as a witness was also detailed. I think the junior Senator from Wisconsin is somewhat generous with the way in which he deals with the facts, because it is my recollection that Fanton was a junior officer to Colonel Ellis, who had charge of the whole matter, and that Fanton came after the organization had been there for some time. He was there, perhaps, during the most important part of the time.

Mr. McCARTHY. Major Fanton was in sole and direct charge of the interrogation. Colonel Ellis had nothing to do with the interrogation. He was in charge of the prosecution. Colonel Ellis came on the scene after Major Fanton had been there for some time, and Major Fanton left after his job of getting confessions and statements was substantially ended. Fanton came on the scene in complete charge of the interrogation. He was the man who hired and fired the refugees. Then Colonel Ellis, who was the chief prosecutor, came upon the scene. It is all a matter of record.

Mr. BALDWIN. It is all a matter of record, and the record has a better recollection than has either the Senator from Wisconsin or myself.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, may I have the general unanimous consent that I may yield not only for questions, but for comments by the members of the subcommittee, without my losing the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I did not hear the colloquy which preceded the latest observations, but I should like to refresh the memory of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut as to what happened in the Armed Services Committee when the matter was brought to the attention of that committee by letter, I think, from some organization called for the prevention of world war III. It criticized the acting of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut as chairman of the subcommittee because a former law partner of his was one of the witnesses or was in some way involved in the matter. The Senator from Connecticut said he did not want to continue if anyone had any question about the matter, and the chairman of the Armed Services Committee said that he and the committee had full confidence in the Senator from Connecticut to carry on the investigation impartially and to arrive at justice in the matter, and asked the Senator from Connecticut to carry on as chairman of the subcommittee. He expressed the assent of the entire committee in making that observation.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee this question: Does he think it was proper to have, as chairman of the subcommittee, a man who had been a law partner of the alleged principal wrongdoer, and to have as the second member of the three-man committee the Senator from Tennessee, who was the law partner of Ralph Shumacker, who had been accused in a number of affidavits of brutalities? Does the Senator think it was proper to have those two Senators conducting the investigation? I know that every judge feels that he himself is perfectly competent and perfectly fair. There is no doubt that the Senator himself felt he would be absolutely fair in the matter. He took such a small part in it that I have not been dwelling on his connection with it at all. But does the Senator think that in the eyes of the world it looks fair, honest, and decent?

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCARTHY. I will yield to the Senator from Tennessee, if I may.

Mr. KEFAUVER. To my own knowledge, the Senator has not correctly stated the relationship of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut with the former member of his law firm.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not a former member; a present member.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Any way, the Senator from Connecticut is in a better position to state what that relationship is than is the Senator from Tennessee.

I want to say, in regard to the Senator's inference as to the junior Senator from Tennessee, that I never knew, until the young man came forward to testify, that Ralph Shumacker had been connected with the matter in any way. He was not one of the principals involved. The truth is not as the Senator from Wisconsin has stated, and he well knows that it is not in the evidence that this young man was ever a law partner of mine.

Mr. McCARTHY. What kind of a partner was he?

Mr. KEFAUVER. The truth is that in 1931 and 1932 he was employed as a young lawyer in a firm of which I was a member. After his service in the war he went into the mercantile business, and I have never seen any charge leveled against Ralph Shumacker. When he testified as a witness I frankly stated that I had known the young man, that he had been employed as a law clerk in our law firm almost 18 years previously.

Mr. McCARTHY. By "law clerk" the Senator means a lawyer?

Mr. KEFAUVER. As a young lawyer in our law firm. I am sorry the Senator from Wisconsin would feel that that connection would cause the Senator from Tennessee to have any bias in the matter.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me make myself clear.

Mr. KEFAUVER. It is my understanding that he was called as a witness to tell what he had known about the matter. I had heard of no accusations made against Mr. Shumacker.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have made no accusations against Mr. Shumacker. However, for the Senator's information, I would like to call his attention to the fact that the Ramond report—that is the Army board report—stated that Captain Shumacker was among those—and I quote—"principally accused of misconduct." I would also like to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question, and I think it is important to have his answer in the RECORD. I ask the Senator whether he thinks it is proper to have as the membership of this subcommittee, a chairman whose present law partner, not a former law partner, but whose present law partner, was in charge of the interrogation during the course of the alleged brutalities, which the Army committee said were true, and the Senator from Tennessee as the ranking Democratic member of the committee, whose former law employee, a young man who worked in his law firm for 2 years, who was charged in any number of affidavits with brutality. The question is not whether in the Senator's own mind he thought he could do a good job, but whether in the eyes of the people of the country and of the world any report the committee rendered would be worth a tinker's dam.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I should like to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that, so far as I am concerned, I have the fullest confidence in the integrity and fairness of the Senator from Connecticut, and I think the public appreciates and knows that he enjoys a reputation and standing for doing a job fairly and equitably.

Insofar as my part is concerned, it seems to me that in sitting on committees in Congress it is impossible to eliminate from the roll of witnesses those with whom one may have had some personal contact in years past. If a Senator were on an important committee, and a large number of witnesses were called, and it were assumed that in the consideration of matters he was not able fairly to judge the testimony of someone whom he had known or been employed with 18 years before, I think it might eliminate almost every member of every committee considering matters.

Mr. McCARTHY. I know I cannot insist on an answer, but I should like to know whether the Senator thinks it was proper to have as the chairman of this committee the law partner of the man who was in charge of the interrogation team during the time most of the medieval torture methods are alleged to have occurred. I might say that this is the first time I have mentioned the connection of the Senator from Tennessee with Mr. Shumacker, who was charged with brutality, but in view of the fact that he wants to discuss this matter, I think we should discuss all phases of it.

Mr. KEFAUVER. It is quite all right with me.

Mr. McCARTHY. In case the Senator does not recall the facts, Major Fanton was the man in charge of the interrogation team at the town of Schwabisch Hall. He was in charge at the time all the alleged brutality took place, during the time when the Van Roden-Simpson committee sat, and accused his interrogation team of beatings, mock hangings, fraternization with wives, taking ration cards away from the families of the accused, and so forth. He was in charge at the time the Raymond committee in substance confirmed all this, but added the statement that the methods used created the right psychological atmosphere to get confessions.

In view of all those facts, and the fact that the Senator from Connecticut had defended Major Fanton on the floor of the Senate, and had said that the charges in the Raymond and Van Roden-Simpson committees reports were groundless, does the Senator think that the situation is right, in the eyes of the people of the country and the world?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I can only say that I have full confidence in the fairness of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator from Connecticut asked me to yield to him, and I do so.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I have forgotten what we were discussing at the time I asked the Senator to yield. I wish to say that the Senator from Wisconsin approaches this matter as though these prosecutors were, by virtue of this investigation, necessarily placed on trial, and that charges were made against them. It may very well be that after we have completed the hearings there will be some very serious criticisms of the Army conduct in this situation. I do not pretend to prejudge the case. I cannot do that. This was a difficult experience for the United States Army to go through, in heated times, when tempers were on edge, right after the perpetration of what was one of the most heinous offenses ever perpetrated in the annals of warfare. These men are not, presently at least, as the result of this investigation, on trial for anything.

The interesting part of the matter is that these prosecutors, to a man, as I recall, welcomed the opportunity to appear and be questioned at great length, as they were by the Senator from Wisconsin at very great length.

Mr. President, the committee cannot prejudge the case. Nor can the committee, by the statements the Senator from Wisconsin has made about it and about its chairman, be forced into the position of finding other than what the facts indicate.

Mr. President, I should like to put into the RECORD at this point the statement of Colonel Ellis himself as to his relationship to this investigation. This is Colonel Ellis' sworn testimony before the committee. He said:

> I reported for duty with War Crimes Branch, ETOUSA, May 6, 1945, in Paris, France, and was assigned to the Investigation Section as assistant to the Chief; that shortly thereafter Major Dwight Fanton (then captain) was assigned to work on the Malmedy case, File No. W. C. B. 6-24; that I personally took a keen interest in the development of the case in my official capacity and carefully watched and aided in its development; that early in September 1945 I became Chief of the Investigational Section, and that in that capacity I was charged with the gathering of the evidence for war crimes cases, which included the Malmedy case; that I personally took more than ordinary interest in the development of this case and carefully selected the personnel that I assigned to it; that I inspected the detachment as often as conditions permitted and personally aided them in obtaining a suitable prison, living quarters, transportation, and in formulating plans for the investigation; that in late February 1946 I was relieved as Chief of the Investigation Section and assigned as chief prosecutor on the case, with instructions to bring it to trial by March 25, 1946; that in March 1946 I was ordered to Schwabisch Hall, Germany, where the investigation detachment was located that was developing the case.

Mr. McCARTHY. What was the date?

Mr. BALDWIN. March 1946. It does not give the day.

That I then personally took over and supervised the investigation, preparation of the case for trial, and the apprehension of the accused; that when the trial date was postponed until May 16, 1946, I continued the development of the case; that on April 16 all but six of the accused and possible witnesses moved to Dachau; that on April 19, 1946, I completed the movement of the prisoners and investigation staff to Dachau, Germany, where the trial was held.

That is the statement under oath of the man who was in charge directly of the investigation.

I wish to say further, Mr. President——

Mr. McCARTHY. Before the Senator leaves that, so that there may be no question, are we both agreed that Ellis did not go to Schwabisch Hall until March 1946, and that Fanton was there long before that?

Mr. BALDWIN. I do not agree to any such thing.

Mr. McCARTHY. That was the testimony, that he went there in March 1946?

Mr. BALDWIN. That he took it over directly.

Mr. McCARTHY. That he first went to Schwabisch Hall?

Mr. BALDWIN. He was assigned to this particular case. He says:

> In September 1945 I became Chief of the Investigation Section and in that capacity * * * I personally took more than ordinary interest in the development of this case and carefully selected the personnel.

Mr. McCARTHY. So that we may have the facts straight, the Senator's law partner was in complete charge, and Ellis did not go there until March 1946. Is that correct?

Mr. BALDWIN. No, it is not correct.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does the Senator say that Ellis was there before March 1946?

Mr. BALDWIN. I say that he was in charge. But that does not matter.

Mr. McCARTHY. So that we do know that Ellis, according to his own testimony, did not go to Schwabisch Hall, regardless of whether he was technically in charge at all, until March of 1946.

Mr. BALDWIN. I do not believe the testimony will bear that out. That is only one part of his statement. That is not the whole of it, but it is a statement of his connection with the case.

Mr. McCARTHY. On what page does that appear?

Mr. BALDWIN. On page 85.

Mr. McCARTHY. On page 85 he said:

> In March 1946, I was ordered to Schwabisch Hall, Germany.

In other words, if his testimony is correct, he did not go to Schwabisch Hall until March.

Mr. BALDWIN. That does not necessarily follow. He was in charge of the whole detachment, and I think the record will disclose that he was at Schwabisch Hall before that, but that this order in March 1946 shifted his headquarters.

One thing further. The Senator will recall very well that when Fanton was on the witness stand I withdrew from the room.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct. Before the Senator continues, I would like to read one sentence to him from the record—the report issued by the Army board sent over to investigate this matter, the Raymond Board. "The interrogation of the accused and witnesses confined there [Schwabisch Hall] was at first under the command of Maj. Dwight F. Fanton, then for a short time under Capt. Ralph Shumacker, and finally under Lt. Col. Burton F. Ellis."

Mr. BALDWIN. And the Senator said, "No, you should not do that. I am perfectly willing that you should be here." Moreover, on one occasion when we could not get all the other members of the committee to attend to conduct the hearings, because they were engaged in other committee work, while Fanton was on the stand, and the Senator from Wisconsin examined him at great length, there was a question of adjourning the hearing or going on with me in the chair, and on that particular occasion I said I would adjourn the hearing if the Senator desired, and if he did not I would be glad to continue and let him continue Fanton's cross-examination, and the Senator did continue. I do not recollect the exact language, but the record will show it better than my own recollection.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no doubt that I had no objection to the Senator from Connecticut staying in the committee room while Fanton was questioned.

Mr. BALDWIN. And I stayed there and did not ask a question.

I think the Senator will recall that after we had the first discussion about this matter, quite a long while ago, he wrote me a letter.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct.

Mr. BALDWIN. A very friendly letter.

Mr. McCARTHY. One that I let the Senator censor before I sent it. That is true. There is no doubt about the letter. I will be glad to read it into the RECORD. But let me ask the Senator a question. Does he think it is proper for him to sit in trial of his law partner, a man who is now in Connecticut bragging that he is writing the committee's report? I believe that to be completely improper. I do not question the Senator's own motives. The Senator undoubtedly thinks he is the only person who can give that young man from Connecticut a fair hearing. I think the Senator from Connecticut believes he is the only one who can do that young man justice. I believe the Senator from Connecticut firmly believes that everything this young man tells him is the truth. But I believe, with the intellectual capacity the Senator has and the innate sense of honesty which I am sure the Senator possesses, that the Senator cannot conceivably feel that it is proper for him to sit in judgment on his own law partner. Think how that looks in the eyes of the people of the country and in the eyes of the people of Europe who are so vitally concerned about this matter.

Mr. BALDWIN. I may say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the best way to determine that is by making an examination of the entire record, and by studying the report of the committee in this particular case. If that is done, it will be found that any claim which has been made that this young man is writing the report is utterly groundless. The Senator has made that statement to me several times before, and I investigated and found that there was no truth in the statement whatsoever.

So far as the rest of it is concerned, let me say to the Senator from Wisconsin that this is not a trial of anybody. It is an effort to determine what the facts are. If the facts reveal that there ought to be a military trial of the men who are concerned, then that is a matter to be determined by some other tribunal than a committee of the Congress which is trying to develop the facts.

Furthermore, I may say to my distinguished friend from Wisconsin that, after all, this man, as the Senator well knows, is only one of many in the case; and if I had an opportunity to examine the remarks my distinguished friend from Wisconsin himself made during the hearing about this matter I think I could disprove any claim that Fanton's connection with this case was of paramount importance. True, he was there in charge of the investigation.

I may say again that every single witness the Senator from Wisconsin asked us to call we have called, and we will continue to call witnesses the Senator asks us to call. We have examined them at great length, and while the Senator was sitting with the committee we permitted him to examine them and cross-examine them at great length. So long as the Senator from Connecticut has any connection with the committee, he will see to it that the utmost in fairness and impartiality and in justice obtains.

As I said before, the proof of that resides better in the printed record, the sworn testimony under oath, and in the ultimate decision of the subcommittee, of which the Senator from Connecticut is only one of three members. The three members of the subcommittee are only a small part of the whole Armed Services Committee of the Senate. So I leave the matter there. I know, because of our present engagement in dealing with this case, that it is difficult to make a statement now concerning the merits or demerits of it without completely and utterly prejudging the case, and I have no intention of doing that.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I think I should make plain that the resolution offered by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] is not the first resolution offered to investigate the trials in question. I, myself, offered the first resolution on that subject. I did so after I had made a thorough investigation to decide whether I should do so. A relative of one of the defendants, a man who was sentenced to be hanged, got in touch with me as a Senator of the United States. Before I did anything about the matter I got in touch with one of the judges who had been appointed by Kenneth Royall. After I found, from my consultation with Mr. Royall and with Mr. Roden, that an investigation was called for, I offered a resolution to investigate, and I was greatly surprised when shortly thereafter another resolution on the same subject was offered by my distinguished friend the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McCARTHY. As the Senator knows, while his resolution was pending the Army proceeded to hang five of the men whom the then Van Roden-Simpson committee——

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to conclude my statement?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me finish my sentence. While the resolution offered by the Senator from North Dakota was pending, five of the men whom the Van Roden-Simpson committee said should not hang—Secretary Royall had sent them as a committee to investigate and determine the facts in the case, and let him know whether or not those men should hang—five of the men whom the Van Roden-Simpson committee said should not hang because "The conduct of the trial was such we cannot tell whether they are guilty or innocent," were hanged by the Army while the Senator's resolution was pending.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me——

Mr. McCARTHY. I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut immediately the Senator from North Dakota has concluded.

Mr. LANGER. Before I had even offered my resolution, we hired a first-class lawyer in New York, who in turn hired a lawyer in Germany, in order to secure affidavits, and I have in my possession a stack of affidavits about this high [indicating].

After I had secured the affidavits, and was preparing to present them, those who prepared them found out that my distinguished friend the Senator from Connecticut had been appointed chairman of the subcommittee. Those who prepared the affidavits immediately got in touch with me and asked me not to submit the affidavits. They said that Dr. Libby and his organization had asked the Senator from Connecticut to withdraw. They said, "We do not believe we can get a fair trial. We cannot get a fair investigation." The Senator refused to withdraw, and I have a letter to that effect, not signed by the Senator from Connecticut, but by this organization.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut at no time refused to withdraw. The Senator from Connecticut offered his resignation, and when the chairman of the Armed Services Committee said he saw no reason why he should not continue, and asked him to continue, he continued.

Mr. LANGER. I heard that explanation a few minutes ago. It is simply repetition.

So far as the people who prepared these affidavits were concerned, so far as these relatives were concerned, they felt that they could not get a square deal before the committee because of the relationship between my distinguished friend from Connecticut and his former law partner.

In that connection, in order to disabuse their minds, I myself went to Hartford, Conn. I said, "I know Senator BALDWIN. I believe you can get a square deal before him. I know that from my association with him in the Senate." I regret to say that even after I made that statement they said, "We do not want these affidavits presented. We are going to take a chance. The day is coming when we are going to have another committee, one which we believe will be a fair committee." I may say that upon their request I did not present the affidavits. I think I presented one. I gave one to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin before the request was made to withhold them. I then telephoned the Senator from Wisconsin and asked him not to present it, because of the request which had been made of me by the people who had been in communication with me.

Mr. President, I, for one, want to go on record publicly that I do not believe it is right for a man who is the former law partner of another man to be chairman of a subcommittee to investigate him. No matter how honest a man may be, so far as the public is concerned, it is suspicious. It thinks there may be something dishonest about it. Witnesses may appear, and yet they may color their testimony because of the fact that a certain man who has some connection, such as that of being a former law partner of one of the men being investigated, may not be as fair and open-minded with them as he otherwise might be. I say that without leveling the slightest imputation against my friend from Connecticut, of whom I am very fond. I went to the trouble of going to Hartford, Conn., and trying to disabuse the minds of the people I saw there, in order to let them present the matter.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator knows that Mr. Libby was in almost constant attendance during the hearings, and that Mr. Finucane, who originally published the article under the byline of Judge Van Roden, which article stimulated much of the interest in this case, was present and testified at length. In the presence of Mr. Finucane, Judge Van Roden repudiated nearly everything in the article, and said it had been issued without his approval, or if with his approval, it was because he did not understand it. That is going into testimony which I think it is useless to go into now. So far as I am concerned, the testimony, the conduct of the hearings, and the final findings will demonstrate more nearly whether the Senator from Connecticut conducted himself with complete impartiality in these hearings, or whether he did not, or whether he has the support of his colleagues. So far as I am concerned, I have never withdrawn from a thing when I was under attack, and I do not intend to withdraw voluntarily from this thing now. When I am under attack I do not think I can. But I do say that if a majority of the Senate feels that someone else should be chairman of this subcommittee, it is their privilege to appoint someone else as chairman. My personal interest in the thing amounts to nothing. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BALDWIN. I say that it is entirely in the hands of the Senate as to what it wishes to do about the chairmanship of this subcommittee, just as I placed it at one time in the hands of the full committee. They decided that I should continue, and so I continued. I am in exactly the same position now.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, let me make it clear that I am not asking the Senate to discharge the Senator from Connecticut as chairman of the subcommittee. If the Senator from Connecticut thinks it is proper for him to sit in judgment on his own law partner, and do something which I think is completely shameful, I do not believe that it is incumbent upon the Senate to discharge him. I think, however, we should recognize the fact that the work of the committee and its report will be completely useless and worth nothing at all.

I wish to repeat what I have already said: I do not doubt that the Senator from Connecticut honestly felt that it was necessary for him to head this subcommittee so as to bring out what he considered to be the truth. However, it has long been the practice of judges and chairmen of committees to step aside under similar circumstances, not because they themselves felt that they could not be fair, but because conditions were such that in the eyes of the public a fair hearing would be impossible.

I understand that the Senator from Connecticut is very shortly to go on the bench. I sincerely hope that when he sits on the bench, if ever a situation like this arises, in which he is called upon to pass upon the rights of someone as close to him as Mr. Fanton is, he will have learned a lesson, and will disqualify himself.

The Senator from Connecticut has said that no one is on trial today. I submit that someone is on trial. The entire United States Senate is on trial. The American system of justice—if we can call it that—in our occupied area is on trial. We should be engaged in the most soul-searching investigation to find out whether or not all the charges and countercharges which have been made by two disinterested judges who went to Europe are true. In their testimony they say, in effect, that the Senator's law partner was criminally incompetent in the way he conducted the investigation. The Senator's job was to determine whether or not that report was true.

Prior to being appointed chairman of the subcommittee the Senator from Connecticut rose on the floor of the Senate on January 17 and asked for an investigation not to determine whether or not the charges of the Van Roden-Simpson committee and the Raymond board were true or false. He himself had previously decided that they were false. He said those charges were groundless. He asked for an investigation so as to give "a young man from Connecticut" an opportunity to come before the committee and prove that the charges were groundless. At that time the Senator did not notify the Senate that this young man from Connecticut was his former law partner. I cannot believe that the Senator went before the Armed Services Committee and told the Armed Services Committee that Maj. Dwight Fanton was his law partner, and that Maj. Dwight Fanton was in charge of the interrogation team at the time all of the alleged medieval torture methods were used, and that, having that information in mind, the committee said, "Senator BALDWIN, we want you in charge of the subcommittee."

It is not a question of whether the Senator from Connecticut can fairly conduct the subcommittee. It is a question of what the people of the Nation will think about the United States Senate. It is a question of what the people of the world will think about this country if we appoint a man to conduct an investigation and make a report on his own law partner, who is now bragging that he himself is writing the report.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, the Senator does not want to make that charge, does he?

Mr. McCARTHY. What charge?

Mr. BALDWIN. The charge that he is bragging that he is writing the report.

Mr. McCARTHY. He has so bragged a dozen times. The Senator knows that. I went to the office of the Senator from Connecticut and asked him, for his own good, not to take the chairmanship of this subcommittee. The Senator knows that I have a high regard for him. I explained to the Senator how improper I thought it was, and what the people of the Nation would think about it. The Senator from Connecticut said, "No; I will take it up with the committee, and if they are willing to have me sit, I will continue."

It is a reflection upon the integrity of the entire Senate that a chairman should have been appointed to a subcommittee whose job it was to investigate his own law partner, a man whom he had already defended. Furthermore, in maintaining this position, the Senator from Connecticut aggravated the feeling that a deliberate whitewash was being conducted by the United States Senate.

Ralph Shumacker, the former law partner of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the second member of the subcommittee, was a member of the interrogation team at the time of the alleged brutalities, and later assistant trial judge advocate in the trials being investigated.

The third member of the subcommittee, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] did not, to my knowledge, have any personal connection with the case. The Senator from Tennessee has appeared on the floor and stated that Ralph Shumacker was not his law partner, but a young lawyer employed by his law firm for 2 years, so the statement is corrected to that extent.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. The point I wish to get into the RECORD—and I think it should come in at this point—is that this investigation deals with the trials in the Malmedy cases; does it not?

Mr. McCARTHY. Not with the Malmedy crossroads massacre, so-called, but with the Battle of the Bulge cases.

Mr. BALDWIN. The point I wish to get into the RECORD is this: The Senator from Wisconsin asked the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] if he knew that after the resolution was introduced five of those men were hanged.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. BALDWIN. I wish to get the record on that matter straight, by telling the Senator from Wisconsin what I think he already knows, namely, that not a single one of the men who were convicted as a result of the Malmedy massacre, so-called, has yet been executed.

Mr. McCARTHY. I understand that the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota went beyond the so-called Malmedy cases. His resolution, as I understand, covered all the trials conducted by the United States Army.

Five of the men who, according to the Van Roden-Simpson report, should not have been hanged, were hanged while the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota was before the committee.

Mr. BALDWIN. But the point I wish to make is that they had no connection whatsoever with the investigation we were conducting.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FREAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Of course the Senator knows that at the time when I introduced the resolution, we got in touch with Secretary Royall, and he sent a cablegram stopping the execution of 18 men who were scheduled to be executed the next day. Some of the men were involved in the Malmedy massacre.

The Senator also knows that I tried in every possible way to have the Senate Judiciary Committee take jurisdiction over this matter; but before the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] could appoint a subcommittee and have action taken, the other committee was already functioning under the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN].

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. President, I may say in connection with the young man, Shumacker, the former employee of one of the members of the subcommittee—and I say this to give the Senate some conception of how these young men regarded their duties and what they felt their duties were toward the defendants and toward the court—that when Mr. Shumacker was on the stand and I was questioning him, after Colonel Ellis had left the stand, I said to him, "Mr. Shumacker, do you feel that it was Colonel Ellis' duty, when he found that a confession was false, when the chief of the prosecution found that a confession he had presented to the court was false, then to so notify the court?"

Mr. Shumacker came up with the unusual answer, "Not if it would hurt his case."

Of course, Mr. President, it would hurt his case. If for example, someone had extracted from John Jones a false confession to the effect that he had murdered someone, and if the prosecution introduced that confession in the trial, and thereafter learned that the confession was false, and so stated in court, and so notified the court it would lessen the chance of a conviction. Yet, according to that witness, the prosecuting officer should have taken the position that it was not his duty to tell the court that the confession was false, if it would hurt his case.

Mr. President, I was designated by the Senate Special Investigating Committee to sit in with the Armed Services Subcommittee as an observer, because of our committee's interest in the matter.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. May I inquire, for my own information, how much longer the Senator from Wisconsin intends to speak?

Mr. McCARTHY. Not very long. However, there may be some questions from other Senators and there may be comments regarding some of the things I shall say.

I was designated by the Special Senate Investigating Committee to sit in and take part in this Armed Services Investigation as an observer because of our committee's original interest in the matter.

As the hearings progressed, I became more and more convinced that the subcommittee was interested almost solely in a complete whitewash of those involved.

Under my cross-examination of the committee's witnesses, however, rather fantastic concepts of the rights of the accused and the method of administering justice were developed. For example—and I ask any Members of the Senate who ever were lawyers to listen to this—for example, Major Fanton issued an order, "SOP No. 4," which gave the interrogators, some of whom were not American citizens, the right—Mr. President, listen to this, if you will—the right to offer immunity to any of those charged with being war criminals if they would tell a story of sufficient value to convict other alleged war criminals.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Since the Senator makes rather sweeping claims with reference to some of these statements, I should like to have the opportunity at this point, with the consent of the Senator from Wisconsin, to place in the RECORD the order to which he refers, which in the humble judgment of the chairman of the subcommittee does not go anywhere near so far as the Senator indicates.

Mr. McCARTHY. I shall appreciate very much having the order, so I can read the part to which I just referred, especially for the benefit of any Senator who has practiced law. I should certainly appreciate having the order, if the Senator has it available. While the order is being looked up, I repeat.

For example, Major Fanton issued an order, "SOP No. 4" which gave the interrogators, some of whom were not American citizens, the right to offer immunity to any of those charged with being war criminals if they would tell a story of sufficient value to convict other alleged war criminals. This, of course, placed a premium upon lying and, in my opinion, was responsible for freeing some of the worst of the war criminals.

If, for example, Defendant Jones were accused of killing four American prisoners of war during the Battle of the Bulge, he could be offered his freedom by one of the interrogators, after having first obtained Fanton's permission, if he would sign a statement which would effectively convict other war criminals. The order issued by Major Fanton, who was in charge, becomes doubly important—has the Senator from Connecticut been able to find the order?

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. WATKINS. Was the order to which the Senator has been referring made a part of the record in this case?

Mr. McCARTHY. The order is a part of the record. I understand the Senator from Connecticut is now looking for it, and I shall be glad to read it to the Senator. I understand the Senator from Utah was formerly a judge, and if he reads this order, which the man in charge of the interrogation boasted of having brought to their attention, he cannot help, I believe, but be shocked beyond words.

Mr. WATKINS. I have not made up my mind on this matter at all. The first I heard of it was through the press. I may say I am very much concerned with the effect a situation of this kind may have upon how the world looks upon American justice. I think the matter should be aired, and aired thoroughly.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the Senator is right.

Mr. WATKINS. It should be aired fairly, too. I think I should say that. I do not think any misstatements should be issued, particularly misstatements of fact. Anyone who speaks on this subject should be very careful in what he says. That is why I asked whether an order of this kind was in the record.

Mr. McCARTHY. I intend to read the specific order to the Senator. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether his staff has been endeavoring to find the order?

Mr. BALDWIN. They have.

Mr. McCARTHY. May I inquire, have they found it? Has the Senator found the copy of SOP No. 4?

Mr. BALDWIN. No; I have not. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I may say, Mr. President, I had no knowledge prior to coming on the floor of the Senate, about 15 minutes before the Senator from Wisconsin began his remarks, that he was going to discuss this subject here this afternoon, and so I am not prepared with citations from the record or anything of that kind. Of course, the record is available to the Senator. It is available to any Senator, for that matter.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, so that there may be no doubt, the Senator's office was notified. The office of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT] was notified. The office of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] was notified. They were notified I was going to speak, and I had previously notified the Senator from Connecticut I would discuss the subject. On the day I was originally to have discussed it, the Senator, who was in Connecticut, had hurt his eye. I refrained from discussing the subject until the Senator could return, so he would be able to be on the Senate floor to discuss thoroughly any of the comments I might make. I ask the Senator from Connecticut, if there is any question about that?

Mr. BALDWIN. No. My point was, the Senator told me that, sometime, he intended to discuss what had happened.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. BALDWIN. But I did not know the Senator intended to do it today.

Mr. McCARTHY. My office notified the Senator's office earlier today. The above order, issued by Major Fanton, was posted incidentally on all the walls. When the Senator finds the order, I shall refer specifically to paragraph 2 of order "SOP No. 4," which can have no other interpretation than the one I gave the Senator.

"SOP No. 4" also provided that "any ruse or deception may be used in the course of the interrogation." In this connection it should be noted that the Army board found that one of the ruses used was mock trials, and another one was telling the accused that his family would be deprived of ration cards if he did not sign a confession.

The above orders issued by Major Fanton, who was in charge, become doubly important when viewed in connection with what Colonel Ellis, the chief of the prosecution staff, felt were his duties to the court and to the defendants.

To give an idea of the background of the man whom the Army selected to handle one of our most important criminal cases, Colonel Ellis, on the stand, testified he had graduated from law school 20 years previously, and that he had been in private practice from 1929 until entering the service in 1942. Upon being asked whether he had tried any criminal cases, he replied they were not exactly criminal cases, but he had tried about 10 cases during those 13 years of private practice. Upon further questioning it was developed that the 10 cases he tried during the 13 years he had been in private practice, the 10 times he had been in court, were divorce and probate cases. When asked if he had any experience in criminal law, he replied—and this is part of the record—"absolutely none." That is the background of the lawyer whom the Army selected to try this most important criminal case.

I hope the Senate will understand I am not criticising Colonel Ellis. I think the young man just did not have the ability. He did not have the legal ability to perform the work that was assigned to him. That was not his field. It was the fault of whoever selected him for that work. His conception of his duties as chief prosecutor can perhaps best be shown by a very brief excerpt from his testimony under my cross-examination at the hearing. He was being questioned in regard to a confession—which had been obtained, according to the defendant, after medieval torture methods were used on him—a detailed confession of the deliberate murder of a Belgian woman in the town of Bullingen, a confession which the Army Frankfort board found to be false.

> Question: Did you not think it was your duty to tell the court that your investigator went over to this town of Bullingen and that your investigator reported back to you that it appeared that the confession was false and that this woman was not shot?
>
> Colonel ELLIS. I do not think my duty went to that extent.

Mr. President, I should like to repeat that. Here is a man in charge of prosecuting the case, a man who is assigned to seeing that every defendant has his fair and honest day in court. This man was asked:

> Did you not think it was your duty to tell the court, that your investigator went over to this town of Bullingen and that your investigator reported back to you that it appeared that the confession was false and that this woman was not shot?
>
> Colonel ELLIS. I do not think my duty went to that extent.

Later, Mr. Shumacker, one of the interrogation team and also one of the prosecuting attorneys, in referring to this testimony on the part of Ellis and in an apparent attempt to justify Ellis's position, had this to say:

> I do not believe, sir, that it is the duty of an attorney on either side of the case to point out the weaknesses of his case.

The question and answer immediately following this comment on the part of Shumacker shed some further light on the qualifications of the prosecution staff.

> Question by Senator McCARTHY: You said you did not think any attorney should present any weaknesses in his case. Now I, myself, have been in a number of court-martial proceedings, both as prosecutor and as defense attorney. I have always understood that a prosecutor in a court-martial case had a duty to present not necessarily what you or I would consider a strong case, but rather all of the facts, and if there are any facts which would help the court, not to find a man guilty, but to determine whether she should be found guilty or not, that then it is the duty of the prosecuting attorney and the defense attorney, to present all those facts to the court? Is that not the clear duty you have?

This is a question being asked the assistant trial judge advocate, Mr. Shumacker, and here is his answer:

I think I tried one court martial case in my experience.

Before the hearings commenced, I was informed by the staff that the first witness to be called was an alleged survivor of the Malmedy crossroads massacre.

I informed the subcommittee at that time that if this were done, it would immediately justify the fears of those of us who felt that the subcommittee was interested in clouding the issue and whitewashing those involved.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me finish this statement, and then I shall be glad to yield.

It was called to the subcommittee's attention that everyone agreed that the Malmedy massacre occurred, that it was an atrocious and inexcusable war crime, and that those who were guilty of this atrocity should be punished.

I reminded the subcommittee that there was no question about the Malmedy massacre having occurred, and that there was no necessity for proving this. The question which we were to determine was the question of whether or not we had the right men, whether we were hanging the guilty or hanging the innocent.

I informed the subcommittee that in my opinion the only purpose of calling witnesses to rehash the details of this war crime was to inflame the public mind and attempt to create a blind demand for vengeance on someone in retribution without regard to the question of the guilt or innocence of those being punished.

I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BALDWIN. I should like to ask the Senator if it is his position, in the conduct of an investigation by the Senate of these trials of the particular men who were tried and convicted, that a man who had actually been present when one of the massacres occurred, who saw his comrades shot, and who escaped, God knows how, with his life, was not a competent witness?

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator is not as naive as he tries to make out. He knows there was never any question that the Malmedy massacre occurred; he knows that the young man who appeared could not recognize any of the men who took part in the shooting; he knows that the young man could shed no light whatsoever on whether the men in charge allowed illegal torture methods. The only purpose, as I told the Senator before he called that witness, was to attempt to wave the flag and try to recreate a situation which he said existed at the time of the tortures and which he tried to use as a justification or an excuse for the tortures.

Mr. BALDWIN. May I remind the Senator from Wisconsin that many of the affidavits which he said were obtained by brutal methods——

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator from Wisconsin did not say that. The Army Board appointed by Secretary Royall said they were obtained by brutal methods. The two judges said they were obtained by brutal methods. All the Senator from Wisconsin has said is that we should have a clear, decent, honest investigation to determine whether they were obtained by brutal methods, to determine whether we are hanging guilty or innocent men, to determine whether the trials were conducted in such fashion that we can tell as of today whether the men who are to hang are guilty or not guilty.

Mr. BALDWIN. I have offered the Senator many a chance to make his speech.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator is not offering me a chance to make a speech. It is a right which I have. I am not receiving that right from the Senator from Connecticut. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut however to make any speech he cares to make. Let us have that clear.

Mr. BALDWIN. Of course, the Senator did not sit throughout all the hearings. He heard only a few of the witnesses. May I say to my distinguished friend that after he left we continued to call and question witnesses, one or two of whom he suggested, and we questioned them at great length. But the Senator will recall that some of the affidavits which it is claimed, and which the Senator claims, were obtained by brutal and improper methods, and which the Senator had before him in the conduct of the investigation described the way in which the shooting took place. Does the Senator have any question that those affidavits did accurately describe the way in which the shooting took place, and that it was fair and proper to call one of the eye-witnesses to the shooting to find out what he might say as to how it took place, to see whether the affidavits were at total variance with the facts? In other words, what the committee tried to do was to compare what eye-witnesses said was the way in which the shooting took place, against the way in which it was set forth in the affidavits of the accused men themselves as they described it. Interesting enough, those descriptions, barring some minor details, are practically alike.

But we will not pass judgment upon the affidavits; we will leave that for another day and time.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes. The statements and the confessions are alike even to the extent of the height of bushes in number of feet and inches. Men who had been placed in solitary confinement were offering confessions a year after the crime was committed, and they made statements which jibed exactly, even to the height of unimportant bushes in number of feet and inches. The Senator is correct when he says they were duplicates.

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator is putting words into my mouth which I did not utter. I did not say they were duplicates. In fact, I avoided saying that, because they were not. I said that in their essential details the description of the shootings as set forth in some of the confessions compared, in their major details, with the description as testified to by an eyewitness.

Mr. McCARTHY. I felt then and I feel now that the purpose was to divert the committee and the public from looking at the cold facts of what our Army did and to prevent an honest decision on the question of whether the system of justice which we were imposing upon a defeated nation was actually convicting the guilty and protecting the innocent or whether the direct opposite was being accomplished by the incompetence and bungling of a few vengeance-minded individuals.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Let me make this point absolutely clear. The junior Senator from Connecticut wants to see no innocent man found guilty in this type of trial, as determined by a fair, competent, just tribunal. He wants to see no man penalized in any way. The junior Senator from Connecticut is going to try to conduct this case as impartially as he knows how, but he is not going to take the side of officers of the United States Army, or of SS troops, as I am fearful, in his enthusiasm, my distinguished friend from Wisconsin is doing.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no doubt the Senator from Connecticut thinks he is competent, as chairman of the subcommittee, to bring out the facts, but I think the Senator is inherently so fair that the day will come when he will deeply regret doing what I consider to be a very shameful thing; that is, in insisting on acting as chairman of a subcommittee the principal task of which is to decide whether his own law partner counseled and allowed, and took part in, things which are so foreign to the Senator's own concept of what is honest and just. Some day the Senator from Connecticut is going to regret it. But, as I have told the Senator a thousand times, it is not a question of whether or not he himself thinks he is honest and fair, it is a question of what the American people and what the people of the world will think about a United States Senate which allows an important investigation to be conducted by a man who, according to all the rules of common fairness, cannot be as honest and fair as someone who is disinterested. The Senator may be an unusual man, he may be able to be absolutely fair, but it is not a question of what he himself thinks he can do, it is a question of what the American people think about the situation that counts.

Mr. BALDWIN. I thank the Senator for his testimony and his confidence and belief in my efforts at least to be fair and impartial about this matter. As I understand, the Senator's claim resolves itself to this, that it is not wise, it is not judicious, for the Senate to have a committee on which there are any members before whom there might appear some interested witness, or some witness he claims to be interested.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator knows exactly what my position is. My position is that prior to the commencement of the investigation the Senator said on the Senate floor that the findings of the Van Roden-Simpson committee and of the Raymond committee were "groundless." He asked for an investigation, not for the purpose of finding out whether we were properly dispensing justice in the occupied area. These are the Senator's own words in the RECORD of January 17 this year, that the purpose was to allow a young man from Connecticut to answer these "groundless" charges. If the Senator had already decided that they were groundless, I think he was completely incompetent to sit in judgment, and I think in fairness to himself he should have removed himself from the committee, as I have urged him to do.

I hope the Senator realizes this is an unpleasant job I am doing today, but I feel so strongly that I have no choice but to present the whole picture—and a sorry picture it is—to the Senate and to the country.

Mr. BALDWIN. Will the Senator permit me to insert what I did say when I have found it?

Mr. McCARTHY. I shall be glad to.

The core of the situation we were investigating was, of course, the truth of the charges that members and employees of our military were guilty of applying torture to the accused in order to secure confessions. The four men principally charged with these alleged brutalities were Mr. Perl, Mr. Kirschbaum, Mr. Steiner, and Mr. Thon, at least three of whom were refugees from Hitlerian Germany. It appeared that two of these interrogators had very ample grounds to thoroughly hate the German race. For example, there was testimony to the effect that Steiner's mother had been killed by the Germans and it also appeared that Perl's wife had been confined in a concentration camp for approximately 1½ years. While it would be difficult to criticize those four men for hating the German soldiers after they had personally suffered so heavily at the hands of Hitlerian Germany, the members of our Army who hired them and gave them such unlimited latitude in handling prisoners, most certainly were guilty of shameful conduct, and the man in the Army who did the hiring was none other than our friend Maj. Dwight Fanton.

On the one hand those men denied the charges of torturing defendants to secure confessions, while on the other hand statements of defendants and Army personnel at Schwabisch Hall confirmed the charges. It was obvious, therefore, even before the hearings started that either those who charged the interrogators with brutalities or the interrogators themselves were lying. It was obvious also that neither group would admit having committed perjury.

If the charges were true, then they were so repugnant to the American sense of fair play and decency that the men guilty should be exposed. If, on the other hand, the charges were not true then the men accused of brutally mistreating the accused in order to get confessions should be cleared in the eyes of the public.

One of the interrogators appeared before the subcommittee and testified that under no circumstances did he ever kick, beat, starve, or mentally torture any of the defendants in order to get a confession. That was Mr. Perl. He had previously testified at the trials at Dachau. Both times he testified under oath. When his answers before our subcommittee appeared directly contradictory to those he made at Dachau and when he was questioned as to when he was telling the truth—at Washington or at Dachau—he retorted that he was telling the truth at both times. By way of explanation he quoted a philosopher's definition of the truth to the effect that—and I call the attention of the Senate particularly to this. Here was a man caught telling contradictory stories under oath, and this was his definition of the truth. He said:

> The truth has many faces each of which when taken alone is a lie, but when taken together constitute the truth.

Let me repeat that. This was a definition of truth by the interrogator who was caught in deliberate lying, according to the record. He said:

> The truth has many faces each of which when taken alone is a lie, but when taken together constitute the truth.

I thereupon suggested to this interrogator, Perl, that he submit to the Keeler lie detector which has been proven infallible in hundreds of important criminal cases and which has been used extensively in Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, and other States with the consent of the defendant. He reluctantly consented to do so.

The chairman of the subcommittee immediately ridiculed the idea and took the position that it was unfair to suggest that anyone wearing the American uniform would be guilty of deliberate lying.

At that time I withdrew from taking part in these proceedings and made the following statement:

> I wish to announce that I will no longer take part in the hearings of the Armed Services Committee investigating the war crimes trials. I arrived at this decision with great reluctance, but I can no longer conscientiously participate.
>
> I was designated by the Senate Investigations Subcommittee to participate with the subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee in this inquiry. Since April 18, 1949, I have sat with this committee, listened to and cross-examined witnesses. I am convinced of several things: (1) that the subcommittee is not sincere in its investigation; (2) that it is not conscientious in pursuing the facts.
>
> As a practicing lawyer and a judge on the circuit bench in Wisconsin, I know and respect the American system of justice. I believe the world expected a demonstration of American justice to be applied to even our defeated enemies. Instead, Gestapo and OGPU tactics were used.
>
> I have listened to testimony and seen documentary evidence to the effect that accused persons were subjected to beatings and physical violence in such forms as only could be devised by warped minds. They were subjected to sham trials, to mock hangings, and families were deprived of rations—all of which the prosecution justified as being necessary to create the right psychological atmosphere in which to obtain confessions. I am firmly convinced that innocent as well as guilty persons thus put in the right psychological atmosphere will confess to or make statements supporting anything.
>
> I want no murdering Nazis freed.
>
> I do want the innocent protected from the abuse of Hitlerian tactics, Fascist interrogation, and the communistic brand of justice.
>
> Consistently the evidence pointed to four interrogators. One in the course of his appearance before the subcommittee agreed to take a lie detector test as to whether or not brutalities were used in securing confessions or statements. The chairman of the subcommittee objected to the use of the lie detector test. The subcommittee chairman submitted the question to the Armed Services Committee, but they objected to securing such facts as would be developed by the lie detector test.
>
> I accuse the subcommittee of being afraid of the facts. I accuse it of attempting to whitewash a shameful episode in the history of our glorious armed forces. I accuse it of compounding a wrong, perpetrated by a few members and impugning the fair name of the millions of men and women who served with valor and distinction in the armed services. I accuse it of sabotaging our efforts under the European Recovery Act, setting at naught that which we spent and are spending billions to accomplish.
>
> If this is allowed to stand, if the whitewash succeeds, the United States can never protest the use of these methods by totalitarian countries. If the United States condones these actions by a few men, all the world can criticize and forever after question our motives.

In this connection it might be well to cite the facts in several cases which I consider rather typical insofar as the value of the confessions and statements secured at Schwabisch Hall are concerned.

Max Reider confessed to the very brutal murder of an unarmed woman in the little Belgian crossroads hamlet of Bullingen. His confession, like all of the confessions obtained, was very detailed. It explained how he walked into the house, exactly where he found the husband and wife, how he asked if any American soldiers were around and when he was informed that there were no American soldiers in the house how he then stepped back two meters and shot the woman through the forehead. He explained how the husband ran out of the house before he could shoot him and how he and his companion made sure the woman was dead before leaving the house. "Otherwise," his confession reads, "I would have shot her again." The confession goes into gruesome detail as to how the brains were seeping out the back of her head onto the floor of the cottage. The defendant was convicted and sentenced to die.

This defendant, however, as well as practically every one of the other 73 defendants convicted in this mass trial, signed an affidavit claiming that he was tortured until he signed the confession and that there was not one word of truth in it.

An Army board known as the Frankfort Board which reviewed this case set forth the fact that an investigator was sent to the town of Bullingen to investigate the matter and found that the confession was completely false. The investigator brought back affidavits from the registrar, the burgomaster, and the woman's husband, witnessed by the parish priest, to the effect that the woman in question was killed by a shell or grenade while fleeing from a raid and that she was the only woman in this little village who had died during the war from other than natural causes. The undertaker also certified that there were no bullet wounds on her body. The Frankfort Board, therefore, held that the conviction, on this ground, must be set aside.

The final authority, that is the Army board reviewing the case, in the Judge Advocate's office in Germany, however, dismissed the recommendation of the Frankfort Board and upheld the conviction without any discussion of the facts in the case—listen to this, if Senators will—except the statement that the defendant was old enough to know it was wrong to kill Belgian civilians.

Can anyone conceive of such a thing, Mr. President? Here we have a confession which the Frankfort board says was utterly false. It was shown by the husband's statement that the woman was not shot. Therefore the Frankfort Board found there was no truth in the confession, and recommended that the conviction be set aside. What does the Judge Advocate's office in Germany, under General Clay, do? It upholds the conviction without discussing the evidence, and merely says "that the defendant was old enough to know it was wrong to kill Belgian civilians."

That is one example of American justice.

Another case was that of Rudolph Pletz who was convicted of one of the most inexcusable crimes. The facts offered by the prosecution were to the effect that Pletz was a machine gunner in one of a line of tanks traveling through a small Belgian village, that there were some 25 or 35 unarmed American prisoners of war standing with their hands over their heads in front of a little crossroads store and that Pletz opened up with his machine gun with no orders whatsoever to do so and deliberately murdered all of the unarmed American prisoners. He was convicted and sentenced to death.

The defense in this case claimed that no American prisoners had ever been shot in this particular town, but that there had been an unfounded rumor of such a shooting and that the interrogators, without even checking to determine the truth of the rumor, had decided to convict someone of the "crime."

The evidence was, for example, that these prisoners were not even prisoners of his tank unit. There was no evidence whatsoever that Pletz operated under any order. The evidence was that this young man opened up with his machine gun and mowed down 25 or 35 unarmed American prisoners of war.

The Frankfort Army Board recommended the conviction be set aside because investigation showed that, first, not a single individual in the little Belgian hamlet had ever heard of any American prisoners of war being killed in that town; second, the grocer before whose store they were allegedly murdered stated positively that he knew nothing about any shooting, and, third, the American unit which came through this town immediately after the German tank corps passed through found no indication whatsoever that any American prisoners had been killed.

Again the final reviewing authority's action was fantastic, I believe, beyond words. It ignored the Frankfort board investigation and dismissed the matter by merely stating that because of the youth of the defendant, his sentence would be reduced to 20 years.

It is said the defendant was 21 years of age. Men younger than that were hanged, so the youth of the man had nothing to do with the case. There we have a case in which the Frankfort Army Board said there was not a word of truth in the case against the defendant; that no one in the little hamlet had ever heard of any American prisoners of war being killed in the hamlet; the grocer before whose store they were said to have been murdered said he knew nothing about any shooting, and the American unit which came through immediately after the German tank corps passed through, found no indication whatsoever that any American prisoners had been killed; that no bodies of Americans were found. Yet the final reviewing authority does not bother to go into the evidence at all. It merely says that because of his youth his sentence will be reduced to 20 years. Any man who has ever been inside of a court, who has any conception of justice, could not fail to see the injustice that was done in that case. Either this young man was guilty of the most deliberate willful murder of which we ever have heard, by deliberately mowing down 25 or 35 unarmed American prisoners, with their hands over their heads, or if he was not guilty of that, he was guilty of nothing. If he was guilty of such deliberate murder obviously he should have been hanged. If he was not guilty, certainly he should not serve 20 years.

Multiply these examples by hundreds and Senators will have some conception of American justice as meted out to a defeated enemy over whom we now have the power of life and death.

Mr. President, America came into Europe with clean hands. The people of the world had come to respect not only America's great military and economic power but also to respect and admire her conception of decency and fair play and above all her judicial system, which gave every man, no matter how unimportant, and no matter how much in the minority, his day in court. This vast wealth of good will and admiration which had been built up over the years is being dissipated by a few men of little minds who, unfortunately, in the eyes of the world, represent the American people.

Those of us in Washington who are charged with the job of representing the American people must not continue to blind our eyes and close our ears to a situation which is building up an unnecessary volcano of hate and which can do more to communize western Europe than all the workings of Stalin's agents. History has written with an indelible hand—yes, written in blood, if you please—that a nation cannot sow degenerate winds without ultimately reaping the whirlwind.

Recently the Baldwin committee announced that it had decided to take this investigation to Germany and that they were going to take with them three Public Health Service doctors to submit all the defendants to a physical examination in order to determine the truth of the charges that mental and physical torture was used to get confessions. In other words, they are going to look for bruises and marks of beatings and kickings that took place more than 3 years ago.

This, of course, is proper in the few cases where permanent disability is claimed in the affidavits. However, all the defendants are to be given a physical examination on the theory that if no bruises still remain after the passage of 3 years' time, then the claims of torture are untrue.

Rather conveniently, the subcommittee has overlooked the fact that a mock trial leaves no scars or bruises, nor does a mock hanging, nor does the fact that a man has been threatened that harm will come to his family leave the kind of scars and bruises that can be seen even by the expert eye of a doctor. Even the kickings, the beatings, after 3 years' time, leave no marks.

The doctors' report showing no scars will, of course, be of assistance in seeing this investigation through to the glorious finish of a whitewash report. The medical report will supply part of the proof needed to support a committee report that the actions of the interrogators were above reproach.

The trip, obviously, will not only be a complete waste of time and effort, but a complete waste of money. It will cost thousands to transport the three subcommittee members, the staff, the Army officers who have been invited by the subcommittee to go along, and the three Public Health doctors to and from Germany with all the additional living expenses and cost of conducting the investigation.

In this connection, it should be remembered that at the time I suggested that the lie detector be used on the interrogators charged with torturing the defendants, one of the objections raised was the cost of transporting these four men all the way to Chicago.

In closing I would like to predict the contents of the report which the Armed Services Subcommittee will issue after it has finished its investigation.

First. It will attempt to call up all the emotions of war hatred and concentrate solely on the gruesome details of the Malmedy crossroads massacre, which is only one of the many war crimes involved in these cases.

Second. It will wave the flag and speak of the white crosses over the graves of the American dead.

Third. It will ask, in self-righteous phrases, why—in view of the massacre and the atrociousness of this war crime—the Government of the United States of America should concern itself with applying decent rules of justice to these "vicious criminals."

Fourth. It will purposely avoid the inescapable fact that the conduct of these trials makes it impossible to know whether what they call vicious criminals or innocent men have been convicted and are being hanged.

Fifth. It will refuse to recognize the fact that accused men are not guilty unless and until proven so.

Sixth. It will disregard, gloss over, or attempt to discredit the findings of the committee composed of two disinterested and impartial judges selected by the Army Secretary to investigate this matter and also the findings of the Army Board which found the charges to be true.

Seventh. It will reflect what in my opinion was the main concern of the committee during the hearings—namely, a whitewash of the law partner of the chairman of the subcommittee and those who worked under and with him.

Our Special Senate Investigating Committee, whose original interest in this matter spurred the Armed Services Committee on to commence their so-called investigation, is no more satisfied today that this matter has been given a fair and impartial hearing than it was when the first meeting of the Armed Services Committee was called on this matter and the members to the subcommittee were selected.

In my opinion, the chairman's sense of values that places the reputation of a few men over and above the reputation of American standards of justice and respect for human rights has made a fair hearing impossible. A complete failure to understand the relationship of the conduct of these trials to our purpose in fighting a war and in launching a multibillion dollar aid-to-Europe program has helped to make a fair hearing impossible.

In a final attempt to get at the truth and make it known to the world that neither the United States Government nor the American people condone this complete disregard for individual rights and this prostitution of American principles of justice, the Special Senate Investigating Committee voted unanimously to request the Inspector General of the Army to conduct a thorough investigation of all European war-crimes trials conducted by our military forces including—

One. A thorough investigation of all the death cases.

Two. A spot check of a number of cases which were tried by the Army in an attempt to determine whether the facts found by the Van Roden-Simpson committee are true or false.

Three. A complete investigation of conditions at Landsburg Prison. This is something with which the Senator from Connecticut and his subcommittee have had nothing to do. I do not in any way blame them for not going into this matter. It was not within the scope of their inquiry. The reason for the last request is that we have had almost an unlimited number of complaints from the clergy, both Catholic and Protestant, in regard to the treatment of prisoners at Landsburg Prison—complaints to the effect that the administration at Landsburg has made it almost impossible for either Catholic or Protestant chaplains to operate within the confines of the prison walls. That is where the accused war criminals are quartered.

In closing it might be well to remember the words of Winston Churchill when, as a young man, he was pleading for the lives of the Cape rebels in the Boer War:

> Over battlefields the grass grows quickly;
> Over gallows the grass grows never.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. In the course of his remarks the Senator made reference to an order which was issued by Major Fanton as to the conduct of the investigation.

Mr. McCARTHY. I referred to paragraph 2.

Mr. BALDWIN. I should like to read the complete text of the order which was issued. It reads as follows:

RULES GOVERNING INTERROGATION

(a) Any ruse or deception may be used in the course of the interrogation, but threats, duress in any form, physical violence, or promises of immunity or mitigation of punishment, should be scrupulously avoided.

(b) Where a prisoner being interrogated in a crime is implicated in that crime, it is permissible to tell him that he will be recommended as a witness, if such statement to the prisoner will cause him to tell a full or more complete story so that he will be of more value to the case as a witness than as a defendant. However, before any such statements are made to a prisoner, the matter must be cleared with the commanding officer.

(c) Stool pigeons may be employed, but prior to their selection or preparation, the matter of their employment must be cleared with the commanding officer.

I was not present when it occurred, but it is my recollection that the Senator from Wisconsin cross-examined Mr. Fanton at great length on that particular SOP.

Mr. McCARTHY. I certainly did.

Mr. BALDWIN. The record, of course, will disclose what was said. I do not intend to comment on it now, except to say that it is in the record.

It is my recollection from reading the testimony and from what the staff has reported to me about this and other matters pertaining to the trial, that there was not a single case in which immunity was promised to any witness if he would sign a confession. I think that is a correct statement of the facts. That was developed after lengthy cross-examination of the man who had conducted the prosecution.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator means that the prosecutors did not admit that they ever used that method.

Mr. BALDWIN. No; I do not mean anything of the kind. The investigators, of course, used ruses, and they used other methods of obtaining statements from the accused men.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me read something to the Senator, if I may. I am sure that as a lawyer he will not stultify himself. Let me ask the Senator what he understands this to mean:

> Where a prisoner being interrogated in a crime is implicated in that crime it is permissible to tell him that he will be recommended as a witness, if such statement to the prisoner will cause him to tell a full or more complete story so that he will be of more value to the case as a witness than as a defendant.

That can mean only one thing. First, the man is implicated in the crime, so he is guilty. Second, the interrogators whom Mr. Fanton hired, men who were not American citizens, were given the right to go out in the compound and place a premium upon lying. They were told, "You can say to a man who is guilty that if he will tell a story that is sufficiently valuable in convicting some of the other men in this compound, he will be used as a witness and not as a defendant." We found that that was done. There is no doubt about it, as we go through the evidence.

That, I claim, has two results. First, it does not protect the rights of the innocent in any way whatsoever. Second, it does just the opposite of convicting the guilty. Never has it been heard of in American jurisprudence that an interrogator could go to a jail or somewhere else and say to a criminal, "If you will lie sufficiently so as to convict the men in the other cells, we will let you off."

Does the Senator wish me to yield further? If not, I am going to yield the floor.

Mr. BALDWIN. Of course, the Senator can strain it and put that interpretation on it if he wishes.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator says I can strain at this point; does he?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes.

It strikes me that the procedure in that case was similar to a procedure which often is used in our courts, namely, that when a man implicated in a crime chooses to turn State's evidence, often the prosecuting authorities permit him to act as a witness, and tell him quite frankly that if he will tell the whole truth, he probably will get some amelioration of his sentence.

The Senator from Wisconsin knows as a lawyer that in our courts that is done over and over again. I take it that he means to say that that procedure, which often is used in America, can be used in such cases.

The Senator from Wisconsin also knows that the procedure used in the war-crime trials was different from the procedure used in our courts, and that in those trials the same procedure that is used in courts in the United States was not attempted to be used. The Senator knows that those were military courts, and that there was a precedent, going back over a long period of years, for their establishment.

Mr. President, one thing in which the committee is interested is an examination of the law and the precedents and in determining whether, from this experience, which is a most unhappy one, we may learn something which will result in better justice and better trials in the future. That is one of the purposes of this investigation.

But the Senator from Wisconsin knows that oftentimes the prosecuting authorities and the police will interrogate a man who is implicated in a crime and will lead him to believe, either directly or indirectly, that he will receive some favored treatment, some amelioration of his sentence, if he will make a clean breast of the affair and tell the whole truth.

Mr. President, this debate has taken a great deal of time. It is obviously impossible for your committee to attempt now to answer in full detail everything that has been stated here. Of course, in attempting to do so, the committee would have to indicate its judgment and its opinion upon the evidence offered.

Let me say that the committee has conducted very long hearings and we have voluminous testimony. We have tried to have everyone who might in any way know anything about these crimes appear and testify.

When it was discovered that it would be an extremely costly process to bring to the United States many witnesses whom we would like to interrogate, it was decided by the committee that the best thing for us to do was to go abroad and interrogate the witnesses there.

Grave charges were made about permanent physical injuries which it has been claimed some of the prisoners would show upon a physical examination. The committee thought it wise to check on that matter.

At this stage in our investigation, I do not propose to make a finding in this case or to detail all the testimony. We still have a job to do, unless the Senate should decide that it wished to do something else with this investigation.

Mr. President, in the face of the claims which have been made by the Senator from Wisconsin, I, for one, am not going to voluntarily withdraw from this job. My conscience is clear. I have tried to do the best I know how, and I shall keep on doing that to the end.

I say to the Senate that if the Senate believes that it is to the interest of justice and fairness that some other committee investigate this matter, then I shall understand completely. But I do say that I, for one, believe that in the interest of fairness and justice, American citizens, officers and enlisted men of our armed forces, who were charged with doing, at an extremely difficult time in our country's history, a very, very difficult job, should have a fair opportunity to present their case and have justice done, as well as should the SS Nazi soldiers who shot down in cold blood upwards of 250 American soldiers. I do not say that in an effort to "wave the flag." I do not do it for that purpose in the least, because I do not wish to see a single one of these Germans executed if he is not fairly and justly convicted under the rules of military law by which those courts apparently were established.

On the other hand, Mr. President, I do not want, in the interest of politics, or for any other reason, to see anything other than a fair deal for everyone in this case—a fair deal for the German prisoners, yes; but also a fair deal for the American citizens who, as I have said before, were charged with the task, on behalf of their country, of doing an extremely difficult job—a job with which I must admit they had not had much experience; a job for which I must admit there was not a great deal of precedent, as these men knew it; a job which I admit may have been done at a time when the heat was too great, and when it was extremely difficult to have things proceed smoothly and orderly, as they do in the normal courts of justice in our land.

This matter occurred after a long, costly, cruel war. It occurred after some of our men had themselves, perhaps, done things which were not properly recognizable under the rules of war; and it was done at a time shortly after a last desperate effort by Hitler and his minions to fight a way to the Channel and rescue themselves from impending defeat, at a time when, it is apparent, the rules of war did not count for very much.

On the other hand, Mr. President, I am frank to say that I have been interested in this case because I did not think that in the heat of the moment we should work any injustice of any kind. I should like to see, as a result of our investigations, some new procedural developments as to the time and place and the manner of such courts and their authority. Perhaps we could improve the procedure a good deal.

At the same time, Mr. President, I wish to say that I am not making any plea in behalf of these men, who worked with the best that was available to them at the time, and who at times perhaps made mistakes and errors. If the record discloses some things which require disciplinary action on the part of the Army or on the part of other governmental authorities, this committee will not be at all hesitant in recommending that that be done, because we are trying to do the best we can with an extremely difficult situation.

I am sorry the Senator from Wisconsin feels so strongly as he does about this matter, but of course he is entitled to his opinion. That is his right. I simply say to my colleague in the Senate from the State of Wisconsin that he had better study the record, he had better examine it with a fine-tooth comb. He would have done better to attend the hearings and hear all the witnesses, as the committee did, before he made up his mind and prejudged the case and decided what is right and what is wrong. He knows very well as a lawyer and as a former judge that judgment is not rendered in a case until all the evidence is in. The Senator knows very well as a lawyer and a judge that whoever has evidence to offer should have an opportunity to offer it. I say to my distinguished friend, in the burst of his enthusiasm here, he has taken up the side of these Nazi SS troopers. He may do that if he wants to. I say, too, Mr. President, my distinguished friend here is prejudging the case; the evidence is not all in. My distinguished friend is basing his judgment largely—on what? Largely on the affidavits of condemned men, some of whom the shadows of the gallows crossed. Thank God, we were able to hold that up until we had an opportunity to get to the bottom of this thing. Others have faced long terms of imprisonment—desperate men, Mr. President. They are the men who signed these affidavits, the men who make these charges of brutalities. We have tried, Mr. President, and we will continue to try, to bring every eyewitness that we can possibly find anywhere to testify as to what went on at Schwabisch Hall and what went on at Dachau in the treatment of these German prisoners, because, as human beings, Mr. President, they are entitled to justice, they are entitled to fair play, and we are going to see to it that they get it. That is the purpose of your committee, Mr. President, and we will continue to work in that direction as long as the Senate leaves the matter in our charge.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut says we are prejudging the case. I know that I cannot force the Senator to answer questions. I am just curious to know whether he thinks at this moment it is right for him to proceed, in view of the fact he says he wants a fair hearing, he wants to let the world know there is to be a fair hearing. Does the Senator think it is right for him to proceed with this investigation of his own law partner?

It is impossible to get away from the fact that Major Fanton, the Senator's own law partner, whom the Senator defended on the floor of the Senate, is the man who was in charge—complete charge—during all the time of the alleged atrocities. If the committee finds that what the Van Roden-Simpson committee said is true, if they find that what the Raymond Army Board said is true, then they will have indicted the Senator's law partner. This is either a clearing or an indictment of the Senator's own law partner, the man whom the Senator, on the floor of the Senate, on the 17th of January, defended. The Senator said all the charges against him were groundless. The Senator said of the report of the Van Roden-Simpson Committee and of the Raymond Board, the things they found to be true——

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me finish. The Senator said they were groundless. The man who was in charge, Maj. Dwight Fanton, was the Senator's law partner. The Senator says, let us let the world know we are giving these people a fair hearing. The Senator may think he is giving them a fair hearing, but, I say to the Senator, if any other man were in his place, would he not say he was doing wrong to continue on with a farce such as this is? The Senator knows, and I know from his handling of this case thus far, that the report is not going to indict Major Fanton. The Senator and I know the report is going to clear him. So I say to the Senator, do not come up here and wave the flag at me. Please do not. I merely wonder, as of today, whether the Senator would tell the Senate it is proper for him to continue with this investigation of his own law partner? Does the Senator think that is right or wrong? I think it is——

Mr. BALDWIN. All right. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Let me say this, in answer to what the Senator has just said. My distinguished friend from Wisconsin has said this thing over and over and over again, about my law partner. Mr. President, if the committee continues with me in charge of the committee, and Dwight Fanton is responsible in one jot or tittle for any injustice, he will suffer with the rest of them, and the report will show that.

Mr. President, I am not alone on the committee. There are two other members. There is the entire record. There is the Armed Services Committee, which must decide upon it. Here is the Senate, Mr. President, before whom, in the face of these claims, it may be that sufficient interest is aroused to look into this thing fully.

God knows, Mr. President, I wish every Senator could read the record, because we need a just decision in this particular case. Insofar as I am able to render it, that is what it will be. But, Mr. President, this is not an indictment of anybody. These men are not on trial. This is an ascertainment of facts. They will be on trial, if, as a result of the facts disclosed in the committee report and in the record, the Army chooses to put them there. That is their function, not ours.

Mr. President, there is the whole record, developed as conscientiously as we know how to develop it. Furthermore, the Senator will remember that on several occasions he said to me—and he cross-examined Fanton at great length—he thought the main men in this case were four other men, and he did not mention Fanton. Now, in his address this afternoon, the whole case is built around this one thing, in an effort to discredit the Senator from Connecticut, in an effort to discredit the committee, in an effort to save God knows whom, Mr. President—I do not. But I know that there are some influences at work in this case that arouse a grave doubt in my mind. I wonder about Mr. Finucane, who is the executive secretary under Mr. Libby of the Society for the Prevention of War. I wonder why it is that he went up to see Judge Van Roden after he came back from Europe, conducting this investigation, after he had heard him talk before a meeting of the chamber of commerce or the Rotary Club. He hustles back to Washington and prepares an article containing many of the grave charges that are made here today. I wonder why Mr. Finucane, who was a conscientious objector in World War II, and who stayed out of it as long as he could—he goes up and sees Judge Van Roden, and the judge, very naively, apparently never had had anything to do with an article before. What does he do? He apparently approves the thing. Then, later, when he comes before our committee he repudiates it. He repudiates the article that was published in the Progressive magazine, so-called, that contains, and I think spark-plugged, many of these charges. Then, your committee, Mr. President, in a diligent effort to find out what the facts were, had Judge Van Roden sitting here. We had Mr. Finucane sitting here, and we had them denying what one another said. Here it is in the record. Finally, at the end, Judge Van Roden, one of these men who, with Judge Raymond, of Texas, made one of these examinations, repudiates the main part of the statement he had given, that contains many of these charges.

Mr. President, this is like any other case—it must be decided on the whole record. One cannot pick out one little fact here and associate it with another little fact there, and then think he has arrived at substantial justice. My friend from Wisconsin, as a judge, knows that all the evidence must be weighed.

Mr. President, I took an oath here in the Senate to do my duty. I expect to do it as long as I am here, without fear or favor to any man, just as I hope my distinguished friend from Wisconsin will do. I sometimes wonder about this case. I sometimes wonder why it is, what other reason there can be, other than the human one of wanting to see justice done. I wonder why there should be such a tremendous interest in the Nazi SS troopers, the cruelest troops of the war. I say they are entitled to fair play. We brought some of the witnesses in here and questioned them on the basis of what we understood they were going to say. The record will show that when they came and held up their right hand to solemnly swear that what they were going to say was the truth, they fell far short. They attributed to hearsay many of the things we had supposed were matters of their own direct knowledge, to be covered by their own direct testimony.

It is difficult to discuss the case, because I do not want to prejudge it. There still is many a question in my mind about this whole thing, many a question in my mind as to really what kind of treatment these men got when they were in prison, really whether they did get a fair trial. I have not prejudged the case, but I do think that our Army, our military government, has made a pretty conscientious effort in connection with it. There have been many reviews, at least four or five, and here is another one going on now, with the Secretary of the Army saying there will be no executions until the report of this committee is in.

Mr. President, that is a tremendously grave responsibility. So we shall try our best to do our job. But I say again that if the Senate feels that this matter should be given to some other committee, or to some other chairman, I have no interest in it other than to see justice and fair play done. It makes no difference to me, personally, what may happen to Major Fanton, who has been built up by my distinguished friend from Wisconsin as the motivating figure in the whole matter. But he falls far short of being the motivating figure. I think he spent approximately 3 months there and was not there during the entire investigation.

What the Senate may want to do in the matter is its own problem. But, Mr. President, I would not think that I would be defeating a really great and sincere purpose, in connection with charges which I consider to be utterly groundless, if I were to say that in the face of this claim I should beat a hasty retreat and should surrender. I have no intention of doing any such thing. But, at the same time, it is in the bosom of the Senate. The Senate has a right to change the committee and the chairman. I ask the Senate to judge us on the record, not on the claims made alone, but on the record, and I ask it to have in mind that in this particular phase of the proceedings it is impossible, without appearing to prejudge the case and take sides, to answer the things which have been said or to attempt to answer them.

So, Mr. President, I leave the matter in the hands of the Senate.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, in closing, let me say that I have no intention of asking the Senate to remove the Senator from Connecticut as chairman of the subcommittee. We have taken, I think, sufficient action to get a fair and honest investigation. We have asked the Inspector General's office—and by "we," I mean the special Senate investigating committee, which voted unanimously to make the request of the Inspector General's office—to make the investigation which we feel the subcommittee headed by the Senator from Connecticut will not make. I would also like to say that the Senator from Connecticut errs when he says I heard only a few of the witnesses and infers I attended only a very few sessions of the hearings. I attended every session until I could stomach the whitewash no longer.

Mr. President, I should like to put another matter in the RECORD which I think would be of especial interest to any lawyer reading the RECORD. During the trial the defense attorneys knew of "SOP No. 4" and they knew of paragraph (b), which authorized the interrogator to offer immunity to anyone who would tell a story sufficiently valuable to convict the codefendants. In view of that fact, the defense counsel naturally were very eager to cross-examine the men who were originally defendants and had their status changed to that of witnesses. So when such a valuable witness got on the stand, who had been, in the words of "SOP No. 4," "implicated in the crime," defense counsel tried to cross-examine to find out what the witnesses were offered to testify as they did, or whether they were threatened, or under what circumstances they received immunity. The law member of the court, the only member of the court who had had any legal experience, made all the rulings on objections which were raised. The prosecution consistently objected—this may be of interest only to the attorneys—to questioning the credibility of a witness on cross-examination. The objection was made on the ground that the subject was not gone into on direct examination. In other words, when the defense counsel would say to a witness, "What were you offered? Were you given immunity, or did they threaten to send you back to Russia if you did not testify as you have testified?" the prosecuting attorney would always object on the ground that the subject was not gone into on direct examination. That is obviously the most groundless legal objection conceivable, because the credibility of one's own witness is not questioned on direct examination. But the law member ruled that the credibility of any witness could not be gone into, which tied the hands of the defense. That ruling alone made it extremely difficult to get a fair trial.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Wisconsin, in referring to the Senator from Connecticut recently used language unbecoming a Senator when he used the words "criminally responsible" in referring to the Senator from Connecticut.

I cite paragraph 2 of rule XIX, which provides as follows:

No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

I call attention also to paragraph 4 of the same rule, and I claim that the rule should be enforced this afternoon, and I demand it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I did not use that phrase but before I used the phrase to which the Senator evidently refers I stopped, because I realized that it might be better unsaid. The Senator from Connecticut said, "Proceed and say it," and I did. I think the Senator from New Hampshire may be correct, and I shall be glad to have the language stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield the floor.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. President, as a member of the subcommittee which has been referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin, I should like to take a few minutes of the time of this distinguished body with reference to the very difficult investigation which has been assigned to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], as chairman, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and myself. I should like to say that the subcommittee has been most diligent in its efforts to ferret out the truth and to get to the very bottom of the situation. For days on end the subcommittee held extensive hearings. It called witnesses from every part of the United States who had even the most remote connection with the Malmedy trials, to appear before it and to give their testimony.

Primarily, I wish to say that my distinguished colleague the Senator from Connecticut, has been most fair throughout all the hearings. I want to say, further, that he has been more of a seeker for the truth because of his connection with Major Fanton than could possibly have been any other Member of the Senate.

Mr. President, as a member of the subcommittee, I resent the statements made by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin this afternoon. My colleague from Connecticut has been fair, he has been honest, and he has made every effort to obtain every bit of evidence he possibly could from every witness appearing before the subcommittee. I think the charge made this afternoon against the subcommittee is, first, untimely; second, I think it is unfair; and, in the third place, I think it is hitting below the belt.

Mr. President, I am not going to be drawn into any argument with reference to the merits of this case, but I wish to say that we are going to get to the bottom of this matter, and we are going to find out who it is, and to what organization they belong, who are back behind the scenes pushing this investigation.

Mr. President, I have an open mind in this investigation, and I intend to keep it open. When all the testimony is in, and when the report is then written, I shall address the Senate in no uncertain terms, and the Senate will understand and know whether or not this committee has been thorough and fair, and they will then appreciate the distinguished services of my colleague from Connecticut, for whom I have the greatest affection and love.

Mr. McMAHON subsequently said. Mr. President, during the address by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] on the Malmedy trials, I was engaged in a meeting of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and I arrived in the Senate Chamber just at the conclusion of the Senator's address and in time to hear my colleague, the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], make some comments on the speech. I have since examined the manuscript of the address delivered by the junior Senator from Wisconsin, and I deeply regret that he has seen fit to attack the integrity of my colleague.

I know nothing about the Malmedy investigation or the Malmedy controversy, but I do know Senator BALDWIN. I have known him for over 25 years. As young lawyers we opposed one another in the courts of the State of Connecticut, our native State. The attack which has been made on Senator BALDWIN will not injure him in the slightest in the State which we have the honor to represent here in the Senate. His reputation for integrity and his character are known to our people. He was Governor of our State on three different occasions. I suppose he knows more people in Connecticut by their first names than any other of its public servants do. I could not let the record stand without rising here to say that I regard this attack on him as extremely regrettable. I feel that the Senate's judgment on the attack will coincide with mine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these remarks appear in the RECORD before the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I rise to express my profound thanks to my distinguished colleague and friend from Connecticut for the kindly way he has treated me in connection with this little controversy. What he has done is very generous and very kind of him.

I also want to say, Mr. President, that I appreciate the support the two members of the subcommittee have given in this controversy, and to say that no man worked with better colleagues on the subcommittee than the junior Senator from Connecticut has been privileged to work in this rather difficult, trying, and highly controversial matter. I am extremely grateful for their remarks, as well as the remarks of my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON].

THE FARMERS NEED AND WANT RURAL TELEPHONES NOW—"WHY NOT NOW?"

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, on June 11, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry held a hearing on the bill to provide for the extension of telephone service to farmers. I consider the matter of such great importance that on June 24 I presented to the Senate the testimony that had been given to the committee. Since that time 1 month has passed.

In the meantime, the House of Representatives passed and sent to the Senate a bill providing for rural telephones. The bill and all the issues it involves was thoroughly discussed by the House Committee on Agriculture and by the House itself on the floor. Our own Senate committee has discussed it. All sides have had the opportunity to present their arguments to Congress.

I am glad to say that Senator THOMAS, chairman of the committee, says that it is time for action on the Senate floor.

The telephone legislation we have under consideration is nonpartisan in every respect. The Senate bill is sponsored by a bipartisan group of 11 Senators. The Senators sponsoring the bill are: the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON]; the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL]; the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE]; the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR]; the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]; the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]; the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON]; the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN]; the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], my distinguished colleague, and myself.

In the House it was passed overwhelmingly by the strong support of both parties. Both the majority and the minority leaders supported the measure.

The farmers of this country are looking to the Senate for action on this legislation at this session and I want to know that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will soon give us an opportunity to vote on this bill.

We all know that the telephone monopoly has fought this legislation from the very beginning. The bill is opposed by those segments of the telephone industry which not only have failed to supply most farmers with telephone service, but openly admit their inability to do so.

The lobbyists representing the telephone monopoly are hard at work. First of all, they have tried to defeat the bill. Failing in that, as they did in the House, they have tried to propose every conceivable reason for delaying action. When this is ineffective, they propose all kinds of crippling and restrictive amendments.

In the House all these efforts to tack on crippling amendments were defeated and the bill that has come over from the House is in good shape. Therefore, I am glad that the Senate committee will soon report on the bill.

A farmer, perhaps more than any other citizen, represents the qualities of character by which we like to measure our national strength. He is independent, ingenious, self-sufficient to a large degree, ever willing to help his neighbor, aware and confident that in time of need his neighbor will help him. God-fearing, a good provider, and a good family man. More than that he is a businessman, running a business which is important to the welfare of this Nation. Since this is true, the farmer feels entitled to the

PAUL, WEISS, RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESS

FOR RELEASE: 7 PM. Tuesday, June 1, 1954

"Dr. Oppenheimer has requested John W. Davis and myself to make public the attached documents of record in the proceedings concerning him.

Lloyd K. Garrison"

* * *

LIST OF ATTACHED DOCUMENTS:

1. "Findings and Recommendation of the Personnel Security Board in the case of Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer," containing Majority and Minority Opinions of the Board (in form of letter to K. D. Nichols, General Manager, AEC, dated May 27, 1954).

2. Letter from General Nichols to Dr. Oppenheimer, dated May 28, 1954.

3. Reply to General Nichols by Lloyd K. Garrison, counsel for Dr. Oppenheimer, in letter dated June 1, 1954, in which John W. Davis joins.

* * *

PAGE INDEX TO ATTACHED DOCUMENTS:

Loyalty and Discretion: Personnel Security Board unanimously (3-0) finds Dr. Oppenheimer loyal (pp. 21, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, Document #1) and discreet in keeping vital secrets (p. 31).

Reinstatement of Clearance: A majority of the Board (2-1) recommends that Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance not be reinstated (p. 33). Dr. Evans, the third member of the Board, dissents (p. 34).

Procedure on Appeal: K. D. Nichols, General Manager, AEC, advises Dr. Oppenheimer and counsel that final determination as to reinstatement of Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance will be made by the Atomic Energy Commission (Document #2).

Counsel for Dr. Oppenheimer waives review by Personnel Security Review Board and requests leave to file brief and make oral argument before the Commission (Document #3).

FOR RELEASE: 7 P.M. Tuesday, June 1, 1954

UNITED STATES
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION
Washington, D. C.

May 27, 1954

Mr. K. D. Nichols, General Manager,
U. S. Atomic Energy Commission
1901 Constitution Avenue, N. W.
Washington 25, D. C.

Subject: FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATION OF THE PERSONNEL SECURITY BOARD IN THE CASE OF DR. J. ROBERT OPPENHEIMER

Dear Mr. Nichols:

On December 23, 1953, Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer was notified by letter that his security clearance had been suspended. He was furnished a list of items of derogatory information and was advised of his rights to a hearing under AEC procedures. On March 4, 1954, Dr. Oppenheimer requested that he be afforded a hearing. A hearing has been conducted by the Board appointed by you for this purpose, and we submit our findings and recommendation.

Dr. Ward V. Evans dissents from the recommendation of the majority of the Board, and his minority report is attached. He specifically subscribes to the "Findings" of the majority of the Board, and to a portion of the material entitled "Significance of the Findings."

Introduction

It must be understood that in our world in which the survival of free institutions and of individual rights is at stake, every person must in his own way be a guardian of the national security. It also must be clear that, in the exercise of this stewardship, individuals and institutions must protect, preserve and defend those human values for which we exist as a nation, as a Government, and as a way of life.

The hard requirements of security, and the assertion of freedoms, together thrust upon us a dilemma, not easily resolved. In the present international situation, our security measures exist, in the ultimate analysis, to protect our free institutions and traditions against repressive totalitarianism and its inevitable denial of human values. Thoughtful Americans find themselves uneasy, however, about those policies which must be adopted and those actions which must be taken in the interests of national security, and which at the same time pose a threat to our ideals. This Board has been conscious of these conflicts, presenting as they do some of the grave problems of our times, and has sought to consider them in an atmosphere of decency and safety.

We share the hope that some day we may return to happier times when our free institutions are not threatened and a peaceful and just world order is not such a compelling principal preoccupation. Then security will cease to be a central issue; man's conduct as a citizen will be measured only in the terms of the requirements of our national society; there will be no undue restraints upon freedom of mind and action; and loyalty and security as concepts will cease to have restrictive implications.

This state of affairs seems not to be a matter of early hope. As we meet the present peril, and seek to overcome it, we must realize that at no time can the interests of the protection of all our people be less than paramount to all other considerations. Indeed, action which in some cases may seem to be a denial of the freedoms which our security barriers are erected to protect, may rather be a fulfillment of these freedoms. For, if in our zeal to protect our institutions against our measures to secure them, we lay them open to destruction, we will have lost them all, and will have gained only the empty satisfaction of a meaningless exercise.

We are acutely aware that in a very real sense this case puts the security system of the United States on trial, both as to procedures and as to substance. This notion has been strongly urged upon us by those who recommend clearance for Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, and no doubt a similar view is taken by those who feel he should not be cleared.

If we understand the two points of view, they may be stated as follows: There are those who apprehend that our program for security at this point in history consists of an uneasy mixture of fear, prejudice, and arbitrary judgments. They feel that reason and fairness and justice have abdicated and their places have been taken by hysteria and repression. They, thus, believe that security procedures are necessarily without probity and that national sanity and balance can be served only by a finding in favor of the individual concerned. On the other hand, there is a strong belief that in recent times our Government has been less than unyielding towards the problem of Communism, and that loose and pliable attitudes regarding loyalty and security have prevailed to the danger of our society and its institutions. Thus, they feel that this proceeding presents the unrelinquishable opportunity for a demonstration against Communism, almost regardless of the facts developed about the conduct and sympathies of Dr. Oppenheimer.

We find ourselves in agreement with much that underlies both points of view. We believe that the people of our country can be reassured by this proceeding that it is possible to conduct an investigation in calmness, in fairness, in disregard of public clamor and private pressures, and with dignity. We believe that it has been demonstrated that the Government can search its own soul and the soul of an individual whose relationship to his Government is in question with full protection of the rights and interests of both. We believe that loyalty and security can be examined within the frameworks of the traditional and inviolable principles of American justice.

The Board approached its task in the spirity of inquiry, not that of a trial. The Board worked long and arduously. It has heard forty witnesses including Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer and compiled over three thousand pages of testimony in addition to having read the same amount of file material.

Dr. Oppenheimer has been represented by counsel, usually four in number, at all times in the course of the proceedings. He has confronted every witness appearing before the Board, with the privilege of cross examination. He is familiar with the contents of every relevant document, which was made available to the Board, except those which under Governmental necessity cannot be disclosed, such as reports of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He has, in his own words, received patient and courteous consideration at the hands of the Board. The Board has, in the words of his chief counsel, displayed fairness in the conduct of the hearings. And, finally, perhaps it should be said that the investigation has been conducted under the auspices of the responsible agency which has the obligation of decision.

As it considered substance, the Board has allowed sympathetic consideration for the individual to go hand in hand with an understanding of the necessities for a clear, realistic, and rugged attitude towards subversion, possible subversion, or indeed broader implications of security.

It was with all these considerations in mind that we approached our task.

Procedures Governing the Hearing

This proceeding is based upon the Atomic Energy Act of 1946; upon the Atomic Energy Commission's published Security Clearance Procedures, dated September 12, 1950; and Personnel Security Clearance Criteria for Determining Eligibility, dated November 17, 1950; and upon Executive Order No. 10450, dated April 27, 1953.

Subparagraphs (ii) and (iv) of Section 10(b)(5)(B) of the Atomic Energy Act provide that, except as authorized by the Commission in case of emergency, no individual shall be employed by the Commission until the Civil Service Commission or (in certain instances) the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall have made an investigation and report to the Commission on the "character, associations, and loyalty" of such individual.

The AEC published Procedures provide, among other things, for written notice to the individual (1) listing the items of derogatory information and (2) explaining his rights (a) to reply in writing to the information set forth in the Commission's letter, (b) to request a hearing before a Personnel Security Board, (c) to challenge the appointment of the members of the Board for cause, (d) to be present for the duration of the hearing, (e) to be represented by counsel of his own choosing, and (f) to present evidence in his own behalf through witnesses, or by documents, or by both. The Commission's Procedures further provide that in the event of a recommendation for a denial of security clearance, the individual shall be immediately notified of that fact and of his right to request a review of his case by the AEC Personnel Security Review Board, with the right to submit a brief to that Board before the case goes to the General Manager for final determination.

The AEC published Criteria establish the uniform standards to be applied in determining eligibility for clearance. These Criteria, which, of course, are binding on this Board, provide that it is the responsibility of the Atomic Energy Commission to determine whether the common defense or security will be endangered by granting security clearance.

The Executive Order requires the head of each department and agency of the Government to establish and maintain within his department or agency an effective program to insure that "the employment and retention in employment of any civilian officer or employee within the department or agency is clearly consistent with the interests of the national security." The Executive Order further provides that information on this issue shall relate, but shall not be limited, to certain categories of information set forth in the Order.

Findings

In compliance with Section 4.16(c) of the Commission's Security Clearance Procedures, the Board makes the following specific findings as to the allegations contained in Mr. K. D. Nichols' letter of December 23, 1953 to Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer:

1. It was reported that in 1940 you were listed as a sponsor of the Friends of the Chinese People, an organization which was characterized in 1944 by the House Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist-front organization.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Dr. Oppenheimer in his answer replied that he had no recollection of the Friends of the Chinese People, or of what, if any, his connection with this organization was.

The Board had before it a four-page pamphlet (undated) entitled, "American Friends of the Chinese People." The fourth page contains a list of sponsors which includes "Professor J. R. Oppenheimer."

2. It was further reported that in 1940 your name was included on a letterhead of the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom as a member of its National Executive Committee. The American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom was characterized in 1942 by the House Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist-front which defended Communist teachers, and in 1943 it was characterized as subversive and Un-American by a Special Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified before the Board to having joined the American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom in 1937. He said that it then stood as a protest against what had happened to intellectuals and professionals in Germany. The Board had before it a letterhead of the "American Committee for Democracy and Intellectual Freedom." The letterhead contains a printed list of the National Executive Committee, which includes "Professor J. R. Oppenheimer." Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he supposed he accepted membership on this Executive Committee although he did not meet with it.

Dr. Oppenheimer stated in his personnel security questionnaire, which he executed on April 28, 1942, for the purpose of obtaining a clearance for work on the atomic program, that he had joined the "American Committee for Democratic Intellectual Freedom" in 1937 and was still a member on the date the PSQ was executed. He testified that he did not know how long after that he continued to be a member; that, in any event, he was not active thereafter.

3. It was further reported that in 1938 you were a member of the Western Council of the Consumers Union. The Consumers Union was cited in 1944 by the House Committee on Un-American Activities as a Communist-front headed by the Communist Arthur Kallet.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Dr. Oppenheimer in his answer stated that for perhaps a year he had been a member of the Western Council of the Consumers Union. In his Personnel Security Questionnaire, which he executed on April 28, 1942, Dr. Oppenheimer stated that he had been a member of the Consumers Union (Western) in 1938-1939.

The Board had before it a photostat of a four-page pamphlet (undated) entitled, "Western Consumers Union," containing a list of Western sponsors, which included the name "Dr. Robert J. Oppenheimer -- Internationally-known Physicist at the University of California."

4. It was further reported that you stated in 1943 that you were not a Communist, but had probably belonged to every Communist-front organization on the west coast and had signed many petitions in which Communists were interested.

The Board concludes that this statement was made by Dr. Oppenheimer, and the Board had before it considerable evidence indicating Dr. Oppenheimer's membership in, and association with, Communist-front organizations and activities on the West Coast. However, Dr. Oppenheimer, in his answer, claimed that the quotation was not true and that if he had said anything along the lines quoted, it was a half-jocular overstatement.

The Board had before it a memorandum, dated September 14, 1943, prepared by Lt. Col. John Lansdale, Jr., who was then head of Security and Intelligence for the Manhattan District, which reported "Oppenheimer categorically stated (to General Groves) that he himself was not a Communist and never had been, but stated that he had probably belonged to every Communist-front organization on the West Coast and signed many petitions concerning matters in which Communists were interested."

The Board also had before it a transcript of an interview between Colonel Lansdale and Dr. Oppenheimer on September 12, 1943, which reflected that Colonel Lansdale had asked Dr. Oppenheimer, "You've probably belonged to every front organization on the coast," to which Dr. Oppenheimer replied "Just about." The transcript further records that Dr. Oppenheimer also stated that he thought he would have been considered at one time a fellow-traveler and that "my association with these things was very brief and very intense."

Dr. Oppenheimer in his testimony defined "fellow-traveler" as "someone who accepted part of the public program of the Communist Party, who was willing to work with and associate with Communists, but who was not a member of the Party." He testified to having been a fellow-traveler from late 1936 or early 1937, with his interest beginning to taper off after 1939, and with very little interest after 1942. He further stated that within the framework of his definition of a fellow-traveler, he would not have considered himself as such after 1942.

He further stated that with respect to things that the Communists were doing, in which he still had an interest, it was not until 1946 that it was clear to him that he would not collaborate with Communists no matter how much he sympathized with what they pretended to represent.

5. It was reported that ~~in~~ 1943 and previously you were intimately associated with Dr. Jean Tatlock, a member of the Communist Party in San Francisco, and that Dr. Tatlock was partially responsible for your association with Communist-front groups.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Dr. Oppenheimer in his testimony before this Board admitted having associated with Jean Tatlock from 1936 until 1943. He stated that he saw her only rarely between 1939 and 1943, but admitted that the association was intimate. He admitted having seen Jean Tatlock under most intimate circumstances in June or July of 1943, during the time when he was Director of the Los Alamos Laboratory, and admitted that he knew she had been a Communist and that there was not any reason for him to believe that she was not at that time still a Communist. He named several Communists, Communist functionaries or Communist sympathizers whom he had met through Jean Tatlock, or as a result of his association with her.

6. It was reported that your wife, Katherine Puening Oppenheimer, was formerly the wife of Joseph Dallet, a member of the Communist Party, who was killed in Spain in 1937 fighting for the Spanish Republican Army.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Mrs. Oppenheimer testified that she was married to Joseph Dallet from 1934 until he was killed in Spain, fighting for the Spanish Republican Army in 1937.

Mrs. Oppenheimer admitted knowing that Dallet was a member of the Communist Party and was actively engaging in Communist Party activities.

7. It was further reported that during the period of her association with Joseph Dallet, your wife became a member of the Communist Party. The Communist Party has been designated by the Attorney General as a subversive organization which seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means, within the purview of Executive Order 9835 and Executive Order 10450.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Mrs. Oppenheimer testified to having been a member of the Communist Party from about 1934 to June 1936 and having engaged in Communist Party activities in the Youngstown, Ohio area.

8. It was reported that your brother Frank Friedman Oppenheimer became a member of the Communist Party in 1936 and has served as a Party organizer and as Educational Director of the Professional Section of the Communist Party in Los Angeles County.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Dr. Frank Friedman Oppenheimer admitted in testimony before the Committee on Un-American Activities of the House of Representative, on June 14, 1949, that he had been a member of the Communist Party from about 1937 until the early spring of 1941. He testified that he joined under the name of "Frank Folsom."

From information before it, the Board concludes that Dr. Frank Oppenheimer had served as a Party organizer and as Educational Director of the Professional Section of the Communist Party in Los Angeles County.

9. It was further reported that your brother's wife Jackie Oppenheimer, was a member of the Communist Party in 1938;

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Mrs. Jacquenette Oppenheimer in testimony before the Committee on Un-American Activities, House of Representatives, on June 14, 1949, admitted having been a member of the Communist Party from 1937 until the spring of 1941.

10. and that in August, 1944, Jackie Oppenheimer assisted in the organization of the East Bay branch of the California Labor School.

On the basis of information before it, the Board concludes that this allegation is true.

11. It was further reported that in 1945 Frank and Jackie Oppenheimer were invited to an informal reception at the Russian Consulate, that this invitation was extended by the American-Russian Institute of San Francisco and was for the purpose of introducing famous American scientists to Russian scientists who were delegates to the United Nations Conference on International Organization being held at San Francisco at that time, and that Frank Oppenheimer accepted this invitation.

On the basis of information before it, the Board concludes that this allegation is true.

12. It was further reported that Frank Oppenheimer agreed to give a six-week course on "The Social Implications of Modern Scientific Development" at the California Labor School, beginning May 9, 1946. The American-Russian Institute of San Francisco and the California Labor School have been cited by the Attorney General as Communist organizations within the purview of Executive Order 9835 and Executive Order 10450.

On the basis of information before it, the Board concludes that this allegation is true.

13. It was reported that you have associated with members and officials of the Communist Party, including Isaac Folkoff, Steve Nelson, Rudy Lambert, Kenneth May, Jack Manley, and Thomas Addis.

The Board concludes that this allegation is substantially true.

Dr. Oppenheimer in his answer and in his testimony admitted having associated with Isaac Folkoff, Steve Nelson, Rudy Lambert, Kenneth May and Thomas Addis. He testified that he knew at the time of his association with them that Folkoff, Nelson, Lambert and May were Communist Party functionaries, and that Addis was either a Communist or close to one. He admitted that his associations with these persons continued until 1942. There was no evidence before the Board with respect to an association with Jack Manley.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he made contributions to the Spanish War and Spanish Relief through Isaac Folkoff and Thomas Addis. He testified that he had seen Lambert on half a dozen occasions, and that he discussed such contributions once or twice at luncheon with Lambert and Folkoff.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that Steve Nelson and his family visited his home on several occasions, the last being probably in 1942; that such visits lasted "a few hours;" that he had met Steve Nelson through his (Oppenheimer's) wife since Nelson had befriended her in Paris at the time of Dallet's death; that he had nothing in common with Nelson "except an affection for my wife."

14. It was reported that you were a subscriber to the Daily People's World, a west coast Communist newspaper, in 1941 and 1942.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he had subscribed to the People's World "for several years." He could not recall when the subscription expired and stated that he did not believe he had cancelled the subscription. He testified that he knew the Daily People's World was the West Cost Communist newspaper.

15. It was reported in 1950 that you stated to an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation that you had in the past made contributions to Communist-front organizations, although at the time you did not know of Communist Party control or extent of infiltration of these groups. You further stated to an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation that some of these contributions were made through Isaac Folkoff, whom you knew to be a leading Communist Party functionary, because you had been told that this was the most effective and direct way of helping these groups.

The Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer made the statements attributed to him by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The Board concludes that Dr. Oppenheimer in the past made contributions to Communist-front organizations and that some of these contributions were made through Isaac Folkoff, a leading Communist Party functionary.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he contributed to Spanish causes through Communist Party channels from the winter of 1937-38 until early in 1942. He said that he had contributed more than $500 and less than $1,000 each year during this period. He testified that he made the contributions in cash and, in explaining how these contributions came to an end, he said (in referring to Pearl Harbor) that he "didn't like to continue a clandestine operation of any kind at a time when I saw myself with the possibility or prospect of getting more deeply involved in the war."

Dr. Oppenheimer in his answer admitted making the contributions through Thomas Addis and Isaac Folkoff. He testified that he knew Addis was a Communist or very close to a Communist. He knew that Folkoff was connected with the Communist Party. In addition, Dr. Oppenheimer admitted having contributed about $100 in cash to the Strike Fund of one of the major strikes of "Bridges' Union" about 1937 or 1938.

16. It was reported that you attended a housewarming party at the home of Kenneth and Ruth May on September 20, 1941, for which there was an admission charge for the benefit of The People's World, and that at this party you were in the company of Joseph W. Weinberg and Clarance Hiskey, who were alleged to be members of the Communist Party and to have engaged in espionage on behalf of the Soviet Union. It was further reported that you informed officials of the United States Department of Justice in 1942 that you had no recollection that you had attended such a party, but that since it would have been in character for you to have attended such a party, you would not deny that you were there.

The Board concludes on the basis of information before it, that it was probable that Dr. Oppenheimer attended "the housewarming party" at the home of Kenneth and Ruth May. The Board concludes that Dr. Oppenheimer made the statements to the U. S. Department of Justice officials attributed to him.

Dr. Oppenheimer did not deny having attended such a party and testified that he knew Kenneth May. He denied knowing Hiskey but testified that he, Oppenheimer, was at parties at which Weinberg was present.

17. It was reported that you attended a closed meeting of the professional section of the Communist Party of Alameda County, California, which was held in the latter part of July or early August, 1941, at your residence, 19 Kenilworth Court, Berkeley, California, for the purpose of hearing an explanation of a change in Communist Party policy. It was further reported that you denied that you attended such a meeting and that such a meeting was held in your home.

The Board is of the opinion that the evidence with respect to this meeting is inconclusive. The Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer did deny that he attended such a meeting and that such a meeting was held in his home.

18. It was reported that you stated to an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in 1950 that you attended a meeting in 1940 or 1941, which may have taken place at the home of Haakon Chevalier, which was addressed by William Schneiderman, whom you knew to be a leading functionary of the Communist Party. In testimony in 1950 before the California State Senate Committee on Un-American Activities, Haakon Chevalier was identified as a member of the Communist Party in the San Francisco area in the early 1940's.

The Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer made the statements attributed to him by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that on December 1, 1940, he attended an evening meeting at the home of Haakon Chevalier at which perhaps 20 people were present and at which William Schneiderman, Secretary of the Communist Party in California, gave a talk about the Communist Party line. He testified that he thought that possibly Isaac Folkoff, Dr. Addis and Rudy Lambert were there.

He also testified that "after the end of 1940" he attended a similar meeting at the home of Louise Bransten, "a Communist sympathizer," at which some of the same people were present and at which Schneiderman also spoke and expounded the Communist Party line.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that sometime between 1937 and 1939 as a "guest" he attended a Communist Party meeting at the home of his brother, Frank.

19. It was reported that you have consistently denied that you have ever been a member of the Communist Party. It was further reported that you stated to a representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation in 1946 that you had a change of mind regarding the policies and politics of the Soviet Union about the time of the signing of the Soviet-German Pact in 1939. It was further reported that during 1950 you stated to a representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation that you had never attended a closed meeting of the Communist Party; and that at the time of the Russo-Finnish War and the subsequent break between Germany and Russia in 1941, you realized the Communist Party infiltration tactics into the alleged anti-Fascist groups and became fed up with the whole thing and lost what little interest you had.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he had never been a member of the Communist Party. The Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer made the statements attributed to him by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

It was further reported, however, that:

19(a). Prior to April, 1942, you had contributed $150 per month to the Communist Party in the San Francisco Area, and that the last such payment was apparently made in April, 1942, immediately before your entry into the atomic bomb Project.

The Board concludes on the basis of testimony and other information before it that Dr. Oppenheimer made periodic contributions through Communist Party functionaries to the Communist Party in the San Francisco area in amounts aggregating not less than $500 nor more than $1,000 a year during a period of approxima ely four years ending in April 1942. As of April 1942, Dr. Oppenheimer had been for several months participating in Government atomic energy research activities. He executed a questionnaire for Government clearance on 28 April 1942, and subsequently assumed full-time duties with the atomic energy project.

19(b). During the period 1942-1945 various officials of the Communist Party, including Dr. Hannah Peters, organizer of the Professional Section of the Communist Party, Alameda County, California, Bernadette Doyle, secretary of the Alameda County Communist Party, Steve Nelson, David Adelson, Paul Pinsky, Jack Manley, and Katrina Sandow, are reported to have made statements indicating that you were then a member of the Communist Party; that you could not be active in the Party at that time; that your name should be removed from the Party mailing list and not mentioned in any way; that you had talked the atomic bomb question over with Party members during this period; and that several years prior to 1945 you had told Steve Nelson that the Army was working on an atomic bomb.

The Board finds that during the period 1942-45, Dr. Hannah Peters, Bernadette Doyle, Steve Nelson, Jack Manley and Katrina Sandow made statements indicating that Dr. Oppenheimer was then a member of the Communist Party; and that the other statements attributed to officials of the Communist Party in this allegation were made by one or more of them. The Board does not find on the basis of information available to it that such statements were made by David Adelson and Paul Pinsky.

19(c). You stated in August of 1943 that you did not want anybody working for you on the Project who was a member of the Communist Party, since "one always had a question of divided loyalty" and the discipline of the Communist Party was very severe and not compatible with complete loyalty to the Project. You further stated at that time that you were referring only to present membership in the Communist Party and not to people who had been members of the Party. You stated further that you knew several individuals then at Los Alamos who had been members of the Communist Party. You did not, however, identify such former members of the Communist Party to the appropriate authorities. It was also reported that during the period 1942-1945 you were responsible for the employment on the atomic bomb Project of individuals who were members of the Communist Party or closely associated with activities of the Communist Party, including Giovanni Rossi Lomanitz, Joseph W. Weinberg, David Bohm, Max Bernard Friedman, and David Hawkins. In the case of Giovanni Rossi Lomanitz, you urged him to work on the Project, although you stated that you knew he had been very much of a "Red" when he first come to the University of California and that you emphasized to him that he must forego all political activity if he came on to the Project. In August, 1943, you protested against the termination of his deferment and requested that he be returned to the Project after his entry into the military service.

The Board concludes that Dr. Oppenheimer did state in 1943 that he did not want anybody working for him on the Project who was a member of the Communist Party since "one always had a question of divided loyalty" and the discipline of the Communist Party was very severe and not compatible with complete loyalty to the Project. He further stated at that time he was referring only to present membership in the Communist Party and not to people who had been members of the Party. He stated further that he knew several individuals then at Los Alamos who had been members of the Communist Party. He did not, however, identify such former members of the Communist Party to the appropriate authorities.

The Board concludes that Dr. Oppenheimer was responsible for the employment on the atom bomb Project of Giovanni Rossi Lomanitz at Berkeley and David Hawkins at Los Alamos.

The Board concludes that Dr. Oppenheimer asked for the transfer of David Bohm to Los Alamos, although Bohm was closely associated with the Communist Party. In his answer, Dr. Oppenheimer admitted that while at Berkeley he had assigned David Bohm to a problem of basic science having a bearing on atomic research.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he understood that Hawkins had left-wing associations; and that Hawkins "talked about philosophy in a way that indicated an interest and understanding and limited approval anyway of Engels."

The Board does not conclude that Dr. Oppenheimer was responsible for the employment of Friedmann or Weinberg on the Atomic Energy Program.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that Joseph W. Weinberg was a graduate student of his; that he had heard that Weinberg had been a member of the Young Communist League before coming to Berkeley and the Board had before it a transcript of a conversation with Dr. Oppenheimer indicating that at least by August 1943, he knew Weinberg to be a member of the Communist Party and that he "suspected that before but was not sure." Weinberg gave Oppenheimer as a reference at the time he (Weinberg) obtained employment at the Radiation Laboratory on April 22, 1943.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he asked General Groves for the transfer of David Bohm to Los Alamos in 1943, but was told by General Groves that he could not be transferred since he had relatives in Nazi Germany. In March, 1944, after a conversation with Bohm at Berkeley, (a surveillance report indicated that the talk took place at a sidewalk meeting) he checked with the Security Officer at Los Alamos to see whether the objections to Bohm still obtained.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he thought that in 1946 or 1947 he helped Bohm get a job as Assistant Professor of Physics at Princeton. He testified that he happened to meet Bohm and Lomanitz on the street in Princeton in 1949 just prior to their testifying before the House Committee on Un-American Activities; that he said that "they should tell the truth"; that he later saw Bohm at Princeton and attended a farewell party for him in Princeton; that he would, if asked, have written a letter of recommendation for Bohm as a competent physicist in connection with a job in Brazil, although he knew and was worried about Bohm having pleaded the Fifth Amendment when he testified.

The Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer did urge Lomanitz to work on the project although he knew he had been very much a "Red" when he first came to the University of California and, in fact, during his attendance at the University, and that Dr. Oppenheimer later stated to a Manhattan District official that he had warned Lomanitz that he must forego all political activity if he came to the project. The Board finds further that in August, 1943, Dr. Oppenheimer protested against the termination of Lomanitz' deferment and urgently requested that he be returned to the Project after his entry into the military service. It appears from the testimony that Dr. Oppenheimer first learned of the impending induction of Lomanitz in a letter from Dr. E. U. Condon who wrote to him "About it in a great sense of outrage."

> 20. It was reported that you stated to representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation on September 5, 1946, that you had attended a meeting in the East Bay and a meeting in San Francisco at which there were present persons definitely identified with the Communist Party. When asked the purpose of the East Bay meeting and the identity of those in attendance, you declined to answer on the ground that this had no bearing on the matter of interest being discussed.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true. The Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer did attend a meeting in the East Bay and a meeting in San Francisco (see Item 18 above) at which there were present persons definitely identified with the Communist Party and that when he was asked about this meeting by representatives of the Federal Bureau of Investigation on September 5, 1946, he declined to answer on the ground that this had no bearing on the matter of interest being discussed.

The Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer advised representatives of the F.B.I. of this meeting in a subsequent interview in 1950.

> 21. It was reported that you attended a meeting at the home of Frank Oppenheimer on January 1, 1946, with David Adelson and Paul Pinsky, both of whom were members of the Communist Party. It was further reported that you analyzed some material which Pinsky hoped to take up with the Legislative Convention in Sacramento, California.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true.

> 22. It was reported in 1946 that you were listed as Vice Chairman on the letterhead of the Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, Inc., which has been cited as a Communist-front by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The Board concludes that this allegation is true, although the Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer advised the organization in a letter on October 11, 1946, that he was not in accord with its policy and wished to resign. He wrote again on December 2, 1946, insisting upon resignation. The resignation was accepted on December 10, 1946.

23. It was reported that prior to March 1, 1943, possibly three months prior, Peter Ivanov, Secretary at the Soviet Consulate, San Francisco, approached George Charles Eltenton for the purpose of obtaining information regarding work being done at the Radiation Laboratory for the use of Soviet scientists; that George Charles Eltenton subsequently requested Haakon Chevalier to approach you concerning this matter; that Haakon Chevalier thereupon approached you, either directly or through your brother, Frank Friedman Oppenheimer, in connection with this matter; and that Haakon Chevalier finally advised George Charles Eltenton that there was no chance whatsoever of obtaining the information. It was further reported that you did not report this episode to the appropriate authorities until several months after its occurrence; that when you initially discussed this matter with the appropriate authorities on August 26, 1943, you did not identify yourself as the person who had been approached, and you refused to identify Haakon Chevalier as the individual who had made the approach on behalf of George Charles Eltenton; and that it was not until several months later, when you were ordered by a superior to do so, that you so identified Haakon Chevalier. It was further reported that upon your return to Berkeley following your separation from the Los Alamos Project, you were visited by the Chevaliers on several occasions; and that your wife was in contact with Haakon and Barbara Chevalier in 1946 and 1947.

The Board concludes that this allegation is substantially true.

The Board had before it a recording of a conversation between Dr. Oppenheimer and Lt. Col. Boris T. Pash, War Department Intelligence Officer, who had the responsibility for investigating subversive activities at the Radiation Laboratory, University of California at Berkeley. This conversation took place on August 26, 1943, at the Radiation Laboratory.

It was on this occasion that Dr. Oppenheimer reported the incident to Government authorities. He named Eltenton but refused to identify Chevalier. He also stated that the unnamed contact (Chevalier) had approached three persons on the atomic project and in the course of the interview mentioned other factors, such as the use of microfilm or other means and the involvement of the Russian Consulate.

The Board also had before it a transcript of a conversation between Dr. Oppenheimer and Lt. Col. Lansdale which records that on September 12, 1943, Dr. Oppenheimer again refused to name Chevalier but reported the involvement of three others.

It was not until December, 1943, that Dr. Oppenheimer, after being told by General Groves that he would be ordered to divulge the identity of the contact, reported the name of Chevalier.

However, the record shows that having been told of the identity of Chevalier by Dr. Oppenheimer, the Manhattan District officials were still of the opinion that Chevalier had contacted three employees on the atomic project.

Dr. Oppenheimer, in his answer, stated that his friend, Haakon Chevalier, with his wife, visited him at his home on Eagle Hill probably in early 1943. He stated further that during the visit Chevalier came into the kitchen and told him that George Eltenton had spoken to him of the possibility of transmitting technical information to Soviet scientists. Dr. Oppenheimer said that he made some strong remark to the effect that this sounded terribly wrong to him, and the discussion ended there.

Dr. Oppenheimer's answer further states that nothing in his long-standing friendship would have lead him to believe that Chevalier was actually seeking information, and he was certain that Chevalier had no idea of the work on which Dr. Oppenheimer was engaged.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that the detailed story of the Chevalier incident which he told to Colonel Pash on August 26, 1943, and affirmed to Colonel Lansdale on September 12, 1943, was false in certain material respects. Dr. Oppenheimer testified that this story was "a cock-and-bull story;" that "the whole thing was a pure fabrication except for the one name, Eltenton." He said that his only explanation for lying was that he "was an idiot" and he "was reluctant to mention Chevalier" and "no doubt somewhat reluctant to mention myself." He admitted on cross examination, however, that if the story he told Colonel Pash had been true, it would have shown that Chevalier "was deeply involved;" that it was not just a casual conversation; that Chevalier was not an innocent contact, and that it was a criminal conspiracy.

Dr. Oppenheimer admitted that if this story to Colonel Pash had been true, it made things look very bad for both Chevalier and himself. He acknowledged that he thought the request for information by Eltenton was "treasonable." He admitted that he knew when he talked to Colonel Pash that his falsification impeded Colonel Pash's investigation.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that in June or July of 1946 shortly after Chevalier was interviewed by the F.B.I. about the Eltenton-Chevalier Incident, Chevalier came to Oppenheimer's home in Berkeley and told Oppenheimer about the interview; that Chevalier said the F.B.I. had pressed him about whether he talked to anyone besides Oppenheimer; that quite awhile later Dr. Oppenheimer was interviewed by the F.B.I. about the same matter, and at this time he knew from Chevalier substantially what Chevalier had said to the F.B.I. about the incident.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he recalled getting a letter from Chevalier in 1950 asking him about Dr. Oppenheimer's testimony before the House Un-American Activities Committee concerning the Chevalier-Eltenton incident. He responded, giving Chevalier a summary of what he, Dr. Oppenheimer, had testified. This letter was later used by Chevalier in support of his application for a passport. Dr. Oppenheimer further testified that at about that time, Chevalier came to Princeton and spent two days with Dr. Oppenheimer, discussing Chevalier's personal affairs and that he also then mentioned the matter of his passport. Dr. Oppenheimer said that on this occasion he recommended to Chevalier a lawyer named Joseph Fanelli, who, cross examination disclosed, was the attorney who represented Joseph Weinberg at his trial for perjury. Dr. Oppenheimer testified that he did not know Mr. Fanelli at this time but he had represented Frank Oppenheimer at his appearance before the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified further that in December of 1953, when he and Mrs. Oppenheimer were in Paris, they had dinner with Dr. and Mrs. Chevalier and, on the following day, went with the Chevaliers to visit a Dr. Malraux. According to Dr. Oppenheimer, Dr. Malraux had given a speech at a "Spanish Relief" meeting in California at which Chevalier presided in about 1938. Dr. Oppenheimer said that since that time, Malraux had undergone "rather major political changes;" that "Malraux became a violent supporter of DeGaulle and his great brainman and deserted politics and went into purely philosophic and literary work." It appears also that subsequent to his meeting with Dr. Oppenheimer in Paris in December 1953, Chevalier wrote a letter to an official of the United States Embassy in Paris, reading as follows:

> "My friend -- and yours -- Robert Oppenheimer, gave me your name when he was up for dinner here in our apartment early last December, and urged me to get in touch with you if a personal problem of mine which I discussed with him became pressing. He gave me to understand that I could speak to you with the same frankness and fullness as I have with him, and he with me, during the fifteen years of our friendship.
>
> "I should not have presumed to follow up such a suggestion if it had come from anyone else. But, as you know, Opje never tosses off such a suggestion lightly.
>
> "If you are in Paris, or will be in the near future, I should, then, like to see you informally and discuss the problem.
>
> "On rereading what I have written, I have a feeling that I have made the thing sound more formidable than it really is. It's just a decision that I have to make, which is fairly important to me, and which Opje in his grandfatherly way suggested that I shouldn't make before consulting you.
>
> "Very sincerely, Haakon Chevalier."

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that the problem which was bothering Chevalier and his wife was that Chevalier was employed as a translator for UNESCO, and he understood that if he continued this work as an American citizen, he would have to be cleared after investigation, and he was doubtful as to whether he would be cleared. He did not wish to renounce his American citizenship but did wish to keep his job, and he was in a conflict about it. Dr. Oppenheimer in his testimony denied going to the American Embassy to assist Dr. Chevalier in getting a passport to return to the United States although he admitted having had lunch with the official in question.

Dr. Oppenheimer also denied discussing with the official in question or anyone else the matter of Chevalier's passport.

Dr. Oppenheimer in his testimony has stated that his association with Chevalier has continued and that he still considers him to be his friend.

24. It was reported that in 1945 you expressed the view that "there is a reasonable possibility that it (the hydrogen bomb) can be made," but that the feasibility of the hydrogen bomb did not appear, on theoretical grounds, as certain as the fission bomb appeared certain, on theoretical grounds, when the Los Alamos Laboratory was started; and that in the Autumn of 1949 the General Advisory Committee expressed the view that "an imaginative and concerted attack on the problem has a better than even chance of producing the weapon within five years." It was further reported that in the Autumn 1949, and subsequently, you strongly opposed the development of the hydrogen bomb: (1) on moral grounds, (2) by claiming that it was not feasible, (3) by claiming that there were insufficient facilities and scientific personnel to carry on the development, and (4) that it was not politically desirable. It was further reported that even after it was determined, as a matter of national policy, to proceed with development of a hydrogen bomb, you continued to oppose the project and declined to cooperate fully in the project. It was further reported you departed from your proper role as an advisor to the Commission by causing the distribution, separately and in private, to top personnel at Los Alamos of the majority and minority reports of the General Advisory Committee on development of the hydrogen bomb for the purpose of trying to turn such top personnel against the development of the hydrogen bomb. It was further reported that you were instrumental in persuading other outstanding scientists not to work on the hydrogen bomb project, and that the opposition to the hydrogen bomb, of which you are most experienced, most powerful, and most effective member, has definitely slowed down its development.

In order to assess the influences of Dr. Oppenheimer on the thermonuclear program, it has been necessary for the Board not only to consider the testimony but also to examine many documents and records, most of which are classified. Without disclosing the contents of classified documents, the Board makes the following findings, which it believes to be a sufficient reference to this allegation.

The Board confirms that in 1945 Dr. Oppenheimer expressed the view that "'there is reasonable possibility that it (the hydrogen bomb) can be made,' but that the feasibility of the hydrogen bomb did not appear, on theoretical grounds, as certain as the fission bomb appeared certain, on theoretical grounds, when the Los Alamos Laboratory was started; and that in August of 1949, the General Advisory Committee expressed the view that 'an imaginative and concerted attack on the problem has a better than even chance of producing the weapon within five years.'"

With respect to Dr. Oppenheimer's attitude and activities in relation to the hydrogen bomb in World War II, the evidence shows that Dr. Oppenheimer during this period had no misgivings about a program looking to thermonuclear development and, indeed, during the latter part of the war, he recorded his support of prompt and vigorous action in this connection. When asked under cross examination whether he would have opposed dropping an H-Bomb on Hiroshima, he replied that "It would make no sense," and when asked "Why?" replied, "The target is too small." He testified further under cross examination that he believed he would have opposed the dropping of an H-Bomb on Japan because of moral scruples although he did not oppose the dropping of an A-Bomb on the same grounds. During the post-war period, Dr. Oppenheimer favored, and in fact urged, continued research in the thermonuclear field and seemed to express considerable interest in results that were from time to time discussed with him. However, he was aware that the efforts being put forth in this endeavor were relatively meager and he knew that if research were continued at the same pace, there would be little likelihood of success for many years. Testimony in this connection indicated that there was a feeling on his part that it was more important to go forward with a program for the production of a wider range of atomic bombs.

The Board finds further that in the Autumn of 1949, and subsequently, Dr. Oppenheimer strongly opposed the development of the hydrogen bomb on moral grounds; on grounds that it was not politically desirable; he expressed the view that there were insufficient facilities and scientific personnel to carry on the development without seriously interfering with the orderly development of the program for fission bombs; and until the late spring of 1951, he questioned the feasibility of the hydrogen bomb efforts then in progress.

Dr. Oppenheimer testified that what he was opposing in the fall of 1949 was only a "crash program" in the development and production of thermonuclear weapons. In this connection, Dr. Oppenheimer contended that the main question relating to thermonuclear weapons presented to the GAC at its meeting of October 29, 1949, was whether or not the United States should undertake such a crash program. The Board does not believe that Dr. Oppenheimer was entirely candid with the Board in attempting to establish this impression. The record reflects that Dr. Oppenheimer expressed the opinion in writing that the "super bomb should never be produced," and that the commitment to this effect should be unqualified. Moreover, the alternatives available to the GAC were not a choice between an "all-out effort" and no effort at all; there was a middle course which might have been considered.

The Board further concludes that after it was determined, as a matter of national policy (January 31, 1950) to proceed with development of a hydrogen bomb, Dr. Oppenheimer did not oppose the project in a positive or open manner, nor did he decline to cooperate in the project. However, Dr. Oppenheimer is recognized in scientific circles as one of the foremost leaders in the atomic energy field and he has had considerable influence on the "policy direction" of the atomic program. The Board finds that his views in opposition to the development of the H-Bomb as expressed in 1949 became widely known among scientists, and since he did not make it known that he had abandoned these views, his attitude undoubtedly had an adverse effect on recruitment of scientists and the progress of the scientific effort in this field. In other words, the Board finds, that if Dr. Oppenheimer had enthusiastically supported the thermonuclear program either before or after the determination of national policy, the H-bomb project would have been pursued with considerably more vigor, thus increasing the possibility of earlier success in this field.

The Board finds that Dr. Oppenheimer was not responsible for the distribution, separately and in private, to top personnel at Los Alamos of the majority and minority reports of the General Advisory Committee on development of the hydrogen bomb, but that such distribution was made on the direction of the then General Manager of the Atomic Energy Commission, Carroll L. Wilson, apparently in order to prepare the personnel at Los Alamos to discuss the matter with the Chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy of the Congress.

The Board does not find that Dr. Oppenheimer urged other scientists not to work on the program. However, enthusiastic support on his part would perhaps have encouraged other leading scientists to work on the program.

Because of technical questions involved, the Board is unable to make a categorical finding as to whether the opposition of the hydrogen bomb "has definitely slowed down its development." The Board concludes that the opposition to the H-bomb by many persons connected with the atomic energy program, of which Dr. Oppenheimer was the "most experienced, most powerful and most effective member" did delay the initiation of concerted effort which led to the development of a thermonuclear weapon.

General Considerations

We do not believe that our findings with respect to the letter of notification provide a full and automatic answer to the categorical question posed to us in these proceedings. Only the dimensions of the problem have perhaps been defined. On the one hand, we find no evidence of disloyalty. Indeed, we have before us much responsible and positive evidence of the loyalty and love of country of the individual concerned. On the other hand, we do not believe that it has been demonstrated that Dr. Oppenheimer has been blameless in the matter of conduct, character and association.

We could in good conscience, we believe, conclude our difficult undertaking by a brief, clear and conclusive recommendation to the General Manager of the Commission in the following terms: There can be no tampering with the national security, which in times of peril must be absolute, and without concessions for reasons of admiration, gratitude, reward, sympathy, or charity. Any doubts whatsoever must be resolved in favor of the the national security. The material and evidence presented to this Board leave reasonable doubts with respect to the individual concerned. We, therefore, do not recommend reinstatement of clearance.

It seemed to us that an alternative recommendation would be possible, if we were allowed to exercise mature practical judgment without the rigid circumscription of regulations and criteria established for us.

In good sense, it could be recommended that Dr. Oppenheimer simply not be used as a consultant, and that therefore there exists no need for a categorical answer to the difficult question posed by the regulations, since there would be no need for access to classified material.

The Board would prefer to report a finding of this nature. We have had a desire to reconcile the hard requirements of security with the compelling urge to avoid harm to a talented citizen.

The Board questioned why the Commission chose to revoke Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance and did not follow the alternative course of declining to make use of his services, assuming it had serious questions in the area of security. To many, this would seem the preferable line of action. We think that the answer of the Commission to this question is pertinent to this recital. It seemed clear that other agencies of Government were extending clearance to Dr. Oppenheimer on the strength of AEC clearance, which in many quarters is supposed to be an approval of the highest order. Furthermore, it was explained that without the positive act of withdrawal of access, he would continue to receive classified reports on Atomic Energy activities as a consultant, even though his services were not specifically and currently engaged. Finally it is said that were his clearance continued, his services would be available to, and probably would be used by, AEC contractors. It is noted that most AEC work is carried on by contractors.

Withdrawal of clearance and Dr. Oppenheimer's request for a hearing precipitated this proceeding.

In view of the fact that we must address ourselves to security, we feel constrained to examine some of the great issues and problems brought into focus by the case. Many of these are perhaps more important than the outcome of this inquiry. We believe their examination is a necessary precondition to its disposition on security grounds.

What, within the framework of this case, is meant by loyalty?

Because of widespread confusions and misapprehensions about the security system of the United States, the Board feels that it must state some considerations with respect to loyalty. If a person is considered a security risk in terms of loyalty, the fact or possibility of active disloyalty is assumed, which would involve conduct giving some sort of aid and comfort to a foreign power. The Communist Party is an international conspiracy organized in support of the Soviet Union. It should then be clear that (1) a member of the Communist Party is automatically barred from a position of trust with the United States Government; (2) a fellow-traveler must be declared ineligible for such a position of trust -- such a person being described as one who perhaps may not be subject to party discipline, but who is sufficiently close to the Party, or sympathetic with its aims, purposes and methods that danger inheres in the situation; (3) any person whose absolute loyalty to the United States is in question, aside from present or former Communist affiliations or associations, should be rejected for Government service; (4) a person whose former status would be encompassed in one, two or three above, has the burden of proof of change in position and attitude which must be so clearly borne by him as to leave no reasonable doubt in the minds of those who are called upon to make a Governmental decision in the case. If he fails in this demonstration, he must be considered a security risk and denied access to classified information.

One of the important issues presented in cases of this sort is that of rehabilitation

Stated in the context of this proceeding, must we accept the principle that once a Communist, always a Communist, once a fellow-traveler, always a fellow-traveler? Can an individual who has been a member of the Communist Party, or closely enough associated with it to make the difference unimportant at a later time, so comport himself personally, so clearly have demonstrated a renunciation of interest and sympathy, so unequivocally have displayed a zeal for his country and its security as to overcome the necessary presumptions of security risk? We, as a Board, firmly believe that this can be the case, and, if we may be permitted something in the nature of a dictum, we believe that this principle should be a part of the security policy of the United States Government. The necessary but harsh requirements of security should not deny a man the right to have made a mistake if its recurrence is so remote a possibility as to permit a comfortable prediction as to the sanity and correctness of future conduct.

This Board has been conscious of the atmosphere of the time in which Dr. Oppenheimer's clear-cut Communist affiliations occurred. We have considered his activities against the background of the pervasive disillusionment among many of our people arising out of the effects of the great depression and the perhaps normal tendency of a humanitarian to turn to an organization which seemed to him to be espousing primarily humanitarian causes. We recognize what may have seemed to be at the time a beckoning towards a better social order. We know that many academic people and other intellectuals, honest and moral though they were, misinterpreted the talk, aims and purposes of the Communist Party and its affiliated organizations. We are aware that the fact that the Soviet Union was an ally during some of those years cannot be overlooked. This intellectual exercise has, we think, not been inappropriate because we recognize that 1943 conduct cannot be judged solely in the light of 1954 conditions. At the same time, it must be remembered that standards and procedures of 1943 should not be controlling today.

Another vital question is, can an individual be loyal to the United States and, nevertheless, be considered a security risk?

Because the security interests of this country may be endangered by involuntary act, as well as by positive conduct of a disloyal nature, personal weaknesses of an individual may constitute him a security risk. These would include inordinate use of alcohol or drugs, personal indiscretion (in the sense of careless talk), homosexuality, emotional instability, tendency to yield to pressures of others, unusual attachment for foreign systems. The presence of any of these items would support a finding of security risk, even though in every case accompanied by a deep love of country.

There remains also an aspect of the security system which perhaps has had insufficient public attention. This is the protection and support of the entire system itself. It must include an understanding and an acceptance of security measures adopted by responsible Government agencies. It must include an active cooperation with all agencies of Government properly and reasonably concerned with the security of our country. It must involve a subordination of personal judgment as to the security status of an individual as against a professional judgment in the light of standards and procedures when they have been clearly established by appropriate process. It must entail a wholehearted commitment to the preservation of the security system and the avoidance of conduct tending to confuse or obstruct.

The Board would assert the right of any citizen to be in disagreement with security measures and any other expressed policies of Government. This is all a part of the right of dissent which must be preserved for our people. But the question arises whether an individual who does not accept and abide by the security system should be a part of it.

In this connection, we should acknowledge that in the early war years very few people were aware of the full implications of security or security measures which needed to be undertaken. Even many of those in the military services found themselves for a time in a new field. This was a new concept under strange and alien pressures. We believe that no person should now be held accountable for lack of full knowledgeability in the early years of the war. However, those who have been associated with it during the war years and subsequently and who have been exposed repeatedly to security measures, should not fail to understand the need for their full support of the system.

Another major question posed by these proceedings is whether we should take calculated risks where the national security is involved

It has been urged upon us that where there is lingering doubt about the security status of an individual in the absence of a finding of disloyalty or a tendency towards indiscretion, we should take a calculated risk in granting clearance to such an individual if he is a man of great attainments and capacity and has rendered outstanding services.

Within the framework of our national philosophy which rests in large part upon the declaration that all men are equal before the bar of justice, can we apply one test to an individual, however brilliant his capacities and however magnificent his contributions, and another test to an individual with more mundane capabilities and lesser contributions? In other words, can a different test for security purposes be justified in the case of the brilliant technical consultant than in the case of the stenographer or clerk? It seems to us that such a distinction can be justified only on the ground of critical national need and that otherwise there can be but one standard for all.

We acknowledge that the national necessity may at times require the taking of a calculated risk. Such a calculated risk was taken in the employment and retention of Dr. Oppenheimer as Director of the Los Alamos Laboratory during the war years, on the ground of the overriding need for his services. The officer-in-charge has said that, had he found the risk becoming a danger, he would have felt impelled to open up the whole project and throw security to the winds rather than lose the talents of the individual. Again, wartime exigencies demanded the use of Nazi scientists before the issues with Germany were settled.

What we have learned in this inquiry makes the present application of this principle inappropriate in the instant case. Notwithstanding the undoubted and unparalleled contributions of Dr. Oppenheimer to the atomic energy program, it appears that his services as a consultant were used by the Atomic Energy Commission during the entire year of 1953 for a period approximating only two and one-half days' time. We conclude, therefore, that our recommendation should not be based upon such principle, overriding all other considerations.

Another major issue which has been highlighted by this inquiry is whether a moral principle akin to double jeopardy in the traditional legal sense should have a place in the jurisprudence of security.

We properly ask ourselves the question: How many times may the same circumstances of a man's life be examined with a view toward determination of his security status? Once a responsible agency of the Government has made an evaluation, should this not be a bar to later and similar consideration by the same or another agency in the absence of newly discovered evidence or developments. This is an important consideration and the Board has undertaken to examine it with care.

It must be made clear to the public by the Government that its employees and consultants are not to be subject to repeated and capricious reviews of their loyalty or security status. In General, this Board believes that responsible prior clearance should be given great weight and should be virtually considered a settled matter in cases where there is manifestly no new material or developments of consequence. We would not urge this as an absolute principle, however, for the reason that the criminal law concept referred to is for the protection of the individual whereas security measures are for the protection of the country, whose interests should never be foreclosed.

There seems to be a widespread view that such a principle should apply in the case at hand. It has been suggested that the clearance by the Manhattan Engineering District and the subsequent action of the AEC in 1947 should be controlling. We believe this not to be sound.

In the first place, we must acknowledge the important difference between an administrative review of files not involving the personal appearance of the employee and of which he is probably not aware, and a hearing before the Board at which the employee appears and at which testimony is taken. This is the first occasion of review of this case by a Personnel Security Board. Indeed, this is the only time that all of the available evidence regarding Dr. Oppenheimer has been correlated and presented in a package. This latter fact suggests the second reason why Dr. Oppenheimer is not being placed in double jeopardy in a moral sense by this proceeding. It was necessary to the national security that material information not considered in previous clearances be studied.

Third, new developments have occurred since the granting of previous clearances. Among these are changed national and international circumstances and new security standards and criteria which have been published in the interim. We refer specifically to the AEC criteria published since 1947 and the Executive Order of the President of April 27, 1953.

It must be recalled that the Manhattan District criteria were primarily loyalty and discretion. Such records as are available with respect to the AEC clearance in 1947 indicate that in general it was based in large part upon the earlier clearance by the Manhattan Engineering District, upon a finding of loyal service to the country, and the risk to the program in the loss of services of the individual.

Fourth, viewed against the background of earlier history, the conduct of the individual subsequently to 1947 has been such as to raise questions of security risk.

Another major issue prompted by these proceedings concerns itself with the extent of the right of a citizen to continued employment by his Government because of loyal and distinguished accomplishment in Government service.

There are those who seem deeply convinced that Dr. Oppenheimer has a right to continued employment, in view of his previous contributions and in the light of his brilliant capabilities. Citizens of this country have many inalienable rights, but it is clear that Government service is a privilege and not a right. This principle was simply, but effectively, stated by Oliver Wendell Holmes:

> ". . . The petitioner may have a constitutional right to talk politics, but he has no constitutional right to be a policeman . . ."

We deem it, therefore, to be within the power of Government in the absence of Civil Service requirement or contractual relationships to terminate employment of a consultant at any time.

A major question which has repeatedly emerged in our deliberations is whether in determining the security status of an individual who is a scientist, the Government must take into account the reactions of, and the possible impact upon, all other scientists.

The Board takes cognizance of the serious alarm expressed to it by witnesses and frequently adverted to in the public press that denial of clearance to Dr. Oppenheimer would do serious harm in the scientific community. This is a matter of vital concern to the Government and the people.

We should express our considered view that, because the loyalty or security risk status of a scientist or any other intellectual may be brought into question, scientists and intellectuals are ill-advised to assert that a reasonable and sane inquiry constitutes an attack upon scientists and intellectuals generally. This Board would deplore deeply any notion that scientists are under attack in this country and that prudent study of any individual's conduct and character within the necessary demands of the national security could be either in fact or in appearance a reflection of anti-intellectualism.

The Board has taken note of the fact that in some cases of this sort groups of scientists have tended towards an almost professional opposition to any inquiry about a member of the group. They thus, by moving in a body to the defense of one of their number, give currency, credence, and support to a notion that they as a group are under attack. A decision of a Board of this sort, whether favorable or unfavorable to the individual whose case is before it, should be considered neither as an exoneration of all scientists from imputations of security risk nor a determination that all scientists are suspect.

We know that scientists, with their unusual talents, are loyal citizens, and, for every pertinent purpose, normal human beings. We must believe that they, the young and the old and all between, will understand that a responsible Government must make responsible decisions. If scientists should believe that such a decision in Government, however distasteful with respect to an individual, must be applicable to his whole profession, they misapprehend their own duties and obligations as citizens.

In this connection, the Board has been impressed, and in many ways heartened by the manner in which many scientists have sprung to the defense of one whom many felt was under unfair attack. This is important and encouraging when one is concerned with the vitality of our society. However, the Board feels constrained to express its concern that in this solidarity there have been attitudes so uncompromising in support of science in general, and Dr. Oppenheimer in particular, that some witnesses have, in our judgment, allowed their convictions to supersede what might reasonably have been their recollections.

One important consideration brought into focus by this case is the role of scientists as advisors in the formulation of Government policy.

We must address ourselves to the natural constraints and the particular difficulties inherent in the AEC program itself. As a nation we find it necessary to delegate temporary authority with respect to the conduct of the program and the policies to be followed to duly elected representatives and appointive officials as provided for by our constitution and laws. For the most part, these representatives and officials are not capable of passing judgment on technical matters and, therefore, appropriately look to specialists for advice. We must take notice of the current and inevitable amplification of influence which attaches to those giving advice under these circumstances. These specialists have an exponential amplification of influence which is vastly greater than that of the individual citizen.

It must be understood that such specialists did not, as scientists, deliberately create this condition. For example, Dr. Oppenheimer served his Government because it sought him. The impact of his influence was felt immediately and increased progressively as his services were used. The nation owes these scientists, we believe, a great debt of gratitude for loyal and magnificent service. This is particularly true with respect to Dr. Oppenheimer.

A question can properly be raised about advice of specialists relating to moral, military and political issues, under circumstances which lend such advice an undue and in some cases decisive weight. Caution must be expressed with respect to judgments which go beyond areas of special and particular competence.

Any man, whether specialist or layman, of course, must have the right to express his deep moral convictions; must have the privilege of voicing his deepest doubts. We can understand the emotional involvement of any scientist who contributed to the development of atomic energy and thus helped to unleash upon the world a force which could be destructive of civilization. Perhaps no American can be entirely guilt-free, and, yet, these weapons did not bring peace nor lessen the threats to the survival of our free institutions. Emotional involvement in the current crisis, like all other things, must yield to the security of the nation.

Dr. Oppenheimer himself testified, "I felt perhaps quite wrongly that having played an active part in promoting a revolution in warfare I needed to be as responsible as I could with regard to what came of this revolution".

We have no doubt that other distinguished and devoted scientists have found themselves beset by a similar conflict.

It is vitally important that Government and scientists alike understand the need for and value of the advice of competent technicians. This need is a present and a continuing one. Yet, those officials in Government who are responsible for the security of the country must be certain that the advice which they seriously seek appropriately reflects special competence on the one hand, and soundly based conviction on the other, uncolored and uninfluenced by considerations of an emotional character.

In evaluating advice from a specialist which departs from the area of his speciality, Government officials charged with the military posture of our country must also be certain that underlying any advice is a genuine conviction that this country cannot in the interest of security have less than the strongest possible offensive capabilities in a time of national danger.

Significance of the Findings of The Board

The facts referred to in General Nichols' letter fall clearly into two major areas of concern. The first of these, which is represented by Items 1 through 23, involves primarily Dr. Oppenheimer's Communist connections in the earlier years and continued associations arising out of those connections.

The second major area of concern is related to Dr. Oppenheimer's attitudes and activities with respect to the development of the hydrogen bomb.

The Board has found the allegations in the first part of the Commission letter to be substantially true, and attaches the following significance to the findings: There remains little doubt that, from late 1936 or early 1937 to probably April, 1942, Dr. Oppenheimer was deeply involved with many people who were active Communists. The record would suggest that the involvement was something more than an intellectual and sympathetic interest in the professed aims of the Communist Party. Although Communist functionaries during this period considered Dr. Oppenheimer to be a Communist, there is no evidence that he was a member of the Party in the strict sense of the word.

Using Dr. Oppenheimer's own characterization of his status during that period, he seems to have been an active fellow-traveler.

According to him, his sympathies with the Communists seem to have begun to taper off somewhat after 1939, and very much more so after 1942. However, it is not unreasonable to conclude from material presented to this Board that Dr. Oppenheimer's activities ceased as of about the time he executed his Personnel Security Questionnaire in April, 1942. He seems to have had the view at that time and subsequently that current involvement with Communist activities was incompatible with service to the Government. However, it also would appear that he felt that former Communist Party membership was of little consequence if the individual concerned was personally trustworthy.

Dr. Oppenheimer's sympathetic interests seemed to have continued beyond 1942 in a diluted and diminishing state until 1946, at which time we find the first affirmative action on his part which would indicate complete rejection. In October, 1946, he tendered his resignation from the Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences, and Professions, Inc., and he now says it was at this time that he finally realized that he could not collaborate with the Communists, whatever their aims and professed interests. We would prefer to have found an affirmative action at an earlier date.

The Board takes a most serious view of these earlier involvements. Had they occurred in very recent years, we would have found them to be controlling and, in any event, they must be taken into account in evaluating subsequent conduct and attitudes.

The facts before us establish a pattern of conduct falling within the following Personnel Security Clearance criteria: Category A, including instances in which there are grounds sufficient to establish a reasonable belief that an individual or his spouse has (1) Committed or attempted to commit or aided or abetted another who committed or attempted to commit any act of sabotage, espionage, treason, or sedition. (2) Establish an association with espionage agents of a foreign nation . . . (3) Held membership or joined any organization which had been declared by The Attorney Geneal to be . . . Communist, subversive . . . . These criteria under the AEC procedures establish a presumption of security risk.

The Board believes, however, that there is no indication of disloyalty on the part of Dr. Oppenheimer by reason of any present Communist affiliation, despite Dr. Oppenheimer's poor judgment in continuing some of his past associations into the present. Furthermore, the Board had before it eloquent and convincing testimony of Dr. Oppenheimer's deep devotion to his country in recent years and a multitude of evidence with respect to active service in all sorts of Governmental undertakings to which he was repeatedly called as a participant and as a consultant.

We feel that Dr. Oppenheimer is convinced that the earlier involvements were serious errors and today would consider them an indication of disloyalty. The conclusion of this Board is that Dr. Oppenheimer is a loyal citizen.

With respect to the second portion of General Nichols' letter, the Board believes that Dr. Oppenheimer's opposition to the hydrogen bomb and his related conduct in the post-war period until April, 1951, involved no lack of loyalty to the United States or attachment to the Soviet Union. The Board was impressed by the fact that even those who were critical of Dr. Oppenheimer's judgment and activities or lack of activities, without exception, testified to their belief in his loyalty.

The Board concludes that any possible implications to the contrary which might have been read into the second part of General Nichols' letter are not supported by any material which the Board has seen.

The Board wishes to make clear that in attempting to arrive at its findings and their significance with respect to the hydrogen bomb, it has in no way sought to appraise the technical judgments of those who were concerned with the program.*

We cannot dismiss the matter of Dr. Oppenheimer's relationship to the development of the hydrogen bomb simply with the finding that his conduct was not motivated by disloyalty, because it is our conclusion that, whatever the motivation, the security interests of the United States were affected.

We believe that, had Dr. Oppenheimer given his enthusiastic support to the program, a concerted effort would have been initiated at an earlier date.

Following the President's decision, he did not show the enthusiastic support for the program which might have been expected of the chief atomic adviser to the Government under the circumstances. Indeed, a failure to communicate an abandonment of his earlier position undoubtedly had an effect upon other scientists. It is our feeling that Dr. Oppenheimer's influence in the atomic scientific circles with respect to the hydrogen bomb was far greater than he would have led this Board to believe in his testimony before the Board. The Board has reluctantly concluded that Dr. Oppenheimer's candor left much to be desired in his discussions with the Board of his attitude and position in the entire chronology of the hydrogen bomb problem.

We must make it clear that we do not question Dr. Oppenheimer's right to the opinions he held with respect to the development of this weapon. They were shared by other competent and devoted individuals, both in and out of Government. We are willing to assume that they were motivated by deep moral conviction. We are concerned, however, that he may have departed his role as scientific adviser to exercise highly persuasive influence in matters in which his convictions were not necessarily a reflection of technical judgment, and also not necessarily related to the protection of the strongest offensive military interests of the country.

In the course of the proceedings, there developed other facts which raised questions of such serious import as to give us concern about whether the retention of Dr. Oppenheimer's services would be clearly consistent with the security interests of the United States.

---

*This is the end of page 32 referred to in the minority report of Dr. Ward V. Evans.

It must be said that Dr. Oppenheimer seems to have had a high degree of discretion reflecting an unusual ability to keep to himself vital secrets. However, we do find suggestions of a tendency to be coerced, or at least influenced in conduct over a period of years.

By his own testimony, Dr. Oppenheimer was led to protest the induction into military service of Giovanni Rossi Lomanitz in 1943 by the outraged intercession of Dr. Condon. It is to be remembered that, at this time, Dr. Oppenheimer knew of Lomanitz's connections and of his indiscretions. In 1949, Dr. Oppenheimer appeared in executive session before the House Un-American Activities Committee, and at that time was asked about his friend, Dr. Bernard Peters. Dr. Oppenheimer confirmed the substance of an interview with the security officer which took place during the war years and in which he had characterized Dr. Peters as a dangerous Red and former Communist. This testimony soon appeared in the Rochester, New York, newspapers. At this time, Dr. Peters was on the staff of the University of Rochester. Dr. Oppenheimer, as a result of protestations by Dr. Condon, by Dr. Peters himself, and by other scientists, then wrote a letter for publication to the Rochester newspaper, which, in effect, repudiated his testimony given in secret session. His testimony before this Board indicated that he failed to appreciate the great impropriety of making statements of one character in a secret session and of a different character for publication, and that he believed that the important thing was to protect Dr. Peters' professional status. In that episode, Dr. Condon's letter, which has appeared in the press, contained a severe attack on Dr. Oppenheimer. Nevertheless, he now testifies that he is prepared to support Dr. Condon in the loyalty investigation of the latter.

Executive Order 10450 in listing criteria to be taken into account in cases of this sort indicates in part the following:

> "Section 8(a)(1)(i) any behavior, activities, or associations which tend to show that the individual is not reliable or trustworthy.
>
> (v) Any facts which furnish reason to believe that the individual may be subjected to coercion, influence, or pressure which may cause him to act contrary to the best interest of the national security."

Whether the incidents referred to clearly indicate a susceptibility to influence or coercion within the meaning of the criteria or whether they simply reflect very bad judgment, they clearly raise the question of Dr. Oppenheimer's understanding, acceptance, and enthusiastic support of the security system. Beginning with the Chevalier invident, he has repeatedly exercised an arrogance of his own judgment with respect to the loyalty and reliability of other citizens to an extent which has frustrated and at times impeded the workings of the system. In an interview with agents of the F.B.I. in 1946, which in good part concerned itself with questions about Chevalier, when asked about a meeting which Dr. Oppenheimer had attended, at which Communists and Communist sympathizers were in attendance, he declined to discuss it on the ground that it was irrelevant, although the meeting itself was held in Chevalier's home. In a subsequent interview, he declined to discuss people he had known to be Communists.

Indeed, in the course of this proceeding, Dr. Oppenheimer recalled pertinent details with respect to Communist meetings and with respect to individuals with Communist connections, which he had never previously disclosed in the many interviews with Government authorities, in spite of the fact that he had been interviewed regarding such matters.

In 1946 or 1947, he assisted David Bohm in getting a position at Princeton and, at least on a casual basis, continued his associations with Bohm after he had reason to know of Bohm's security status. He testified that today he would give Bohm a letter of recommendation as a physicist, and, although not asked whether he would also raise questions about Bohm's security status, he in no way indicated that this was a matter of serious import to him.

While his meeting with Lomanitz and Bohm immediately prior to their appearance before the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1949, at which time both plead the Fifth Amendment, may have been a casual one as he testified, he nevertheless discussed with them their testimony before that Committee.

Moreover, his current associations with Dr. Chevalier, as discussed in detail in item No. 23, are, we believe, of a high degree of significance. It is not important to determine that Dr. Oppenheimer discussed with Chevalier matters of concern to the security of the United States. What is important is that Chevalier's Communist background and activities were known to Dr. Oppenheimer. While he says he believes Chevalier is not now a Communist, his association with him, on what could not be considered a casual basis, is not the kind of thing that our security system permits on the part of one who customarily has access to information of the highest classification.

Loyalty to one's friends is one of the noblest of qualities. Being loyal to one's friends above reasonable obligations to the country and to the security system, however, is not clearly consistent with the interests of security.

We are aware that in these instances Dr. Oppenheimer may have been sincere in his interpretation that the security interests of the country were not disserved; we must, however, take a most serious view of this kind of continuing judgment.

We are constrained to make a final comment about General Nichols' letter. Unfortunately, in the press accounts in which the letter was printed in full, Item number 24, which consisted of one paragraph, was broken down into four paragraphs. Many thoughtful people, as a result, felt that the implication of one or more of these paragraphs as they appeared in the press standing alone was that the letter sought to initiate proceedings which would impugn a man on the ground of his holding and forcefully expressing strong opinions. It is regrettable that the language of the letter or the way in which it publicly appeared, might have given any credence to such an interpretation. In any event, the Board wishes strongly to record its profound and positive view that no man should be tried for the expression of his opinions.

Recommendation

In arriving at our recommendation we have sought to address ourselves to the whole question before us and not to consider the problem as a fragmented one either in terms of specific criteria or in terms of any period in Dr. Oppenheimer's life, or to consider loyalty, character and associations separately.

However, of course, the most serious finding which this Board could make as a result of these proceedings would be that of disloyalty on the part of Dr. Oppenheimer to his country. For that reason, we have given particular attention to the question of his loyalty, and we have come to a clear conclusion, which should be reassuring to the people of this country, that he is a loyal citizen. If this were the only consideration, therefore, we would recommend that the reinstatement of his clearance would not be a danger to the common defense and security.

We have, however, been unable to arrive at the conclusion that it would be clearly consistent with the security interests of the United States to reinstate Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance and, therefore, do not so recommend.

The following considerations have been controlling in leading us to our conclusion:

1. We find that Dr. Oppenheimer's continuing conduct and associations have reflected a serious disregard for the requirements of the security system.

2. We have found a susceptibility to influence which could have serious implications for the security interests of the country.

3. We find his conduct in the hydrogen bomb program sufficiently distrubing as to raise a doubt as to whether his future participation, if characterized by the same attitudes in a Government program relating to the national defense, would be clearly consistent with the best interests of security.

4. We have regretfully concluded that Dr. Oppenheimer has been less than candid in several instances in his testimony before this Board.

Respectfully submitted.

/s/ Gordon Gray
Gordon Gray, Chairman

/s/ Thomas A. Morgan
Thomas A. Morgan

MINORITY REPORT OF DR. WARD V. EVANS

I have reached the conclusion that Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer's clearance should be reinstated and am submitting a minority report in accordance with AEC procedure.

The Board, appointed by the Commission, has worked long and arduously on the Oppenheimer case. We have heard 40 witnesses and have taken some 3,000 pages of testimony in addition to having read a similar number of pages of file material. We have examined carefully the notification letter to Dr. Oppenheimer from Mr. Nichols of December 23, 1953, and all other relevant material.

I am in perfect agreement with the majority report of its "findings" with respect to the allegations in Mr. Nichols' letter and I am in agreement with the statement of the Board concerning the significance of its "findings" to the end of page 32.* I also agree with the last paragraph of this section in which the Board makes a final comment on Mr. Nichols' letter. I do not, however, think it necessary to go into any philosophical discussion to prove points not found in Mr. Nichols' letter.

The derogatory information in this letter consisting of twenty-four items has all been substantiated except for one item. This refers to a Communist meeting held in Dr. Oppenheimer's home, which he is supposed to have attended.

On the basis of this finding, the Board would have to say that Dr. Oppenheimer should not be cleared.

But this is not all.

Most of this derogatory information was in the hands of the Commission when Dr. Oppenheimer was cleared in 1947. They apparently were aware of his associations and his left-wing policies; yet they cleared him. They took a chance on him because of his special talents and he continued to do a good job. Now when the job is done, we are asked to investigate him for practically the same derogatory information. He did his job in a thorough and painstaking manner. There is not the slightest vestige of information before this Board that would indicate that Dr. Oppenheimer is not a loyal citizen of his country. He hates Russia. He had Communistic friends, it is true. He still has some. However, the evidence indicates that he has fewer of them than he had in 1947. He is not as naive as he was then. He has more judgment; no one on the Board doubts his loyalty - even the witnesses adverse to him admit that - and he is certainly less of a security risk than he was in 1947, when he was cleared. To deny him clearance now for what he was cleared for in 1947, when we must know he is less of a security risk now than he was then, seems to be hardly the procedure to be adopted in a free country.

We don't have to go out of our way and invent something to prove that the principle of "double jeopardy" does not apply here. This is not our function, and it is not our function to rewrite any clearance rules. The fact remains he is being investigated twice for the same things. Furthermore, we don't have to dig deeply to find other ways that he may be a security risk outside of loyalty, character and association. He is loyal, we agree on that. There is, in my estimation, nothing wrong with his character. During the early years of his life, Dr. Oppenheimer devoted himself to study and did not vote or become interested in political matters until he was almost thirty. Then, in his ignorance, he embraced many subversive organizations.

---

* The reference is to page 32 of the typewritten document. In this reproduction the material referred to is to the end of the second full paragraph at the top of page 30.

His judgment was bad in some cases, and most excellent in others but, in my estimation, it is better now than it was in 1947 and to damn him now and ruin his career and his service, I cannot do it.

His statements in cross examination show him to be still naive, but extremely honest and such statements work to his benefit in my estimation. All people are somewhat of a security risk. I don't think we have to go out of our way to point out how this man might be a security risk.

Dr. Oppenheimer in one place in his testimony said that he had told "a tissue of lies." What he had said was not a tissue of lies; there was one lie. He said on one occasion that he had not heard from Dr. Seaborg, when in fact he had a letter from Dr. Seaborg. In my opinion he had forgotten about the letter or he would never have made this statement for he would have known that the Government had the letter. I do not consider that he lied in this case. He stated that he would have recommended David Bohm as a physicist to Brazil, if asked. I think I would have recommended Bohm as a physicist. Dr. Oppenheimer was not asked if he would have added that Bohm was a Communist. In recent years he went to see Chevalier in Paris. I don't like this, but I cannot condemn him on this ground. I don't like his about face in the matter of Dr. Peters, but I don't think it subversive or disloyal.

He did not hinder the development of the H-bomb and there is absolutely nothing in the testimony to show that he did.

First he was in favor of it in 1944. There is no indication that this opinion changed until 1945. After 1945 he did not favor it for some years perhaps on moral, political or technical grounds. Only time will prove whether he was wrong on the moral and political grounds. After the Presidential Directive of January 31, 1950, he worked on this project. If his opposition to the H-bomb caused any people not to work on it, it was because of his intellectual prominence and influence over scientific people and not because of any subversive tendencies.

I personally think that our failure to clear Dr.Oppenheimer will be a black mark on the escutcheon of our country. His witnesses are a considerable segment of the scientific backbone of our nation and they endorse him. I am worried about the effect an improper decision may have on the scientific development in our country. Nuclear physics is new in our country. Most of our authorities in this field came from overseas. They are with us now. Dr. Oppenheimer got most of his education abroad. We have taken hold of this new development in a very great way. There is no predicting where and how far it may go and what its future potentialities may be. I would very much regret any action to retard or hinder this new scientific development.

I would like to add that this opinion was written before the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists came out with its statement concerning the Oppenheimer case.

This is my opinion as a citizen of a free country.

I suggest that Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance be restored.

/s/ W. V. Evans
Ward V. Evans

UNITED STATES
ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION
Washington 25, D. C.

May 28, 1954

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer
The Institute for Advanced Study
Princeton, New Jersey

Dear Dr. Oppenheimer:

I am enclosing herewith a copy of the Findings and Recommendation of the Personnel Security Board which has been considering your case. A majority of the Board recommends that your clearance not be reinstated.

You have the right, under Section 4.18 of the Atomic Energy Commission's Security Clearance Procedures, to request review of your case by the Personnel Security Review Board and to submit a brief in support of your contentions. If you wish such review, it is necessary that you submit your request to me within five days of your receipt of this letter or June 7, 1954, whichever is later, and that your brief be filed with me not later than twenty days after your receipt of this letter.

If you do not request review of your case by the Personnel Security Review Board within the prescribed time, a final determination will be made on the basis of the existing record.

Upon full consideration of the entire record in the case, including the recommendation of the Personnel Security Review Board in the event you request review by that Board, I shall submit to the Commission my recommendation as to whether or not your clearance should be reinstated. The final determination will be made by the Commission.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Garrison, along with additional copies of the Personnel Security Board's Findings and Recommendation.

Sincerely yours,

/s/ K. D. Nichols

K. D. Nichols
General Manager

cc: Lloyd K. Garrison, Esq.
Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton
& Garrison
575 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York
(with 5 copies Enclosure)

PAUL, WEISS, RIFKIND, WHARTON & GARRISON

575 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N.Y.

TELEPHONE MURRAY HILL 8-5600

RANDOLPH E. PAUL
ROBERT E. SAMUELS
LOUIS E. WEISS (1927-1950)
SIMON H. RIFKIND
JOHN F. WHARTON
LLOYD K. GARRISON
RUSSELL H. WILDE
MYER D. MERMIN
HOWARD A. SEITZ
H. RUSSELL WINOKUR
SAMUEL J. SILVERMAN
ALEXANDER HEHMEYER
ADRIAN W. DeWIND
CAROLYN E. AGGER*
LOUIS EISENSTEIN
MORDECAI ROCHLIN
PAUL J. NEWLON
FRANCIS W. COKER, JR.
JOSEPH S. ISEMAN

*MEMBER OF D.C. BAR ONLY

ARTHUR J. COHEN
COUNSEL

WASHINGTON OFFICE
1614 EYE STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D.C.

June 1, 1954

General K.D. Nichols
General Manager
U.S. Atomic Energy Commission
Washington 25, D.C.

Dear General Nichols:

Dr. Oppenheimer has received your letter of May 28, 1954, in which you enclosed a copy of the "Findings and Recommendation of the Personnel Security Board" dated May 27. In this document the Board unanimously found that Dr. Oppenheimer was a loyal citizen, but by a 2 to 1 vote, Dr. Ward V. Evans dissenting, recommended that Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance should not be reinstated. Dr. Oppenheimer has asked me to send you this reply on his behalf.

You informed Dr. Oppenheimer that he might have until June 7 to notify the Commission whether he would request a review of the case by the Commission's Personnel Security Review Board. You also informed him that, after considering the record (including the recommendation of the Review Board if a review were taken), you would make your recommendation to the Commission and the Commission would finally determine the matter.

Since the Commission is in any event to decide the case, it seems to us that no useful purpose would be served by our requesting the Review Board to go over the matter afresh and to make a recommendation that would have no more finality to it than that which the Personnel Security Board has already made.

Such a review would entail further delay, which Dr. Oppenheimer is naturally anxious to avoid; moreover, Dr. Oppenheimer's annual contract as a Consultant to the Atomic Energy Commission expires on June 30, the end of the fiscal year, and with it his clearance (now suspended) would automatically expire, so that if this case is not finally determined by June 30, the possibility exists that the question of reinstating Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance might be regarded as moot and might be left in a state of confusion and uncertainty. We do not believe that such an outcome would be in the public interest. Accordingly, Dr. Oppenheimer waives his privilege of review by the Personnel Security Review Board and requests immediate consideration of the case by the Atomic Energy Commission.

In order to assist the Commission in its deliberations, and because of the great public importance of some of the issues raised by the majority and minority opinions of the Personnel Security Board, we request the Commission's permission to file a brief and to make oral argument. A brief is already in the course of preparation and can be delivered to the Commission by June 7 (the latest date specified in your letter to request review). Argument of counsel can, we are sure, be arranged to meet the Commission's convenience.

Meanwhile we think it fitting to identify for the Commission what we conceive to be certain issues of basic importance which are presented by the majority and minority opinions. We believe it essential, however, that the Commission have the benefit of critical analysis and illumination of these issues, which can only be supplied adequately by the brief and oral argument herein requested.

To begin with, the majority's conclusion not to recommend the reinstatement of Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance stands in such stark contrast with the Board's findings regarding Dr. Oppenheimer's loyalty and discretion as to raise doubts about the process of reasoning by which the conclusion was arrived at. All members of the Board agreed:

(1) That the nation owed scientists "a great debt of gratitude for loyal and magnificent service" and that "This is particularly true with respect to Dr. Oppenheimer." (p.27)

(2) That "we have before us much responsible and positive evidence of the loyalty and love of country of the individual concerned" (p. 21), and "eloquent and convincing testimony of Dr. Oppenheimer's deep devotion to his country in recent years and a multitude of evidence with respect to active service in all sorts of Governmental undertakings to which he was repeatedly called as a participant and as a consultant." (p.29)

(3) That "even those who were critical of Dr. Oppenheimer's judgment and activities or lack of activities, without exception, testified to their belief in his loyalty." (p.30)

(4) That "we have given particular attention to the question of his loyalty, and we have come to a clear conclusion, which should be reassuring to the people of this country, that he is a loyal citizen. If this were the only consideration, therefore, we would recommend that the reinstatement of his clearance would not be a danger to the common defense and security." (p.33)

(5) That "It must be said that Dr. Oppenheimer seems to have had a high degree of discretion reflecting an unusual ability to keep to himself vital secrets." (p.31)

In spite of these findings of loyalty and of discretion in the handling of classified data, the majority of the Board reached the conclusion that Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance should not be reinstated. How can this be? The majority advanced four considerations as controlling in leading them to their conclusion (p.33).

The first two -- an alleged "serious disregard for the requirements of the security system", and an alleged "susceptibility to influence" -- rest upon an appraisal of the evidence which we do not think is justified by the record. Taking sharp issue, as we do, with the majority's treatment of the incidents cited in support of these two considerations, we cannot undertake here to review the detailed evidence, but propose to do so in the brief.

We would like, however, to draw attention to two of the incidents referred to by the majority in support of these considerations, merely to indicate the care with which we think the record needs to be reviewed by the Commission. The majority held it against Dr. Oppenheimer, apparently as an example of his supposed susceptibility to influence, that despite a severe attack on him by Dr. Edward Condon in 1949, in a letter which appeared in the press, Dr. Oppenheimer is now prepared to support Dr. Condon in the latter's pending loyalty investigation (p.31). It seems to us strange that a man should be criticized for refusing to let his personal feelings stand in the way of his giving evidence on behalf of a man he believes to be loyal. The majority further criticized Dr. Oppenheimer for his continuing associations and supposed disregard of security requirements in that "In 1946 or 1947 he assisted David Bohm [a former student] in getting a position at Princeton and, at least on a casual basis, continued his associations with Bohm after he had reason to know of Bohm's security status. He testified that today he would give Bohm a letter of recommendation as a physicist, and, although not asked whether he would also raise questions about Bohm's security status, he in no way indicated that this was a matter of serious import to him." (p.32) Dr. Evans' comment on this incident was: "I think I would have recommended Bohm as a physicist. Dr. Oppenheimer was not asked if he would have added that Bohm was a Communist." (p.35)

We propose to analyze in detail, in brief and argument, these and other incidents referred to by the majority as bearing on Dr. Oppenheimer's supposed "disregard" for the "security system" and "susceptibility to influence".

The third and fourth considerations advanced by the majority for concluding that Dr. Oppenheimer was a "security risk" warrant more extended comment here.

The third item -- Dr. Oppenheimer's "conduct in the hydrogen bomb program", characterized as "disturbing," -- and the fourth -- alleged "lack of candor" in several instances in his testimony -- require discussion, because they involve questions of policy and procedure which we wish particularly to draw to the Commission's attention in a preliminary way.

In the case of the third consideration -- Dr. Oppenheimer's so-called disturbing conduct in the hydrogen bomb program -- the Board's unanimous findings of fact again stand in stark contrast with the conclusion of the majority. Thus the Board unanimously found:

(1) That Dr. Oppenheimer's opposition to the H-bomb program "involved no lack of loyalty to the United States or attachment to the Soviet Union." (p.30)

(2) That his opinions regarding the development of the H-bomb "were shared by other competent and devoted individuals, both in and out of Government." (p. 30)

(3) That it could be assumed that these opinions "were motivated by deep moral conviction." (p.30)

(4) That after the national policy to proceed with the development of the H-bomb had been determined in January 1950, he "did not oppose the project in a positive or open manner, nor did he decline to cooperate in the project." (p.20)

(5) That the allegation that he urged other scientists not to work on the hydrogen bomb program was unfounded. (p.20)

(6) That he did not, as alleged, distribute copies of the General Advisory Report to key personnel with a view to turning them against the project, but that on the contrary this distribution was made at the Commission's own direction. (p.20)

In short, all the basic allegations set forth in General Nichols' letter to Dr. Oppenheimer of December 23, 1953, regarding any improper action by him in the H-bomb problem were disproved.

In the face of these unanimous findings, the majority then somehow conclude that "the security interests of the United States were affected" by Dr. Oppenheimer's attitude toward the hydrogen bomb program. (p.30). Why? Because, according to the majority of the Board:

> "We believe that, had Dr. Oppenheimer given his enthusiastic support to the program, a concerted effort would have been initiated at an earlier date.
>
> "Following the President's decision, he did not show the enthusiastic support of the program which might have been expected of the chief atomic adviser to the Government under the circumstances. Indeed, a failure to communicate an abandonment of his earlier position undoubtedly had an effect upon other scientists." (p.30)

Without taking into account the factual evidence, which in our opinion should have led the Board to an opposite conclusions, we submit that the injection into a security case of a scientist's alleged lack of enthusiasm for a particular program is fraught with grave consequences to this country. How can a scientist risk advising the government if he is told that at some later day a security board may weigh in the balance the degree of his enthusiasm for some official program? Or that he may be held accountable for a failure to communicate to the scientific community his full acceptance of such a program?

In addition to Dr. Oppenheimer's alleged lack of "enthusiasm", there are indications that the majority of the Board may also have been influenced in recommending against the reinstatement of Dr. Oppenheimer's clearance by judgments they had formed as to the nature and quality of the advice he gave to the AEC. While the majority of the Board stated -- with sincerity, we are sure -- that "no man should be tried for the expression of his opinions" (p.33), it seems to us that portions of the majority opinion do just that.

For example, the opinion says that while the Board can understand "the emotional involvement of any scientist who contributed to the development of atomic energy and thus helped to unleash upon the world a force which could be destructive of civilization", nevertheless "emotional involvement" of this sort in the current crisis "must yield to the security of the nation"; and government officials "who are responsible for the security of the country must be certain that the advice which they seriously seek appropriately reflects special competence on the one hand, and soundly based conviction on the other, uncolored and uninfluenced by considerations of an emotional character." (p.28) Does this mean that a loyal scientist called to advise his government does so at his peril unless, contrary to all experience, he can guarantee that his views are unaffected by his heart and his spirit?

The opinion further stated that defense officials "must also be certain that underlying any advice is a genuine conviction that this country cannot in the interest of security have less than the strongest possible offensive capabilities in a time of national danger." (p.28) Does this mean that a loyal scientist called to advise his government does so at his peril if he happens to believe in the wisdom of maintaining a proper balance between offensive and defensive weapons?

It would appear from the following passage about Dr. Oppenheimer's advice that the majority of the Board assumed affirmative answers to both of the foregoing questions:

> "We are concerned, however, that he may have departed his role as scientific adviser to exercise highly persuasive influence in matters in which his convictions were not necessarily a reflection of technical judgment, and also not necessarily related to the protection of the strongest offensive military interests of the country." (p.30)

This poses a serious issue. If a scientist whose loyalty is unquestioned may nevertheless be considered a security risk because in the judgment of a board he may have given advice which did not necessarily reflect a bare technical judgment, or which did not accord with strategical considerations of a particular kind, then he is being condemned for his opinions. Surely our security requires that expert views, so long as they are honest, be weighed and debated and not that they be barred.

We quite agree with the Board's view that, "because the loyalty or security risk status of a scientist or any other intellectual may be brought into question, scientists and intellectuals are ill-advised to assert that a reasonable and sane inquiry constitutes an attack upon scientists and intellectuals generally." (p.26) This statement, however, begs the fundamental question as to what are the appropriate limits of a security inquiry under existing statutes and regulations, and under a government of laws and not of men -- a question of concern not merely to scientists and intellectuals but to all our people.

* * * * *

As to the majority's comments about Dr. Oppenheimer's alleged lack of "candor" in "several instances in his testimony", we shall ask the Commission to take special note of the observations in Dr. Evans' minority opinion that while Dr. Oppenheimer's "statements in cross-examination show him to be still naive", they also show him to be "extremely honest and such statements work to his benefit in my estimation" and that while "his judgment was bad in some cases" it was "most excellent in others but it is better now than it was in 1947", when the Atomic Energy Commission unanimously cleared him. We shall also direct the Commission's attention to the fact that the text of the Board's report contains only three specific references to alleged lack of candor, all having to do with the hydrogen bomb program (pp.20 and 30). [We should point out that as to two of these references (p.30) Dr. Evans specifically disassociated himself from the majority (p. 34) and as to the other (p. 20) he did so by clear implication (p.35).] As to all these matters there was extensive testimony not only by Dr. Oppenheimer but also by others who served with him on the General Advisory Committee, including Dr. James B. Conant, Dr. I. I. Rabi (now Chairman of the GAC), Dr. Enrico Fermi, and Mr. Hartley Rowe of the United Fruit Company; and also by Dr. Norris Bradbury (Dr. Oppenheimer's successor as director of Los Alamos); by Mr. Gordon Dean (former Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission); by Dr. Hans Bethe; by Dr. Robert Bacher (a former member of the AEC); and by a number of other distinguished men.

In brief and argument we expect to analyze for the Commission's assistance the evidence they gave, which in our judgment bears out the truth and sincerity of Dr. Oppenheimer's account of the H-bomb controversy.

* * * * *

We wish to make two more observations of a general character.

First, we trust that the Commission in weighing the evidence, including the instances of alleged lack of candor, will take into account certain procedural difficulties which beset the presentation of Dr. Oppenheimer's case. Weeks before the hearing commenced we asked you and the Commission's general counsel for much information which we thought relevant to our case but which was denied us -- documents and minutes concerning Dr. Oppenheimer's 1947 clearance and a variety of other material. Much of this information did come out in the hearings but usually only in the course of cross-examination when calculated to cause the maximum surprise and confusion and too late to assist us in the orderly presentation of our case. Some of the information which was denied to us before the hearing was de-classified at the moment of cross-examination or shortly before and was made available to us only during cross-examination or after.

It is true that Dr. Oppenheimer was accorded the privilege of re-examining, prior to the hearings, reports and other material in the preparation of which he had participated. But he was not given access to the broad range of material actually used and disclosed for the first time at the hearings by the Commission's special counsel who had been retained for the case. And of course Dr. Oppenheimer was not given access to the various documents which, according to the Board's report "under Governmental necessity cannot be disclosed, such as reports of the Federal Bureau of Investigation." (p.31)

The voluminous nature of this undisclosed material appears from the Board's report. It notes that in our hearings the Board heard 40 witnesses and compiled over 3,000 pages of testimony; and we then learn from the report that "in addition" the Board has "read the same amount of file material." (p.2) We can only speculate as to the contents of this "file material." We cannot avoid the further speculation as to how much of this material might have been disclosed to Dr. Oppenheimer in the interests of justice without any real injury to the security interests of the government if established rules of exclusion, which the Board felt bound to apply and we to accept, had not stood in the way.

Having in mind the difficulties and handicaps which have been recounted above, we urge upon the Commission as strongly as possible the following:

(1) That in weighing the testimony, and particularly those portions where documents were produced on cross-examination in the manner described above, the Commission should constantly bear in mind how, under such circumstances, the natural fallibility of memory may easily be mistaken for disingenuousness;

(2) That in the consideration of documentary material not disclosed to Dr. Oppenheimer, the Commission should be ever conscious of the unreliability of ex parte reports which have never been seen by Dr. Oppenheimer or his counsel or tested by cross-examination; and

(3) That if in the course of the Commission's deliberations the Commission should conclude that any hitherto undisclosed documents upon which it intends to rely may be disclosed to us without injury to what may be thought to be over-riding interests of the national government, they should be so disclosed before any final decision is made.

* * * * *

Our final observation has to do with the general structure of the Board's report, and with what has been omitted from it which we feel the Commission should put in the forefront of its consideration if it is to view this case in anything like the true perspective of history -- a history through which Dr. Oppenheimer has lived and which in part he has helped to create.

The Board's opinion, as required by the AEC Procedures, makes specific findings on each allegation of "derogatory information" contained in your letter of December 23, 1953. These findings, which are placed at the beginning of the report, are not thereafter, except in Dr. Evans' dissenting opinion, considered in the context of Dr. Oppenheimer's life as a whole. Dr. Oppenheimer's letter to you of March 4, 1954, in answer to yours of December 23, 1953, stated at the outset that "the items of so-called 'derogatory information' set forth in your letter cannot fairly be understood except in the context of my life and work."

In his letter Dr. Oppenheimer tried to describe the derogatory information about him in that context. There is, in fact, little in the Board's findings that did not appear from what Dr. Oppenheimer volunteered about himself in his original letter to you. Over and above that, he gave a picture of his life and times without which the items of derogatory information cannot fairly be understood -- a picture to which many witnesses added who had known him intimately and had worked side by side with him in the positions of high responsibility which the government, first in war and then in peace and then in the cold war, successively devolved upon him. This picture, which is glimpsed in Dr. Evans' vivid opinion, does not appear at all in the main body of the report, nor is any mention made of the many witnesses who testified at his behest. Some of these we have already named above. The others were Mervin J. Kelly, president of the Bell Telephone Laboratories; General Leslie R. Groves; T. Keith Glennan, president of Case Institute of Technology; Karl T. Compton, retired president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Col. John Lansdale, Jr., wartime senior security officer for the atomic bomb project; James B. Fisk, vice president of the Bell Telephone Laboratories; Prof. Jerrold B. Zacharias, of M.I.T.; Oliver E. Buckley, of the GAC, retired chairman of the Bell Telephone Laboratories; General Frederick H. Osborn; Ambassador George F. Kennan; Prof. Walter G. Whitman, of M.I.T.; Harry A. Winne, former vice-president of General Electric, chairman of the Defense Department's Panel on Atomic Energy; Dr. Vannevar Bush, president of the Carnegie Institution; Sumner T. Pike, former Atomic Energy Commissioner; David E. Lilienthal, former chairman of the A.E.C.; Lee A. DuBridge, president of California Institute of Technology; James R. Killian, Jr., president of M.I.T.; Prof. Norman F. Ramsey, Jr., of Harvard; Maj. Gen. James McCormack, Jr., vice-commander of the Air Research and Development Command; John J. McCloy, chairman of the Chase National Bank; Prof. John von Neumann of the Institute for Advanced Study; Prof. John H. Manley of the University of Washington, former secretary of the G.A.C.; and Prof. Charles C. Lauritsen of the California Institute of Technology. The witnesses included ten former and present members of the General Advisory Committee, and five former Atomic Energy Commissioners.

Since all these witnesses testified to Dr. Oppenheimer's loyalty and since the Board unanimously found him to be loyal, the omission of their names from the report was understandable; but we mention them here and direct the Commission's attention particularly to their testimony, to which we hope to refer in brief and argument, because they did much more than vouch for Dr. Oppenheimer's loyalty. These, and the other men previously mentioned, were not ordinary character witnesses who tell about a man's reputation in the community. Every one of them had served with Dr. Oppenheimer, either at Los Alamos or on the many governmental boards and committees to which he was later appointed. They saw him on the job and off the job, and in their varied testimony about their contacts with him over many years they helped to fill in the picture of the "man himself" which the Atomic Energy Commission, in its 1948 opinion in Dr. Frank Graham's case, said should be considered in determining whether an individual is a good or bad security risk.

Because we believe that the "man himself" can only be understood, and therefore fairly judged, by the closest attention to the testimony of those who have known him and worked intimately with him, as well as to his own testimony, we are particularly hopeful that the Commission will permit us to file a brief and to be heard.

In closing this letter we wish to record our appreciation of the patience and consideration accorded to Dr. Oppenheimer and his counsel by Mr. Gray, Mr. Morgan and Dr. Evans throughout the nearly four weeks of hearings, and our recognition of the sacrifices which they made in the public interest in assuming the long and arduous task assigned to them.

Mr. John W. Davis has authorized me to say that he joins in this letter and will join in the brief.

Very truly yours,

Lloyd K. Garrison

cc: Admiral Lewis L. Strauss, Chairman
Mr. Joseph Campbell
Mr. Thomas E. Murray
Dr. Henry D. Smyth
Mr. Eugene M. Zuckert

NIGHT LETTER

MARCH 25, 1954

DEAN ERWIN N. GRISWOLD
LAW SCHOOL OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY
CAMBRIDGE 38, MASS.

I SAY YOU MY THANKS FOR THE TEXT AND THE ENCOURAGEMENT.

ED MURROW

1-43-7

Law School of Harvard University

Cambridge 38, Mass.

OFFICE OF THE DEAN

March 22, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow,

I have just read the treatment of you in the March 19, 1954 issue of Counterattack -- which for the past couple of years I have felt I had to read.

This is just to say that I remain one of your strong admirers and supporters, and hope that you will continue to do your important work as you have been doing it.

With the thought that you might possibly be interested, I am enclosing a reprint of a speech on the Fifth Amendment which I gave last month, and also a copy of a speech which I am planning to give on Wednesday evening, March 24. The latter deals with procedure in legislative investigations.

With best wishes,

Very truly yours,

Erwin N. Griswold

Erwin N.Griswold
Dean

Enclosures

Dean Erwin N. Griswold's Speech On Fifth Amendment

(The following speech was delivered by Dean Erwin N. Griswold at the Winter Meeting of the Massachusetts Bar Association held in Springfield, Massachusetts, on Friday, February 5, 1954.)

It is Reprinted as a Courtesy of The Harvard Law School Record, Student weekly Publication.

President Bodfish, Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Old friends are good friends. Yet even with the best of friends problems sometimes arise. I have the feeling that that is in a sense the situation we find ourselves in with respect to the Fifth Amendment. It has been with us a long time. It is rather comforting to have around. Yet in the past few years it has come to our consciousness as it rarely has before, and it has been troublesome to many members of the public. It has seemed to me worth while, therefore, to undertake a review of the Fifth Amendment with the thought that ordinarily the better we understand something in human experience, the less fearsome it becomes.

Before going further it may be well to introduce our old friend itself. The Fifth Amendment contains a number of provisions which are commonplace. It is the source of our constitutional rule that serious criminal charges must be made by indictment of a grand jury. It provides against double jeopardy, against the taking of property without due process of law, and against the taking of private property for public use without just compensation. Along with these other provisions is the phrase which has currently come to the fore: "No person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." In this connection, it is well to mention the fact that the Massachusetts Constitution has a corresponding provision, which antedates that in the Federal Constitution. Article XII of the Bill of Rights in the Massachusetts Constitution, adopted in 1780, provides that "No subject shall . . . be compelled to accuse, or furnish evidence against himself." We are not dealing with either an alien or a novel doctrine.

Historians can trace the origin of this privilege back to the twelfth century. Apparently it began in controversies between the king and the bishops. The bishops sought to examine people about a wide variety of alleged offenses, and the king sought to limit the bishops to purely ecclesiastical subjects. By the sixteenth century the idea had been reduced to a latin maxim which was rather frequently voiced, but which does not seem by any means to have reflected the practice of that period. This maxim is: Nemo tenetur prodere se ipsum – or, in English, No one should be required to accuse himself. As early as 1589, the young Coke apparently obtained a writ of prohibition against proceedings in the spiritual courts, on this ground. Cullier and Cullier, Cro. Eliz. 201 (1589). But the maxim was then little more than an idea. Over the next 50 years, it was apparently standard practice not only to make suspected persons give evidence against themselves, but also to use torture to make sure that the accused would speak. Indeed, it appears that Coke himself at times participated in the administration of torture for this purpose. As we think of the development of the privilege as it has continued to this day, we should not overlook the fact of its close connection with the struggle to eliminate torture as a governmental practice.

It seems quite clear that we owe the privilege of today primarily to Freeborn John Lilburn. He was a cantankerous person, the sort to whom we owe much for many of our basic rights. One of his contemporaries said that "if all the world was emptied of all but John Lilburn, Lilburn would quarrel with John and John with Lilburn." Like most contentious people, he was stubborn. In 1637, he was haled before the Star Chamber on a charge of having imported certain heretical and seditious books. He refused to take the oath to answer truly, and the Council of the Star Chamber condemned him to be whipped and pilloried, for his "boldness in refusing to take a legal oath," without which many offences might go "undiscovered and unpunished." And in 1638, the sentence was carried out.

But Lilburn persisted. He filed a petition with Parliament, and in 1641 the House of Commons voted that the sentence was "illegal and against the liberty of the subject." Later, the House of Lords concurred with this view, and ordered an indemnity paid to him in the amount of £3,000, which was a very large sum in those days.

This event seems to have been enough to establish the privilege against self-incrimination as a part of the common law. By the latter half of the seventeenth century, we find many occasions when the privilege was recognized by the English courts, and it has been recognized ever since. Indeed, it is still a matter of common law in England. But it is very deeply imbedded in the common law.

Thus, the privilege came to this continent as a part of the legal heritage of our early settlers. Some trace of the privilege is found in this Commonwealth as early as 1637, in the trial of Anne Hutchinson and John Wheelwright. It was also recognized in the other colonies, although the evidences are rather scarce.

Let me read to you a record which has come down to us from Pennsylvania in 1689. In that year, William Bradford was summoned before the Governor and Council of the Province of Pennsylvania. Bradford was the man who introduced the art of printing to the middle provinces of America. He was about twenty-six years old when this episode occurred.

At the instance of one of the citizens of Pennsylvania, Bradford had printed the Charter of the Province so that people could see their rights. He had not put his name on the pamphlet, apparently anticipating some trouble. Here is the examination, chiefly by the Governor. You may want to consider whether you have ever heard anything like it before.

"Governour.–Why, sir, I would know by what power of authority you thus print? Here is the Charter printed!

"Bradford.–It was by Governour Penn's encouragment I came to this Province, and by his license I print.

"Governour.–What, sir, had you license to print the Charter? I desire to know from you, whether you did print the Charter or not, and who set you to work?

"Bradford.–Governour, it is an impracticable thing for any man to accuse himself; thou knows it very well.

"Governour.–Well, I shall not much press you to it, but if you were so ingenuous as to confess, it should go the better with you.

"Bradford.–Governour, I desire to know my accusers; I think it very hard to be put upon accusing myself.

"Governour.–Can you deny that you printed it? I do know you did print it, and by whose directions, and will prove it, and make you smart for it, too, since you are so stubborn.

"John Hill.–I am informed that one hundred and sixty were printed yesterday, and that Jos. Growden saith he gave 20s for his part towards the printing it.

"Bradford.–It's nothing to me, what 'Jos. Growden saith.' Let me know my accusers, and I shall know the better how to make my defence."

Little is heard about self-incrimination during the eighteenth century. This may well have been because the privilege was generally recognized in the colonies after it had become established as a part of the common law of England. Violation of the privilege did not figure as one of the major grievances of the colonists, although there are occasional references to "Inquisitional Courts," and there was complaint about the roving jurisdiction of the admiralty courts during the controversy over the Stamp Acts. The Privilege was included in the Virginia Bill of Rights of 1776 drafted by George Mason, and, apparently largely because of its presence there, it made its way, in various forms, into the constitutions of six or seven of the original States. When the Federal Constitution was ratified, a number of the States proposed amendments, and the privilege against self-incrimination was specifically mentioned. Accordingly, it was included in the proposals made by Congress which became the Fifth Amendment in 1791, and it has been there unchanged ever since. It is truly an old friend, with an ancient and I believe useful history.

A good many efforts have been made to rationlaize the privilege, to explain why it is a desirable or essential part of our basic law. These have been carefully reviewed by Wigmore, and he concludes that none of the explanations is wholly satisfactory. I am going to offer my own attempt to express the reason for the Fifth Amendment, and why I think it is a sound provision of our basic laws, both Federal and State.

I would like to venture the suggestion that the privilege against self-incrimination is one of the great landmarks in man's struggle to make himself civilized. As I have already pointed out, the establishment of the privilege is closely linked historically with the abolition of torture. Now we look upon torture with abhorrence. But torture was once used by honest and conscientious public servants as a means of obtaining information about crimes which could not otherwise be disclosed. We want none of that today, I am sure. For a very similar reason, we do not make even the most hardened criminal sign his own death warrant, or dig his grave, or pull the lever that springs the trap on which he stands. We have through the course of history developed a considerable feeling of the dignity and intrinsic importance of the individual man. Even the evil man is a human being.

If a man has done wrong, he should be punished. But the evidence against him should be produced, and evaluated by a proper court in a fair trial. Neither torture nor an oath nor the threat of punishment such as imprisonment for contempt should be used to compel him to provide the evidence to accuse or to convict himself. If his crime is a serious one careful and often laborious police work may be required to prove it by other evidence. Sometimes no other evidence can be found. But for about three centuries in the Anglo-American legal system, we have accepted the standard that even then we do not compel the accused to provide that evidence. I believe that is a good standard, and that it is an expression of one of the fundamental decencies in the relation we have developed between government and man.

As said by that old tartar, Mr. Justice Stephen J. Field, who was reared in western Massachusetts, "The essential and inherent cruelty of compelling a man to expose his own guilt is obvious to every one, and needs no illustration." And in words which he approved, it is the "result of the long struggle between the opposing forces of the spirit of individual liberty on the one hand and the collective power of the State on the other." Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 637 (1896).

Where matters of a man's belief, or opinions or political views are essential elements in the charge, it may be most difficult to get evidence from sources other than the suspected or accused person himself. Hence, the significance of the privilege over the years has perhaps been greatest in connection with resistance to prosecution for such offences as heresy or political crimes. In these areas the privilege against self-incrimination has been a protection for freedom of thought, and a hindrance to any government which might wish to prosecute for thoughts and opinions alone.

But the privilege is broader than that. It is applicable to any sort of crime, even the most sordid. Don't we go too far in giving this protection to criminals? Isn't the claim of the privilege the clearest sort of proof that the person who claims it is guilty of a crime? This has been asserted by high authority, but I do not believe it is true.

Apart from its expression of our view of civilized governmental conduct, another purpose of the Fifth Amendment is to protect the innocent. But how can a man claim the privilege if he is innocent? How can a man fear he will incriminate himself if he knows he has committed no crime? Judge Magruder of our own First Circuit Court of Appeals has recently given some illustrations of this in his illuminating opinion in the Maffie case, decided last month.

There is, for example, the case of the man who has killed another in self defense, or by accident, without design or fault. He has committed no crime, yet his answer to the question whether he killed the man may well incriminate him. At the very least it will in effect shift the burden of proof to him so that he will have to prove his own innocence. Indeed, the privilege against self-incrimination may well be thought of as a companion of our established rule that a man is innocent until he has been proven guilty.

In this connection let me quote from a Supreme Court decision written long before our present troubles. In Burdick v. United States, 236 U. S. 79 (1915, Mr. Justice McKenna wrote, "If it be objected that [Burdick's] refusal to answer was an implication of crime, we answer, not necessarily in fact, not at all in theory of law."

Now let us turn to an area which is closer to that which has recently been of concern. I am going to ask you to assume two sets of facts. You may think that both of the sets of facts are unlikely, and that they do not correspond with any case you have ever heard of. All I ask is that you assume the facts. I am simply putting a hypothetical case; and the facts are not the facts of any specific case.

Here is Case 1. A man is a college teacher. He is an idealist and perhaps slow to recognize realities as idealists sometimes are. He has a great urge for what he regards as social reform. He is native born, went to American schools, and loves his country despite what he regards as its imperfections. You may not agree with his ideas but you would respect his honesty and sincerity. He believes himself thoroughly attached to the country and the Constitution, and he abhors anything involving force and violence. He is a good teacher and works hard on his subjects. He has always believed that as a good citizen he should be interested in politics. Neither of the established political parties provided what he wanted. In the relatively calm period of the past middle 1930's, on the solicitation of a friend, he went to a communist meeting and soon joined the Communist Party. At that time the Communist Party was perfectly legal, and regularly appeared on our ballot. He thought he was simply joining a political party. One of the reasons that led him to join was because he regarded fascism as highly immoral and a great danger to the world, and he felt that the communists were fighting fascism in Spain at this time. His interest was not merely in protecting Spain, but because he thought that fighting fascism there was an important means of guarding against such a danger here.

Now you may say that this is all very unlikely. To this I reply that I am, for the moment, only assuming a hypothetical case, and I should be able to assume any hypothetical case I want. So these are the facts I put before you. You may feel that such a man must have been very naive or lacking in intelligence. To that I would make two replies: First, to say that involves the use of a large amount of hindsight. A man's actions at any time should be evaluated on the basis of the facts then available to him, and the state of his own mind on the basis of what he actually knew, and not by facts we learn later that were not known to him. And my second reply would be that the man may have been naive or obtuse. I would say that he was at least misguided and unwise. But I would point out that being obtuse or naive is a very different thing from being a traitor or a spy.

Let me add a few more facts, assumed by me as before. Our teacher was in a communist cell, with other teachers. The communists had great plans for this group. They wanted to use it to infiltrate American education. However, the communist command was canny. They knew that many or all of the members of this cell of teachers were politically innocent, and that they would recoil quickly from any proposals for sabotage or the use of force and violence. So they treated this group with great care. The group was never subjected to the rigors of communist discipline. It was a study group, and its discussions were kept on a high intellectual plane. The more sordid features of the Marxist doctrine were kept thoroughly in the background. Our teacher never engaged in espionage or sabotage or anything like that, and never saw or heard of any such activities by any member of his group. He would have been horrified by any such actions.

Nevertheless, there were things from time to time which he did not like. He rationalized them in various ways–nothing can be perfect; the thing to do is to stay inside and work against excesses; and so on. Besides he was a stubborn fellow. Once having started out on something he thought was good, he did not lightly give it up. But he became troubled; and after the war he slowly drifted away from the group. He never formally resigned. He just turned away. By the time of the Korean invasion in 1950, he was thoroughly disgusted and saw that he had been used as a dupe. But he was also convinced in his own heart of the rectitude of his actions, if not of their wisdom; and he did not doubt that many of the people who had been associated with him in the venture were just as innocent of wrong-doing as he was sure he was.

Remember I am doing the assuming. You may feel that these facts do not fit an actual case. But I am not trying to state an actual case. I am just assuming a hypothetical case, which is one of the ancient rights of any law teacher.

Now let me turn to Case 2. This man is also a college teacher. He never joined the Communist Party. He never thought of joining the Communist Party. He knew a good deal about the realities of communism, and he was thoroughly opposed to it. He was, however, a man who was interested in causes. His father had been a minister, who had dedicated his life to helping people. He himself had a great urge to participate in activities which he felt would help to alleviate suffering or contribute to social progress. In fact he was a sucker for almost any kind of an appeal. He contributed modest amounts to China Relief. He had always had a warm feeling for the Chinese. Sometimes he found himself on some of the letterheads of some of these organizations as a sponsor. He was not sure that he remembered giving permission to use his name this way; but the cause, as indicated by the attractive name of the organization, was one that appealed to him, and he did not bother himself much about it. After a while he heard some rumblings that there might be some communist influence in these organizations, but he was slow to believe that that could true. In some of the organizations, he had been on committees with thoroughly respectable fellow citizens. He did not want to pull out, because he felt that this would let his friends down. Eventually he heard that some of these organizations had been ruled to be subversive by the Attorney General. But he, too, was a stubborn fellow. He believed in the stated objectives of these organizations. He was also a freeborn American, proud of his country's great traditions, and he allowed his name to be used by some of these organizations, as has been said in a recent article, "as a gesture of opposition to the procedure of proscribing organizations without giving them the right to be heard."

Well, that is the end of my assuming. Let us see what happens to these two individuals. Remember that both of these individuals feel that they are innocent of any wrongdoing. Each one is pure in heart, and perhaps a little too certain of his own rectitude. Each one may now regret some of the things he did, but he does not think that they were wrong. Each one is certain that he is morally innocent of any crime.

We can consider Case 1 first. He is the man who was a member of the Communist Party. He is summoned to appear before a Congressional committee, and is asked whether he is a communist. He answers truthfully: "No." Then he is asked whether he ever was a communist. He is now surely subjected to a substantial risk, even though he honestly believes that he has committed no crime. He knows that a number of communists have been convicted under the Smith Act of 1940, and more have been indicted. Our teacher perhaps magnifies his own predicament. He sees the jail doors opening up if he gives himself the evidence that he was once a communist. Interestingly enough, Section 4(f) of the Internal Security Act of 1950 (commonly known as the McCarran Act) provides specifically that "Neither the holding of office nor membership in any communist organization by any person shall constitute per se a violation of . . . this section or of any other criminal statute." But this was enacted after his period of Party membership. It has been declared to be a crime to be a communist in Massachusetts since 1951, but there may be some possible room to question the effectiveness of this statute in view of the provision of the Federal Act. That the Federal statutes may displace State action is indicated by a decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania just last week.

After much internal torment, the witness finally decides to claim the privilege of the Fifth Amendment with respect to the question of his past membership in the Communist Party. Putting aside the question of his wisdom in doing this, can there be any doubt that the claim is legally proper? Past membership in the Communist Party is not a crime in itself; but admitting such membership may well be a link in a chain of proof of a criminal charge against him. Persons have been prosecuted under the Smith Act for membership in the Communist Party plus something else. If he supplies the proof of his own membership in the Party, he does not know what other evidence may then be brought against him to show that he has committed a crime. Thus, an answer to the question will definitely incriminate him, that is, provide evidence which could be used in a prosecution against him. Yet, remember that he thoroughly believes that he is not guilty of any crime; and on the facts I have given he is not guilty of a crime.

There are other factors that influence his conclusion. His own experience is an ordeal. He does not want his friends to be subjected to it. He believes in their innocence of any crime. If he thought that they had committed crimes, he would promptly tell the proper officers of the government. By claiming the privilege against self-incrimination, he can refrain from naming any of his associates. He feels a strong sense of loyalty to them. He feels a strong sense of loyalty to his country, too; but since he is convinced that neither he nor his associates have in fact done anything wrong, his desire to protect them from having to experience his own predicament seems to him to have prevailing weight in the actual circumstances.

He claims the privilege. He cannot be prosecuted on the basis of any evidence he has provided. There can be no doubt, I believe, that his claim of privilege is legally justified. Yet, note that on the facts I have assumed he is not guilty of any crime. Of course his claim of privilege as to his membership in the Communist Party means that he must also claim the privilege as to all other questions which relate in any way to what he did, or to his associates in the activity. For if he answers any of those questions, it will clearly connote his own communist activity.

There is one small point which might be brought in here. It is sometimes said that the privilege may only be rightly claimed if the answer to the incriminating question would be "yes." I do not believe that is true. Our man in Case 1 has testified that he is not now a communist. He claims the privilege as to a question which asks him if he ever was a member of the Communist Party. He is then asked: "When did you cease to be a member?" He must claim the privilege as to this, or else his answer will disclose that he once was a member, as to which he has legitimately claimed the privilege. Then the examiner starts a new line. He says: "Were you a member of the Communist Party yesterday?" Now the answer is "No." But the witness who has taken this line cannot answer that question. For if he does, the questions will be continued: "Were you a member of the Party last year?—two years ago?—three years ago?" If he answers any of these accurately with a "no," he will come to the place where he must claim the privilege if he is to maintain his basic position. In this way, the date of his withdrawal could be pinpointed, thus giving valuable information for a possible prosecution. Moreover, he may not be sure just when he withdrew; it was a gradual process. And he may have legitimate fears that an honest answer he might give to a question relating to the transitional period might get him involved in a prosecution for perjury. At any rate, it seems clear that questions of this sort are an illustration of a type of question as to which the privilege may be legitimately claimed, as far as the law is concerned, even though the answer to the question would be "no."

Let us turn to Case 2, which we can dispose of briefly. You will remember that that was the man who had lent his name to causes, and had contributed money; and the causes have now turned out to be communist fronts, although they were attractively named, and many good Americans were, at one time or another, associated with them. But he was never a member of the Communist Party.

This man likewise is summoned before a Congressional investigating committee. The mere fact that he is summoned shows that he is suspected of something rather serious, and he is badly worried. He is asked whether he is now a member of the Communist Party; and he answers "No." Then he is asked whether he ever was in the past. The answer is in fact "no," as we have seen. But he is now in great fear. If he says "No," then he may be subjecting himself to a real risk of a prosecution for perjury. He may rightly fear that proof of the fact of his joining and contributing to so many agencies which have turned out to be front organizations might lead a jury to believe that he actually was a communist.

Now it is probably true that fear of a prosecution for perjury for an answer given to a question is not a proper basis for a claim of the privilege. If it was, almost any witness could claim the privilege as to any question. But our man is in a somewhat different situation. If he says "No," to the question of communist membership, then in his own interest he may have to undertake to state and explain his membership and activities in the various front organizations. The net result may be that he will have to give much evidence which could be used against him in an attempt to prove that he was a member of the communist conspiracy. It would appear, therefore, that he can properly claim the privilege even though his answer to the question as to Communist Party membership at any time would honestly and rightly be "No."

In both of the cases I have put, the privilege may be claimed although the individual was guilty of no crime. In the second case it may be claimed although the person was never a member of the Communist Party. In each case, the inference which would be taken from the claim of the privilege would in fact be unwarranted. The claim of the privilege is surely a serious business, but it is equally surely not the equivalent of an admission of criminal conduct.

There are other reasons why a person may claim the privilege in a particular case. He might get bad advice; but I do not want to press that, as I think that in many of these cases the individual's troubles are caused in part by the fact that he chooses to make his own decisions and does not accept sound advice. But we should not forget that a person on the witness stand may be badly frightened, even though he is wholly innocent. For example, the Supreme Court of the United States has said, in Wilson v. United States, 149 U.S. 60, 66 (1893):

"It is not every one who can safely venture on the witness stand though entirely innocent of the charge against him. Excessive timidity, nervousness when facing others and attempting to explain transactions of a suspicious character, and offences charged against him, will often confuse and embarrass him to such a degree as to increase rather than remove prejudices against him. It is not every one, however honest, who would, therefore, willingly be placed on the witness stand."

A witness lost in fear and confusion might turn to the privilege as a means of sanctuary from a situation which he feels himself incompetent to handle. Consider also how much the chance of a witness losing his calm and collected demeanor is enhanced by such things as television, radio microphones, movie cameras, flashing flash bulbs, and procedures which may not seem to him to be based upon the finest spirit of fairness. In connection with this I might mention the recent decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Aiuppa v. United States, 201 F.2d 287, 300 (1952), where we find the following language in the opinion:

"But, in concluding, we think it may not be amiss to say that, notwithstanding the pronouncements of the committee chairman as to intended fairness, the courts of the United States could not emulate the committee's example and maintain even a semblance of fair and dispassionate conduct of trials in criminal cases.

"Despite the enjoyment by millions of spectators and auditors of the exhibition by television of the confusion and writhings of widely known malefactors and criminals, when sharply questioned as to their nefarious activities, we are unable to give judicial sanction, in the teeth of the Fifth Amendment, to the employment by a committee of the United States Senate of methods of examination of witnesses constituting a triple threat: answer truly and you have given evidence leading to your conviction for a violation of federal law; answer falsely and you will be convicted of perjury; refuse to answer and you will be found guilty of criminal contempt and punished by fine and imprisonment. In our humble judgment, to place a person not even on trial for a specified crime in such predicament is not only not a manifestation of fair play, but is in direct violation of the Fifth Amendment to our national Constitution."

Ordinarily when the privilege of the Fifth Amendment is exercised, it is in a criminal trial. There a specific charge has been made, and the prosecution has by evidence established a prima facie case of guilt of the particular crime charged in the complaint or indictment. Under such circumstances there is much more than the mere claim of the privilege on which to rest an inference of guilt.

In investigations, however, there are no carefully formulated charges. Evidence to support such charges has not been introduced and made known to the witness before he is called upon to answer. He has no opportunity for cross-examination of other witnesses, and often little or no opportunity to make explanations which might have a material bearing on the whole situation. In the setting of an investigation, therefore, the basis for the inference from a claim of privilege against self incrimination is much less than it is when the privilege is exercised in an ordinary criminal trial.

There are two more matters to which I should like to make brief reference. The first of these is the rather technical legal doctrine known as waiver of the privilege. A clear instance of waiver occurs when a defendant in a criminal case voluntarily takes the stand. He then becomes subject to cross-examination, and must answer relevant questions. So far as witnesses at investigations are concerned, our current learning on this is based largely on the Supreme Court's decision in Rogers v. United States, 340 U.S. 367 (1951). In that case, a witness testified that she had been treasurer of a local communist party, had had possession of the records, and had turned them over to another person. She then declined to name the person to whom she had given them, claiming the privilege under the Fifth Amendment. The Supreme Court held that by giving the testimony she did she had waived the privilege, and that she was guilty of contempt for refusing to answer the further questions. There was a dissenting opinion by Justices Black, Frankfurter, and Douglas.

My own view is that this decision was not soundly reasoned, and that it has led to unfortunate results. To me the analogy of an adversary proceeding is not apt when applied to an investigation. As a consequence of this case, witnesses who have legitimate fears of prosecution, but who might be willing to cooperate as far as they could, are induced (if not actually compelled) to refuse to answer any questions at all. For if they do answer a single question, it may be contended that they have waived the privilege so that thereafter they may be compelled to testify against themselves. This threat of waiver is not an imaginary matter. It may be found frequently in the transcripts of the proceedings of Congressional committees.

My guess as to the law is that the Rogers case applies only where the witness has given an incriminating answer to a prior question. I do not think it would apply if a witness was asked if he had been a member of the Communist Party in 1945, and he said "No." By the latter answer he has not opened up anything which he refuses to explain. Nevertheless, it will take a Supreme Court decision to provide this clarification of the Rogers case; and counsel advising a client may well hesitate to make his client bear the risk and expense of taking a case all the way to the Supreme Court. With the Rogers case on the books, the only safe advice may be to claim the privilege at the earliest possible moment, so as to be sure to avoid a charge of waiver.

This doctrine of waiver is, I believe, the true explanation of the refusal of some witnesses to answer such questions as "Have you ever taught communist doctrine in your classroom?" or "Have you ever solicited students to join the Communist Party? These refusals have been deeply disturbing to the public. Yet, answers to these questions may be "No;" but the witness nevertheless fears that he cannot give that answer without its being said that he has waived the privilege as to questions about other sorts of communist activity. Here again we have a situation where the obvious inference from the refusal to answer the question may be completely unwarranted.

Finally, I would like to make reference to one more problem which is collateral to that of the Fifth Amendment. Suppose a witness is summoned before an investigating committee. He does not claim a privilege against self-incrimination, and talks freely about himself, answering all questions about his own activity. He takes the position, however, that he will not answer questions about others. Or suppose a person first refuses to answer virtually all questions, claiming the Fifth Amendment privilege, but he later decides to waive the privilege as to himself. However, he refuses as a matter which he regards as one of principle to identify other people. What should be the situation with respect to such a person?

There have been a number of people who have been summoned before investigating committees and taken this position from the outset. They have answered all questions about themselves, and have refused to identify others. As far as I know, no academic person who has done this has been cited for contempt; nor has any such person lost his job. Should it be any different where the witness has first relied on the Fifth Amendment, but has later changed his position, waiving the privilege as to himself, but still refusing to answer as to others?

The problem is undeniably a difficult one. So long as the witness was claiming the privilege, it could be argued that he had done no wrong. If he had committed any crime, the evidence should be brought forth in the proper way and tried out in court. His refusal to answer was not evidence of any crime. This argument, however, is not available where he waives the privilege by refusing to answer questions relating to other persons. Then his Fifth Amendment privilege is wholly gone, and his situation presents new and rather different problems.

Whether he has committed a crime by his refusal to testify may be extremely difficult to tell. Even if he is cited by the legislative body, it will still be for the grand jury to decide whether to indict; it will remain to the courts to decide such questions as whether the committee was properly constituted, and whether the question asked was relevant to the inquiry. We should not forget that a prosecution for contempt was set aside within the past year by the Supreme Court on the ground that the questions asked the witness—as to the identity of his contributors—were not relevant to the particular inquiry. United States v. Rumeley, 345 U.S. 41 (1953).

However such questions go, though, would it not seem that such a person is at least in no worse a position morally than he was when he stood on the Fifth Amendment? He should not be worse off for being willing to speak fully and frankly about himself than he was when he would not talk at all. His refusal to tell on his friends may be both contrary to valid law and unwise. Nevertheless, it may be based on strong grounds of conscience.

Let me do a little more assuming: Let us assume that the witness feels positive in his own mind that the persons with whom he was associated did no wrong to our country. They did not engage in espionage or sabotage or anything like that. They were merely hopeful but misguided people, as he was. Let us assume, too, that this is all far in the past. The persons in question are in other work. They have families to support. If their names are disclosed, they will surely lose their jobs. He must then resolve for himself the question whether he will give their names and subject them to the same sort of ordeal he has been through in order to save himself from further difficulty and possible prosecution. He may be wrong if he decides that he should not protect himself by sacrificing them. I recognize the legal obligation to testify as to others, and the general importance of this both in trials and in investigations. But can it be said clearly that his action is always immoral?

Of course he may be wrong in his judgment of these other people. They may be worse than he thinks they are. But we all have to use judgment on such things. A man may honestly feel that he cannot bring suffering to others in order to save himself. To a considerable extent such questions can only be resolved in a man's own conscience. We are a society which has long depended on and applauded the virtues of the rugged individualist.

I do not justify the past or present conduct of anyone. I seek only to explain. Because of claims of privilege under the Fifth Amendment, and refusal to answer questions, many members of the general public have come to have fear of our educational institutions, and general mistrust of academic people. I firmly believe that these fears are unwarranted. I have tried tonight to show how some of the things that have happened could have happened without there being anything rotten in the universities. It may be a serious error of judgment for an academic person to claim the privilege of the Fifth Amendment, or to refuse to answer questions; but the conduct, regrettable as it is, does not show the existence of treason, espionage, sabotage, or any other serious crime.

The great misfortune from all this, I believe, is that charges are made against our universities and other educational institutions, and more or less believed by some segments of our people. I think myself that it is easy to overestimate the extent of that belief, but it cannot be denied that there is disagreement, uneasiness and even fear in some quarters. As I have said, I think these fears are not soundly based. This is my twentieth year as a Faculty member at Harvard University, and I am thoroughly convinced that the University has acquitted itself well, and that it has been of great value to the country during that time. It is an injustice not only to the faculty members but to the country to allow any conclusion to stand that they are not good Americans or that they do not serve their country well. I think that the Harvard Law School with which I am intimately connected, is a great asset to the country and to the Commonwealth, and, in essence, one of the great conservative influences in our land. If there are any who think otherwise, let them examine the facts, carefully and thoughtfully.

As conservative a judge as Pierce Butler once wrote (Sinclair v. United States, 279 U.S. 135, 178 (1927)):

> "It has always been recognized in this country, and it is well to remember, that few if any of the rights of the people guarded by fundamental law are of greater importance to their happiness and safety than the right to be exempt from all unauthorized, arbitrary or unreasonable inquiries and disclosures in respect of their personal and private affairs."

On this matter some final observations may be in order, based on our traditional practices and rules. In our criminal courts, we would never think of requiring an accused person to answer questions. He doesn't have to take the stand at all, and if he does do so, he has the protection of an impartial judge, and the right to have his counsel speak in court in his behalf.

Why should it be so different in a legislative inquiry, when the information that is sought relates to the witness' own conduct? I recognize fully the power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the lineal descendants of the Houses of Parliament. These are deliberative bodies, and all points of view are usually represented among their members. Their actions are taken after debate, and represent the judgment of many people from all parts of the country.

I recognize also that these bodies have to operate through committees. A committee in the common acceptance of the term is a group of persons, usually appointed to represent various points of view. Its actions reflect collective judgment taken after consideration and deliberation. In this light, I ask a question: Should these broad investigative powers ever be held by a single person, even though he is formally clothed with the title of a sub-committee?

The more I think about this, the more it seems to me to be an unsound practice. There is nothing about the nature of membership in the Senate or the House of Representatives which should give each member a general commission to go through the length and breadth of the land, far from his own state or district, far from the seat of the general government, making inquiry about any subject, even on formal delegation to him from his House or one of its committees. Committees I am willing to accept. Sub-committees of one give me pause. It may well be that only the Houses of Congress can effectively deal with this problem, but I respectfully commend it to them for their consideration.

And so I come back where I started. The privilege against self incrimination embodied in the Fifth Amendment and in the Commonwealth's Bill of Rights has been a long time with us. It is, I believe, a good friend as well as an old friend. It embodies a sound value which we should preserve. As we increase our understanding of it, and the part it has long played in protecting the individual against the collective power of the state, we will have better appreciation of some of the basic problems of our time.

Used on 7:45 show March 26/1954

Speech by Erwin N. Griswold,
Dean of the Harvard Law School, at the Initiation of New Members of Phi Beta Kappa, at Mount Holyoke College, South Hadley, Massachusetts, on Wednesday, March 24, 1954 at 8:00 p.m.

PER LEGEM TERRAE

This is one of the few sorts of gatherings where I could appropriately use a Latin title for a speech. "Per Legem Terrae" means, of course, "By the Law of the Land." I will come back in a moment to an explanation of why I have used the Latin phrase.

We are met tonight to welcome to an old but very informal society a new group of students who have shown a capacity for scholarship and an interest in learning. Within some definitions of the word, this is an intellectual group; and it is through such groups as this, multiplied throughout the country and the world, that the lamp of learning is kept lighted, and passed from hand to hand down the long course of time.

It is appropriate that we should gather together in the interests of scholarship. We have been recently passing through what may be regarded as a period of anti-intellectualism in this country. In such times, it is fitting for scholars to meet and to consider their relation to the rest of the world. It is well for us now to remember that these periods of anti-intellectualism are recurrent in the history of our country and probably of the world. And it is well to remember, too, that they are not without a cause. Intellectualism is not the only useful or constructive factor in a society. Scholars are sometimes arrogant, and sometimes too withdrawn and aloof from the world to be useful, or at least to be understood. There are some lines from Mr. T. S. Eliot's current play, "The Confidential Clerk," which may be appropriate here:

"What's surprising, well-bred people
Are sometimes far from intellectual;
And--what's less surprising--intellectual people
Are often ill-bred."

Within wide limits, the capacity for scholarship may well be thought of as a public trust. Many scholars, in one way or another, devote their efforts to the common good, and contribute to the progress of mankind. And the scholar, beside being a servant of his fellows, should be a humble man, for he is in a position to know how little he knows, and how much more there is to be done just to hold our own -- to say nothing of moving ahead.

Now I return to my title: "Per Legem Terrae." What is the significance of those words tonight? A few weeks ago, in a city not far from here, I spoke on the subject of the Fifth Amendment, and said that its embodiment of the privilege against self incrimination was one of the great landmarks in man's long struggle to make himself civilized. It is my plan tonight to talk about another fundamental idea which has its roots in the distant past and which has become a vital and pervading part of our Anglo-American legal heritage.

These words which I have chosen as the title of my speech go back to Magna Carta, the Great Charter of 1215, wrested from King John by his barons, and the source of ideas far more potent than they could have realized. For the barons were interested in protecting themselves against an overbearing King, and had little interest in the basic rights of common men. In the thirty-ninth article of Magna Carta, apparently taken from an earlier Continental source, they included the provision that "No freeman shall be taken and imprisoned or disseised or exiled or in any way destroyed, nor will we go upon him nor send upon him, except by the lawful judgment of his peers and by the law of the land." "By the law of the land" -- these are the words with which we now render the Latin of the original, "per legem terrae." The phrase has had an almost unexampled persistence and power. Professor McIlwain has said that "Chapter thirty-nine was in 1215 the most important chapter in the charter, as it is today." "Due Process of Law in Magna Carta," 14 Columbia L. Rev. 41 (1914).

Thus there was planted in the stream of English law and English history -- a stream of which we are now the largest branch -- the seed of a great idea, an idea which has made an incalculable contribution to the development of our institutions. Just a few words, but they have time and again arisen at critical moments of our history, and in one way or another have contributed to that long course of events through which we have sought to make ourselves civilized.

Do I not exaggerate? "By the law of the land" -- can these words have such great significance? Are they not merely procedural at best? Historians have long debated the exact meaning of the various clauses in Magna Carta. A leading author has said that what the barons "wished to secure was justice and legality in all of the king's actions affecting private rights." Mott, Due Process of Law (1926) 36.

We have seen how and when the idea was planted. How did it grow? In the next century, Edward III, who has been called the "English Justinian," made it clear that the protection of the article applied to all men without limitation -- "of what estate or condition that he be." 28 Edward III, c. 3 (1354). And it was this same statute of Edward III that first used the phrase which has become commonplace in our own history, for he said that no man should be harmed in any way except "by due process of law."

Over the next three hundred years, many men, at many times, appealed to the Great Charter and the conceptions which it embodied. For our purposes, we may move on to Lord Coke, the great figure of the first part of the seventeenth century.

In an outstanding event of the history of our liberties, Coke advanced "the law of the land" against the king. This was in 1608 when James the First asserted that he had power to take such cases as he might be pleased to determine and decide them as if he were himself a judge. Coke denied this, and the king was greatly offended, saying that this meant that he was "under the law, which was treason to affirm." To this Coke replied in words which he took from Bracton, that the king "ought not to be under men but under God and the law." Prohibitions del Roy, 12 Rep. 63b, 65a (1608). This was a crucial application of the basic idea which we are considering tonight. These words, I am proud to say, are inscribed in their original Latin -- "Non sub Homine sed sub Deo et Lege" -- over the portal of the Harvard Law School.

In 1628, Coke wrote a Commentary on Magna Carta, as a part of the work that is known as his Institutes. He showed the identity in meaning between the two phrases, "the law of the land," and "due process of law," and that the purpose of these provisions was to protect the subject from oppressive uses of authority. In his words: "Every oppression against law, by colour of any usurped authority is a kinde of destruction, . . . : and it is the worst oppression that is done by the colour of justice." Coke, Second Institutes (1656) 48. In this and other passages from his Institutes, Coke interpreted Magna Carta not so much in the light of its own historical setting as in the light and for the purposes of his own time.

Coke was a member of the committee that drew up the Petition of Right, in 1628, and was probably its principal author. In this the House of Commons asserted itself against King Charles by condemning arbitrary taxation and imprisonment, and the billeting of soldiers, all as being contrary to the law of the land.

Out of all of these events there grew a great revival of the idea of protection of the citizen inherent in the phrases "law of the land" and "due process of law." This is perhaps most strikingly shown in the fact that the Act of Parliament which finally abolished the Star Chamber in 1640 recited that the actions of that body had not been in accordance with "due process of law," and were contrary to the "law of the land." Much of Locke's political writing was based on the ideas embodied in these two phrases. Both Coke and Locke had great influence on the development of the ideas of the colonists in this country a hundred years later.

These ideas came to America as a part of the heritage of our early English settlers, and we had here a soil on which they could flourish. When James Otis made his great argument in the "writs of assistance" case in 1761, he included an argument based on Magna Carta, with specific reference to the "law of the land" provision. Quincy 51 (1761). This argument had great influence on the colonial pamphleteers who had so much to do with the mobilization of public opinion in the period. John Adams was one of those who took up this idea. The argument that "Taxation without representation is tyranny" was simply an application of the basic idea of due process of law, thought by the colonists to be established by Magna Carta, and thus to be their birthright.

When, after the revolution, and the successful adoption of a federal constitution, it was decided to add a Bill of Rights to that Constitution, it was natural that this traditional right should be included. The Fifth Amendment, largely drafted by James Madison, includes a provision that "No person shall . . . be deprived of life liberty or property without due process of law." Thus has the great provision of Magna Carta been carried forward to our own fundamental law. As Dr. Mott has said, "This portion of the Fifth Amendment may thus be regarded as containing phraseology of purest gold mined under the stress of heated constitutional crises, refined by the fire of violent revolutions, proved by the acid test of centuries of struggle, and molded by the hand of one of America's greatest constitutional draftsmen." Mott, Due Process of Law (1926) 18.

And thus we have this ancient doctrine included in our Constitution -- now in both the Fifth and the Fourteenth Amendments. What the barons did in 1215, what Coke and his associates did in the seventeenth century, what the American patriots did in the eighteenth century -- all of this and much more provides a clear continuity, linking our present institutions closely with all the struggles for liberty in the past three-quarters of a millennium.

But is not the due process clause technical lawyers' stuff? Was it not on the basis of the due process clause that the Supreme Court held that New York could not fix the length of hours that bakers might work, and that Congress could not fix a minimum wage for women in the District of Columbia? What do such decisions have to do with the struggle to obtain and to maintain liberty? The answer I would give is: Very little. They are only eddies in the stream which carries on the great idea. For the idea of due process, of "the law of the land" is a great idea, and one of our greatest heritages from the past. It is something of the spirit, something that gives life to our political institutions. In very large part we take it for granted in our day to day relations with our fellow men and with the several governments with which we deal. It is so deeply ingrained in us all that it is rarely violated; and many of the violations which do occur are naturally of the more or less technical sort with which courts deal.

In the long run, ideas are more powerful than more tangible weapons. And the idea of due process has been a very fruitful and pervading one in our history. What does it mean? Can it be defined? Many people feel the need for a rather precise sort of a definition of concepts with which they deal -- but this is not that sort of an idea. This is an idea born out of the hearts of men. It has great capacity for development and growth, and yet a rather clear basic content. Perhaps it can be put by saying that it has some application wherever men feel a sense of injustice. Thus it becomes a chief source of support for individual liberties. What is liberty? Is it not freedom or protection of the individual against arbitrary or improper exercise of the organized power of the state? What is a tyrant? Is it not a man who exercises the collective power of the state in an arbitrary, capricious, or purely selfish manner? Such words as "arbitrary" and "capricious" are difficult words. They may not in fact mean much more than "unreasonable," and that in turn may mean in substance "customary," or what we are accustomed to. Perhaps it may be said that we are accustomed to decent treatment from our public officers, and that our hearts and minds recoil when that custom is broken. It is with this sort of thing that the idea of due process, of "the law of the land" is concerned.

Violations of cherished ideals and aspirations have often been overcome in our history by arguments based on the general idea of due process, of the law of the land. In recent times, the due process clause has been the basis of decisions on such questions as these: (1) That a judge cannot properly try a case if he is directly interested in the outcome (Tumey v. Ohio, 273 U.S. 10 (1927)); and (2) That a person cannot be subjected to a secret trial, with no chance to defend himself, In re Oliver, 333 U.S. 257 (1948).

Now let us turn to the question which has been constantly recurring in recent days. Does this basic idea have any application to legislative investigations? Do these investigations always measure up to our ideal of due process of law? I think it fair to say that a large section of the public has from time to time felt "a sense of injustice" with respect to some of these hearings; and if they have, then there is a situation where the ancient ideal of due process is involved. A failure to appreciate the intimate relation between sound procedure and the preservation of liberty is implicit, may I say, in that saddest and most short-sighted remark of our times: "I don't like the methods, but . . ." For methods and procedures are of the essence of due process, and are of vital importance to liberty. As Mr. Justice Brandeis wrote some thirty years ago, " . . . in the development of our liberty insistence on procedural regularity has been a large factor." Burdeau v. McDowell, 256 U.S. 465, 477 (1921). More recently Mr. Justice Frankfurter has put the same truth in these words: "The history of liberty has largely been the history of observance of procedural safeguards." McNabb v. United States, 318 U.S. 332, 347 (1943).

The complaint against the Star Chamber was chiefly one of bad procedures. Torture is a procedure, and inquisition without charge, forcing a witness to testify against himself, and the other things which were standard practice in the infamous Star Chamber would all fall into the category of procedure. Liberty is established and preserved by the development and maintenance of proper procedures. It is, in last analysis, only through procedural rules that the individual is protected against arbitrary governmental action. And, as we have seen, the very essence of liberty is the protection of the individual against arbitrary application of the collective power of the state.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not opposed to legislative investigations. They clearly have a proper place in our governmental structure. The fact, though, that they can be useful and necessary, does not mean that they should not be properly conducted, and under proper safeguards and procedures. Nor does it mean that when not properly conducted they may not violate our basic and fundamental conceptions of due process, rooted so firmly in Magna Carta. In my opinion, for what it is worth, some recent legislative investigations have been clear violations of due process. If so, why have the courts not so held? The answer is easy. The courts do not have the sole responsibility for the proper conduct of our government. As Mr. Justice Stone once said: "Courts are not the only agency of government that must be assumed to have capacity to govern." United States v. Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 87 (1936). At this point another important governmental doctrine comes into play -- the separation of powers. The courts have their responsibilities, but so do the executive and the legislative branches of the government. All are sworn to uphold the Constitution, including the due process clause of so ancient and vital origin.

The responsibility for the proper conduct of legislative investigations is clearly in the legislature. In the case of investigations by the Federal legislature, the responsibility is clearly in Congress, and its two Houses. Has this responsibility been fully met? It seems to me quite clear that the answer to that question is: No. Why has it not been met? What can be done about it?

Before turning to an answer to those questions, I would like to pause to make one important observation. It is wholly clear, I believe, that no Senator or Representative has any power whatever to make an investigation, to require the presence of witnesses and their answers to questions, or to do anything of this sort, merely because he is a Congressman or Senator. An election to the House of Representatives or to the Senate does not make a man any sort of a magistrate, nor does it vest him with any power at all over his fellow citizens except to cast his vote in the body to which he has been elected. The power of investigation is a power which is solely attributable to the collective body, the House of Representatives or the Senate.

Where there is an investigation being conducted, the power that is being exercised is that of the House or the Senate. No Committee of either body has any power to conduct any investigation except as a result of a delegation from its House of Congress. No sub-committee of a Committee has any power to investigate except on a delegation of the power delegated by the House or Senate to the Committee. If there is a sub-committee of one, the power exercised by that one is not any power that is his by virtue merely of his being a member of the legislative body. If he has any power, it is only because there has been a proper delegation or sub-delegation to him of the basic power of the House or Senate.

I mention this because it is important in the consideration of the questions which I have posed, and to which I want to suggest some answers. Since the power exercised by a Committee or a sub-committee, or a sub-committee of one, is the power of the House or Senate itself, responsibility for that power and its exercise rests not on the Committee or the sub-committee of one or more, but upon the House or Senate itself, acting, of course, by a majority vote of its members. One of the important steps which must be taken if we are to find a solution for problems in this area is, I believe, to focus attention on the fact that these hearings which are the occasion of concern are not merely private frolics of an individual member, but are an exercise of the power of a House of Congress for which every member of that House has a full and equal responsibility.

Clearly there is a problem here. Why has it not been dealt with long before this time? It is a difficult problem, and it would be too much to expect it to be completely solved in a short time. But the fact is that virtually nothing at all has been done about it. There has been some talk, and some indication in the past few weeks that something might be done. But the actual results so far are not impressive. Why is that? One reason, I think, is that only recently has it become a serious problem. It is clear that our legislative bodies include a very large number of able, high-minded men, who are just as much interested in the ideal of due process as you and I. Why have they not taken action to establish proper procedures in legislative investigations?

The answer is not simple, but there is one aspect of it which is, I think, perhaps insufficiently understood by the average citizen. The fact is that, for practical purposes, the House of Representatives and the Senate are regarded by their members as clubs -- of which the Senate is, of course, the more exclusive. Each member of the House or Senate has his own standards. And in a great many cases these standards are very high. But with almost no exception, no member seeks to impose his standards on any other member. Once you are in the club, how you act is up to you, and no member wants to undertake to interfere in the conduct of any other member -- partly, I suppose, because he does not want anyone else to interfere with him. This is unfortunate, I think, though perhaps natural and understandable.

There is an important distinction here, which has, I fear, been overlooked, in the consideration of this matter of legislative investigations. For a Senator or Congressman who is conducting an investigation, either as a sub-committee of one, or in association with other members, is not acting as an individual. Everything he does directly involves the other members of his House, and they should share responsibility for the exercise of the power they have delegated, power which inheres only in the body as a whole. The problem can be solved by establishing by law, or by rule of each House, a proper standard of procedure for the conduct of legislative investigations, which will keep them wholly consistent with our basic and deeply felt notions of due process of law.

In the concluding portion of this talk, I would like to outline some provisions which, it seems to me, should be included in an established regulation of procedure of legislative investigations. I have in mind primarily the Federal scene. Before turning to that, though, I would like to point out that we are not wholly without precedents. This is, interestingly enough, an area in which the states have, on the whole, done a much better job than has the Federal legislature. In New York a Commission has recently made a promising report on this whole matter. Here in Massachusetts, the legislature, in establishing two recent recess commissions, one to investigate crime, and the other to investigate communism, has included substantial provisions designed to protect the rights of witnesses and to insure the proper conduct of these investigations. As a result, there have been no complaints about the activities of these commissions, and we have not been subjected to the spectacles which have so frequently been produced on the Federal stage. For these wise provisions we should give respect and thanks to the Massachusetts legislature and to its Committee on the Judiciary which was undoubtedly responsible for their first formulation. I am glad to pay this tribute to our local legislators. But why cannot the Federal Congress do as well?

Much work has been done over the past several years towards formulating a suitable and proper code of conduct for Federal legislative investigations. A number of members of Congress have devoted much thought and effort to this task, and a number of bills have been introduced. Recently President Eisenhower announced that he understood that Congress was going to establish such standards -- and it is clearly the responsibility of Congress. Legislative leadership on this question is still not impressive, but it should come. Probably it would be more accurate to say that there has been leadership and good leadership, but it has been hard so far for the leaders to get an effective following. The matter is too important, too closely connected with our basic liberties, to be longer neglected.

These are some of the things, as I see it, which should be included in a proper Code of Practice for legislative investigations. Of first importance is the elimination of the one-man sub-committee in any proceding involving a witness who appears involuntarily. In our concern over recent events, we should not forget that there is much of the business of Congress which is not controversial, and there are many situations where a witness wants to appear. As long as he appears voluntarily, there may be little objection, as far as the witness is concerned, to his appearing before any sort of body, including a sub-committee of one. Even then there may be a public interest in having a member of the other party present so that more than one point of view may be represented. When a witness appears under subpoena, when he is compelled to testify against his will, the situation is wholly different. Then I say that the power of Congress against him should not be asserted by a sub-committee of a single member.

Closely related to this is the matter of the issuance of subpoenas. The practice with respect to subpoenas has come to be very loose; indeed it might be called lax. It is the standard practice, I believe, in many Committees, for the Chairman of the Committee to sign up a batch of subpoenas in blank, and hand them to the staff of the Committee. Then the staff fills in the name of a witness whose testimony is wanted, and the subpoena is served upon him. Such a practice seems to me to be highly improper.

There is here a close analogy with a search warrant which can only be issued by a judge. With respect to such warrants, Mr. Justice Jackson has said (McDonald v. United States, 335 U.S. 451, 455-456 (1948)), that the requirement of a search warrant is made "so that an objective mind might weigh the need . . . . The right of privacy was deemed too precious to entrust to the discretion of those whose job is the detection of crime and the arrest of criminals. Power is a heady thing; . . ."

No subpoena should be issued to compel testimony except as a result of the action of the Committee itself, not the Chairman alone, or its staff. There are few ways in which the organized power of the state is brought to bear on a citizen more sharply than through a subpoena to compel testimony. Such a power should not be exercised on the judgment or discretion or whim of a single man.

When a witness is summoned, he should be given several protections which have not heretofore been made available. He should be told in advance the subject and the scope of the inquiry. He should have the right to counsel, and counsel should be entitled to speak on his behalf as well as to advise him as to his rights.

In many Committees now, the right to counsel is formally recognized. But counsel, though present, is restricted to giving advice when called upon. He cannot address the Committee; and counsel who have sought to do so have been ejected from hearing rooms. The right should be a right to effective counsel, and not the mere shadow of that right that has been recently allowed.

If testimony is taken in executive session (which should never be done unless the witness is willing) no member of the Committee or of its staff should make available selected portions of the testimony, or summaries or incomplete versions of it. The Committee should not be allowed to say, through its Chairman or otherwise, that "We have evidence of" so and so, unless that evidence is produced in an open hearing.

Of very great importance, I believe, is a rule protecting the witness from having to submit to broadcasting, television, newsreel cameras, or any other form of recording or reproduction, except the ordinary stenographic transcript. Even flashing flash bulbs can be an indignity and a source of strain to a witness. It is high time that we recognized and accepted the fact that legislative investigations are not a part of show business. Witnesses should not be required to testify in order to provide a spectacle for the public. Requiring testimony under such conditions is not compatible with any sound notion of due process of law, and I would expect our courts, as some have already done, to uphold a witness who refuses to testify for broadcast of any sort. We have even had Congressional investigations put on with sponsors, with advertising during the intervals. Can anyone possibly defend such a practice?

In this connection I would like to state my own view that a legislative investigation is improper when its sole or basic purpose is to "expose" people or to develop evidence for use in criminal prosecutions. We have had Chairmen of legislative Committees who have announced that that was the purpose of the hearings they were conducting. In my opinion, they have thus demonstrated the impropriety of the exercise of power which they are seeking to carry out, and I would hope that the courts, when properly invoked, would decide that there was no legislative power for such a purpose.

There are many other rights and refinements which should be established and recognized in connection with legislative investigations. For example, a person summoned should have due notice of the nature of the evidence that is wanted from him. A witness should surely be entitled to explain his answers, and he should have an opportunity to answer any charges made against him or any evidence against him produced by other witnesses.

Many Congressmen and Senators are aware of these problems and are trying to get them worked out. Reference may be made in particular to the work of Congressman Keating, the Chairman of a sub-committee of the House Judiciary Committee, and to Congressman Scott who has recently introduced House Resolution 447, which, if adopted, would go far towards resolving the problems as far as the House is concerned. The Senate should also go ahead with similar action.

Before leaving this matter it should be observed that it is of first importance not only to have proper procedures established but also that there should be appropriate sanctions to make these procedures effective. This is not easy. Probably the most effective sanction in the long run would be a provision which would relieve a witness from any obligation to testify, and thus from any punishment for refusal to testify, when the procedures are not followed. A sanction against the Committee or its members is doubtless unrealistic. But the Committee should lose its compulsory powers when it does not conduct itself properly.

Finally, it should be emphasized again that responsibility for working out proper procedures for legislative investigations rests upon Congress and its two Houses. Complaints against the President or others outside of Congress are misdirected. Congress has the power to provide proper procedures for legislative investigations, and it should meet its clear responsibility.

The spirit of due process of law, the law of the land, our ancient heritage of liberty, requires that we bring order and fairness into this field which has recently become so chaotic. We have been through struggles of this sort in the past, and justice and liberty have always eventually won out. Indeed we have been strengthened in our liberties by each such struggle. In this connection, I think of a phrase which was used by our late Chief Justice Harlan F. Stone. He referred to "the sober second thought of the community, which is the firm base on which all law must ultimately rest." Stone, "The Common Law in the United States," 50 Harv. L. Rev. 4, 25 (1936). For myself, I have great faith in the sober second judgment of the people. The immediate reaction of the people, like that of any individual, may be hasty, emotional, irrational, or unsound. But when that phase is past, when we have had a real chance to think through our problems, I have confidence that the people will demand a better standard of conduct in legislative investigations than has been evidenced in the recent past. In making this statement, I want to pay due and deserved respect to the many members of both Houses who have not abused their powers, and have been scrupulous in the exercise of their authority.

Though we live in stirring times, we should not forget that many generations of our ancestors have lived through times which were for them more trying than ours. It was Aenaeas who heartened his men by saying to them: "O passi graviora" -- "Oh you who have lived through worse days . . .". It is not surprising that now, as in earlier times, there have been those who seek to exploit our fears. Nor should it be surprising that many people, at first, at least, respond to such exploitation. But it is the way of life to have to meet new problems; and, while doing so, we should not give up old values.

In protecting ourselves from the threat of communism, we should not adopt methods of oppression here which the communists themselves would use. After all, the essence of communism is the subordination of the individual to the state. And the essence of liberty, for which our ancestors fought, on both sides of the Atlantic, is the freedom of the individual from the arbitrary power of governmental authorities. When we see more clearly that our present problem is simply one of due process of law in its pervasive sense, so fundamental throughout more than seven centuries of history, we will have no difficulty in finding a satisfactory solution which will recognize and preserve the basic rights of individuals while providing ample protection for the state.

The problems of our day may be useful problems. It is good, I think, that we should have to bestir ourselves from time to time to protect our liberties, as our ancestors did on many occasions in the past. If we take these rights for granted, if we accept them as a matter of course, we may simply fritter them away, and end by losing them, and possibly deserve to lose them. And so I would suggest that you not be discouraged, nor even be unduly concerned if basic human rights are under attack. These are rights which thrive in vindication, and each generation better understands them and their significance if it has to think them through for itself. We are given a great opportunity today, to which I think we will measure up, if the past is any guide. Like the barons at Runnymeade, like Coke and Locke and Otis and Adams and Madison, and many others whose names are lost to fame, we may be able to make our own contribution to that ancient concept which has rallied the spirits of free Englishmen and Americans for many centuries -- the law of the land.

AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

MEMORANDUM

April 27, 1954

TO: John Slawson

FROM: Marc Vosk

Just prior to the Army-McCarthy hearings, Gallup completed a survey on public opinion about this question.

77% of all respondents knew about the forthcoming Congressional investigation of the quarrel between the Senator and the Secretary of the Army. 23% had not heard or read about this event. Those who had heard were then asked:

"Judging from what you have heard or read up till now, whose side are you inclined to agree with — Senator McCarthy's or Army Secretary Stevens?"

Senretary Stevens.....	46%
Senator McCarthy.....	23
Neutral.....	5
No opinion.....	26

If the above percentages are applied to the population as a whole the table will read as follows:

Secretary Stevens.....	35%
Senator McCarthy.....	18
Neutral.....	4
No opinion.....	20
Have not heard of the controversy..	23

The vote by party affiliation of those who have heard or read anything about the investigation is as follows:

	Rep.	Dem.	Ind.
Stevens.....	34%	58%	42%
McCarthy.....	33	15	26
Neutral.....	6	3	7
No opinion.....	27	24	25
	100%	100%	100%

Interesting too is the fact that while the vote among Catholics is about evenly divided, Protestants favor Secretary Stevens by better than two to one.

MV:mr
cc: Alfred Bernheim
David Danzig
Edwin Lukas

Dear Jess,

Surine, on the phone again; long discussion. I had vivid memory of interviewing Kay Campbell, Larry Leseur, Ward Wheelock; reading Paul White's book on newscasting; searching World-Telegram files. Surine, leaving no stone unturned, will probly follow up these leads. From remark he dropped I guessed he's already seeking IWW archives, if any.

He insisted on having a collect telegram from me, saying so-and-so, and so-and-so, "for the record." Implication he needed it to show the boss how active he was. But past performance suggests he wants a "damning document" which the boss can wave in the air, and misquote. Consequently, FYI, and your use if needed, here's a verbatim copy of my telegram to him.

If I have to testify, I hope I can get into the record that my people were Tories in the US Revolution! Can Murrow beat that?

Yours, Wes

COPY OF TELEGRAM PHONED TO WESTERN UNION, (COLLECT)

DOYLESTOWN, PA. 130 PM APRIL 13, 1954

MR DON SURINE

ROOM 160

SENATE OFFICE BUILDING

WASHINGTON D. C.

ACCORDING TO YOUR TELEPHONED REQUEST, I HAVE SEARCHED MY BACK FILES BUT FIND NOTHING ON MR. MURROW. ORIGINAL NOTES FROM WHICH 1949 ARTICLE WAS WRITTEN WERE JUNKED BY 1952 BECAUSE I DON'T SAVE SUCH MATERIAL LONGER THAN TWO YEARS AFTER PUBLICATION. I CAN'T REMEMBER THE SOURCE OF MY IWW REFERENCE, WHICH MIGHT HAVE STEMMED FROM RESEARCH IN PERIODICAL FILES ETCETERA OR FROM ONE OF SEVERAL INTERVIEWS WITH VARIOUS PEOPLE, INCLUDING MR. MURROW. IF MR. MURROW HAD PROTESTED TO ME ABOUT THE ARTICLE I WOULD HAVE SAVED THE LETTER: I'M REASONABLY CERTAIN THAT HE DIDN'T.

WESLEY PRICE

4/17/54

ED:

Talked with Wes Price this morning. Don Surine has been around.

BACKGROUND: Wes is definitely anti-Mc. didn't send you telegram cause thot it wud be lost in the bags. He playing Sat Eve Post piece straight: "Where I got it God knows..I got it from somewhere..I didn't pull it out of hat.. may have come from friends, clips, speeches etc that I researched. Also: Ed didn't protest article..don't remember if I sent it to him.. normally send stuff to guys who don't trust in principle..and want them to o.k. it so that they can't put me on hook later..didn't have that attitude towards Ed so don't recall if ever sent it to him.. only corresponde nce with Ed concerned error on Col. Du Puy.. remember that because the Colonel protested. D n't recall that I even got a note from Ed after the article..did talk to him phone once.. said he was going to Korea.. maybe I8d get out that way.

SURINE called Wes couple days ago.. wanted know source of the reference.. Wes doesn't keep files for more than two years.. said maybe he had zomething in attic.. Surine said please go get it "sounded like a very nice guy" says Price.

Wes kidded and said get my clothes awfully dirty searching the attic. Surine said I'll pay for it. Wes says:"The kid didn't know I was kidding so out of embarrassment I said 'Maybe I'll break a leg up in that dark dirty place.' Surine said:"Don't worry..we'll take care of any emergencies." ..all expenses. Wes said he thot maybe had letter from you on Du Puy in attaic. Surine wanted that. Wes since decided he has nothing on paper.. will tell so to Surine this afternoon when he calls.

Wes says there is nothing in his attaci..he has no notes on piece on you.

Surine wanted wire saying ERM never protested his piece and that Price got background facts on ERM from ERM. Price says he offered tell him what he could on phone.

Price says can't recall where got reference..explained he went over whole Murrow clip file at World Telegram. Surine said they never consulted any such files..just happened have Sat Eve piece on hand. Surine wanted know if Wes went west to talk early-day friends ERM. Wes explained did all research in east consulted M's friends(Larry, collingwood, jz, ja, etc..read scripts,, speeches not aired, etc.)

Only corr spoendence Wes remembers is on De Puy where you told him he was wrong on who voiced first flash..this, apparently, because he was seeking answer to Du Puys beef to Post

Wes says you might have told him reference as a joke.. he can't remember..doesn't have that kind of memory.. He also concludes he probably did not send you advance text. If he did neither you or anyone else who read it complained about anything.. he fully understands you not type of guy who can devote hours to complaining all printed references that erroneous.

He has no memory at all where he got reference..or who told it to him.

jZousmer

p.s. and I said: you have no memory seeing piece.. you might have said you were at times tempted to carry reference.

Mr. M.
Attached FYI.
Dm.

* have since discovered our files Sept 20, 1949 you said article produced enormous amount favorable comment including Janet "I know everything in the piece but he writes it so well."

ALSO you say in same letter:(re dupuy story)

> "I suppose I should have caught this detail in reading the proof, but I didn't"

Price, Wesley

December 20, 1949

Mr. Wesley Price
R. D. #3
Doylestown, Pa.

Dear Wes:

First of all, I must tell you that the SEP piece has produced an enormous amount of favorable comment, including one from Janet, who said: "I know everything in the piece but he writes it so well".

About my old friend Ernie Dupuy, I am afraid we all missed out. Paul White's book has it all straight, beginning on Page 334 where he notes that Dupuy "tells the story", and again:"Under the command of General Eisenhower, etc."

Then White continues: "I find out what's coming next. It's to be Ed Murrow reading General Eisenhower's Order of the Day".

I think we get credit for a near miss. On examining your piece and the facts, it is clear that Dupuy did read the original flash, and that Murrow's text was the Order of the Day, the beginning of which you quote accurately.

I suppose I should have caught this detail in reading the proof, but I didn't.

For your own amusement, I recall now that the broadcasters made a strong pitch to SHAEF to have me read both the communique and the Order of the Day, but dear old Ernie Dupuy had contracted (maybe from me) an acute case of "mike mouth", and insisted that he do it. He's an old pal of mine and I'll be glad to drop him a note on my own and tell him that neither one of us consciously denied him his small place in history.

The only complaint I have received was a rather petulant note from the North American manager of Reuters, saying surely I didn't say what I was quoted as saying about Reuters when informed of the attack upon Pearl Harbor. I told him I did.

When come you again to this city of steam, scurry and scamper?

As ever yours,

Dear Wes:

I'm afraid we all missed out on Dupuy.

White's book has it straight, beginning on page 334 where he notes that Dupuy "tells the story:' Under the command of General Eisenhower etc.'"

Then he notes:"I find out what's coming next. IT's to be Ed Murrow reading General Eisenhower's order of the day etc."

I think we get credit for a near miss. On examining your piece and the facts: Dupuy read the original flash. Murrow's text WAS the order of the day.

EDITORIAL ROOMS

THE SATURDAY EVENING
POST
FOUNDED BY

BEN HIBBS
EDITOR

THE CURTIS
PUBLISHING COMPANY

Dec. 17, 1949
R.D. #3
Doylestown, Pa.

Ed Murrow
CBS

Dear Ed:

Can Murrow, Campbell, Aaron & Co. lend me a hand? I need information to answer a letter complaining of an inaccuracy in my SEP article about you.

The offending portion: "In 1944 he was chosen to give the official flash, on all networks, that D-Day had come. The text, assigned him by SHAEF, was General Eisenhower's Order of the Day--"Soldiers, sailors and airmen of the Allied Expeditionary Forces---" "

The objector: Col. R. Ernest Dupuy,USA, Retd. He writes--

". . .the official flash announcing the Normandy invasion ....was given by the undersigned in his capacity as acting Chief, Public Relations Division, SHAEF, at 7:32 AM GMT (3:32 EST) 6/6/44, in a worldwide official broadcast put on the air as follows:

"This is Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force. The text of Communique #1 will be released to the press and radio of the United Nations in ten seconds". And ten seconds later:-

"Under the command of General Eisenhower, Allied naval forces, supported by strong air forces, began landing ....."

End of exceppted quote from letter.

LOS Book
FROM D-DAY
Thru Vol 2 p. p 18

more

I have no reason to doubt Dupuy, and I find in a file copy of TIME that he was then credited as the official first announcer of D-Day.

But where did you come in? I took my version from Paul White's book "News On The Air". Beginning about page 330 he told of this sequence:

1237 AM ,New York, AP flashes that German Trans-Ocean agency says invasion has begun. Ned Calmer puts it on the air.

3:37 AM you come on as scheduled.with Order of Day

3:47 Eisenhower's voice, "~~Soldiers, sailors~~
"People of Western Europe etc".

W hite didn't mention Dupuy at all, and I incautiously adopted his sequence---a convincing one, full of circumstantial detail. His book is no longer in my posession.

Can CBS' library give me -- naming sources -- an accurate rundown on who broadcast what when? I've exhausted my own morgue.

Regards,

Wesley Price

Our best information comes from "From D-Day Through Victory in Europe" published by CBS, Ny, 1945. It was written by our promotion department based on all available Columbia records, and best memory of New York office participants.

It agrees that DuPuy made first official announcement.. read first official communique

Five minutes later (3;32;05 to 3; 37;40 in our listing) Murrow read Ike's order of the day, the first civilian voice from Europe "now the die is cast."

Price's piece is seemingly in partial error. Although he miscredits Murrow with "the official flash that D-Day had come" he is correct is describing Murrow's text as the Eisenhower Order of the Day.

Price assumes that the order of the day was the official flash.

-0-

Price evidently misread White's book:

P. 334 says at 3;32;05 Dupuy begins to speak. "In 26 words he tells the story: 'Under the command of General etc.'"

(later) "I find out what's coming next. It's to be Ed Murrow reading General Eisenhower's order of the day etc."

--Price missed White's mention of Dupuy at bottom page 334
(price says White didn't mention dupuy)

5-C5

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

F 553C

To Mr. William S. Paley cc: Mr. Davidson Taylor

From Edward R. Murrow

Station

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

Consultation

September 29, 1948

Subject: Communism

I have been greatly impressed in the last couple of weeks with the number of officials, both military and civilian, in Washington and in Europe, who are studying the classical literature of Communism. They are doing so in an effort to assess both Russian policy and Russian motivation. They have concluded (belatedly) that there is no better way of informing themselves as to the real wellsprings from which Communist propaganda, policy and action flow.

American radio has made only sporadic and rather superficial efforts to explain what Communist doctrine is--the nature of the basic philosophy. Most of those efforts (the one by NBC about a year ago and the recent documentary by ABC) have been second-hand and synthetic and dealt with what others have said, written or thought on the subject.

I would like to suggest that we give serious consideration to a series on Communism which would be confined primarily to an examination of the works of Marx, Lenin and Stalin, supplemented by excerpts from current Russian text-books and periodicals. I am persuaded that somehow such a series could be done without producing unfavorable listener reaction, and that if done with great care based upon impeccable research, (which could be done without difficulty) would render a real public service in the field of adult education and would be recognized as such.

E.R.M.

THE NEW COUNTERATTACK
REGISTERED IN THE UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE

FACTS TO COMBAT COMMUNISM

55 WEST 42 STREET, NEW YORK 36, N. Y. LONGACRE 3-4608

March 19, 1954
Vol. 8, No. 12

Dear Subscriber:

WHY DOES THE COMMUNIST PRESS PRAISE EDWARD R MURROW SO HIGHLY?

No radio or TV commentator has received as much praise from the Communist Party (CP) press during the last few months as has EDWARD R MURROW. The Daily Worker runs an item on the "Best Bets" on radio and TV each day. MURROW's CBS-TV shows "See It Now" and "Person to Person" have been consistently plugged in this feature, which mentions only a few of the many programs presented each day. His radio news commentary on CBS has recently been getting the same favored treatment.

What is the reason for this? A few examples of what MURROW says and does on his broadcasts and telecasts provide the answer:

MURROW rapped the State Dept last May for not embracing CHURCHILL's proposal of direct talks between MALENKOV, Pres EISENHOWER and himself. MURROW made it clear that he believed "new tides" were running in Russia after Stalin's death (a belief since exploded) and that the President should not let the "hatred and hysteria" of the American people prevent a meeting.

The U S "had better find a better answer" than the one it had given for rejecting a talk with MALENKOV, MURROW said. Actually, the State Dept's answer was an excellent one: Moscow had broken scores of promises; MALENKOV had given no evidence of good faith - so it was foolish to talk with him.

Communists in all parts of the world were screaming for such a meeting. In fairness to them, it should be pointed out that their reasons for wanting one were much more intelligent than MURROW's - although they, naturally, would not reveal what those reasons really were.

MURROW attacked Attorney General BROWNELL on the HARRY DEXTER WHITE case. He said it had been pointed out that "in 1947 a Federal grand jury had studied the matter of Mr White — all the evidence — and had failed to return an indictment because it felt there was insufficient evidence to warrant such action". (Note the emphasis on "all the evidence".)

This statement was not true on Nov 9, 1953 when MURROW made it. In 1948 WHITTAKER CHAMBERS produced his "pumpkin papers", among which were notes in HARRY DEXTER WHITE's own handwriting. The grand jury never saw this evidence. MURROW knows that...but for some strange reason neglected to mention it. He repeatedly pooh-poohed the evidence against WHITE.

MURROW accused Pres EISENHOWER and BROWNELL of asserting that a dead man was a spy "without producing evidence". He said this practice, if pursued, may "be applied to you or to me" and would endanger our heritage.

The MURROW program that the CP has praised most highly was his "See It Now" telecast on the case of Lt MILO RADULOVICH, an Air Force Reserve officer who refused to resign his commission when asked to do so because it was decided he was not a good security risk (his loyalty was not questioned).

A 10th Air Force Security Board reviewed RADULOVICH's case. It recommended discharge. The Commanding General of the 10th Air Force concurred.

Published weekly. Copyright 1954 by American Business Consultants, Inc.; J. G. Keenan, President; A. E. Cullen, Vice-President; F. J. McNamara, Editor; L. F. Budenz, Contributing Editor.

MURROW plugged the New Yorker on his radio broadcast of last May 13 by quoting extensively from verse written for it by staff member E B WHITE. This verse was an attack on loyalty investigations.

MURROW always winds up his radio program with a quotation, usually from some famous person, which helps to drive home his point and gives a tone of wisdom and nobility to his words. One of his recent quotations sheds light on how acute and well-informed MURROW actually is.

He ended his broadcast of last October 27 this way: "Bertold Brecht, German poet — and an exile himself — once put it this way: 'A man can be free even within prison walls. Freedom is something spiritual. And whoever once had it, can never lose it. For while the body can be bound with chains, the spirit can never!'"

Worth noting about this quotation are these points:

1. BERTOLD BRECHT is a leading "cultural light" in the Communist world. As a refugee in this country he supported CP fronts, swore before the House Committee on Un-American Activities in 1947 that he was not and had never been a Communist - and then went to East Germany and became an active supporter of Moscow's puppet régime (which has given him awards). He wrote the CP song "United Front"...with his long-time colleague, HANNS EISLER.

2. The above quotation is utter nonsense in the context of today's problems...in spite of the pomposity with which MURROW quoted it (do the millions in Soviet labor camps, who once had freedom, have freedom today?)

3. The very idea of quoting a Communist on "freedom" is ridiculous.

It is not at all difficult to see why the CP has praised quite a number of MURROW programs. He has often handled issues involving Communism in a way that helps the party line and makes anti-Communists appear evil.

COUNTERATTACK stated of EDWARD R MURROW on Feb 22, 1952:

"He has defended OWEN LATTIMORE on the air and also those who have joined fronts, taking position that nobody should be blamed for that. Though not pro-Communist, he is confused on Communist issues and defends those involved in Communist causes."

MURROW talks on the side of the angels. He is for the highest democratic and humanitarian ideals. But in actual practice he is not above using slick devices he would denounce if used by others. He is a master at slanting his programs while imparting an aura of great objectivity to them.

MURROW preaches dangerous doctrine. He vastly underrates the domestic Communist Party menace. To do this is as dangerous as to misjudge the menace of Communism abroad. U S will be sunk if it loses to Communism in either place. Even on foreign issues, MURROW advocates a policy of dangerous softness in the face of Soviet intrigue...and he has become hysterical about the issue of Communism vs civil liberties here in the United States.

The great acclaim given to MURROW in many quarters in spite of his unsoundness on vital issues concerning Communism deserves serious thought. It points up the major weakness of the U S on all fronts in the battle against Communism. That weakness is lack of real understanding of Moscow's conspiracy. It is the greatest threat to U S survival.

EDWARD R MURROW, unfortunately, represents the dominant voice in all media of communications. Too few Americans are getting the unbiased news and the intelligent commentary on it they need so badly.

Yours faithfully,

March 19, 1954 COUNTERATTACK

Subscription Rate: $24.00 per year, U.S.A.
Single Copies: 50¢

Reproduction in whole or part without written authorization is prohibited.

This was another underhanded attempt to put the Senator in a bad light. Sen McCARTHY had not named any one else on the advisory council. MURROW was the one who brought their names into the controversy.

MURROW says the project was cancelled by Russian authorities...but that does not change the fact he worked for its success.

MURROW didn't tell all about his promotion of study and travel in the Soviet Union. In 1933 he was on the Advisory Committee of the Bureau of University Travel which was then promoting "The First Russian Seminar". This was a more-than-two-month travel and study tour of the Soviet Union and the Near East, with most of the time spent in Russia — "under the management of Intourist...the official travel agency of the USSR".

The following are quotes from the brochure for this study trip:

"The Seminar is planned for those who wish 'not only to see but to understand'....Russia today offers to the world a new challenge....

"Those for whom the Seminar will be a success...those who will come away heavily laden with thought provoking experiences and unforgettable memories, will be those...who have entered into the spirit of the Seminar. This may be tersely worded as follows: 'We are interested in seeing and understanding. We desire something more lasting than the memory of deluxe accomodations. For these we do not even need to leave our American homes... but Russia has something to show us. Let us try to comprehend.'"

The obvious pro-Soviet tone here provides all the comment that is needed on MURROW's explanation that he served the Moscow State University in 1935 because he believed then, as he does now, that American students and professors can engage in "the clash of ideas with Communists anywhere under peacetime conditions, without becoming contaminated or converted".

COUNTERATTACK asks this question: When HITLER rose to power did MURROW promote sympathetic study and travel tours in Germany on the basis that Der Fuehrer offered a new challenge to the world, that he had something to show Americans and that we should try to "see and understand"?

OWEN LATTIMORE, a "conscious articulate instrument of the Soviet conspiracy" according to the U S Senate Judiciary Committee, wrote as follows of MURROW in his whitewash book, "Ordeal By Slander":

"I also owe a very special debt to men I have never met, or had never met before....I must mention at least Edward R Murrow. Even when the hysteria was at its height...he kept the record straight by repeatedly drawing attention to the fact that nothing had been proved against me. Later, by his program technique of using recordings, he gave me a national forum of my own, so that millions of people could hear me speaking for myself...."

Despite the obvious slant in MURROW's programs, he has been the subject of favorable articles in many magazines (Newsweek, Look, McCall's, etc).

CHARLES WERTENBAKER wrote a complimentary profile of MURROW that was published in "The New Yorker" magazine of Dec 26, 1953.

WERTENBAKER tried to have WHITTAKER CHAMBERS fired as foreign news editor of "Time" magazine - because CHAMBERS put anti-Communist material into the news he edited and kept pro-Communist material out.

WERTENBAKER's recently published book "The Death of Kings" is a fictionalized account of happenings at "Time" when WERTENBAKER was there. It is also a slick rehash of the HISS case in a "Time" setting and with "Time" personnel. There are many parallels to actual HISS-CHAMBEERS events in WERTENBAKER's account...which portrays the "HISS" of the story as an innocent man who is framed by the sinister villain (CHAMBERS).

Then MURROW went to bat for RADULOVICH in a very cleverly slanted program that produced no evidence that RADULOVICH had been judged wrongly.

A flood of letters descended on the Defense Dept in Washington. A short while later Air Force Sec'y HAROLD E TALBOTT said he did not think RADULOVICH was a security risk...and reversed the Air Force's earlier decision.

The organ of the CP-led Teachers Union hailed MURROW's program on RADULOVICH as "a signal service to our country". The party's organ on the motion picture industry, "Film Sense" (published by the Nat'l Council of Arts, Sciences and Professions), praised it as "an interesting example of TV's new awareness" and as proof that "the best of current television" is superior to the finest productions turned out by Hollywood.

The Daily Worker and its West Coast counterpart, the Daily People's World, joined in the hallelujahs. Two party writers, DAVID PLATT and MILTON HOWARD, turned out articles for the CP press praising the MURROW program.

MURROW's recent "See It Now" program on Sen McCARTHY offers examples of some of the devious techniques he uses to slant his presentations, while appearing to be very objective and fair. MURROW showed a hearing at which Sen McCARTHY asked a witness (REED HARRIS) these two questions:

"You know the Civil Liberties Union has been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?"...."Do you know they since have been listed as a front for and doing the work of the Communist Party?"

The Senator's statement about the ACLU was correct. But MURROW wanted to make the Senator look bad. How could he do this? Simple. Just change the Senator's words. MURROW commented:

"Twice he (McCARTHY) said the American Civil Liberties Union was listed as a subversive front."

This was a completely false statement. Sen McCARTHY had not once used the word "subversive". But that word connotes listing by the Dept of Justice...and the phony insertion of it by MURROW paved the way for his next sentence, which was designed to (and actually helped) discredit the Senator:

"The Attorney General's list does not and has never listed the ACLU as subversive nor does the FBI or any government agency."

A neat implication that Sen McCARTHY had lied...by the use of a MURROW lie. The Truth: The ACLU was described as a Communist front in House Report #2290 of the 71st Congress, published in 1931...a year before the ACLU provided defense counsel for REED HARRIS. It was also listed as a front in Massachusetts House Report #2100 (1938), NY State Legislative Report #90 (1939) and in the 1943 and 1948 California Committee reports (on which Sen McCARTHY based his statements). CP leader EARL BROWDER testified in 1939 that the ACLU was a "transmission belt" of the Communist Party.

MURROW deplores "guilt by association". But he used "innocence by association" to try to explain away the fact that he was on the Advisory Council of the Moscow State University for its 1935 summer session and urged students to go there. A Pittsburgh newspaper on Feb 18, 1935, said the university taught "the violent overthrow of the entire traditional social order".

MURROW's reply: He was only one of twenty-five members of the Advisory Council of the Moscow State University summer session that year and most of the others were "distinguished" people. He then named some of them, using their "innocence" to prove his own.

MURROW failed to state that a number of well known fellow travelers were also on the advisory council. Also: He added that some of these persons "are now dead but presumably not yet immune from the Senator's attentions".

MUTUAL NETWORK

FULTON LEWIS, JR.

Thursday, March 11, 1954
7:00-7:15 P.M.

LEWIS: Good evening, ladies and gentlemen. This is Fulton Lewis, Jr., speaking from the Mutual studios in Washington, D. C. I'll have the news in just a moment.

(C O M M E R C I A L)

And now, here is your Washington correspondent, Fulton Lewis, Jr.

LEWIS: As promised tonite, ladies and gentlemen, I have Senator Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin here in the studios with me. It so happens that he is appearing on my coast-to-coast television program this week end also, about his committee's new investigation of scandals in Alaska. Now, on this broadcast, however, we want to get Senator McCarthy's side of several attacks that have been made against him in the last week or so. And, to begin with, Senator, I'd like to ask you whether you have any general comments to say about Governor Stevenson's speech in Miami last Saturday nite.

MC CARTHY: Fulton, I listened to Adlai's speech from Miami. As I listened to it, I was carried back about twenty-five years, to some days I spent back on the farm. We lived across the road from an old gentleman; he was a bacheler, he was very aged. As he grew older, he became ill; finally he went to the hospital. When he went to the hospital, my older brother, Bill, had to go over and take care of the cattle and the hogs. He had a very sizeable herd of both. When he got there he found that Wynne Stuffle (?) hadn't cleaned out the barn for a couple of years. He called me over to help him. I went over. It was the most awful mess, Fulton, I've ever found up to the time I came to Washington. Well, Bill and I argued a bit about how we could best do the job, whether you should use a wheel barrow, whether we should get a team of horses, whether we string a cable, how we could clean out that tremendous mess we found there. Now, as I listened to Adlai I thought that if Stevenson were standing back there watching us, he would feel that because we couldn't agree on the best way to clean out the mess, that there was nothing in the barn, it was perfectly clean.

LEWIS: Now, out of ... He said, specifically mentioning you, that out of more than two million Federal employes, only one alleged active Communist has been found. What is your comment on that?

MC CARTHY: Well, that, of course, is strictly untrue - and either Adlai knew that or should know it, that it was untrue. Just take for example ... Now, we can't give you a list of all of them. Just take those that were exposed before our committee and Communists gotten rid of by the Eisenhower Administration. There was a Fifth Amendment Communist from the Government Printing Office, who's been there for twenty years, despite ~~fxm~~ some forty FBI reports labelling him very clearly. He was named as a Communist before the committee; he was given the right to come before our committee and tell us whether or not he was a Communist, tell us whether or not he was an espionage agent. He refused, invoking the privilege against self-incrimination; he was promptly gotten rid of by Mr. Blattenberg (?), who is Mr. Eisenhower's appointee to the Government Printing Office. I think I mentioned that Rothchild had access to secret material from almost every agency in the Government. That's one. Then, No. 2 -- let's see, running down the line, there's a person (?) named Powell in the Army, named as a Communist, named as a secretary for one of the top Communists in the country. Powell was before the committee, finally admitted receiving a card in the Communist party. The Army got rid of her very quickly, the minute she was exposed. Then there's another individual by the name of Levine, who has been handling not merely confidential and secret material but top-secret material. Levine was called before the committee on the 13th of December last, refused to tell whether or not she had been giving secret material -- she was handling top-secret material -- to people known as espionage agents. She was gotten rid of. Now, we could go down the line, Fulton, indefinitely, but here are three. I think that shows how false Mr. Stevenson's statements were.

LEWIS: And there are others, you say.

MC CARTHY: Oh, a long list.

LEWIS: Now, he also said (and I quote): "Some of these orators even suggested that they ... that these subversives, spies// and so forth, had been planted in the Government." What would your comment be to that statement by Governor Stevenson?

MC CARTHY: I think, rather than to answer him in my own words, Fulton, if you don't mind, I would like to read one short paragraph from the presentment of the grand jury. The grand jury was investigating Communist activities in the U.N. Of necessity, the investigation included the same Communists before they got to the U.N. May I read this paragraph, Fulton?

LEWIS: Yes.

MC CARTHY: Now, they're talking about the Communists in the U.N. (I quote) "Almost without exception, these same subversive elements ...." no, "these same subversive employes with the U.N. were formerly employed in various departments of our own Federal Government. They were transferred from one Federal department to another, finally ending up in key positions in the United Nations." (still quoting) "The evidence shows that this is not coincidental but part of a definite planned pattern. It appears to result from the contrivance of highly-placed officials who have surrounded themselves in each Government agency and then in the U.N. with personnel who share their disloyal convictions." And if I may go back to this, Fulton, I again call your attention to the statement of the grand jury presentment: "The evidence shows that this is not coincidental but part of a definite planned pattern", in other words, the promotion of Communists in the Government.

LEWIS: All right, sir: Now, he also said of you, "A political party divided against itself, half-McCarthy, half-Eisenhower, cannot produce national unity or govern with confidence and purpose." What is your comment on that last one?

MC CARTHY: Well, Fulton, one of the critisisms I had of some of my friends in the Democrat Party over the past number of years was that they felt that they had to go along with their own Party regardless of what the Party stood for,regardless of whether it was good or bad. I don't think a nation can survive if our two great political Parties say we must have conformity, we must have unity above everything else. Now, I have disagreed with people in the Republican Party before, I will disagree with them again. I just sincerely hope that we never adopt the Trum ... Truman-Stevenson theory, that you must ... you must at all cost place Party above country, go along with your Party, even with making mistakes, and I think we should realize that no matter how good a Party is they can't bat ... cannot ... a thousand batting average. It's going to make mistakes from time to time.

LEWIS: Now, finally, Mr. Stevenson in effect accused you of making war against the Army.

McCARTHY: Completely false, again, of course, in line with the speech; as I've said time and time again, I think that 99% of the people in ourmilitary services are good, honest, loyal Americans. However, we have a disturbing situation, one that has been growing up for twenty years, Fulton, as you know, spurred on considerably by the order in 1944, an order which we have here incidentally, an order of McCloy, General McCloy, and which he signs ... it's an order signed, allowing the commissioning of Communists, and about the same time there's an order for the destruction of the files, as you know, on anyone who is alleged to be Communist, and what we are doing, - we are helping the Army to painfully dig out the Communists who were allowed to infiltrate during the past twenty years and keep in mind that the Army naturally is the prime target of the Communist Party. Let me make this clear, Fulton. This is no contest against the U. S. Army. I thinkwe've got a great Army, but there have been Communists in it. We've had them before our Committee in the last two weeks; we'll have them before our Committee again in the next couple of weeks, but that will not be ... should not be considered a battle against the Army.

LEWIS: Now, Mr. Edward R. Murrow, on another television network, made an attack on you, a half-hour attack, I believe it was, night before last. Would you care to comment on that attack by Mr. Murrow against you?

McCARTHY: If I may say, Fulton, that I have alittle difficulty answering the specific attacks that he made because I never listen to the extreme Left-wing bleeding-heart elements of radio or television. However, after you invited me to come over here and appear on your program, I checked into Mr. Murrow's background a bit and you'll note I have in my hand a copy of the "Pittsburgh Sun-Telegram." It's dated February 18, 1935, - the headline: "American advisors ... American advisors to Communist Propaganda School." You see there's reproduced the front of a booklet entitled "Moscow University Summer Session, then the National Advisory Council, Edward R. Murrow, Assistant Director, Institute of International Education." The story goes on to tell what the Moscow University taught, if I may quote from it, "the violent overthrow of the entire traditional social order. " This may explain why Edward R. Murrow, week after week, feels that he must smear McCarthy. Now, just what disturbs him ... disturbed him so much the other night I don't ... I don't know. Maybe he is worried about the fact that he having been on the National Advisory Council of Moscow University and having advised people to attend that school, which, according to this, teaches, again I quote, "the violent overthrow of the entire traditional social order," maybe Mr. Murrow was worried about the exposure of some of his friends, - I don't know.

LEWIS: Now, the American Civil Liberties Union, he said, he quoted you as having said something about the American Civil Liberties Union as ...,as being ... as having been listed as a subversive organization, and said that that was not so. Do you care to comment on that?

McCARTHY: Yes, I don't mind. I say that there are some individuals in the ACLU who are good Americans, but Murrow again was not telling the truth when he said it had not ... had not been listed. I have, as you see here, Fulton, the fourth report of the Un-American Activities Committee in California and I quote from Page 107, and this is a quotation in regard to the organization which Murrow said had not been listed ... quote: "The American Civil Liberties Union may be definitely classed as a Communist front or transmission belt organization. At least 90% of its efforts are expended on behalf of Communists who come into conflict with the law," so that again Mr. Murrow was not telling the truth.

LEWIS: Now, one ... we only have about a half-minute left here, Senator. Would you care to say anything about Senator Flanders' remarks about you on the floor yesterday?

McCARTHY: Well, Senator Flanders on the floor yesterday said that I was diverting attention from the danger of Communists abroad by calling attention to Communists at home. He said the danger was from within, not from without. I would like to in answer to that quote Abraham Lincoln, when he was asked where the danger would come, and I can't quote him verbatim but roughly here's what he said. He said all thearmies of Europe and Asia combined with a Bonaparte for a commander, with all the wealth of the world in their military chests, in a trial of a thousand years, could not make one track upon the Blue Ridge, could not take one drink from the Ohio. He said if this nation is ever destroyed it will be from within. I prefer to agree with Lincoln rather than Flanders.

LEWIS: Thank you, Senator Joseph R. McCarthy.

That's the top of the news as it looks from here.

Ed.trans.-E.Scheiner
A.A.Cardiff

(30)

72.2
WM

Dear Mr. Murrow:

If at any time it becomes important to you to establish that the Moscow Summer School was in fact discontinued during the summer of 1935, you may establish this through the Commissioner of Education of the State of New York (Albany, New York). The following is a decision made by the Commissioner in a case where this matter was at issue:

THE UNIVERSITY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK
THE STATE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION
Before the Commissioner of Education

In the Matter of the Appeal of HELEN F. BREGER from the acts of the Board of ~~Education~~ Examiners of the Board of Education of the City of New York, in refusing to grant her an extension of time to meet certain eligibility requirements.

In a notice of November, 1934, as revised on February 1, 1935, the board of examiners of the city of New York announced that an examination for a license to teach English would be conducted, from which an eligible list would be promulgated, and specified that all persons taking said examination must meet the necessary preliminary eligibility qualifications by Sept. 15, 1935. Helen F. Breger, the appellant herein, alleges that she needed certain additional hours of graduate study in order to meet these preliminary eligibility requirements. She states that after due inquiry she was assured that upon duly authenticated proof of the completion of certain courses which she proposed to take at the University of Moscow Summer School during the summer of 1935, she would receive credit necessary to meet them. Having received such assurance, appellant then proceeded during the summer of 1935 to the University of Moscow, but upon her arrival she was advised that the authorities of the University of Moscow Summer School had determined not to hold sessions of the said summer school and not to give any courses whatsoever. Such decision, she says, was made only a day or two before the arrival of the students scheduled to attend the said school.

Having in good faith proceeded to Moscow to meet the eligibility requirements, which she then found physically impossible to meet by September 15, 1935, she besought the board of examiners to give her further time to meet the requirements. This the board of examiners has refused to do and she now appeals to me from the board's refusal. .....Having fixed a deadline which all candidates must meet, it is my opinion that the board of examiners is without power to extend the deadline for individual cases. Any extension would need to be upon a broad basis and be applicable to all candidates affected.

THE APPEAL IS DISMISSED.
(Signed) Ernest E. Cole
Acting Commissioner, August 14, 1937.

This decision was published in the State Department Reports and is readily available for reference. The citation is 57 SDR 415 (Matter of Breger).

Sincerely yours,

Ruth A. Stevenson

Ruth Adlaide Stevenson

Cold Spring-on-Hudson
New York

ALEXANDER WILEY, WIS., CHAIRMAN
H. ALEXANDER SMITH, N. J.
BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER, IOWA
WILLIAM LANGER, N. DAK.
HOMER FERGUSON, MICH.
WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND, CALIF.
GEORGE D. AIKEN, VT.
HOMER E. CAPEHART, IND.
WALTER F. GEORGE, GA.
THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN, R. I.
J. W. FULBRIGHT, ARK.
JOHN J. SPARKMAN, ALA.
GUY M. GILLETTE, IOWA
HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, MINN.
MIKE MANSFIELD, MONT.

FRANCIS O. WILCOX, CHIEF OF STAFF
JULIUS N. CAHN, COUNSEL

United States Senate

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

April 10, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, New York

Dear Ed:

I enclose a copy of a communication which I have recently received.

The writer, who does not wish to be identified, is a former intelligence agent and presently a lawyer. He has two brothers who, he fears, may be subject to retaliation and therefore he has asked that his name not be used. I felt that you might find his approach of interest.

You have been doing a fine job and many of your friends are applauding you.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

J. W. Fulbright

JWF:ve

Encl.

Internal Security Committee
Senate of the United States
Senate Office Building
Washington, D. C.

Gentlemen:

Knowing that in these times the source of any request is of especial importance, I shall preface mine by a brief description of myself. I am an ordinary citizen, an attorney occupying a responsible position, with no extreme political leanings or associations, past or present. In 1941 I became, and for some years thereafter was, a special agent of the Counter Intelligence Corps of the United States Army and was cleared for the handling of top secret information. During that time I investigated, among other things, Communist infiltration of the Army.

I have this to say about Communism: Although the communist apparatus is complex and vigilance is necessary, I do not believe that the American people, now alert and generally hostile to Communism, are likely to be overcome by espionage or subversion from a foreign source which is looked upon as unfriendly. I believe the responsible executive departments, with ordinary attention from the Congress, are competent to deal with that menace at the present time. In my view, it was at the time that the American political climate veered sharply to the left, that serious Communist penetration was most likely to (and in fact did) occur.

It seems to me that subversion of the ideals, institutions, way of life and ultimately the constitution of the United States, is more likely to occur from a source less suspect by the mass of the people. I wish to suggest that such a source may possibly exist. Consequently I respectfully request that the Internal Security Committee of the Senate make a study, investigation and report for the purpose of exposing a possible resemblance between the pattern of recent spectacular political events and the means employed in recent times to subvert the governments of other countries.

The pattern which I find outlined in recent events (with certain of my own comments) is set forth below. So far as my recollection goes, it resembles the pattern of developments which subverted other governments, but my recollection may be at fault, in which case your study will so disclose.

1. Exaggeration of the danger of internal communism, employing distortion for that purpose. Reference is made to a recent television broadcast of Edward R. Murrow for instances of this.

2. Brutalizing and coarsening of the public mind by employment of tactics violating accepted standards of decency and fair play, relying on the fear created to gain their acceptance or partial acceptance and creating an atmosphere favorable to more extreme activities. In this connection, physical brutality cannot yet be expected and may not be required: verbal "roughing up" of witnesses, ruining of reputations by unproved assertions, and similar actions may suffice.

3. Substantial paralysis of the government by spectacular charges and accusations, requiring that much time be devoted by officials to defense against them and resulting in those in responsible positions being unable to act with necessary freedom.

In this connection, it should be noted that shifts or suggested shifts of target may be used to spread the paralysis.

4. Defense against the reaction:

a) The above operation being carried on under the guise of patriotism, criticism, particularly strong criticism, tends to become socially unacceptable except among known liberals and intellectuals, toward whom increasing public distrust is created. "Extreme left wing", "bleeding heart", and similar labels assist in this and are extended to include critics not ordinarily so characterized.

b) The social difficulty of criticism is increased by the operator's assumption of the role of martyr. Phrases such as the following could be effective: "Those of us who are engaged in this very unpleasant business of weeding out communists . . ."

5. Exploitation of the Reaction.

The employment of tactics Nos. 1 and 2 produces an adverse reaction from a portion of the public. However, the fear and coarsening of the public mind which has been brought about permit assumption of a slightly more extreme position in the making of subsequent assaults and revelations and the public protests and attempts of officials to defend themselves create additional targets.

In this connection, it may be noted that a more serious charge such as "blackmail" may, in the minds of the inattentive, seem an additional justification for the previous charges. Furthermore, the havoc wrought in the executive departments reduces efficiency and thus creates more occasions for spectacular accusations.

The ability to assume a more advanced position with each move, as explained above, allows repetition of tactics 1,2,3 and 4 and thus produces a chain reaction, designed to create mass hysteria or something approaching mass hysteria, leading to solidarity in support of the operator as leader in a police sta te.

6. Throughout, the operator employs means calculated to implant in the public mind the idea that he is the only one really capable of handling the mess which he claims to have uncovered but really has created.

Belittling of men in high office may help attain this end. Phrases such as "stupid, arrogant and witless" or "abject surrender" might assist in attaining this end. Comments such as that which I heard and believe was on Fulton Lewis' program, substantially as follows, would help: "If anyone except me comes near to being the indispensible man, it is Roy Cohn."

7. Reliance upon overconfidence of the public:

Overconfidence that the operator has "honorable intentions" develops for three reasons:

a) The public fear and disquiet is diverted to communism, unsatisfactory government etc., This is the more easily accomplished because the activities of the operator do not parallel in detail those which took place in other countries where conditions were different - the resemblance is in principles of operation.

b) It is difficult to believe that the many who frequently acts genial and expresses lofty motives, is really bent on subverting the traditions and even the form of government of the country.

This reason for trust is invalid because:

(1) A man who follows such a course thereby demonstrates his lack of trustworthyness, and (2) even assuming his motives to be what they propose to, he could not stop the chain reaction mentioned in "5", above, without discrediting himself.

c) Ordinary people are confident that they would not tolerate anything like Fascism. This reason for confidence is unwarranted because the people themselves will change after sufficient exposure to tactics 1 through 6, above, including the intensification of the struggle accompanying the chain reaction mentioned in 5. The case of Colonel Schwable has demonstrated that Americans are not immune to psychological pressure.

Naturally, all of the foregoing operations are interrelated and may to a large extent take place simultaneously.

I am fully cognizant of the fact that I risk being characterized as a "Screwball" for writing this. I assume that risk willingly, as many ordinary people thought one was a "screwball" for concerning oneself about Communism when Russia was our ally and the political trend was in the other direction.

In view of all of the above, I respectfully reiterate my request for a full investigation study and report, to be conducted, presumably by your committee, and the results thereof made public. Your committee could, conceivably and perhaps most effectively, commence such study by assuming jurisdiction of the current or proposed investigation by the Subcommittee on Investigations of its own operations, such report to determine the precise pattern of recent events you determine to be relevant as related to Fascist subversion in other countries.

In conclusion I suggest to you that the present position of the United States as one of two major antagonists in a continuing global cold war is novel and the extent to which the psychological effects thereof are open to subversive political exploitation can only be surmised; moreover, there is no certain guarantee against a recession, which could alter conditions so as to make them more open to exploitation. The techniques and mechanics of the Fascist ride to power, threatening the catastrophic consequences which they do, have no more place in American political life than does the apparatus of the Communist Party, and both should be fully exposed.

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

PERSONAL

to: Messrs. Paley and Stanton

from: Edward R. Murrow

March 30, 1954

This is the final paragraph from a letter received yesterday from Chief Justice Earl Warren.

Filed under Warren

"I am sure I need not say that I have been enjoying your recent telecasts, but I certainly have."

E.R.M.

rh

565

5-C-5

McCarthyism - Related Materials

MUTUAL NETWORK

FULTON LEWIS, JR.

Thursday, March 11, 1954
7:00-7:15 P.M.

LEWIS: Good evening, ladies and gentlemen. This is Fulton Lewis, Jr., speaking from the Mutual studios in Washington, D. C. I'll have the news in just a moment.

(C O M M E R C I A L)

And now, here is your Washington correspondent, Fulton Lewis, Jr.

LEWIS: As promised tonite, ladies and gentlemen, I have Senator Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin here in the studios with me. It so happens that he is appearing on my coast-to-coast television program this week end also, about his committee's new investigation of scandals in Alaska. Now, on this broadcast, however, we want to get Senator McCarthy's side of several attacks that have been made against him in the last week or so. And, to begin with, Senator, I'd like to ask you whether you have any general comments to say about Governor Stevenson's speech in Miami last Saturday nite.

MC CARTHY: Fulton, I listened to Adlai's speech from Miami. As I listened to it, I was carried back about twenty-five years, to some days I spent back on the farm. We lived across the road from an old gentleman; he was a bachelor, he was very aged. As he grew older, he became ill; finally he went to the hospital. When he went to the hospital, my older brother, Bill, had to go over and take care of the cattle and the hogs. He had a very sizeable herd of both. When he got there he found that Wynne Stuffle (?) hadn't cleaned out the barn for a couple of years. He called me over to help him. I went over. It was the most awful mess, Fulton, I've ever found up to the time I came to Washington. Well, Bill and I argued a bit about how we could best do the job, whether you should use a wheel barrow, whether we should get a team of horses, whether we string a cable, how we could clean out that tremendous mess we found there. Now, as I listened to Adlai I thought that if Stevenson were standing back there watching us, he would feel that because we couldn't agree on the best way to clean out the mess, that there was nothing in the barn, it was perfectly clean.

LEWIS: Now, out of ... He said, specifically mentioning you, that out of more than two million Federal employes, only one alleged active Communist has been found. What is your comment on that?

MC CARTHY: Well, that, of course, is strictly untrue - and either Adlai knew that or should know it, that it was untrue. Just take for example ... Now, we can't give you a list of all of them. Just take those that were exposed before our committee and Communists gotten rid of by the Eisenhower Administration. There was a Fifth Amendment Communist from the Government Printing Office, who's been there for twenty years, despite ~~fmm~~ some forty FBI reports labelling him very clearly. He was named as a Communist before the committee; he was given the right to come before our committee and tell us whether or not he was a Communist, tell us whether or not he was an espionage agent. He refused, invoking the privilege against self-incrimination; he was promptly gotten rid of by Mr. Blattenberg (?), who is Mr. Eisenhower's appointee to the Government Printing Office. I think I mentioned that Rothchild had access to secret material from almost every agency in the Government. That's one. Then, No. 2 -- let's see, running down the line, there's a person (?) named Powell in the Army, named as a Communist, named as a secretary for one of the top Communists in the country. Powell was before the committee, finally admitted receiving a card in the Communist party. The Army got rid of her very quickly, the minute she was exposed. Then there's another individual by the name of Levine, who has been handling not merely confidential and secret material but top-secret material. Levine was called before the committee on the 13th of December last, refused to tell whether or not she had been giving secret material -- she was handling top-secret material -- to people known as espionage agents. She was gotten rid of. Now, we could go down the line, Fulton, indefinitely, but here are three. I think that shows how false Mr. Stevenson's statements were.

LEWIS: And there are others, you say.

MC CARTHY: Oh, a long list.

LEWIS: Now, he also said (and I quote): "Some of these orators even suggested that they ... that these subversives, spies// and so forth, had been planted in the Government." What would your comment be to that statement by Governor Stevenson?

MC CARTHY: I think, rather than to answer him in my own words, Fulton, if you don't mind, I would like to read one short paragraph from the presentment of the grand jury. The grand jury was investigating Communist activities in the U.N. Of necessity, the investigation included the same Communists before they got to the U.N. May I read this paragraph, Fulton?

LEWIS: Yes.

MC CARTHY: Now, they're talking about the Communists in the U.N. (I quote) "Almost without exception, these same subversive elements ...." no, "these same subversive employes with the U.N. were formerly employed in various departments of our own Federal Government. They were transferred from one Federal department to another, finally ending up in key positions in the United Nations." (still quoting) "The evidence shows that this is not coincidental but part of a definite planned pattern. It appears to result from the contrivance of highly-placed officials who have surrounded themselves in each Government agency and then in the U.N. with personnel who share their disloyal convictions." And if I may go back to this, Fulton, I again call your attention to the statement of the grand jury presentment: "The evidence shows that this is not coincidental but part of a definite planned pattern", in other words, the promotion of Communists in the Government.

LEWIS: All right, sir: Now, he also said of you, "A political party divided against itself, half-McCarthy, half-Eisenhower, cannot produce national unity or govern with confidence and purpose." What is your comment on that last one?

MC CARTHY: Well, Fulton, one of the criticisms I had of some of my friends in the Democrat Party over the past number of years was that they felt that they had to go along with their own Party regardless of what the Party stood for,regardless of whether it was good or bad. I don't think a nation can survive if our two great political Parties say we must have conformity, we must have unity above everything else. Now, I have disagreed with people in the Republican Party before, I will disagree with them again. I just sincerely hope that we never adopt the Trum ... Truman-Stevenson theory, that you must ... you must at all cost place Party above country, go along with your Party, even with making mistakes, and I think we should realize that no matter how good a Party is they can't bat ... cannot ... a thousand batting average. It's going to make mistakes from time to time.

LEWIS: Now, finally, Mr. Stevenson in effect accused you of making war against the Army.

McCARTHY: Completely false, again, of course, in line with the speech; as I've said time and time again, I think that 99% of the people in ourmilitary services are good, honest, loyal Americans. However, we have a disturbing situation, one that has been growing up for twenty years, Fulton, as you know, spurred on considerably by the order in 1944, an order which we have here incidentally, an order of McCloy, General McCloy, and which he signs ... it's an order signed, allowing the commissioning of Communists, and about the same time there's an order for the destruction of the files, as you know, on anyone who is alleged to be Communist, and what we are doing, - we are helping the Army to painfully dig out the Communists who were allowed to infiltrate during the past twenty years and keep in mind that the Army naturally is the prime target of the Communist Party. Let me make this clear, Fulton. This is no contest against the U. S. Army. I thinkwe've got a great Army, but there have been Communists in it. We've had them before our Committee in the last two weeks; we'll have them before our Committee again in the next couple of weeks, but that will not be ... should not be considered a battle against the Army.

LEWIS: Now, Mr. Edward R. Murrow, on another television network, made an attack on you, a half-hour attack, I believe it was, night before last. Would you care to comment on that attack by Mr. Murrow against you?

McCARTHY: If I may say, Fulton, that I have alittle difficulty answering the specific attacks that he made because I never listen to the extreme Left-wing bleeding-heart elements of radio or television. However, after you invited me to come over here and appear on your program, I checked into Mr. Murrow's background a bit and you'll note I have in my hand a copy of the "Pittsburgh Sun-Telegram." It's dated February 18, 1935, - the headline: "American advisors ... American advisors, to Communist Propaganda School." You see there's reproduced the front of a booklet entitled "Moscow University Summer Session, then the National Advisory Council, Edward R. Murrow, Assistant Director, Institute of International Education." The story goes on to tell what the Moscow University taught, if I may quote from it, "the violent overthrow of the entire traditional social order. " This may explain why Edward R. Murrow, week after week, feels that he must smear McCarthy. Now, just what disturbs him ... disturbed him so much the other night I don't ... I don't know. Maybe he is worried about the fact that he having been on the National Advisory Council of Moscow University and having advised people to attend that school, which, according to this, teaches, again I quote, "the violent overthrow of the entire traditional social order," maybe Mr. Murrow was worried about the exposure of some of his friends, - I don't know.

LEWIS: Now, the American Civil Liberties Union, he said, he quoted you as having said something about the American Civil Liberties Union as ...,as being ... as having been listed as a subversive organization, and said that that was not so. Do you care to comment on that?

McCARTHY: Yes, I don't mind. I say that there are some individuals in the ACLU who are good Americans, but Murrow again was not telling the truth when he said it had not ... had not been listed. I have, as you see here, Fulton, the fourth report of the Un-American Activities Committee in California and I quote from Page 107, and this is a quotation in regard to the organization which Murrow said had not been listed ... quote: "The American Civil Liberties Union may be definitely classed as a Communist front or transmission belt organization. At least 90% of its efforts are expended on behalf of Communists who come into conflict with the law," so that again Mr. Murrow was not telling the truth.

LEWIS: Now, one ... we only have about a half-minute left here, Senator, Would you care to say anything about Senator Flanders' remarks about you on the floor yesterday?

McCARTHY: Well, Senator Flanders on the floor yesterday said that I was diverting attention from the danger of Communists abroad by calling attention to Communists at home. He said the danger was from within, not from without. I would like to in answer to that quote Abraham Lincoln, when he was asked where the danger would come, and I can't quote him verbatim but roughly here's what he said. He said all thearmies of Europe and Asia combined with a Bonaparte for a commander, with all the wealth of the world in their military chests, in a trial of a thousand years, could not make one track upon the Blue Ridge, could not take one drink from the Ohio. He said if this nation is ever destroyed it will be from within. I prefer to agree with Lincoln xxx rather than Flanders.

LEWIS: Thank you, Senator Joseph R. McCarthy.

That's the top of the news as it looks from here.

Ed.trans.-E.Scheiner
A.A.Cardiff

(30)

August 16, 1954

Dear Mr. Shute:

I thought this might interest you or soil your files.

Sincerely yours,

Jesse Zousmer

Mr. Ben Shute
Cravath, Swaine & Moore
15 Broad Street
New York 5, New York

Article from fan press
Chicago re Jews at CBS &
Joe Cathy

THE MURROW-McCARTHY DEBATE

EDWARD R. MURROW
CBS Commentator

FREEDOM HOUSE

presents

A DOCUMENTARY FILM

FROM THE TV RECORD

16 mm.—45 Minutes

★

Commentary by

Father George B. Ford

Dr. Harry D. Gideonse

JOSEPH R. McCARTHY
Senator from Wisconsin

EVERYBODY IS TALKING ABOUT THE CLASH BETWEEN MURROW AND McCARTHY BUT MANY MISSED ONE OR ALL OF THE TV PROGRAMS FEATURING THIS CONTROVERSY.

Americans Want to See the Complete Film Record and Discuss the Issues.

★

YOUR ORGANIZATION

Can Now Present A Documentary Film Summary Of This Debate Containing:

1. Important sequences from the original CBS-TV Program SEE IT NOW of March 9, 1954—Murrow's first report on McCarthy.
2. Excerpts from the Annie Lee Moss hearings before the McCarthy Committee as shown on SEE IT NOW, March 16, 1954.
3. Senator McCarthy's charges against Murrow as shown on SEE IT NOW, April 6, 1954.
4. Mr. Murrow's reply including highlights from an address by Bishop Sheil, SEE IT NOW, April 13, 1954.

This film is released as a public service by Freedom House, 20 West 40th Street, New York 18, N. Y.

The use of this film is subject to the following restrictions: The use must be non-commercial and not before an audience which is charged an admission fee. There must be no broadcast via radio or television facilities.

Prints shall not be made available to any organization listed by the U. S. Attorney General as subversive.

A Message from President Eisenhower . . . Not an Endorsement of this Film:

"Freedom House is a symbol of an effective force for liberty. It has repeatedly demonstrated its awareness of the axiom that the price of freedom for the individual—even in our republican form of government—is eternal vigilance." (Nov. 5, 1953)—Dwight D. Eisenhower

Prints may be Purchased or Rented from

Purchase Price $85.00
Rental Fee $7.50 per day

ASSOCIATION FILMS, INC.

RIDGEFIELD, N. J.
(Broad at Elm)
CHICAGO
(79 E. Adams Street)

SAN FRANCISCO
(351 Turk Street)
DALLAS
(1108 Jackson Street)

THE ABBEY belongs to everyone; especially to every member of the English-speaking world and to all who share our ideals and reverence our heritage.

The American Fund for Westminster Abbey

19 EAST 54th STREET, NEW YORK 22, N. Y. • MURRAY HILL 8-9300

HON. WINTHROP W. ALDRICH
Honorary Chairman

HON. JOHN W. DAVIS
HON. LEWIS W. DOUGLAS
HON. WALTER S. GIFFORD
HON. W. AVERELL HARRIMAN
Honorary Vice-Chairmen

MORRIS L. ERNST
WILLIAM V. GRIFFIN
LANGDON P. MARVIN
Co-Chairmen

April 8, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Ed:

I have a few minutes at the Fund office and I hasten to write one suggestion about meeting McCarthy's program. I wonder if you could brush aside the single point that he made—that if you are against McCarthy you are a Communist—and then develop your own new sound approach for handling domestic Communism. On this I might be of some help and in confidence I can tell you of a conversation which I had with the President's staff before his recent speech in the hope that he would outline a sound, aggresive program for handling American Communism. Maybe the best way to beat McCarthy's horse is to put your own horse in the race!

I am off to England Friday and if you want me before then, give me a ring.

Yours,

Morris L. Ernst

TRANSPORTATION CONSULTANTS INC.

Consulting Engineers

SUITE 617 STONELEIGH COURT
1025 CONNECTICUT AVE. N. W.
WASHINGTON 6. D. C.

Washington --- 7 June 1954

315 NEAL AVENUE
•
DAYTON 5. OHIO

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, N. Y.

Dear Brother:

I am sending on the attached clipping from the Saturday "News" in case it has not already reached your attention.

Like always,

Lacy -

Attachment

Washington Daily News
Sat. June 6, 1954

Carlos Garcia Takes on McCarthy

He Speaks Out in Sign Language

"Newspapers aren't enough. Private individuals and businessmen have to speak out about Sen. McCarthy. Then the public will be able to see thru him and find out what kind of a guy he really is."

Grocer Carlos Garcia, speaking out in a semi-artistic manner with signs in his store window, was watching the Army-McCarthy hearings on TV. His store at 1828 Columbia Road nw is probably the only grocery in town offering television.

Mr. Garcia has a weakness for signs. In February his signs chided the Administration for the high price of coffee. His present feature is a drawing, which he traced, showing a matador named Murrow and a bull with a face strongly resembling the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

Above the drawing is a slogan, "I Am the Law" with Joe McCarthy's name under it.

"I've found that about 95 per cent of the people agree with me. Of course I've had a few phone calls from people who call me a commie and tell me they will report me to Sen. McCarthy. I told them to go ahead. They can investigate me any darn time they want to," he said.

His business hasn't been affected by his strong stand against what he terms "a fellow who wants to be a one-man government." He says he things more merchants would like to speak out but "they are afraid of losing business."

He said he doesn't think anything should be done about Sen. McCarthy.

"Nothing. Absolutely nothing. Let him keep talking. Pretty soon everyone will catch on to him and he'll be thru," he said.

"But one thing I'd like to find out that I haven't seen written anywhere. I'd like to find out what kind of a life McCarthy had as a child. What he did and how he was treated. I think if we know that we could find the whole answer to the way he acts and thinks."

Carlos Garcia and his signs.

HOYT A. MOORE
DOUGLAS M. MOFFAT
CARL W. PAINTER
LEONARD D. ADKINS
MAURICE T. MOORE
DONALD C. SWATLAND
BRUCE BROMLEY
ROSWELL MAGILL
A. I. HENDERSON
Wm DWIGHT WHITNEY
ALFRED McCORMACK
CARLYLE E. MAW
EDWARD S. PINNEY
ROSWELL L. GILPATRIC
THOMAS A. HALLERAN
ALBERT R. CONNELLY
L. R. BRESLIN, JR.
BENJAMIN R. SHUTE
GEORGE B. TURNER
FRANK H. DETWEILER
GEORGE G. TYLER
JOHN H. MORSE
HAROLD R. MEDINA, JR.
FREDERICK S. BEEBE
CHARLES R. LINTON
WILLIAM B. MARSHALL
RALPH L. McAFEE
ROYALL VICTOR, JR.
JOHN N. CALDERWOOD

CRAVATH, SWAINE & MOORE
15 BROAD STREET
NEW YORK 5

TELEPHONE
HANOVER 2-3000

CABLE ADDRESS: CRAVATH, N.Y.

NEW YORK

June 2, 1954

Dear Miss McDonough:

Mr. Shute passed on to me your note of May 27 with the scripts which you enclosed. I return them herewith, having retained ozalid copies of the April 13, 1954, Oppenheimer and October 27, 1947, programs. The December 21, 1948, Hollywood Ten program is already in our files. The fourth item of L. Duggan enclosure, a note from Dixie Love Dean to Mr. Murrow, to which is attached two typewritten sheets captioned "World Passport", do not ring any bell with me. Unless they were enclosed in error, perhaps you will let me know what significance in them may have eluded me.

Sincerely yours,

Edward Kirkland

Miss Dorothy McDonough,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Encls.

35

NP001 ZLA004 INTL PRESS

ZL TD LONDON VIA WU 58 13 1018A

COLUMBIA

NYK

CHURCH FOR MURROW LATEST SIN RESHOWN BBC LAST NIGHT WITH GREAT EFFECT STOP COOKE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN TODAY WRITES ON MCCARTHY CASE GENERALLY QUOTE IT MAY BE THAT SPARKS WHICH SET OFF
FIERY AND SO RIGHTEOUS EXPLOSION OF POPULAR INDIGNATION WAS LAID WITH DELIBERATE COURAGE BY MURROW ASTERISKS
MURROW MAY YET MAKE BRAVERY FASHIONABLE UNQUOTE REGARDS

SMITH.

UPWA33

NIGHT

1ST LEAD FOUNDATIONS

BY VINCENT J. BURKE

UNITED PRESS STAFF CORRESPONDENT

WASHINGTON, MAY 25.--(UP)--REP. WAYNE L. HAYS ACCUSED A COMMITTEE WITNESS TODAY OF "MALIGNING" COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW WITH "THE SAME OLD TRIPE" THAT SEN. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY HAD USED IN A TELEVISION EXCHANGE WITH MURROW.

THE OHIO DEMOCRAT VIGOROUSLY OBJECTED WHEN AARON M. SARGENT, A SAN FRANCISCO ATTORNEY, NAMED MURROW AND SEVERAL PROMINENT EDUCATORS IN A LIST OF 25 PERSONS ALLEGEDLY CONNECTED WITH PLANS FOR A 1935 SUMMER SESSION AT MOSCOW UNIVERSITY.

SARGENT APPEARED BEFORE A SPECIAL HOUSE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING TAX-EXEMPT FOUNDATIONS. EARLIER, HAYS HAD LOST A FIGHT TO HAVE THE COMMITTEE SCREEN THE TESTIMONY IN CLOSED MEETINGS TO PREVENT PUBLIC "NAME-DROPPING."

HAYS, WHO WALKED OUT OF THE HEARING DURING SARGENT'S TESTIMONY MONDAY, ACCUSED THE WITNESS OF TRYING TO PICTURE MURROW AND THE EDUCATORS AS "COMMUNIST SYMPATHIZERS."

HE SAID MURROW HAD REPUDIATED THE CHARGE WHEN MCCARTHY MADE IT. HE DEMANDED ANEW THAT THE COMMITTEE STOP WHAT HE CALLED "CHARACTER ASSASSINATION BY INFERENCE."

MOREJR508P

UPWA34

ADD 1ST LEAD FOUNDATIONS WASHINGTON XXX BY INFERENCE."

BESIDES MURROW, SARGENT LISTED SUCH NAMES AS JOHN DEWEY, COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PHILOSOPHY PROFESSOR; FRANK P. GRAHAM, THEN PRESIDENT OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA, AND ROBERT M. HUTCHINS, THEN PRESIDENT OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO.

HAYS SAID AN "OBSCURE PERSON" LIKE SARGENT OUGHT NOT TO BE ALLOWED TO APPEAR BEFORE A COMMITTEE AND "MALIGN PEOPLE LIKE THIS."

IN AN EARLIER NOSE-TO-NOSE HARANGUE WITH CHAIRMAN B. CARROLL REECE (R-TENN.), HAYS SHOUTED THAT HE HAD BEEN "DOUBLE-CROSSED" AND CHALLENGED REECE TO MAKE HIM KEEP QUIET.

(PICKUP 3RD PGH: THE HAYS-REECE, ETC.)

JR510P..

UP66

URGENT

May 14, 1954

Dear Mr. Durham:

I have your telegram of May 13 and suggest that perhaps you have confused my associate, Fred W. Friendly, with Alfred W. Friendly of the WASHINGTON POST who was mentioned by Mr. Adams in the hearings yesterday.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Edward L. Durham
2701 Avenue N
Brooklyn 17, New York

dm

RECEIVED

1954 MAY 13 PM 8:56

C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU 045 PD

BROOKLYN NY 13 625P

EDWARD R MURROW

CBS

PLEASE EXPLAIN SOMETIME SOON HOW FRED W FRIENDLY INITIALLY RECEIVED DEROGATORY REPORTS ANENT MCCARTHY AND HIS STAFF. YOU OWE THIS IN JUSTICE TO A HERETOFORE ADMIRING CONSTITUTENT

EDWARD L DURHAM 2701 AVENUE N BROOKLYN 17 NY

700P

TN

RECEIVED
MAY 13 PM 8.56
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU 046 PD

BROOKLYN NY 13 637P

EDWIN R MURROW

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING CO

RE ARMY MCCARTHY HEARING EVIDENCE TODAY
EXPLAIN FRIENDLY MURROW TIE-UP AGAINST MCCARTHY AND COMMUNISTS

E L DURHAM 2701 AVENUE N BROOKLYN 17 NEW YORK

711P

Mr. Mr. FYI

FACTS about BLACKLIST

Number 2
MAY, 1954

EDITORS: WALTER BERNSTEIN • SAM MOORE

This is the second issue of FACTS ABOUT BLACKLIST. In the year and a half since the first issue, the blacklist in entertainment has increased in scope and virulence. At the same time, its aims have been more completely exposed.

Ostensibly, the blacklist seeks only to banish from the air those artists whom certain self-appointed patriots consider "subversive."

Actually – and inevitably – its aims go far beyond this simple goal. They are:

To suppress, through intimidation, any opinion or organization opposed in any way to those who blacklist;

And, ultimately, to control mass communications in the interest of that combination of venality and vicious ignorance called McCarthyism.

These twin aims of the blacklist have been increasingly successful. In particular, the giant radio and television networks have beat a steady and degrading retreat – not before an aroused American public favoring these aims, but before a handful of small-minded, profit-seeking bigots who represent no one but themselves.

But this success has also been met with a growing opposition, most recently expressed by the forthright and courageous television program, "See It Now," produced over the Columbia Broadcasting System by Edward R. Murrow and Fred W. Friendly.

This program articulated a vast American disgust with the performance of Senator Joseph McCarthy. The public response was overwhelmingly favorable, expressed in a deluge of telephone calls, letters and telegrams unprecedented in CBS history.

And yet, in direct contradiction to what this program meant, the Columbia Broadcasting System, of which Mr. Murrow is a vice-president, maintains the most rigid blacklist in the entertainment industry, under the personal supervision of another vice-president, Daniel O'Shea.

If the effect of this blacklist were only, as the blacklisters claim, to keep a few hundred actors, writers and directors out of work, then it would be of small importance to the country. But the effect is actually to paralyze any concerted action through radio and television against the sweeping evil of McCarthyism.

So long as CBS maintains a blacklist, the example of "See It Now" must be an isolated one, important but insufficient. It is not possible to fight evil with one hand, while helping it with another. Nor is it possible to appease McCarthyism by pointing to a blacklist as an example of proper anti-Communism. What McCarthyism represents – the extolling of indecency above reason – cannot be appeased short of complete capitulation.

The networks are the custodians in the public interest of our most important channels of information. The public interest of our country requires a constant extension of democracy on every level. A network that uses a blacklist betrays this interest.

Men such as Murrow and Friendly must be supported for their attempts to serve the public interest. For the same reason, the blacklist must be exposed as an instrument designed to harm the public interest by strangling such an expression as Murrow's.

Once the blacklist is exposed, it can be defeated. Once defeated, an overdue victory has been won for decency and freedom.

Who runs the blacklist?

The blacklist in the entertainment industry does not flow from a single source. It is the promotion of a handful of individuals and organizations, acting separately, together or even competitively. Their success is possible only in a national climate of fear and suspicion.

Their power lies in the ability to perform two functions: they can blacklist and they can "clear."

For example: Counterattack is a fortnightly paper published by American Business Consultants of New York City. It claims to tell "the facts" about Communism, particularly in the entertainment and literary fields.

Most of Counterattack's four pages are devoted to the names of alleged Communists or "fronters," with listings of their "subversive" activity. Occasionally, Counterattack will also discuss the philosophical aspects of subversion. For example: When Corliss Lamont complained that his book, "Soviet Civilization," had been burned on the streets of Chicago by hoodlums who had broken into a rally of the Chicago Council of Soviet-American Friendship, Counterattack took the opportunity to give its views on book-burning in general.

After stating that "burning his book did not cancel out his freedom of opinion," Counterattack went on to warn its readers not to fall for the line that anyone who burns a book is necessarily demonstrating his fear of the contents. After all, the paper asked, what is to be done with those books found to be "subversive?" The ideal solution would be to sell or give them away for pulp to anti-Communist publishers or governments. But failing that, says Counterattack, the simplest and most practical thing to do is burn them.

This attitude is matched by the list of people and organizations attacked in recent years by Counterattack, for aiding the Communist cause.

They include, among many others of similar standing, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry Truman, Harold Stassen, Trygve Lie, Dean Acheson, General George C. Marshall, The New York Times, The New Yorker, and the publishing firms of Doubleday Doran and Little, Brown and Company.

In the case of Little, Brown, one of the country's oldest and most respected publishing houses, Counterattack was mainly responsible for the firing of the firm's executive editor. One of their accusations was that the editor had helped to publish books by authors of whom Counterattack disapproved.

For an artist to be listed unfavorably in Counterattack means certain blacklist. This fact is accepted without question throughout the radio and television industry. The only chance for continued employment is to be "cleared," either by Counterattack or a party acceptable to Counterattack.

Clearance: the professionals

The dean of blacklist firms today is American Business Consultants. As such, their "clearing" service deserves primary mention. Like many good business ideas, it is both simple and audacious.

For example: Counterattack will publish an item about an artist who has appeared on radio or television. Inspired by this item, letters will be written to the sponsor or network, complaining of the artist. There are never many of these letters; often they come from places where the particular program is not seen or heard.

Shortly thereafter, a representative of Counterattack may call upon the sponsor or his advertising agency with the advice that future troubles of this kind can be avoided by hiring American Business

The Editors wish to express their appreciation of the wide and generous response to the first issue of this publication. We take this space to acknowledge with real gratitude the many letters and contributions of money we have received—far too many to be acknowledged personally by two people.

This second issue tells more about the methods of the blacklist. Some may wonder why we do not print the names of the victims; it is our belief that this could possibly, in the wrong hands, become an extension of the blacklist itself.

Finally, we regret the delay between our first issue and this second one. Since we do not charge for the paper and it is put out in the Editor's spare time, there are many difficulties. We hope to issue a third more promptly, since the response of our readers has confirmed our belief that most Americans are against the use of a political blacklist and will say so when they learn the facts of its existence.

Consultants to check and certify those hired to work on the program.

As the networks and agencies have knuckled under, the attitude of American Business Consultants toward those wishing clearance has become more lordly. They are no longer satisfied with simple apologies for having belonged to allegedly left-wing organizations. They are not even satisfied with denials of their allegations, even in those cases where the allegations have been definitely disproved. In one case where Counterattack accused the wrong man, the paper made no retraction and the accused actor was too frightened to demand one.

What Counterattack requires now, before it grants total absolution, is active denunciation of any previous liberal or progressive point of view, plus complete acceptance of Counterattack's brand of anti-Communism. And even this becomes only the beginning. In certain cases, they have made it plain that a statement of religious principle would help. In another case, Counterattack demanded to know a director's future policy on hiring actors, along with the director's guarantee that he would not hire those whom Counterattack considered "undesirable."

It is also possible to obtain virtual, or we-can't-clear-you-but, "clearance" from individuals in the business.

One of these is Vincent Hartnett, a writer and lecturer who claims credit for having compiled Red Channels, the collection of 151 entertainment names that is the basic manual of the blacklist movement.

Because of his foresight, Hartnett today bears roughly the same relation to the blacklist movement as did Sutter to the discovery of gold in California. He is at once beneficiary, seer and promoter.

For example: Hartnett has written several articles for the American Legion magazine. In one of them, he named an actor as a past supporter of Loyalist Spain. Fearful of the consequences, the actor's agent arranged a meeting between his client, Hartnett and Victor Lasky, a former newspaper reporter who has become a self-styled expert on the subversive penetration of American culture.

At this meeting, the actor was told by Hartnett and Lasky that Spain was not the only suspect item in his dossier. He was also known to have appeared some years before in a Broadway play that contained alleged Communists.

And while insisting that they could not "clear" anyone, Hartnett and Lasky told the actor that it would be best for his own welfare if he were to submit to "experts" the names of other cast members of other Broadway shows in which he might appear. In this way, he could avoid even those involuntary associations that could get him in further trouble.

Clearance: the amateurs

One of the ways to get blacklisted is to denounce blacklisting on the floor of a union. Since the powerful craft unions in the entertainment field can end the blacklist by declaring unfair any program that uses it, the blacklisters have a special stake in minimizing or aborting any union action against the blacklist.

In this area, the amateurs carry the blacklist ball. They are those artists who aid Laurence Johnson, Counterattack, networks, movie studios and advertising agencies by helping provide names for the blacklist.

So far as is known, they are not paid in money for this work. Many of them, however, have recently enjoyed professional employment to a greater degree than ever before.

For example: Franklin Pulaski is a former radio announcer who has claimed that he was not working because of his outspoken views as an anti-Communist. The New York Journal-American took up Pulaski's cause editorially, and his fortunes rapidly improved. He acted on several television programs and most recently in the Twentieth-Century Fox movie, "The Robe."

During this period, one of Pulaski's extra-thespic activities was to give Twentieth-Century Fox in New York his opinion on which performers were "pure" enough to be employed by them.

For example: Paul Milton is a radio and television writer, who testified as a friendly witness before the Senate Internal Security Committee. He did not claim ever to have been a Communist, but named several other writers as "pro-Communists."

Two of the writers named by Milton were fired from programs they had been writing regularly up to that time. A short while later, Milton became a writer on one of these programs.

Blacklist and unemployment

Jobs in the entertainment industry are scarce. Fewer than half the members of AFTRA, the federation of radio and television actors, can make a living in their field. The incomes of at least a third of the members of the Radio Writers Guild are less than two thousand dollars a year. To be a member of Equity, the union for actors in the theatre, an actor must have performed in at least one class-A production—and yet Equity estimates that only half of one per cent of its membership earns enough in the theatre to pay income tax.

In such a situation, the economic pressure on artists makes them particularly vulnerable to threats of blacklist. These threats are used without conscience by the blacklisters.

For example: a year and a half ago, an actor active in the fight against blacklist was approached by Vincent Hartnett, who asked him to reverse his anti-blacklist stand. The actor refused. Until that moment, he had worked regularly in radio and television. After that moment, he could not get a job.

A month ago, the actor reversed his position and wrote a letter attacking his own past and those presently fighting the blacklist. The letter was read at an AFTRA meeting. Immediately thereafter, the actor began to work again on radio and television.

For the artist then, the price of a job has become not even simple conformity, but the active display of a required point of view. The artist must insure his job by speaking up to show where he stands, by voting the proper way at union meetings and making his vote known, and by joining such organizations as the newly-created "Aware."

Beware "Aware"

"Aware" is a dues-paying, membership organization whose members have to be proposed, endorsed and approved before admission. Its purpose is "to combat the Communist conspiracy in the entertainment world." Its head is a lawyer and Fordham University teacher named Godfrey P. Schmidt, now considered the top man to see when "clearance" is desired. On its board of directors are the ubiquitous Vincent Hartnett, Paul Milton and Vinton Hayworth, president of the New York local of AFTRA.

The ostensible program of "Aware" is to counter the Communist menace by monitoring, investigating, studying and publishing material about its manifestations behind the footlights.

Its real program is to become that organization in the entertainment industry which an artist must join as proof of his "loyalty."

For example: an actor who found himself blacklisted at a major network, although he had been previously cleared by the FBI in another capacity, went to Vinton Hayworth for assistance. Hayworth told him that, despite the FBI clearance, the actor was possibly being blacklisted for having run for union office on an anti-blacklist ticket.

Hayworth then advised three steps for becoming employable again: the public renunciation of the anti-blacklist ticket, preferably on the floor of the union; a letter from the actor to Godfrey P. Schmidt, attesting his loyalty; and an application for admission to membership in "Aware."

The actor took none of these steps. He remains blacklisted.

Blacklist: a new disgrace

The Negro performer has always been blacklisted, in the sense of being discriminated against. The appearance on WOR-TV of a dramatic show called "Harlem Detective" was therefore a considerable democratic achievement. In addition, the show received excellent reviews, with special reference to its Negro star, William Marshall.

Shortly after a particularly good review appeared in The New York Times, Marshall was attacked by Counterattack and fired from the show.

Shortly after that, the show itself was dropped by the station.

We urge our readers to protest this action.

Write to:

Program Director
WOR-TV
1440 Broadway
New York, N. Y.

Ask the station to reinstate the program, "Harlem Detective." Tell them you believe that only the audience should be the judge of whether or not a show stays on the air.

Acting together, we can stop the blacklist now.

FACTS ABOUT BLACKLIST
542 Fifth Ave., New York 36, N. Y.

Please send me FACTS ABOUT BLACKLIST. I am interested in helping the fight against blacklist in the entertainment industry.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

.....

I enclose a contribution of $..... to help the paper.

264

WORLD INFORMATION

EMPIRE STATE BUILDING

NEW YORK 1, NEW YORK

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
485 Madison Ave.,
New York, N.Y.

April 30, 1954

STATEMENT

Expenses incurred re: research

April 4	Call to Sylvia Sugarman Croton, N.Y.	2.64
April 4	Milwaukee call for data	7.15
April 7	Washington, D.C.	4.40
	Total expenses	$14.19

Paid
May 10, 1954
Wmcd.

WORLD INFORMATION
Research Consultants
EMPIRE STATE BUILDING • NEW YORK 1, N. Y.
LACKAWANNA 4-8663

CHESTER S. WILLIAMS
HERBERT HARRIS

April 30, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting Ssystem
485 Madison Ave.,
New York, N.Y.

Dear Ed:

Please find enclosed a STATEMENT covering 3 long distance calls in addition to the expenses submitted in the previous month's statement. I believe that this constitutes all the expenses incurred.

Thanks for your check covering the previous Statement. I hope that the issue covered by the reports I made available to Ben Shute for you never plagues you. If the matter is brought up later there are a few points worth further checking as indicated in the summary.

I hope you will find time to see the film which I supervised in behalf of FREEDOM HOUSE. Besides the preview at 4 PM Tuesday, May 4, public showings will be scheduled twice daily during the week of May 10 at 12:30 noon and 5:30 P.M. at FREEDOM HOUSE, 20 West 40.

Best wishes,

Very sincerely,

Chet

CSW:def

THE MURROW-McCARTHY DEBATE

EDWARD R. MURROW
CBS Commentator

FREEDOM HOUSE

presents

A DOCUMENTARY FILM

FROM THE TV RECORD

16 mm.—45 Minutes

★

Commentary by

Father George B. Ford

Dr. Harry D. Gideonse

JOSEPH R. McCARTHY
Senator from Wisconsin

EVERYBODY IS TALKING ABOUT THE CLASH BETWEEN MURROW AND McCARTHY BUT MANY MISSED ONE OR ALL OF THE TV PROGRAMS FEATURING THIS CONTROVERSY.

Americans Want to See the Complete Film Record and Discuss the Issues.

★

YOUR ORGANIZATION

Can Now Present A Documentary Film Summary Of This Debate Containing:

1. Important sequences from the original CBS-TV Program SEE IT NOW of March 9, 1954—Murrow's first report on McCarthy.
2. Excerpts from the Annie Lee Moss hearings before the McCarthy Committee as shown on SEE IT NOW, March 16, 1954.
3. Senator McCarthy's charges against Murrow as shown on SEE IT NOW, April 6, 1954.
4. Mr. Murrow's reply including highlights from an address by Bishop Sheil, SEE IT NOW, April 13, 1954.

This film is released as a public service by Freedom House, 20 West 40th Street, New York 18, N. Y.

The use of this film is subject to the following restrictions: The use must be non-commercial and not before an audience which is charged an admission fee. There must be no broadcast via radio or television facilities.

Prints shall not be made available to any organization listed by the U. S. Attorney General as subversive.

A Message from President Eisenhower . . . Not an Endorsement of this Film:

"Freedom House is a symbol of an effective force for liberty. It has repeatedly demonstrated its awareness of the axiom that the price of freedom for the individual—even in our republican form of government—is eternal vigilance." (Nov. 5, 1953)—Dwight D. Eisenhower

Prints may be Purchased or Rented from

Purchase Price $85.00
Rental Fee $7.50 per day

ASSOCIATION FILMS, INC.

RIDGEFIELD, N. J.
(Broad at Elm)
CHICAGO
(79 E. Adams Street)

SAN FRANCISCO
(351 Turk Street)
DALLAS
(1108 Jackson Street)

TO Jesse Zousmer

FROM Bill Ackerman 4.19.54

Here it is, though a long time after the fact.

I'd like to have it back, when you've finished with it up there.

Bill

FILE 13
Special Supplement
Program Bulletin
March 13, 1954

[redacted]

"See It Now" (EDWARD R. MURROW show, CBS-TV, Tuesdays, 10:30-11 PM EST, sponsored by ALCOA, Aluminum Corp. of America). March 9 show was entirely devoted to a bitter and one-sided attack on Sen. Joe McCarthy. (Murrow "covered" that by saying that "if the Senator thinks we do violence to him, he can come on this program and answer" - hardly responsible journalism for a program which parades as TV journalism at its best.) This analysis of March 9 show will (lacking a copy of Murrow's script) be based on friendly reportage of the show: JACK GOULD's ecstatic review in N.Y. Times, March 11, p. 38, and JOHN CROSBY's ecstatic review in N.Y. Herald Tribune, March 12, p. 19.

According to Gould, "The Senator's most useful tools, Mr. Murrow suggested, were Congressional immunity and the 'half-truth.'" This analysis is not a blanket defense of McCarthy. The writer believes citzens should be able freely to criticize anyone, without thereby being accused of pro-Communism, disloyalty, etc. The writer personally believes McCarthy was wrong in pillorying Gen. Zwicker (McCarthy in the Peress case should have gone after the Adjutant General of the Army, not after ComGen Ft. Monmouth).

But the fact is that Ed Murrow's tactics on the March 9 show were not far removed from those he alleged against McCarthy. Murrow's production crew cleverly used fragments of film and tape recording to build a composite picture of McCarthy which was (at best) half-true. Yet Murrow cleverly kept himself immune from prosecution for libel or slander, in all probability, since each fragment was in itself factual.

E.g., Gould reported: "Similarly, the irrelevancy and prejudice of much of the Senator's questioning of Reed Harris were detailed." Murrow on March 9 show demonstrated some of the questioning of Harris, but kept from his TV audience the whole truth. The whole truth was that McCarthy's Senate Subcommittee on Investigations was exploring charges of gross mismanagement and pro-Communism in the State Department Information Program, including Voice of America. Harris was Deputy Administrator, International Information Administration, Department of State. In testimony covering more than 50 pages of the printed record, Harris himself, under persistent questioning by McCarthy and associates, admitted past pro-communist (in the sense of Marxist generally) sympathy and writings, though he stated his outlook had changed. Far from being irrelevant, the questioning of Harris (a man in a highly strategic and responsible position) was most relevant. If McCarthy's questioning was prejudiced, it was prejudiced against Communism and Communists, Marxism and Marxists. If some McCarthy critics don't like that type of prejudice, most Americans do.

Crosby reported: "McCarthy was shown as a liar, telling a witness that the American Civil Liberties Union is a Communist-front organization, which it certainly is not." Crosby added rhetorically: "I heard the original broadcast of that statement, and I thought I wasn't hearing right." Crosby apparently is also referring to the questioning of Reed Harris. Here is the record of the pertinent portion of that questioning, as printed on p. 333, Part 5, of the Hearings:

(MORE)

"The Chairman (McCarthy). You resigned from the university. Did the Civil Liberties Union provide you with an attorney at that time? Mr. Harris. I had many offers of attorneys, and one of those was from the American Civil Liberties Union; yes. The Chairman. The question is: Did the Civil Liberties Union supply you with an attorney? Mr. Harris. They did supply me with an attorney. The Chairman. The answer is 'Yes'? Mr. Harris. The answer is 'Yes.' The Chairman. You know that the American Civil Liberties Union has been listed as a front of the Communist Party? Mr. Harris. Mr. Chairman, this was 1932. The Chairman. I know this was 1932. Do you know that they have since been listed as a front doing the work of the Communist Party? Mr. Harris. I do not know that they have been listed so. I have heard that mentioned, or read that mentioned."

Crosby, if a responsible writer, presumably checked the record before publishing that "McCarthy was shown as a liar," etc. On the record, the liar is not McCarthy. The record shows that McCarthy did not tell Harris the ACLU is a Communist-front organization. McCarthy told Harris that the ACLU has been listed "as a front of (a front doing the work of) the Communist Party." McCarthy was telling the truth. The ACLU has been listed as a Communist "front." It was so listed in the published Hearings of the Dies Committee in the late 1930s. It was so listed by the California Joint Fact-Finding Committee on Un-American Activities in its Reports of 1943 and 1948. And these "listings" were not arbitrary or capricious. They were supported by copious and detailed documentation.

Thus, what McCarthy actually said was falsified by his critic, and on the basis of a falsified record, McCarthy was depicted as a liar. It was not McCarthy who was the liar.

Murrow parades as a crusading civil libertarian, courageously dashing in to defend the person he felt "was being pushed around by government or big industry with no opportunity to answer charges against him" (quoted from first of two-part "build-up" on Murrow, McCall's Magazine, Feb. 1954, p. 86). But many have concluded that Murrow's solicitude has been recently reserved for individuals and groups involved in one way or another in the Communist conspiracy in this country.

This writer has little doubt about Murrow's practically expressed opposition to Communist aggression as it exists abroad and today. On "See It Now," for example, Murrow has used the same clever camera work to discredit a representative of Red Poland as he has used against militant opponents of the Communist conspiracy in this country.

When it comes to the question of the Communist threat to the internal security of this country, this writer has grave doubts as to the rectitude of Murrow's actions.

On Oct. 20, 1953, Murrow lent "See It Now" as a forum for Lt. Milo Radulovich, his wife, his father and his sister. Lt. Radulovich had been asked by the Air Force to resign his reserve commission, because of his close and continuing relationship with his father and his sister. His father was charged with reading "radical papers." His married sister, Mrs. Margaret Fishman, was charged with being "on picket lines" for "communist causes." The family was close-knit. The Air Force in no way impugned Lt. Radulovich's personal loyalty. The question was whether he was a good security risk. The Air Force did not ask Lt. Radulovich to turn against members of his family. The Air Force, with reason, questioned the wisdom of ever using Lt. Radulovich in a position of security, while he was still exposed to the family influences noted.

Murrow, or anyone else, had the right to form his own opinion about the Air Force's action in the Radulovich case, and freely to express that opinion. But "See It Now" went beyond freedom of opinion and expression. Lt. Radulovich's own case was presented in terms of the suffering which might come to him and his family if his reserve commission were revoked on "security risk" grounds. The question of the nation's security was passed over. So was the fact that a commission in the armed services is a privilege, not a right. Mrs. Radulovich was asked: "Wouldn't it have been better if your husband had bowed to the Air Force and disavowed his kin?" This was not reporting. It was "stacking" the case. Who would say "Yes" to a question phrased in that prejudiced manner? John Radulovich, the Lieutenant's elderly father, was presented as a toil-worn emigre who asked only "justice for my boy." The Lieutenant's married sister had these lines: "I think it's terrible that my brother has to go through this. I don't want to discuss my political beliefs. They're my own personal property. No one has any business inquiring about my beliefs. I don't think my brother needs to suffer because of my opinions." If the sister was referring to Communism, she was distorting the issue, as Murrow must have known. Communism is not just a matter of beliefs and opinions. It is "the fight for the revolutionary overthrow of capitalism, for the establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat, for the establishment of a Socialist Soviet Republic in the United States..." (Peters' CP Manual on Organization).

From the Communist viewpoint, the Oct. 20 "See It Now" show was "A TV Evening Long to Be Remembered" (from headline of two-column rave review in the Daily Worker, Oct. 23, 1953, p. 7). The Daily Worker devoted a half-column editorial (p. 5) to the show, seeking to link the Radulovich case to the defense of Communists. The weekend edition of The Worker (Oct. 25, 1953, pp. 2, 6) was even more jubilant about the show.

A non-Communist may find himself on the same side as the Communists profess to be on, on a particular issue. The Pope forwarded to the U.S. appeals for clemency for the Rosenbergs. Murrow may have sincerely believed he was defending Lt. Radulovich against a grave injustice. But the manner in which "See It Now" handled the Radulovich case served to give aid and comfort to Communist defensive efforts.

(MORE)

It lent the impression that certain elementary security measures constituted a deprivation of civil rights. While panning the Air Force in this instance, it glorified John Radulovich and Mrs. Fishman.

No one can deny the influence of Murrow and "See It Now." In a "See It Now" not long afterward, Murrow was able to announce that the program had influenced the Air Force to change its mind and let Lt. Radulovich keep his reserve commission. This particular program then launched out on a vicious attack upon Indiana American Legionnaires who had successfully protested the use of a public building as a forum for the American Civil Liberties Union. (This writer knows of no instance where Murrow has similarly attacked individuals and groups who have prevented Nazi, Fascist, racist, etc., organizations from using public buildings - or even private property.) The Legionnaires were neither capricious nor fanatic, though Murrow's clever camera work depicted them as badly as possible. In the words of the 1943 California Un-American Activities Committee Report: "The American Civil Liberties Union may be definitely classed as a Communist front or 'transmission belt' organization. At least 90 percent of its efforts are expended on behalf of Communists who come into conflict with the law. While it professes to stand for free speech, a free press and free assembly, it is quite obvious that its main function is to protect Communists in their activities of force and violence in their program to overthrow the government."

The ACLU, as noted above, figured prominently in the March 9 "See It Now." To quote the N.Y. World-Telegram (March 13, p. 2), "Mr. Murrow on the Tuesday TV show had declared that, Sen. McCarthy notwithstanding, the ACLU was not on the Attorney General's subversive list." But McCarthy in questioning Harris had not said the ACLU was on the AG's list. McCarthy had said the ACLU was listed as a Communist front, which it was (see above). As Murrow himself must know, literally scores of Communist fronts have never been placed on the AG's list, which is always highly conservative and years behind the times. By introducing the "red herring" of the AG's list, Murrow was telling a half-truth which left the impression McCarthy was a liar.

Raymond Gram Swing, assistant to Murrow, was formerly a member of the National Committee of the ACLU. Swing has been publicly reported in affiliation with the following listed Communist fronts and causes: Associated Magazine Contributors, Inc.; Committee of One Thousand; wrote letter to Sec. of State Cordell Hull, asking for an extension of the visa of Hanns Eisler and wife; Greek-American Council; National Council of American-Soviet Friendship; Russian War Relief; Soviet Russia Today (sponsor of dinner celebrating the 25th Anniversary of the Red Army, 1943). Swing's former "girl Friday," Alice Jayson, became "girl Friday" to Johannes Steel, a notorious promoter of Communist causes.

Over Fulton Lewis's radio program on March 11, McCarthy proved he had correctly stated the ACLU had been listed as a Communist front. The Senator went on to reveal that in 1935 Edward R. Murrow had been on the National Advisory Council for a Summer Session of Moscow State University. McCarthy was correct, as proven by a photostat copy of an official Soviet pamphlet.

In addition to "See It Now," Murrow operates another weekly TV show, "Person To Person" (CBS-TV, Fridays, 10:30-11 PM EST, sponsored by American Oil Co. - Amoco - and Hamm Brewing) and a radio "news" program heard nightly, Monday through Friday, CBS, 7:45-8 PM EST (also sponsored by Amoco and Hamm Brewing).

On his March 12 radio program, Murrow answered the Moscow State University charge by saying that at the age of 27 he was an assistant director of the Institute for International Education, whose advisory council included the late John Dewey, Robert M. Hutchins, Frank P. Graham, and one of whose trustees was John Foster Dulles. This was a "red herring" on Murrow's part. McCarthy's charge did not center on the Institute of International Education (though if he had, he might have noted that Murrow's boss there was the late Stephen Duggan, and he might have mentioned Dr. Graham's past long Communist-front record). The Institute, Murrow said, dealt with the exchange of students and professors between the United States and foreign countries. In 1935, there was a proposed summer session at Moscow University, but the Soviet Government called it off, and the U.S. delegation spent the summer touring the Soviet Union, though without Murrow. Murrow in a rhetorical flight defended this exchange program in terms of "conversation and controversy, the clash of ideas...." But the Soviet Travel Dept. did not promote the exchange for that idealistic purpose. The course, "Principles of the Collective and Socialist Society" was prerequisite for admission to all other courses.

To complete the whole truth, be it noted that after Murrow graduated from Washington State in 1930, "his first job was president of the National Student Federation, with headquarters in New York. It paid him $25 a week, but it gave him a chance to travel, as one of his main jobs was running inexpensive student tours. He had been doing that for about two years when...." (McCall's, Feb. 1954, p. 95). The NSU background is relevant. "John Rothschild, executive director of Open Road (Ed.-Communist front for Soviet Travel Dept.), first organized a tour for American students in Russia in 1927, with the help of the National Student Federation and the Soviet Society for Improvement of Cultural Relations With Foreigners.  The National Student Federation was closely interlocked with the American Student Union (Ed.-later officially cited as a Communist front), of which it was a predecessor" (Dies Committee, Report, 1944, Appendix 9, p. 471). The NSU itself has never to this writer's knowledge been cited as a Communist front. But it is significant that Murrow was not merely a member, but over a period of time the paid head of an organization with a record as noted. This writer neither states nor implies that Murrow is or was a Communist, pro-Communist, etc. But Murrow's background would obviously disqualify him from sitting in judgment on anyone who, like McCarthy, is opening the lid on Communists and other radicals.

FILE 13
Special Supplement
March 13, 1954
Page 5A

Addendum:

On line 4 from bottom of page 5, after "as noted." and before "This writer....", add:

Edward R. Murrow (Assistant Director, Institute of International Education, Inc., New York City) was a member of the Advisory Committee for "The First Russian Seminar and Near East Cruise," 1933, arranged by the Bureau of University Travel, Newton, Massachusetts, in cooperation with Intourist, New York City, the official travel agency of the U.S.S.R. The "spirit of the Seminar," according to the official circular, concluded with this cryptic declaration: "...Russia has something to show us. Let us try to comprehend." Murrow did not tell the whole truth when he pooh-poohed his 1935 relationship with the Summer Session of Moscow State University. From 1930 through 1933, Murrow had been intimately related to organizations which promoted, with Soviet cooperation, tours on which students and professors were exposed to indoctrination in the Soviet Union.

REMARKS OF HON. MELVIN PRICE (D. ILLINOIS) IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON MARCH 10, 1954.

CBS

HONEST, COURAGEOUS REPORTING

MR. SPEAKER, it is indeed a rare thing when a television network will stick its neck out by initiating or permitting to go out over its facilities a really hard-hitting, honest, unvarnished report on a highly charged, completely controversial issue. We have learned to expect television to pull its punches in a situation like that in order not to offend any articulate section of the population, or the sponsor, or some network vice president with a bad case of timidity.

Last night, however, the Aluminum Company of America again sponsored and the Columbia Broadcasting System again carried over its facilities the kind of objective analysis of a hot -- really hot -- issue which, to my mind, redeems television journalism and puts it into the journalistic big-time. I am referring, of course, to the Edward R. Murrow-Fred W. Friendly "See it Now" program. Last night it was devoted to the much-publicized probes.

I trust many of my colleagues saw the Murrow program. I trust they were impressed by the facts brought out in that telecast. It was a devastatingly effective program -- accompanied, it might be noted, by an offer to the subject of the program for an opportunity to answer it if he cares to.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I did not want the occasion to go by without rising here in the House to express my thanks, as a newspaperman by occupation, as one who learned professionally to seek out the truth and be satisfied with nothing less than the accurate facts -- for the really excellent job done last night in behalf of accuracy in political discussion by the Murrow-Friendly team over CBS.

And I should like to express my thanks to the Aluminum Company of America for having demonstrated an enlightened faith in the American system of free discussion of controversial issues by sponsoring the Murrow program and by giving it the complete editorial freedom last night's program again proved it enjoys.

It was an outstanding example of honest, courageous reporting.

Around the Dial:

CBS' Hollywood Theory On Leader of Koreans

By Bob Lauter

WHAT WON'T THEY think of next! Radio's mystery and detective story mentality carries right over into the field of reporting. When the Korean war began, the newscasters made a specialty of offering inside news on mysterious troop movements in China and Manchuria, ferreting out alleged "Russians" in the Korean Army, or giving sinister interpretations to the ability of some North Koreans to talk Russian.

To Allan Jackson of CBS, however, goes the laurel wreath for carrying the detective story mentality to one of its most absurd conclusions.

• • •

"KUM IL SUNG," said Allan Jackson, "was a legendary hero of Korea, respected and revered by all of his countrymen. During 15 long years of Japanese occupation, Kim Il Sung had led his band of guerillas in continuous raids against the hated Japanese (Jackson used the term 'Japs), and killed between thirty and forty thousand of them."

This seems to be a rather glowing picture of the North Korean leader. What is Jackson getting at? He continued by saying that the Kim Il Sung who is now a leader in Korea, is not the original Kim Il Sung, but an imposter placed in this position by the Communists who saw "much to be gained in having a name like that at the head of the Communist government."

Sherlock Jackson develops this bizarre point by remarking that the original Kim would be a man in his fifties, while "the North Korean Kim is in his mid-thirties." He bolsters this fantasy by remarking that "while the Communists have given their Kim Il Sung worldwide publicity, they have used only his name. Rarely has his picture been seen." The last issue of The Worker carried, in its magazine section, three pictures of Kim.

• • •

WHAT PROMPTS THIS absurdity? Why does a grown man get on the air and deliver himself of such nonsense? The reason is obvious. It must be a little embarrassing to those Administration officials who talk of "liberating" Korea to know that the Koreans are following the leadership of a national hero who led his people in struggle against the Japanese invaders for 15 years. And it would be very revealing to millions to discover that the Truman Administration has put us in such a position that the Korean people look upon our military forces just as they looked upon the Japanese imperilaists who attempts to enslave Korea.

Inventing another "Kim Il Sung" will not change this fact.

TV Views

By Joan Martin

"WHAT'S Wrong With Godfrey?" is the title of a featured article in the February issue of the Negro magazine. Managing Editor, James M. Reid, writes that the day after the public firing of LaRosa and the walking papers served without notice on orchestra leader Archie Bleyer, Godfrey called in the press—the white press, Mr. Reid points out —and issued a veiled threat of more heads to roll if the Mariners (the interracial quartet) did not toe the mark.

Godfrey charged them with laxity and missing rehearsals. And pray tell, Mr. Reid remarks, what were they missing? Ballet and tap dancing sessions. "A little hard to believe but it's true. These singers were not missing harmony sessions but Lord Godfrey had ordered them to take up the art of dancing. Seems that would eliminate awkwardness in their feet and improve their voices. Now, "asks Mr. Reid," what do you think is wrong with that man Godfrey?

★

"WE OF THE Negro press," the editor continues, "have had our bad times with the great Mr. Godfrey. We have been ignored, shunted aside, barred from seeing His Highness. Well, I guess we are not important. But last winter we had a good beef. Arthur took his entire crew on a Roman holiday to the sunny shores of Miami Beach. That is, his entire radio and TV show except the Mariners. . . It seemed that this group would not fit in Arthur's scheme of things at the Southern playground. Too many problems and complications, you know.

"Well, the Negro press tried to reach the Godfrey, the amiable homebody, but to no avail. He refused to see us or to give us, second hand, any reason for this discrimination of the Mariners. And to show how well the doors were barred to us, none of the seven CBS vice presidents in charge of Arthur Godfrey could get us by the door. . . . I'm beginning to wonder if all the trouble in the Godfrey organization did not stem from this unpleasant incident. . . ."

★

"ARE MOVIES WORSE THAN TV?"

THE ABOVE IS the title of an interesting article in the January issue of Film Sense, a publication of the Film Division of the New York Council of the Arts, Sciences and Professions, Inc., by Jay Starr.

Here, speaking for himself, is Mr. Starr:

"It used to be that when people said movies are bad, you could answer: TV is worse. That's still true. Bad TV seems to be much worse than Hollywood's poorest product. This is made more emphatic by the fact that TV programs, both filmed and live, outnumber the combined productions of the major and miner film companies by at least five to one. Thus the impact of brutality and sadism, gangster stories, idiotic situation comedies, quiz games, childish dramas and melodramas, 'loaded' news forums, is overwhelming by sheer weight of numbers.

"However, despite the disproportion of TV junk to the Hollywood variety, it must be admitted that the best of current television is topically superior to the finest products from the movie mills. Television, in some of its programs, both documentary and fictional, is speaking out with a boldness that the screen has seldom known in the past and by now is too terrified to consider.

★

"ED MURROW's presentation of the case of Lt. Radulovich on See It Now is an interesting example of TV's new awareness —all without benefit of wide-screen or stereophonic sound. . . .

"But where was Fox Movietone News? Or Paramount News? Continuing on their merry way with bathing beauty contests, water sports in Florida, and cold war clips from Korea, already seen days before by TV audiences.

"The Radulovich story is not just a TV flash-in-the pan. During the run of The Crucible on Broadway, the often-excellent You Are There did a special reenactment of the Salem Witchcraft trials, which had particular significance for today's witch-hunts.

"And when the Rosenbreg Case was reaching its climax, You Are There presented a dramatization of The Dreyfus Case, showing how seemingly irrefutable evidence was based on lies and deceit in an engineered frameup. At the same period the execution of Joan of Arc was presented, showing the pressure put on her to confess.

"Many more fictional plays than one would expect are concerned with real problems and not with how to marry a millionaire. In Paddy Chayevsky's The Bachelor Party, the institution of marriage tosses away Hollywood's halo, and makes possible a real identification of television audiences with the young white-collar couple of small income.

"The Kraft program, for instance often deals with real problems and makes some interesting observations on life and society. In Keep Our Honor Bright, a large group of students cheats on an examination in a school where the honor system operates. Among the cheaters is the hero's fiancee. When the smug businessmen on the board of directors uncompromisingly vote expulsion for the offenders, the Dean carefully points out how each one of these righteous citizens cheats in some way in his business. The implication is that cheating is an accepted procedure in our type of society. The play does not compromise with this thesis and there are no happy endings in the Hollywood sense.

"There are other serious dramas of this kind of TV (together with the gangster, sadism, cowboy and situation comedy trash), and it becomes clear that if Hollywood producers keep their attention focused on big screens and other gadgets while neglecting big ideas and three-dimensional thoughts, they won't notice until it's too late that their entire audience has slipped away to the small rectangular window in the living room, where the thoughts are sometimes unexpectedly gratifying."

And that is Mr. Starr's opinion.

Of course, the TV programs he cites are way in the minority, a tiny fraction of the great mass of tripe, and worse. In our opinion, Mr. Starr is asking which, of two evils, is preferable. Let's hear from you. On this program you're the sponsor.

DAILY WORKER BANQUET
TO HONOR
JAMES DOLSEN
Our Fighting Reporter and other valiant fighters for press freedom!
Guest Speakers: CLAUDIA JONES; HOWARD FAST
JOHN PITTMAN
Master of Celemonies: ALAN MAX
Friday Evening March 19 7 P.M.
Manhattan Plaza 66 East 4th St.
DINNER — Reservations: $2.50
Make your reservations NOW for a table for your organization at the Daily Worker Office SPONSORS:
Richard O. Boyer
Lloyd Brown
Joseph Dermer
Howard Fast
Ben Field
Hugo Gellert
Mike Gold
Charles Hendley
Grace Hutchins
Alex Kolkin
John Howard Lawson
Meridel LeSeuer
Scott Nearing
Anna Rochester

Christmas Eve
HOOTENANNY AND DANCE

Wed.
Dec. 24
8:30 p. m.

Featuring Bob DeCormier, Laura Duncan, Jewish Young Folk-Singers, Allegro Kane, Al Moss, Bill Robinson, Betty Sanders, Martha Schlamme, Jerry Silverman, Earl Shendell Orch. Tix. $1.25 adv. (reserved), $1.50 at door. A People's Artists production.

Webster Hall
119 E. 11 St.

The gift you'll enjoy giving . . .
"THE HEART OF SPAIN"
Anthology of a People's Resistance
Edited by ALVAH BESSIE
Introduction by DOROTHY PARKER

We will enclose Christmas Card identifying donor.

$4.50 incl. all shipping charges.

Clip out this order form now!

VETERANS OF THE ABRAHAM LINCOLN BRIGADE
23 West 26th St., N.Y. 10, N.Y.

I am enclosing $..... for ..... copies of the anthology "Heart of Spain" at $4.50 per copy.

Name .....
(please print)

Street .....

City ..... Zone.....State.....

Make checks payable to Daniel Groden, Treasurer

Christmas Eve
HOOTENANNY AND DANCE

A wonderful, singing Christmas Eve with Bob DeCormier, Laura Duncan, Jewish Young Folk-Singers, Allegro Kane, Al Moss, Bill Robinson, Betty Sanders, Martha Schlamme, Jerry Silverman, Earl Shendell Orch.

Wed., Dec. 24 — 8:30 P.M.
Webster Hall
119 E. 11th St.

Tix. $1.25 adv. (reserved), $1.50 at door, at Bookshop, People's Artists (GR 7-1241)

A Negro Actor Looks for Employment in Hollywood

Negro actor Irvin Moseley writes of his search for employment in the film and radio industries, in the first issue of the progressive new journal 'Hollywood Review,' sponsored by the Arts, Sciences and Professional Council, (7410 Sunset B'lvd., Hollywood).

Moseley's shocking account of his trek to a film studio and a radio studio in quest of work in the craft in which he is highly skilled (he recently starred in the Los Angeles production of Herb Tank's 'Longitude 49) is told in a factual, almost dispassionate manner which heightens its effectiveness.

We are printing parts of his story below in order to acquaint a wider audience with what he went through and what all Negroes seeking work in films and radio are compelled to go through, and to emphasize the responsibility of white artists in the fight against discrimination in these fields. As Moseley points out in the conclusion of his article, this problem is "certainly the immediate concern of the white artist, the white professionals whose prestige and standing can only rise with each victory for equal rights and fall with each defeat."

• • •

By IRVIN MOSELEY

Less than .001 percent of 15,000 weekly film workers in Hollywood are colored employes. Almost all of them are employed in menial or janitorial positions.

There are more colored women judges in America, in proportion to the white population, than there are colored actors working in films.

My first trip to a Hollywood film studio is vivid in my mind and will always remain so. On a certain day last year I came to the gate of a major studio and looked with interest at the beautiful, long buildings set on handsome grounds.

I was excited. I had had a good deal of stage experience but I was anxious to act and to speak before the cameras of Hollywood.

• • •

A guard directed me to a building on the "lot." I went in full of confidence. A man appeared before me and asked, "What do you want?"

"An audition," I replied.

"Take off everything but your trousers," the man said.

I stared at the man, blushing. Then I began to undress, but I was angry, I had expected an interview, an audition, or to be handed a script to read. I—

"Sorry, We can't use you."

I looked up at the man, "Can I read to you?"

His voice rose. "I said we can't use you."

• • •

I buttoned my shirt carefully. I put on my coat and walked out. Once more I looked at the long buildings with their sound stages. But this time my face was burning and anger rose inside me. This time the buildings seemed shadowed with evil.

I waited a long time for the bus back to town.

Then I heard that the radio studios were changing their attitudes towards colored.

• • •

I called CBS. The [illegible] phone said "—well—yes. But I don't think much will come of it. I'm afraid you'll be wasting your time—"

I said quickly, "I'd like to have the audition anyway."

He made an appointment for the following day and looked over the material I brought. He seemed surprised. "I thought you people did not like doing colored roles."

I explained that we objected to stereotyped parts and degrading roles. He seemed to half understand and told me to go ahead. When I had finished, another man had joined the first one. They were both silent, looking me over intently. The second man with emphasis, "You're an actor, You sure are." Then he shook his head. "Well, we'll see. I'm afraid that—"

I'm still waiting.

I buy the trade papers in Hollywood. I call casting directors. I go out to the studios. I check up on every opening, real or rumored that I hear about—"Keep in touch—No colored this picture—call us next week—come around next month—"

So much for one man's story. I'm sure it can be duplicated over and over again by almost any colored person seeking employment in the film industry.

And it's no accident that racial discrimination in the film industry shares the limelight with blacklising, censorship, and political persecutions. All these practices have the same authors, producers and financial backers. And these same people have the temerity to mouth overseas phrases about America's "democracy" while refusing to practice it at home.

I would like to emphasize one point. The fight against these practices is everybody's business. And it is certainly the immediate concern of the white artist, the white professionals, whose prestige and standing can only rise with each victory for equal rights and fall with each defeat.

The fight against discrimination in the film industry today is the immediate concern and obligation of all.

Around the Dial:

Hutchins Answers Ratner In BBC Article on Radio

By Bob Lauter

RECENTLY Robert M. Hutchins, Chancellor of the University of Chicago, wrote a blistering attack on American radio for the BBC Quarterly, organ of the British Broadcasting Company. One section of this article is especially worth repeating, the section in which he answers an article written by Victor Ratner, former vice-president of CBS, in 1947.

Ratner had written: "Radio is made in the image of the American people. To lambast it is itself un-American. The critics hit at it because they claim to be shocked at the programs. Actually, they are shocked at what the U.S. people are. Radio fits the people. The masses like comic books, Betty Grable, broad comedy, simple drama—it's vulgar, fast, simple, fundamental. Critics of radio often speak about the people's fare; yet they seem to refuse to face the facts about the people's taste. Such criticisms are really criticism of the American educational system for not raising the cultural level of Americans; for not getting them interested in the better things when they are young. Radio then gets the blame for this failure."

IN ANSWERING this snobbish and distorted attack on Americans, Hutchins wrote: "In 1946 the FCC reported that 76.8 percent of the available audience during the soap opera hours reported that they had their radios turned off altogether." He also pointed out that of those whose radios were on, many did not listen but simply let the noise go on to help fill the loneliness of American life.

His second point was that an audience cannot be expected to demand something it knows nothing of. "But," wrote Hutchins, "since the advertiser aims at the mass, since the safest way to aim at the mass is to aim low and since the overwhelming proportion of radio shows are produced by advertisers, the American audience has had little experience . . . on which to base a demand for improvement of a specific kind.

"IN THE THIRD PLACE," he wrote, "American education is waging an unequal struggle against the vulgarity of what are called the media of mass communication." He pointed out that an educational system, which is far from perfect anyway, is in no position to combat the flood of Milton Berles, Lone Rangers and Comic Books.

And finally, he pointed out in the answer to Ratner's article, that "the radio industry disclaims any obligation to improve the people's taste. Actually, they know very well that they are degrading it."

Throughout the article, Chancellor Hutchins emphasized that this state of affairs results from a situation in which "profits come first."

April 15, 1954

Dear Chet:

Enclosed is my check in payment of your April 2 statement.

Thanks again for your able assistance.

As ever yours,

Mr. Chester Williams
World Information
Empire State Building
New York 1, New York

dm

Thanks

WORLD INFORMATION

Research Consultants

EMPIRE STATE BUILDING · NEW YORK 1, N. Y.
LACKAWANNA 4-8663

CHESTER S. WILLIAMS
HERBERT HARRIS

April 3, 1954

Dear Ed:

In accordance with your instructions, I have conducted the research requested and have delivered the summary of my findings to Mr. Ben Shute. I believe that this concentrated effort has yielded about as much information as is useful at this time. In order to check on this data as rapidly as possible, I used the long distance services as agreed. Please find attached a statementoof out-of-pocket expenses incurred and paid by my firm to date. I do not anticipate additional expemses in this connection aside from perhaps one or two reverse toll charges in case one or another of my informats calls to add to the information in hand.

I have added a nominal .15% for misc. expenses and overhead in view of the fact that I do not intend to submit a statement for my own fee in this connection. I hope this has been of some service to you. If my services may be helpful to you in this or some other connection in the future, I'll be glad to be called upon and, in such a case, to state a personal fee.

Best wishes,

Sincerely,

Chet

Chester S. Williams

CSW:mea

WORLD INFORMATION

EMPIRE STATE BUILDING

NEW YORK 1, NEW YORK

April 2, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
485 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y.

STATEMENT

Expenses connected with special research:

Check # 1789
April 15

3/21	Secretarial service	$3.00
3/22	Taxi	1.00
3/23	Photostats of documents	22.82
3/23	Long distance toll- Washington,DC	1.31
3/23	" " " - Phila.	2.76
3/24	" " " Los Angeles	12.31
3/24	" " " Washington	2.65
3/25	" " " "	1.35
3/28	" " " PARIS	45.00
3/28	" " " Washington	1.40
3/28	Taxis	2.60
3/30	Long distance toll from Wash.	1.60
3/31	Taxis	1.70
4/2	Fee to M.E. Allen on time sheet	72.00
4/2	Travel to Washington per itemized expense voucher	32.86

Total expenses	$204.36
Overhead misc. expenses, localx calls, etc. .15%	30.65
TOTAL	$235.01

Chester S. Williams

Chester S. Williams

PHILIP J. PHILBIN
3D DISTRICT, MASSACHUSETTS

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

CLIFFORD O. GAUCHER
SECRETARY

WASHINGTON OFFICE:
420 HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING

April 10, 1954

Ed Zenke request follow?
JR

Mr. Jesse Zousmer
CBS Radio News
485 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Zousmer:

Perhaps you and Mr. Murrow may be interested in this. It's yours for what it is worth, so long as you keep the source confidential.

The junior senator from Wisconsin in his recent film shown over "See it now" quoted some Czech exile to show how that unhappy country had been sold down the river to the Reds. Some time ago a Matus Cernak, Chairman of the Slovak National Council Abroad, former Czech Minister now residing in Munich, Germany, circulated members of Congress with a request that they address the House on March 14, Slovak National Independence Day. Early in March, the Council of Free Czechoslovakia, 12 East 72nd Street, New York, sent a roundrobin letter to all Congressmen, saying this fellow Cernak was a stooge of the Germans during the war and, all in all, was a pretty terrible fellow. Now, if the Senator quotes from a Fascist and ex-Nazi, he can be tarred with the same brush he is using on Murrow: Laski dedicated a book to Murrow, Laski is a Socialist (says Murrow) or a Communist (says McCarthy), therefore Murrow is a Communist. Carrying this illogic to the usual McCarthy conclusion: Cernak is a fascist, McCarthy quotes him in a praiseworthy fashion, therefore McCarthy is a fascist. If you can furnish me with the exact McCarthy quotes from the film, perhaps they can be tagged directly to Cernak.

Cordially,

Cliff Gaucher

Clifford O. Gaucher

420 House Office Building
Washington, 25, D. C.

TO Mr. Murrow

FROM Florence Crissan

April 9

Dr. Zenkl called to say that he got the text of the speech of Senator McCarthy who is quoting a high official in the anti-communist government of Czechoslovakia and he compared the situation of the United States with the situation in Czechoslovakia. To compare a situation of such a country as the United States in 1954 with a small and unhappy Czechoslovakia in 1945 or 1948 occupied by the Red Army is really questionable, but it would be, maybe, easy to understand the statement of this high official in the anti-communist government of Czechoslovakia if Senator McCarthy would identify the person he is quoting.

If Dr. Zenkl knew the identity of the person Sen. McCarthy was quoting, he could be of some help.

Write him "thank you" my signature

RECEIVED
1954 MAR 12 PM 12:18
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU040 DPR PD

WUX NEWYORK NY MAR 12 1153AME

EDWARD R MURROW,COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

IF YOU'LL CHECK YOU'LL FIND CALIFORNIA COMMITTEE LISTING AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION SUBVERSIVE WAS HEADED BY JACK B. TENNEY. FINDINGS OF HIS COMMITTEE UNRESPECTED BY FBI, ATTORNEY GENERAL, HOUSE UNAMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE. TENNEY IN 1952 RAN AS U. S. VICE PRESIDENT ON CHRISTIAN NATIONALIST TICKET, WITH GERALD L. K. SMITH AS PRESIDENTIAL CHOICE. REEXXXRECENTLY GOP COUNTY CENTRAL COMMITTEE IN LOS ANGELES TURNED TOWN TENNEY FOR RE-ELECTION TO STATE SENATE BY MORE THAN 10 TO 1 MARGIN. AX ALSO CALL ATTENTION TO THIS, WHICH MUST BE CHECKABLE: IN FALL ISSUE OF REPORTER MAGAZINE , DICK ROVERE SAID THAT AT TIME MCCARTHY CONFRONTED REED HARRIS, HE KNEW THTXXX THAT HIS STAFF COUNSEL, ROY COHN, HAD BUT A FEW WEEKS BEFORE HE ADDRESSED THE ACLU. COHN, FAIRLY FRESH FROM THAT APPEARANCE, SAT IDLY BY WHILE MCCARTHY LABELED THE OUTFIT SUBVERSIVE.

BRUCE BIOSSAT NEA SERVICE

1207P..

True NY Times

McCarthy File

G. S. D.
Gordon, Harold R.

January 11, 1954

Dear Mr. Gordon:

Thank you for your letter with the suggestion concerning Harvey O'Conner. We have had several suggestions of a similar nature and we will give this one our consideration. I will let you know if we decide to do anything about it.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. Harold R. Gordon
Suite 1818
Metropolitan Building
134 North La Salle Street
Chicago 2, Illinois

rh

HAROLD R. GORDON
ATTORNEY AT LAW

SUITE 1818 - METROPOLITAN BUILDING
134 NORTH LA SALLE STREET
CHICAGO 2 PHONE: RANDOLPH 6-3538

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
New York, N.Y.

Dear Sir:

I am a regular listener (and viewer) of your fine programs.

I heard a very moving speech at the City Club of Chicago by Harvey O'Conner, and author, and my immediate reaction was that he should be heard by all Americans, and that you might be interested in giving him a forum on "See It Now".

Mr. O'Conner is scheduled to appear before a Federal District Court in Washington, D.C. on January 11th. However his case may be postponed because the Supreme Court has under advisement a similar case involving the 1st amendment.

Mr. O'Conner was cited by Senator McCarthy's Committee for invoking the 1st Amendment, in his refusal to testify. I am enclosing a bulletin of the City Club of Chicago(a respected organization in existance for 50 years whose members ehcompass all shades of opinion) with a summary of some of Mr. O'Connors remarks.

However the rather cool summary in the bulletin cannot bring to life the forceful effect of Mr. O'Conners'remarks. I was moved as I have not been since your excellent portrayal of the case of Radulowich(and this case I am certain would create as much if not a great deal more comment.)

Among other things, Mr. O'Conner(who is a lucid and forceful speaker) made the point that he invoked the 1st Amendment when asked the question "are you a member of the Communist conspiracy?". He said he could have truthfully answered "no!", but that would have opened

HAROLD R. GORDON
ATTORNEY AT LAW

SUITE 1818 - METROPOLITAN BUILDING
134 NORTH LA SALLE STREET
CHICAGO 2 PHONE: RANDOLPH 6-3538

the door to any number of additional questions. That the next question would have been "were'nt you a member of the League of American authors?". Mr O'Conner said that in 1937 a Chicago chapter of this organization was formed, of which he became a member, but because authors are notoriously un-cooperative, the chapter folded in a few months. However the national organization subsequently might have been infiltrated with commies, because in 1947 it was placed on a list of subversive organizations by the Attorney General.

Mr. O'Conner made the point that had he answered yes to the question as to his membership, the Senator would have gone on to show the history of the organization as it subsequently developed, and "prove" that therefor Mr. O'Connor was a member of the "Communist Conspiracy" and cite him for perjury.

Mr. O'Connor made the further point that McCarthy kept prodding him to invoke the 5th Amendment, and that he refused(because to McCarthy and millions of "unreflecting Americans" this would be "proof" that he was a Communist. Had he invoked the 5th Amendment he could have gone off scot free. However, he said, it's time someone told McCarthy, when he inquires as to ones political beliefs, "its none of your business";that under the 1st Amendment, such a question violated his rights as a free citizen; that he happened to be financially situated, so that he could make a test case of the matter, and for that reason he invoked the 1st, rather than the 5th Amendment.

You had guts enough to buck the U.S. Navy, I hope the Senator, whom I consider to be the foremost menace on the American

HAROLD R. GORDON
ATTORNEY AT LAW

SUITE 1818 - METROPOLITAN BUILDING
134 NORTH LA SALLE STREET
CHICAGO 2 PHONE: RANDOLPH 6-3538

scene today, doesn't frighten you.

Sincerely

Harold R. Gordon

Harold R. Gordon

Vo

dec sch bor his coll
Adr spe

Ri

"
mus kind doin kno for of ansv righ the on t
the Mor risk
the

M cago chai tion face
Cou
11. I mem nors Righ

Re led bega was Com phon said from in W the S said is I

The City Club Bulletin

A Journal of Active Citizenship

City Club of Chicago, 189 W. Madison St., Chicago 2, Ill.

Vol. XXXXVII (New Series Vol. XXI) JANUARY 4, 1954 No. 1

TODAY'S FORUM

Monday, January 4, 12:15 P.M.

Farwell Hall, Y.M.C.A., 19 So. LaSalle Street

"Segregation in the Public Schools"

Speaker

PROF. MAURICE SEAY, Ph. D.

Chairman, Department of Education, University of Chicago

Chairman: Stanton Schuman

It is important for all of us to know what effect the anticipated decision of the Supreme Court with respect to segregation in the public schools will have upon this most cherished institution. Prof. Seay was born in the South and has first-hand information on the subject through his experiece as a citizen, a student, and an administrative officer in colleges, and as chairman of the American Association for School Administrators. There are few men in the nation better qualified to speak on this controversial subject.

Luncheon $1.50 inclusive

Rights in Jeopardy, Says O'Connor

"The time has come when we must make a stand against the kind of thing Joe McCarthy is doing in Washington, and I don't know a better place to begin than for a citizen to tell Joe it is none of his business when he demands answers to questions he has no right to ask." That, bluntly, was the way Harvey O'Connor laid it on the line as he told members of the City Club at the forum on Monday, December 21, why he risked indictment for contempt of the Senate.

Mr. O'Connor, a former Chicagoan and in the early 1940s chairman of the City Club Education Committee, is scheduled to face trial before the U. S. District Court in Washington on January 11. Introduced by Edgar Bernhard, member of the Board of Governors, he spoke on "An Author's Rights Under the Constitution."

Reciting the chain of events that led to his indictment, he said it began one day last July when he was sitting on his porch in Little Compton, R. I. There came a telephone call from a Roy Cohn, who said he was relaying a summons from Senator McCarthy to appear in Washington for questioning by the Senate Committee. It appeared, said Mr. O'Connor, that some of his books had turned up in the Overseas Libraries. The phone call was followed by a telegram signed "Joe McCarthy." But Mr. O'Connor decided to hold out for a subpoena, which was subsequently served by two United States marshals from Providence.

Aim is to Smear

Appearing before the committee on July 14, Mr. O'Connor said it soon became evident that the Senator was interested in just one thing, and that was to smear him and hold him up to the public as a Communist spy and traitor. Before going to Washington, Mr. O'Connor said he had decided not to engage in a political discussion with the Senator. His refusal to become involved was based on three points, which constituted his answer to the committee:

"Under the first amendment to the Constitution, my writings, my books and my political opinions are of no legitimate concern to this committee. If I have violated any laws in the writings I have written, that is the proper concern for the law enforcement agencies and not the proper concern of this committee.

"This committee has no right to inquire into my writing, under the point of constitutional limitations on the powers of Congress and its

(Continued on second page)

"Keep Faith in U. N."—Carey

Archibald J. Carey, minister, alderman and City Club member recently returned from serving as first alternate delegate to the United Nations 8th General Assembly, addressed the forum last Monday and provided one of the most enjoyable talks heard throughout the year. He was introduced by his long-time friend, Col. T. M. Mann, member of the Board of Governors.

Mr. Carey began by outlining the makeup of the U. N. and how it operates. To date it includes 60 of the 85 nations of the world, and of the remaining 25, 21 are now applying for membership. Each nation is allowed five delegates and five alternates, and practically every nation represented has its full complement.

Correcting a common misapprehension, he said that there is no real distinction between delegates and alternates. They all have the same responsibilities and privileges and receive equal pay. Precedence figures only in matters of protocol; for example, the order in which representatives are heard. An alternate defers to a full delegate, the second alternate defers to the first, and so on.

Like Legislative Body

The U. N. operates much like a legislative body. There is a plenary body which is divided into committees, of which there are seven. Each nation's delegation deliberates on the issues before the session, and the agreements reached are the positions of the respective nations. Each nation has only one vote in the plenary sessions.

Mr. Carey emphasized the point that the General Assembly has no enforcement powers. What it does is make moral judgments, and these, he discovered, carry great weight with all the nations.

Rome was not built in a day, and it should be remembered that this was only the 8th Assembly, he said. What we see is man in the process of finding himself, groping in the dark, struggling to create a framework in which to develop discussions that may lead to understanding among men of different color, different relig[illegible] backgrounds.

On th[illegible] the 8th Assembly had made progress in clarifying aid to underdeveloped areas. Notably, such factors as self-help and good faith were written into the terms of future U. S. contributions. Progress was also made on problems of repatriation, prisoners of war, forced labor, racial minorities, and U. S. support of the genocide principle. A gain of special value to the United States came from a full discussion of the Soviet charge of germ warfare, when the charge boomeranged and disclosed the methods employed by Russia. As a result much of the suspicion directed by other nations against this country was dissipated.

Much Still Undone

Mr. Carey said he was disturbed by the fact that many things he had hoped for remained undone. However, he said he gained faith upon learning that in some instances, security factors or previous commitments involving keeping our word to other nations, required our taking a certain position for the present without necessarily adulterating our motives or basic attitude. Progress must to some degree conform with a time-table, he found.

Referring to the future of the U. N., Mr. Carey said he is strongly convinced that the United States must not withdraw as a member. Should we pull out, the U. N would go on without us, with Russia stepping into our position of leadership. To those who argue that the United States makes the largest financial contribution—33 per cent—and at the same time makes the most concessions, Mr.

(Continued on second page)

MEETINGS

Monday Forum 12:15
Committee Meetings 12:30

Monday, January 4 — Forum Luncheon (announced on this page).

Wednesday, January 6 — Board of Governors.

Thursd[illegible]

The City Club Bulletin
Published weekly, from October to June, inclusively by the City Club of Chicago, a non-partisan civic organization with headquarters at 189 W. Madison St., Chicago 2, Illinois. Tel. RAndolph 6-4617.

GUY D. YOAKUM, Editor

Entered as second class matter January 14, 1933, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

Subscription Price $1.00 per year.

Vol. 47 January 4, 1954 No. 1

Editor's Corner

Chicago's birth rate is a baffling uncertainty. It goes up under the stimulus of war and is depressed with recessions, and fluctuates with many other factors. What it doesn't do is watch and adjust itself to such things as available housing, schoolroom space, and supply of teachers.

Charts and graphs in the office of the school Superintendent show a tidal wave of youngsters approaching which will practically engulf the public schools in a few years. To prevent a collapse of the system, especially in certain municipal areas, a bond issue was submitted to the voters in 1950, and schools are now being built with that money to meet the most urgent need. But the urgency remains.

We are recommending that the School Board begin planning at once for a new bond issue. Whether we like it or not, this request for more money seems to be a necessity. Those who say that state and city financing is just like managing a family budget forget that public treasuries cannot save up for such emergencies. Our Board of Education could not have saved up a hundred million dollars over the past decade, for example, with which to build schools that are now known to be needed. A family that grows too big for its dwelling can move into a larger one but there are no larger school houses on the market. All governmental bodies are, in this sense, required to live from hand to mouth and finance with bond issues when necessary.

In still another respect, public financing differs from the management of the family budget. Let us look at the calendar. A proposal submitted to the legislature in 1955 will, we hope, permit the matter to be put before the Chicago voters in late '55 or in '56, if there is some kind of an election held with which this can be combined during the period. Money voted [illegible] result in a substan- [illegible] space [illegible] sirable thing is a special session of the legislature which would shorten that time-table by two full years.

Again, if a family or business concern needs more help it can dip into the labor pool and get it, but for the schools no such pool is available. The Board of Education can neither find nor create the supply of teachers it needs. We cannot order 6,000 additional pupils now in the grades to begin preparing to be teachers, nor can we raid the schools of other cities to fill the pedagogical ranks. This great and rich city has gotten the idea through the years that it can muddle through with almost any kind of a political setup, but a school system is an institution of more delicate texture and may be destroyed by the neglect of the very citizens who profess most loudly to love it. The year 1954 is a critical one for our schools.

G. D. Y.

Rights in Jeopardy . . .

(Continued from first page)

committees. I might say in this regard that I have not known until this moment that my books were in Overseas Libraries and most certainly had nothing whatever to do with their selection.

"In the third place I would object to the authority of the committee, under the statute by which it was created by Congress, to inquire into my writings or my political views."

Using Committee as Club

Mr. McCarthy's committee, said Mr. O'Connor, was set up for the purpose of checking on government expenditures, but he is perverting the committee's function by using it as a club over Americans whose political views may differ from his own.

Combining speculation with plain fabrication and "leaping from crag to crag," Mr. O'Connor said the case made out against him by the Senator was this: The American taxpayers' money had been used by "the old Acheson State Department" to purchase his books. The royalties from the sale of the books had presumably been channeled by Mr. O'Connor into the Communist coffers since Mr. O'Connor, having refused to answer his question as to whether he was a member of the Communist conspiracy at the time he wrote his books, was obviously a Communist. The facts are, said Mr. O'Connor, he knew nothing about [illegible] having been placed in [illegible] libraries, and he has [illegible] publishers stat- [illegible] paid to him for the simple reason that for a long time they had none of his books left to sell. As for his political opinions, they are his own. Each citizen is accountable for his acts, but he does not need to answer to Senator McCarthy nor anyone else for what he thinks.

Rights of All Citizens at Stake

At stake in this issue, said Mr. O'Connor, are not only the rights of an author but the rights of every American citizen. Millions of unreflecting Americans, he said, know that Senator McCarthy is investigating Communist spies. The majority, without questioning the committee's jurisdiction, draw the conclusion that a refusal to yield to the Senator is tantamount to an admission of Communist intrigue.

A generation ago, much was made of the point that a man's religion was his own business, and the same went for his politics, said Mr. O'Connor. "Isn't it a measure of how far we have slid down freedom's hill in ten years," he asked, "that we now assume that political terrorists have a right to ask us questions which certainly would have been regarded by the common garden-variety American citizen as utterly outside the scope of any Congressional committee?"

There are times, and this is one, he said, when Americans who value their liberty must stand up and fight for it. More than ever we need to follow the example of Thomas Jefferson, who not only spoke for freedom but fought for it.

NEXT WEEK'S FORUM

Monday, January 11, 12:15 P.M.

Farwell Hall, Y.M.C.A., 19 So. LaSalle Street

"Education Problems in Cook County Today"

Speaker

NOBLE J. PUFFER

County Superintendent of Schools

In addition to the problems of schoolroom space and teacher supply which the county communities share with Chicago, these little places have several peculiar to themselves and of almost metropolitan size. To tell us about them we have asked the man who has wrestled with these problems for many years, the efficient Superintendent, Noble J. Puffer. We are interested in hearing how new communities, rich in children but poor in taxable industries, can build and maintain the needed schools.

Luncheon $1.50 inclusive

Keep Faith . . .

(Continued from first page)

Carey said that is the price of our leadership. At this stage of history, when the globe can be circled in 24 hours and when so much hinges on getting together and working toward the common purpose of peace and good will, the United States cannot afford to abandon its leadership, although the price of that leadership may come high.

Sees Mutual Benefits

Talking directly to his listeners, Mr. Carey said that he believed that the U. N. and organizations like the City Club, the NAACP, and the Round Table of Christians and Jews are mutually helpful. As people join in working toward understanding and freedom, their influence spreads and encompasses others whose vision is not so broad. The U. N. has just two objectives —to abolish war and to secure peace and dignity for every individual on earth. Honorable men and women can never abandon those objectives, he said.

In the question period he was asked whether he felt any pessimism as a result of the lack of interest in democracy on the part of some countries and the emphasis they place on getting concessions and material aid. Mr. Carey replied he was optimistic rather than pessimistic. He said he found that people in countries all over the world are dreaming the same dreams. The basic thing they want is freedom. He also said, however, that Vice-President Nixon had come back and put into words what he had not quite wanted to say out loud himself—that is, that a great block of people in the world distrust the motives of the United States. It is true, said Mr. Carey. He found it at the U. N. The feeling is sincere and grows out of honest confusion. Therefore the United States has the obligation to do its job so well that others will have no problem as to their choice of leadership—the United States not Russia.

Article on City Club

The Christian Science Monitor announces that an article on the City Club which it plans to publish has been delayed from December 31st to January 5th. This is an important piece of nation-wide publicity and we hope to get it to all Club members if possible. It will be on the editorial page. Look for the paper on the newsstands and in the Reading Rooms (one of the latter is at 18 S. LaSalle) on January 6th.

CC: Mr. Shute, SIN

For your information and future reference dmcd

April 7, 1954

Mr. Murrow:

There were a few calls this morning in connection with your statement that the Commonweal is a leading Catholic weekly. One of the calls was from a Mr. Sherry of the Catholic Review who said that the Commonweal is not an official Catholic magazine but a magazine run by Catholic laymen.

There is an official Catholic magazine called "America" which is run by Jesuits which McCarthy says is Communistic. The following issues have letters from McCarthy:

November 22, 1952	page	208
December 13, 1952	"	301
December 20, 1952	"	326
January 3, 1953	"	374

Rebe Holder

April 7, 1954

McCarthy - Related Materials

Joe Harsch, Christian Science Monitor and NBC: Mr. President would you care to say anything to us about the loyalty and patriotism of Edward R. Murrow.

Eisenhower: Why, I'm going to say nothing at all about that. First of all I don't comment about people. I don't comment about things of which I know nothing.

I will say this. I have known this man for many years. He has been one of the men I consider my friend among your profession.

Now that is what I know about him. So far as indulging in philosophical discussion I can't remember any instance.

But I do say that he has been one pf those that over the years..in the war..when he was working in London and so on.. I always thought of him as a friend.

HOYT A. MOORE
DOUGLAS M. MOFFAT
CARL W. PAINTER
LEONARD D. ADKINS
MAURICE T. MOORE
DONALD C. SWATLAND
BRUCE BROMLEY
ROSWELL MAGILL
A. I. HENDERSON
Wm DWIGHT WHITNEY
ALFRED McCORMACK
CARLYLE E. MAW
EDWARD S. PINNEY
ROSWELL L. GILPATRIC
THOMAS A. HALLERAN
ALBERT R. CONNELLY
L. R. BRESLIN, JR.
BENJAMIN R. SHUTE
GEORGE B. TURNER
FRANK H. DETWEILER
GEORGE G. TYLER
JOHN H. MORSE
HAROLD R. MEDINA, JR.
FREDERICK S. BEEBE
CHARLES R. LINTON
WILLIAM B. MARSHALL
RALPH L. McAFEE
ROYALL VICTOR, JR.
JOHN N. CALDERWOOD

CRAVATH, SWAINE & MOORE
15 BROAD STREET
NEW YORK 5

TELEPHONE
HANOVER 2-3000

CABLE ADDRESS: CRAVATH, N.Y.

NEW YORK

April 7, 1954

Dear Ed:

Here is a copy of McCloy's speech at West Point on December 2, 1953, which I undertook to get for you. Also enclosed for your information is a copy of his speech at Philadelphia on February 16 of this year entitled, "Our Best Defense: Faith in Ourselves". I think you will find some first-rate portions in it.

One personal note: I count as a rare privilege the brief opportunity I have had in the last two weeks to get to know you. Many thanks for that, and my very best wishes and strongest support in your valiant fight against the twin forces of evil which we must combat today.

Sincerely,

Ben Shute

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N. Y.

Encls.

BY HAND

QQ

Script pert
4/22/54
DmcN

1118 Third Avenue
New York 21, N.Y.
7 April 1954

Mr. E. R. Murrow
WCBS-TV
485 Madison Avenue
New York City

Dear Mr. Murrow:

I did not myself see the program on the time you made available to Senator Mc Carthy last night, and I have been able to gather only conflicting impressions from the reports of newspapers and friends as to the precise connection in which my name was raised. This, under all the circumstances, I can certainly understand --the difficulty of establishing the connection, I mean. Nevertheless I am understandably curious. Would it be possible to let me have a transcript, at least on loan so that I may copy out the part that concerns me and see the context in which it appears? I assure you that this is not with the purpose of causing legal embarrassment to you or CBS, but in the hope and expectation that you will consider this fair.

Sincerely,

David Zablodowsky
D. Zablodowsky

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

F. 559

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Mr. Murrow

From Mr. Brauner

Station

April 9, 1954

In accordance with our conversation I am returning letter of Mr. Zablodowsky to you.

JFB/s

Tuesday, April 6

On The Morning Show, with Senator Kerr

Cronkite: Do you feel the President is doing a job concerning the problem of "intemperate investigating committees"? (Which had been discussed before in the Cronkite-Kerr exchange).

Senator Kerr: I think his job in that regard is inadequate. I understand that Ed Murrow was visiting with the President the other day and the President congratulated him on the job he had done and Murrow turned to him and said "Yes, Mr. President, and now it's up to you."

RECEIVED
1954 APR -5 PM 6:27
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

V

NPA004 ZLA63 INTL FR ZL TD LONDON VIA WUCABLES 25 MAR 5 1029P

COLUMBIA

NYK

CHURCH FOR MURROW LANHAM TITCHENER FOUR DAYS AGO PROMOTED FROM FIRST SECRETARY BRITISH EMBASSY TURKEY TO ECONOMIC COUNCILLOR BRITISH EMBASSY IRAN REGARDS

SMITH.

Thursday, April 1

Mr. M,

FRED BATE called from Washington. He has it--and his source is absolutely sure--that McC's boys are at work on the same films SIN used for source material, taking other exceppts to tell quite a different story. He says they are working at the XX TV studios of National Vidéo Productions, Inc. in the Carolina Theatre, Wash.

- - -- -

MORRIS ERNST stopped in. He spent the weekend in Washington and has it that McC is not going to confine himself to attacking you...he's going to go into the Hearst attack on Paley...Dick Berlin is supplying the material.

Please call him.

dmcd

THE BRITISH BROADCASTING CORPORATION
630 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

WASHINGTON, D. C. NEWS OFFICE
NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING
TELEPHONE EXECUTIVE 3-1465
CABLES: NEWSCASTS, WASHINGTON

NEW YORK OFFICE
TELEPHONE CIRCLE 7-0656
CABLES: BROADCASTS, NEW YORK

March 29, 1954

Mr. Fred Friendly
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Fred:

The following might well be of interest to you and Mr. Murrow.

In order to help you to understand the Extract from "Hansard":
Mr. Walter Elliot is M.P. for Glasgow, Kelvingrove.
Mr. William Warbeyis M.P. for Broxtowe.
Mr. Beverley Baxter is M.P. for Southgate.

Yours sincerely,

Aubrey Singer,
Television Officer

AS:bgm

Extract from "The New Statesman and Nation" March 20th, 1954.

LOOK AND LISTEN. by William Salter.

How pleasant to be able to praise! The Television Service deserves the warmest commendation on its enterprise in so unexpectedly inserting into its advertised programme the other evening an excerpt from Mr. Ed Murrow's devastating television programme on Senator McCarthy. The Television Service was behaving as a television service shoud; and paradoxically, the very fact that it was doing so tempered one's pleasure with sadness. Here was the BBC showing itself, when it came to the affairs of other countries, a free agent, free to comment and expose as it thought fit; freedom to comment and expose was restricted only when it was a matter of home affairs.

EXTRACT FROM "HANSARD" DATED 25TH MARCH, 1954.

Mr. Walter Elliot. .... It is obvious that we are all agreed that we want an alternative programme. Advertising revenue is the only thing which is separating us. We say that this experiment should be tried out. Hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite say, as was said a moment ago, "What about the United States?" I should have thought that if there was one argument which could not be used at the present moment, it was the argument about the United States.

What is the greatest danger in the United States? The right hon. Member for Ebbw Vale (Mr. Bevan) and honl friends of his have often commented upon it. It is McCarthyism. The influence of McCarthy in the United States is one which everyone fears to tackle. The newspapers this morning stated that the United States Bar fears to tackle it, for it has not provided a lawyer to act as chief counsel in the committee to inquire into the matter. Who are the only persons in the United States who are tackling McCarthyism? They are the people who are responsible for this poor old squalid commercial television.

Mr. Warbey. Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that the reputation of McCarthy among the American people who support him was very largely built up through television?

Mr. Elliot. McCarthy built up his reputation by means of his committees. It is through his committees and the influence he exerted through is committees that he has built up his power, as everybody knows. That does not alter the fact that the only thing which is effectively attacking McCarthy in the whole world just now is commercial television in the United States.

That seems to me altogether to thrust out the arguments against commercial television in the United States. An aluminium company financing Ed Murrow is the only thing which is putting up an argument against McCarthy. Hon. and right hon. Gentlemen opposite say "That is all wrong. The radio and television networks in the United States ought to be put under the heel of the Government". That is, in effect, under the heel of McCarthy.

Mr. Beverley Baxter. My right hon. Friend is making a very strong point about commercial television attacking McCarthy, but to say that it is the only thing is wrong. Many newspapers and magazines have adopted a very strong and courageous attitude towards McCarthy.

Mr. Elliot. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his intervention. If I used the word 'only' I was overstating it. I do not think I said that. I believe I said it was the only thing which was effectively standing up to McCarthy. I do not think that anyone denies that. the real weakening in McCarthy's position has taken place since commercial television began to put the case against him, since Ed Murrow began to put the case against him. Who should know that better than the hon. Member for Woolwich, East, who quoted and used so much of that material and was able to show us the whole thing in operation, which we should not otherwise have been able to see. I say that the United States and the world as a whole owe a debt of gratitude to the commercial firm which is financing that programme. To say that the position would be improved if commercial television was put under the heel of the United States Government is to fly in the face of the obvious facts.

JGS

Hartford, Conn
March 28, 1954

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
c/o C.B.S.
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:-

First of all I wish to congratulate you for being one of the few commentators with "guts" to tackle Senator McCarthy. I've always enjoyed your program. your presentations always have a sense of fair play. This is something which a great many commentators have lost sight of.

However I'm not writing this letter just to hand you a few boquets.

I, like thousands of other men who served in the last World war, do not like the method used by Senator McCarthy either in his questionings or investigations. I'm not opposed to unearthing communists or communism but his method of branding people as such by association, etc. is revolting. Especially in this country where one is supposed to enjoy free speech religious freedom and the right to his own beliefs. Also no one should be considered guilty until proven guilty by due process of law. All this our Senator is trying to change.

#

I know that you and the Senator are going to have a little set to and I'm therefore enclosing you a clipping from the Bridgeport Herald of this date. The part that I have circled does not mean much unless the full story is told.

The gentleman whose name appears in the clipping, Albert Leavitt has been for years an emminent attorney. Known throughout the state as a most honest and capable man. He, I believe, is now connected with the Yale university of law.

JGS

a few years ago he was a federal judge I believe in Porto Rico. on one occasion he made a statement that senator McCarthy was a member of several subversive outfits and that he had documentary evidence to prove it. It seems that Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith came to the defense of McCarthy and printed in his magazine that Mr. Leavitt was a liar etc. Mr. Leavitt brought suit for slander against Rev. Smith and won the case. I was wondering in the light of such event if you couldn't find out what this documentary evidence is and make use of it?

Wishing you the best of luck in everything you may undertake and trusting that your program may continue for years to come, I am.

Respectfully yours.
Gaetano O. Sica
224 Goodrich St.
Hartford, Conn.

THE MAIN STEM

TO THE REPORT that he had invaded New Britain from Hartford, to oppose Mayor John L. Sullivan for renomination, State Sen. Patrick J. Ward this week gave an "emphatic no." Unity Lodge, the CIO union at Pratt & Whitney Tool in West Hartford, endorsed ex-Ald. Buck Kotowski for the mayoralty, and Ward is a district and state CIO official, but he says he wouldn't seize on that as an excuse to go outside his bailiwick on a local contest. "I'm not soft in the head," he remarked.

FLYING SAUCER Luncheonette, center of a group of arrests in the breakup of a juvenile vice ring, was impartial in its treatment of Democratic candidates. Signs outside the Saucer urged citizens to nominate both Sully and Buck.

BEST PLAY on words in the pre-primary campaigning were those signs of the losing GOP aspirant, urging people to "Prosper with Lacava." When the returns were in, Ald. Prosper Lacava was on a starvation diet.

NOW that the primaries are past, maybe the groups protesting reassessment program can hope to have their lawsuit heard before election. But perhaps they aren't so eager now. Leaders in the move were eliminated in the primary.

NINE faculty members at TCC and 128 students donated a pint of blood each when the Bloodmobile visited the campus. Sophomores and juniors gave 40 pints apiece but percentagewise the seniors were tops with 28 pints.

ALBERT LEVITT, who still has a big law practice in California though he's moved back to Connecticut, combined business with pleasure when he went West to win a libel suit against the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith and stayed on to clean up some legal cases. He's representing New Britain in suit against Highway Commr. G. Albert Hill.

BEST NEWS for Hardware City is settlement of New Britain Machine strike before real hardship set in for families. Threat of American Hardware strike also averted.

THAT business that Charlie Hadfield is getting at his New Britain sports shop, to settle his feud with Plainville Board of Education, is big stuff. A dozen baseballs, that's what.

MIKE CARROLL, JR., son of Plainville's Democratic first selectman, lost out for appointment as fulltime fireman. He and two others were passed over to reach fourth man on the list, Ken Nielson.

BIG DOINGS in New Brit on May 30 when new triangle at Corbin Av. and Lincoln St. is dedicated to memory of Lt. Sherrod E. Skinner, Jr. The Marine officer was killed in Korea in October, 1952, was awarded Congressional Medal of Honor posthumously.

DID YOU hear about that New Brit felow, a charming guy with no steady job, who did favors for a down businessman by driving him and his lady fair around? He's still doing the driving. But someplace along the way they shook off the businessman.

ALIENATION of affection suits seem to be on the increase in the Hardware City area. There are a couple of pips waiting trial now.

BILL KELLY, who was hurt in a collision five years ago while riding a cab, got $23,500 in settlement of his suit against Ed Fanion, cab owner, and his driver, Jack Rappanotti.

BRISTOL Savings Bank has announced it's boosting its dividend on deposits to 2¾% for the next six months. It's the trend around the state, though a few stay low.

IT TOOK a ride to Plainville to

March 26, 1954

Dear John:

Thanks muchly for the communication from ARNA. I shall hope to say my thanks to you and the other members personally at the next meeting.

As ever yours,

Mr. John MacVane
Association of Radio News Analysts
24 East 39th Street
New York 16, N.Y.

dm

correspondence to Schute.

March 25, 1954

Personal

My dear Mrs. Secretary:

At the request of Paul Hoffman I am sending you kinescopes of two recent programs dealing with the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

Sincerely yours,

The Honorable Oveta Culp Hobby
Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare
Washington, D.C.

dm

1954 MAR 12 PM 4:31
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

DMC

618TH

LA MAR 12 1954

URGENT

JACK BECK

CBS NEWS NY

SINCE WE TALKED, THORNLEY GOT HHIS QUOTE FROM HUGH BURNS. "TO THE BEST OF MY KNOWLEDGE NO OFFICIAL OR MEMBER OF THE ACLU IN CALIFORNIA EVER HAS BEEN CONVICTED AS A COMMUNIST, OR PROVED TO BE A MEMBER OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY." RIGHT NOW, AM WAITING FOR BURNS TO RETURN FROM LUNCH SO I CAN ASK HIM FURTHER QUESTIONS.

HIS EARLIER QUOTE, WHICH I GAVE YOU-

FROM SENATOR HUGH M BURNS, CHAIRMAN OF THE CALIFORNIA STATE SENATE FACT-

618TH

LA MAR 12 1954

URGENT

JACK BECK

CBS NEWS NY

SINCE WE TALKED, THORNLEY GOT HHIS QUOTE FROM HUGH BURNS. "TO THE BEST OF MY KNOWLEDGE NO OFFICIAL OR MEMBER OF THE ACLU IN CALIFORNIA EVER HAS BEEN CONVICTED AS A COMMUNIST, OR PROVED TO BE A MEMBER OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY." RIGHT NOW, AM WAITING FOR BURNS TO RETURN FROM LUNCH SO I CAN ASK HIM FURTHER QUESTIONS.

HIS EARLIER QUOTE, WHICH I GAVE YOU-

FROM SENATOR HUGH M BURNS, CHAIRMAN OF THE CALIFORNIA STATE SENATE FACT-FINDING COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES.

"THIS COMMITTEE OR ITS CHAIRMAN NEVER HAS MADE A DIRECT CHARGE THAT THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION IS COMPLETELY COMMUNIST DOMINATED. TO DO SO WOULD BE UNFAIR."

BUT BURNS SAYS HIS COMMITTEE HAS NOTED THAT IN CALIFORNIA, THE CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION HAS BEEN ACTIVE, AND HAS DEVOTED MUCH OF ITS EFFORT IN HELPING DEFEND KNOWN OR SUSPECTED COMMUNISTS.

AS A POINT IN CASE, BURNS RECALLS THAT THE ACLU HELPED THE DEFENSE AND PARTICIPATED IN THE COURT TRIAL OF THE 17 CALIFORNIA COMMUNIST LEADERS WHO WERE CONVICTED UNDER THE SMITH ACT LAST YEAR.

BURNS SAYS-"WHILE MY COMMITTEE NOR ITS CHAIRMAN MAKE NO DIRECT CHARGE THAT THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNIONIS COMMUNIST DOMINATED- INSOFAR AS THIS COMMITTEE IS CONCERNED, ITS MOTIVES IN CALIFORNIA OFTEN ARE SUSPECT.

IN REPLY, I HAVE THIS DIRECT QUOTE FROM DR. EASON MONROE, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA BRANCH OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION WHO SAYS HE ALSO IS SPEAKING FOR THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA BRANCH-

"ALLEGATIONS SUCH AS MADE BY SENATOR TENNEY /WHO WAS CHAIRMAN OF THE SENATE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE WHEN ACLU WAS LISTED AS COMMUNIST

LIBERTIES UNION HAS BEEN ACTIVE, AND HAS DEVOTED MUCH OF ITS EFFORT IN HELPING DEFEND KNOWN OR SUSPECTED COMMUNISTS.

AS A POINT IN CASE, BURNS RECALLS THAT THE ACLU HELPED THE DEFENSE AND PARTICIPATED IN THE COURT TRIAL OF THE 17 CALIFORNIA COMMUNIST LEADERS WHO WERE CONVICTED UNDER THE SMITH ACT LAST YEAR.

BURNS SAYS-"WHILE MY COMMITTEE NOR ITS CHAIRMAN MAKE NO DIRECT CHARGE THAT THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNIONIS COMMUNIST DOMINATED- INSOFAR AS THIS COMMITTEE IS CONCERNED, ITS MOTIVES IN CALIFORNIA OFTEN ARE SUSPECT.

IN REPLY, I HAVE THIS DIRECT QUOTE FROM DR. EASON MONROE, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA BRANCH OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION WHO SAYS HE ALSO IS SPEAKING FOR THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA BRANCH-

"ALLEGATIONS SUCH AS MADE BY SENATOR TENNEY /WHO WAS CHAIRMAN OF THE SENATE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE WHEN ACLU WAS LISTED AS COMMUNIST FRONT ORGANIZATION IN ,43, ,48 AND ,49/ AND OTHERS ARE BASED UPON IGNORANCE OF THE PURPOSE AND ACTUAL RECORD OF THE ACLU. WE NEVER HAVE DEFENDED ANY PERSON OR GROUP IN HISTORY. WE DEFEND THE RIGHTS OF ANY INDIVIDUAL OR GROUP WHOSE RIGHTS MAY HAVE BEEN INFRINGED. BY DOING THIS WE ARE DEFENDING THE RIGHTS OF EVERYBODY. THE RECORD IS CLEAR. WE HAVE, AT TIMES, DEFENDED THE RIGHTS OF COMMUNISTS, FASCISTS, TROTZKYITES, AND, IN SOME CASES, PEOPLE ACCUSED OF MURDER, NARCOTICS ADDICTION AND MANY OTHER FORMS OF IRREGULAR BEHAVIOUR.

"AS AN ORGANIZATION, THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION IS OPPOSED TO COMMUNISM. WE, NEVERTHELESS, DEFEND THE RIGHTS OF COMMUNISTS AS PEOPLE AND THE RIGHTS OF SO-CALLED COMMUNIST ORGANIZATIONS TO ENGAGE IN NORMAL POLITICAL ACTIVITY. THIS IS NOT TO CONDONE ANY FORMS OF ILLEGAL OR CRIMINAL CONDUCT ON THE PART OF ANY PERSON OR GROUP. IF ANY INTERESTED PERSON WILL TAKE TIME TO INSPECT OUR WORK, HE WILL UNDERSTAND BETTER AND BE ABLE MORE ACCURATELY TO JUDGE THOROUGHLY THE PATRIOTIC CHARACTER OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION."

AND DR. EASON ADDS--"THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION NEVER HAS BEEN COMMUNIST DOMINATED OR COMMUNIST INFILTRATED AND IS NOT TODAY." END QUOTE.

AT TIMES, DEFENDED THE RIGHTS OF COMMUNISTS, FASCISTS, TROTZKYITES, AND, IN SOME CASES, PEOPLE ACCUSED OF MURDER, NARCOTICS ADDICTION AND MANY OTHER FORMS OF IRREGULAR BEHAVIOUR.

"AS AN ORGANIZATION, THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION IS OPPOSED TO COMMUNISM. WE, NEVERTHELESS, DEFEND THE RIGHTS OF COMMUNISTS AS PEOPLE AND THE RIGHTS OF SO-CALLED COMMUNIST ORGANIZATIONS TO ENGAGE IN NORMAL POLITICAL ACTIVITY. THIS IS NOT TO CONDONE ANY FORMS OF ILLEGAL OR CRIMINAL CONDUCT ON THE PART OF ANY PERSON OR GROUP. IF ANY INTERESTED PERSON WILL TAKE TIME TO INSPECT OUR WORK, HE WILL UNDERSTAND BETTER AND BE ABLE MORE ACCURATELY TO JUDGE THOROUGHLY THE PATRIOTIC CHARACTER OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION."

AND DR. EASON ADDS--"THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION NEVER HAS BEEN COMMUNIST DOMINATED OR COMMUNIST INFILTRATED AND IS NOT TODAY." END QUOTE.

EASON POINTS OUT THAT THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION HAS NOT BEEN MEMTIONED AS COMMUNIST-INFILTRATED IN ANY REPORT SINCE HUGH M. BURNS TOOK OVER AS CHAIRMAN IN 1951. HE POINTS OUT THAT THE ONLY TWO TIMES ON RECORD, THE ACLU HAS BEEN SO MENTIONED WERE IN THE CALIFORNIA UN-AMERICAN REPORT AND BY THE OLD FISH COMMITTEE IN NEW YORK IN THE LATE TWENTIES OR VERY EARLY THIRTIES.

EASON IS CALLING ME BACK WITH THE EXACT ACTION WHICH THE CALIFORNIA ACLU TOOK IN ,43, ,48 AND ,49. IT,S HIS RECOLLECTION THAT THE ACLU ASKED FOR CHANCES TO REPLY TO THOSE CHARGES BUT WAS NOT GIVEN THAT OPPORTUNITY.

HOWEVER, WILL FOLLOW WITH EXACT DETAILS PLUS, I HOPE, FURTHER REMEM-BRANCES OF SENATOR BURNS AND WHOEVER HE CAN PUT ME ONTO.

BARNEY

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a full-rate Telegram or Cablegram unless its deferred character is indicated by a suitable symbol above or preceding the address.

WESTERN UNION

1220

W. P. MARSHALL, PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS

DL=Day Letter

NL=Night Letter

LT=Int'l Letter Telegram

VLT=Int'l Victory Ltr.

(36). 1954 MAR 12 PM 12 38

The filing time shown in the date line on telegrams and day letters is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

Used 7:45 3/12/54

NA106 LONG PD=U WASHINGTON DC 12 1215PME=

EDWARD R MURROW, COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM=

DLR 485 MADISON AVE=

RE MCCARTHY QUOTATION FROM LINCOLN SEE NOTRE DAME LAWYER, WINTER 1954 REPRINT, PAGES 192, 193. LINCOLN SAID IN SAME SPEECH: "I HOPE I AM OVER WARY; BUT IF I AM NOT, THERE IS, EVEN NOW, SOMETHING OF ILL-OMEN AMONGST US. I MEAN THE INCREASING DISREGARD FOR LAW WHICH PERVADES THE COUNTRY; THE GROWING DISPOSITION TO SUBSTITUTE THE WILD AND FURIOUS PASSIONS, IN LIEU OF THE SOBER JUDGMENT OF COURTS; AND THE WORSE THAN SAVAGE MOBS, FOR THE EXECUTIVE MINISTERS OF JUSTICE". KEEP UP THE GOOD WORK=

MERTON C BERNSTEIN 3636 16TH STREET NW WASHINGTON DC=

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

F. 511

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

To Dr. Stanton, Messrs. Murrow and Salant

From Mr. Brauner

Station

March 19, 1954

In my opinion, it is highly desirable that the McCarthy "See It Now" script be reviewed by the Legal Department in advance of broadcast. I suggest the following ground rules:

1. The attorney reviewing the script will not disclose or discuss the contents prior to the broadcast with anyone other than Senator McCarthy and his authorized representatives.

2. The review will be limited to questions of defamation.

3. Senator McCarthy will be requested to delete material which, in the opinion of the reviewing attorney, is defamatory. However, every effort will be made to accomplish this result by persuasion. If persuasion is not successful

(i) if the risk does not seem too great, we should assume it,

(ii) if the risk seems to be a major one, we will request an indemnity from the Senator, and

(iii) possibly, if the risk is really serious, we will insist on a deletion or instruct the audio engineer to fade out the offending material.

I do not anticipate that we will have to take action under either (ii) or (iii) above. However, we should decide in advance either (1) that we will not insist on either of such courses of action or (2) that the decision will be exclusively that of the attorney, or (3) that we should not insist on either (ii) or (iii) without the concurrence of Mr. Stanton or Mr. Salant. I recommend against (3) because if senior management is given an opportunity to pass on the risks involved, it would necessitate disclosing at least a portion of the script in advance of broadcast and it would lend additional credence to a possible claim by McCarthy that the required deletion was based on considerations other than strictly legal ones.

4. Script and all other materials to be used should be submitted sufficiently in advance to permit changes. The CBS attorney should be available up to the time of broadcast to cooperate with McCarthy in any changes which he wishes to make.

5. I recommend that no deletions be requested because material is defamatory as to Mr. Murrow. The Senator should be informed that failure to object to any such material does not constitute waiver of any rights which Murrow may have.

JVB/mk

From - Chester Williams
Returned by lawyers 4/9/54

CONFIDENTIAL

March 21, 1954

Points to take up with Ed Murrow:

1. The person that they seem to be talking about as the counsel for this special thing is Bob Kennedy, the son of Joseph P. Kennedy, and the brother of the Senator from Massachusetts. He is a Catholic and McNaughton tells me that he hates Cohn but likes Joe McCarthy.

2. McClellan, Potter, Jackson and Symington are the only ones on the Committee that can be depended upon.

McClellan (Ark.) is the strongest and shrewdest. He is a small town lawyer, prosecutor, Bible-Belt man, ultra-conservative and absolutely invulnerable to McCarthy because McCarthy can't claim he is in any sense a liberal or a left-winger. His great strength lies in his moral revulsion to unfairness and in the fact that, unlike Symington, he has no political ambitions to protect.

Potter (Penna.) He loss both his legs in the war. He became infuriated with McCarthy because of his attack on the Army and he is invulnerable as a veteran leader.

Jackson is a middle-of-the-roader, speaks well and is fairly shrewd.

Symington is the unknown quantity on the Democratic side, according to McNaughton - because he has ambition.

Incidentally, none of these fellows come up for reelection.

3. Mundt and Dirksen have been making critical remarks publicly in order to strengthen their position to achieve a compromise and save McCarthy.

4. The compromise involves forcing Cohn to take the rap for McCarthy and Adams to take the rap for Stevens. This is a part of the significance in naming Bob Kennedy.

5. Suggest Murrow bring William T. Evjue, the editor of the Madison, Wisconsin, Times on the program immediately following McCarthy's TV appearance on April 6. Evjue is a most effective speaker and has an encyclopaedic grasp of the whole McCarthy story. One of the best ways to answer McCarthy is with an editor from his own state. Also, this is a way by which Murrow can prepare his own remarks in his mind while a part of the answer is being given by someone else. It has also the advantage of associating Murrow with the press, as a reporter, rather than a debater, and Murrow can then afford to concentrate his remarks on the last five or six minutes of the program.

6. McNaughton and Douglas urge Murrow to check with C. D. Jackson as soon as possible.

7. The main line to keep in the forefront is McCarthy's attack on the President- such film clips as the one where he says, "The President agrees with me now" should be repeated. Also his statement about not giving a tinker's damn for people, high or low. The statements of McCarthy on Zwicker and disparaging Stevens. All of this strikes at the President and helps prevent Mundt and Dirksen from getting away with the compromise. Conversely, it is important not to juxtaposition the Democrats and Stevenson with McCarthy, because he will try to get off the hook by promising to concentrate on the Democrats.

8. McNaughton feels that Murrow will be called by McCarthy as soon as he can get off the hook on the Army case. He might try to maneuver a secret session to test out his line and give him an opportunity to grab the headlines for his accusations and interpretations. Murrow should insist upon a public hearing. He should also avoid a setup whereby McCarthy, Mundt, Dirksen and only one of the Democrats would be present-- especially if that one were Symington. One maneuver to be careful of is to have the hearing in New York - called quickly. Murrow can be sure that the Democratic members and Potter would set aside almost anything else to be on hand.

9. Suggest that Murrow dig out one or two of his best pieces exposing and attacking the methods of Vishinsky and possibly also of Hitler to use at the hearing, blandly asking for permission to read a short statement. Excerpts from these statements should be selected to appear to be a direct attack and insult to Senator McCarthy, being careful to give no hint as to the source or the persons being referred to. The object should be to infuriate McCarthy so that he would threaten contempt or at least demand an apology for casting aspersions on him. Then Murrow can say blandly, "I am sorry, Senator, I neglected to state that the sentences I have just read were written (date) and refer, not to you, Sir, but to Mr. Vishinsky and Mr. Hitler." This should be backed up with a collection of quotations from Murrow's broadcasts dealing with the methods of Vishinsky, Stalin, Hitler and Mussolini which could be given to the press following the hearing. The aim is to get headlines which say "Murrow Tries Vishinsky's Shoes On McCarthy For Size -- McCarthy Says They Fit".

10. Suggest featuring in the near future the editorial "Is Senator Joe McCarthy Really a Communist?" This was an editorial from the Trenton, N.J. Evening Times, and was written by James Kearney, editor and publisher, who is a prominent Catholic layman in New Jersey, and reproduced on the editorial page of The Denver Post, published by Palmer Hoyt. This might be used shortly after the McCarthy appearance on SEE IT NOW -- perhaps the following week, or possibly the week before as an incitement. The last five or six minutes of the program on March 31 could be devoted to introducing the fact that McCarthy would have the entire period the next week and that Murrow does not want to deprive him of any time by introducing him extensively- so he would like to make a short biographical presentation of the speaker. This could be illustrated with photographs and clips highlighting such milestones in McCarthy's career as his deals with the Air Force to advance his political career, his claim to being shot and carrying 50 points of lead in his leg, his acceptance of Communist support in Wisconsin, his defense in Congress of the Nazis who were convicted for executing American soldiers which resulted in commutation of their sentences, McCarthy's attack on General Marshall, statements from his earlier attacks on Eisenhower before the Republican convention, his left-wing reputation in college, Philbrick's statement about his helpfulness to the Communists - the fact that he has not exposed a single Communist not already known to the authorities but has tried to discredit non-communists and anti-communists such as Jack McCloy, etd.

These biographical points could lead up to the reading of the editorial mentioned above. This would make it pretty essential for McCarthy to answer the question, "Is he really a Communist?"

11. It might be possible to concentrate public attention on a few basic questions which McCarthy is being given the opportunity to answer by exhibiting a placard for a few seconds when Murrow introduces the Senator to come in from Washington. It is most important that in this introduction Murrow indicate that he invited the Senator to come on the program to answer the questions and points which Murrow raised on the program attacking him. Then with the 15-minute-trailer the same placard can be exhibited to show that McCarthy did not answer the questions. Murrow should be able to say at the very beginning of his trailer show - "Senator McCarthy has dodged the questions and the points; he has told new lies and half-lies." It would be important not to announce that an immediate reply would be made until the very end of SEE IT NOW. It probably would also be wise to offer McCarthy fifteen minutes in which to answer what Murrow says on the trailer program. The vital thing is to keep him in the answering position and constantly to accuse him of hiding behind a McCarthy amendment- constantly accusing him of refusing to answer or to manfully admit demonstrated falsehoods.

12. McCarthy may dodge going on the program April 6 - in which case the preparations for the trailer program could be substituted for at least half of it. He should be challenged to come on the program -- perhaps Murrow could offer to send a crew to Washington to film his reply at any time of day or night so he can't claim that he is unable to make a particular date or time. The reason he may be unwilling to come on the program is that his only answer is an attack on Murrow which would lay him open to a libel suit or so restrict him statements as to make his performance fall flat.

13. If he attacks Murrow and, in the judgment of a lawyer on the spot, provides good basis for a libel suit, it would probably be wise to announce the suit in the trailer program, stating precisely what the suit would force him to prove. Such a libel suit ought to be tied up with the "due process" angle.

Confidential

March 25, 1954

Memorandum - E. Murrow

Contrary to my last memorandum, I believe the preferable approach on next Tuesday's SEE IT NOW is not to talk about McCarthy but about Murrow.

As I see it, the last half of the program might be devoted to a very terse biographical coverage of the man whom McCarthy is about to expose as a "conscious" supporter of Communism. The McCarthy telegram could be featured as the visual statement of the subject.

Then you would be in a position to say that you owe it to your audience to give the highlights of the activities and associations of the man whom McCarthy has named as his target for next Tuesday night. You have nothing to hide, but you are a human being who has made mistakes, has learned from mistakes, and has trusted other human beings.

The problem is one of selection, to make sure that you have said something about every possible area of vulnerability in the context of the times -- and in the process have given a fascinating review of history for all adults.

This, it seems to me, would make it very difficult for McCarthy to pull any surprises and, therefore, to appear on the program the following week.

The power of the little black book is lost when the victims are unafraid and, therefore, reveal the contents before they can be distorted.

Naturally, I would be very glad to be helpful on details. My only purpose at this moment is to suggest that it would be better to handle this as a biographical presentation in the context of history than an explanation after an attack.

C.S.W.

Chester Williams

HOYT A. MOORE
DOUGLAS M. MOFFAT
CARL W. PAINTER
LEONARD D. ADKINS
MAURICE T. MOORE
DONALD C. SWATLAND
BRUCE BROMLEY
ROSWELL MAGILL
A. I. HENDERSON
WM DWIGHT WHITNEY
ALFRED McCORMACK
CARLYLE E. MAW
EDWARD S. PINNEY
ROSWELL L. GILPATRIC
THOMAS A. HALLERAN
ALBERT R. CONNELLY
L. R. BRESLIN, JR.
BENJAMIN R. SHUTE
GEORGE B. TURNER
FRANK H. DETWEILER
GEORGE G. TYLER
JOHN H. MORSE
HAROLD R. MEDINA, JR.
FREDERICK S. BEEBE
CHARLES R. LINTON
WILLIAM B. MARSHALL
RALPH L. McAFEE
ROYALL VICTOR, JR.
JOHN N. CALDERWOOD

CRAVATH, SWAINE & MOORE
15 BROAD STREET
NEW YORK 5

TELEPHONE
HANOVER 2-3000

CABLE ADDRESS: CRAVATH, N.Y.

File

NEW YORK

May 4, 1954

Dear Ed:

Enclosed is a copy of Chester Williams's letter to me dated April 29, 1954, which contains some material I think you will be interested in seeing.

Sincerely,

Ben.

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N. Y.

Encl.

BY HAND

QQ

[Letterhead of]

WORLD INFORMATION
EMPIRE STATE BUILDING - NEW YORK 1, N. Y.
LAckawanna 4-8663

CHESTER S. WILLIAMS
HERBERT HARRIS

April 29, 1954

Mr. Benjamin R. Shute,
Cravath, Swaine & Moore,
15 Broad Street,
New York 5, N.Y.

Dear Ben:

A thought occurred to me as I watched a summary of the hearings last night. The pattern being followed by the Senator in his use of certain standard Communist tricks bears a striking resemblance to the performance of Malik during the month-long frustration of the members of the Security Council to bring a Korean resolution to a vote. That was televised in toto during August, 1950, and claimed the largest TV audience up to that time.

The country was so aroused by the tricks and tactics of Malik that Ambassador Austin received as many as 6000 letters a week. Lawyers by the hundreds wrote suggestions on how to cope with these tactics. I was working with Austin on his interventions. One speech he delivered during that hassel was particularly note-worthy - a speech exposing the "tricks" being used - the "stop-thief" trick, the "false label" trick, and the "big lie" trick.

My thought is this: developing a comparison program for SEE IT NOW matching clips from these two series of TV records (a) the Malik performance and (b) the McCarthy performance - trick for trick. I recall also several occasions on which Vishinsky used precisely the tactics of McCarthy when being rapped down by the chairman as out of order.

It would, of course, take some time to review these materials and select sequences that match effectively. In any case, such a thing could not be done until the present hearings are over. I believe such a comparison would make a terrific impact on the matter of methods. It is, of course, difficult to predict the state of public attitude a month or so from now. People may be pretty fed up and the Senator discredited in the course of these hearings. But so far, he seems to be holding his own if not winning on propaganda points. In any case, his performance might be studied now against the Malik record for possible use later.

I sometimes wonder if those who are handling the army side of this thing realize how effective most of McCarthy's tactics and propaganda tricks are with the mass mind. So far they have done very little to expose the tricks or to avail themselves of the right to reject "loaded questions".

It seems to me that McCarthy may still succeed with his methods and rise to new heights of power when he reclaims his role of inquisitor. Therein lies the danger to our friend who is undoubtedly high on the list of persons to be victimized later. Naturally I hope that my pessimism is proved wrong by events.

If you think the suggestion I have made merits attention, I leave it to you to pass it on.

I feel very happy about the film. It has a lot of punch and power, and there is wide interest in its use already. I hope you may be able to see the preview next Tuesday at 4PM at Freedom House. But if you miss it, you may catch it any day during the week of May 10th at 12:30 Noon or 5:30 PM.

Best wishes,

Very sincerely,

/s/ Chester

Chester S. Williams

CSW:tef

HOYT A. MOORE
DOUGLAS M. MOFFAT
CARL W. PAINTER
LEONARD D. ADKINS
MAURICE T. MOORE
DONALD C. SWATLAND
BRUCE BROMLEY
ROSWELL MAGILL
A. I. HENDERSON
Wm DWIGHT WHITNEY
ALFRED McCORMACK
CARLYLE E. MAW
EDWARD S. PINNEY
ROSWELL L. GILPATRIC
THOMAS A. HALLERAN
ALBERT R. CONNELLY
L. R. BRESLIN, JR.
BENJAMIN R. SHUTE
GEORGE B. TURNER
FRANK H. DETWEILER
GEORGE G. TYLER
JOHN H. MORSE
HAROLD R. MEDINA, JR.
FREDERICK S. BEEBE
CHARLES R. LINTON
WILLIAM B. MARSHALL
RALPH L. McAFEE
ROYALL VICTOR, JR.
JOHN N. CALDERWOOD

CRAVATH, SWAINE & MOORE
15 BROAD STREET
NEW YORK 5

TELEPHONE
HANOVER 2-3000

CABLE ADDRESS: CRAVATH, N.Y.

NEW YORK

April 20, 1954

Dear Ed:

Over the week end, Chester Williams gave me the attached letter and two memoranda, all of which I think you should have.

The question of whether or not to go ahead with any of Chester's ideas is a policy matter, it seems to me, for you and your associates in the Company to decide.

Sincerely,

Ben Shute

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N. Y.

Encls.

BY HAND

PERSONAL

QQ

WORLD INFORMATION

Research Consultants

EMPIRE STATE BUILDING • NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

LACKAWANNA 4-8663

CHESTER S. WILLIAMS
HERBERT HARRIS

April 17, 1954

Dear Ben:

Here is a very rough memo along the lines of our conversation yesterday. It is hardly more than suggestive of an approach. I feel that I might be helpful in developing the idea out from my past experience and my writings covering this historical subject matter.

The film in preparation should be completed next week. I am assisting as a consultant on the content for a very modest fee and expenses. When that is done, I feel that I will have done about as much as I can "for the good of the cause".

Actually, on a matter of such importance I dislike making suggestions or offering judgements more or less off the top of my head, devoting only tag-ends of time from my regular business. In the past few weeks I have been very busy with a number of business clients so that most of my thinking or acting on this matter had to be done at night and on week-ends with the help of Pat.

If Ed and CBS feel that my services would be useful from here on, I would be happy to discuss an arrangement. As indicated in a previous memo, I believe that the problem needs to be faced through an industry-wide committee employing top-flight PR counsel as the cigarette industry has done. If such a thing is contemplated, I would naturally appreciate the consideration of Hill and Knowlton, the firm which handles the cigarette account, Iron and Steel Institute and many other industry accounts of similar magnitude. As you know, I devote a considerable portion of my time to Hill and Knowlton accounts. And I dare say that in the event such an arrangement were made, I would give a good deal of my time to it through Hill and Knowlton.

I have found it most refreshing and heartening that a lawyer of your experience and background is giving attention to this matter. With every good wish for your success, I am,

Very sincerely,

Chester

Chester S. Williams

Mr. Ben Shute,
161 E. 79th St.
New York City

CSW:mea

Notes for Murrow

1. It appeared at the time of the March 9 report on SEE IT NOW that the Senator had finally gone too far - large section of the press was openly critical; public attitudes were shifting; even some of his friends and supporters were apologetic and hedging. (See April FORTUNE for a survey on business attitudes - soundings taken in February.)

2. It would seem almost axiomatic that if he is not discredited and brought under control, he will eventually discredit and/or bring to heel those persons and institutions which have critized him effectively. Foremost among these is Murrow and CBS.

3. It would now appear to be a good bet that he can get out from under, that he may even succeed in derailing the hearings or at least extricating himself from them, and that he is about to soar to new heights. If this proves to be the case, Murrow and CBS are in very great danger indeed.

4. One of his main sources of strength lies in the lack of public perspective on history and the context of the accusations in time and circumstance. Another, even more important, is the rising fear and frustration caused by set-backs in world affairs and the threat of atomic destruction. Murrow and CBS can do something about the first, but very little about the second which obviously calls for national leadership.

5. The Oppenheimer case is a classic pattern of the individual record read out of historic context and subjected to the pressures of irrational fear. It must be faced as a fact that among the upper 10 or 20% of the intellectually curious, at least a million people are to some degree or another highly vulnerable to the Senator's type of attack. These people tend to be among the successful in many fields. They are between 40 and 60 years of age. A disproportionate number in this group are Jews. Some of this number were active Communists in the 1930s or during the wartime alliance. But the majority were merely drawn into front organizations or had close associations with Communists. This means that the Senator and his allies have an unlimited reservoir of victims and sensations.

6. One thing that is clearly needed is to reconstruct history and make people acutely aware both mentally and emotionally of the changing times and circumstances as well as the personalities such as General MacArthur, Sokolsky and others who changed with the times. The original HEAR IT NOW did this job in a striking manner. It now needs to be done on SEE IT NOW in such a way that it can be used in Newsreel Theatres and on 16mm through organizations - as HERE IT NOW reached a wider public on long-playing records. Several alternative ways of bringing the thing to focus on one or more personalities should be considered.

April 17, 1954

NOTES ON AN HISTORIC SERIES FOR SEE IT NOW.

1. The purpose of a series on SEE IT NOW covering the past 38 years since Lenin seized power in Russia is to make Americans acutely aware of -
   a) how totalitarian movements developed and supplemented each other;
   b) how and why so many people were caught in totalitarian toils;
   c) how free societies tried to cope with these rising movements;
   d) why it is essential to weigh evidence in the context of history.

2. The general treatment suggested is very similar to HEAR IT NOW using silent and sound films to document the story. Also, photos, newspapers, books and maps will be useful. The film should make up a full length movie.

3. Alternative treatments of a biographical thread:

   a) The Oppenheimer story might be used - if he is cleared - to tie the sequences together and show one person's activities and reactions against the historical developments. This would have the effect of backing up the administration in its decision by enabling people to see and feel the circumstances which explain Oppenheimer's actions and attitudes.

   b) A well-known Communist like Paul Robeson might be used. I understand that he is arranging a break and is ready to denounce Soviet imperialism. He has been discussing the matter with Walter White. If the series could be opened with a startling episode of confession and forthright attack on Communism so that Murrow would be facilitating a break - a conversion - the rest of the story could then pick up the threads of this individual's role in the light of history.

      In this case, Murrow could plug on each program an appeal to other Communists to break and announce new conversions each week. The central need is to give persons who were Communists or may still be Communists a chance to break openly by coming out on the side of Freedom and decency and not being forced to join the anti-Communist totalitarians.

      Several lawyers I know could provide a "stockpile" of cases if such an approach were planned. There are quite a number who are looking for a way to denounce their former allegiance or collaboration with Communism in a public way without acting as public informers for the publicity of totalitarian characters like McCarthy. They are prepared to give information secretly to the FBI, but not to make a show of it.

      In my judgement, the use of Paul Robeson would be a terrific stroke because of the effect of his break and exposure of cynical Communist methods upon Asia and two-thirds of a world which is colored. Murrow could thus do a constructive job and demonstrate the difference between the ways of freedom and honest reporting on the one side, and Communazi tactics and distorted reporting on the other side.

   c) Still another approach might be to take an unknown, little person who had naively gotten involved in front organizations and Communist causes without ever having been a Communist, who subsequently suffered the loss of job and status because of derogatory material in his file which made him a "security risk".

4. It would take probably 6 weeks to 2 months to get the material together.

Perhaps the project ought to be thought of as a series to be featured in September and October rather than during the summer, though there may be something to be said for a July and August series under CBS sustaining basis. If 12 minutes were featured each program, it would take 8 or 9 weeks to cover the series. Then the film would be available for fall use.

5. Obviously, such an undertaking involves so many considerations that the general idea and the treatment would have to be considered for some weeks before a plan could even be agreed upon. One factor, among many, is the November election. The election fact itself suggests both the importance of doing such a job in an even-handed, factual way, and also the difficulties involved in doing it. There are undoubtedly risks in doing it at any time. But, in my view, the risks of not doing it in the near future are much greater. CBS should start with the basic fact that it is in trouble - bad trouble. It has a right to fight for its life fairly and honestly. But I doubt that it has the choice of not fighting, and hoping that it will ride out the storm. Doing the wrong thing, or doing a right thing in the wrong way, could compound the trouble. But not doing anything could result in the loss of its power to defend freedom and sanity in the future, and in the loss of its right to operate as a free enterprise. Pegler's recent columns should be studied in the light of two facts: a) McCarthy's preparation of an attack on the whole mass media, and b) McCarthy's presence in Pegler's home at the time he was writing these columns. There are many other significant straws in the wind which forewarn of an onslaught on the radio-TV industry.

HOYT A. MOORE
DOUGLAS M. MOFFAT
CARL W. PAINTER
LEONARD D. ADKINS
MAURICE T. MOORE
DONALD C. SWATLAND
BRUCE BROMLEY
ROSWELL MAGILL
A. I. HENDERSON
WM DWIGHT WHITNEY
ALFRED McCORMACK
CARLYLE E. MAW
EDWARD S. PINNEY
ROSWELL L. GILPATRIC
THOMAS A. HALLERAN
ALBERT R. CONNELLY
L. R. BRESLIN, JR.
BENJAMIN R. SHUTE
GEORGE B. TURNER
FRANK H. DETWEILER
GEORGE G. TYLER
JOHN H. MORSE
HAROLD R. MEDINA, JR.
FREDERICK S. BEEBE
CHARLES R. LINTON
WILLIAM B. MARSHALL
RALPH L. McAFEE
ROYALL VICTOR, JR.
JOHN N. CALDERWOOD

CRAVATH, SWAINE & MOORE
15 BROAD STREET
NEW YORK 5

TELEPHONE
HANOVER 2-3000

CABLE ADDRESS: CRAVATH, N.Y.

NEW YORK

April 24, 1954

Dear Ed:

I have just received a further thought from Chester Williams, as set forth in his letter dated April 22, 1954, which I enclose herewith.

I shall read Dr. Schaffner's book--which is on a subject I am particularly interested in, as a result of my two years with McCloy in Germany--and send along to you any comments I have.

Sincerely,

Ben Shute

Edward R. Murrow, Esq.,
Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York 22, N. Y.

Encl.

QQ

WORLD INFORMATION

Research Consultants

EMPIRE STATE BUILDING • NEW YORK 1, N. Y.

LACKAWANNA 4-8663

CHESTER S. WILLIAMS
HERBERT HARRIS

April 22, 1954

Mr. Ben Shute
Cravath, Swaine and Moore
15 Broad Street
New York, New York

Dear Ben:

Recalling your comment at my apartment the other day -- "Wish I had a good psychiatrist at my elbow," I call to your attention the name of a neuro-psychiatrist, Dr. Bertram Schaffner. He is one of the few psychiatrists I have ever met who has a sociological understanding and is not a victim of fettishes.

I am sending you, under separate cover, one of his books entitled "Father Land" -- a study based upon his work with German prisoners of war. Quite apart from your possible interest in the services of such a person, Schaffner's book contains some very interesting data.

During our tussles with Vishinsky, Gromyko and company at the United Nations, Schaffner and one of his colleagues consulted with me from time to time on the preparation of speeches for Ambassador Austin before the Security Council. I also did a little work with him in connection with another book on Russian family and social patterns, which contained some very useful clues to the motivations of Soviet spokesmen.

Schaffner continues to be an occasional consultant to the Army and other governmental agencies with international concerns. He has a remarkable political sense, gained, I think, largely through his war and post-war experiences in Germany and other countries.

If something could be put together for an industry-wide special public relations program along the lines previously suggested, I think Schaffner would be a most useful consultant. He would also be helpful in connection with the preparation of an historical series, especially if it involved the personality I mentioned. Making such a break is, of course, a most torturous and delicate operation requiring psychiatric assistance.

Very sincerely

Chet

Chester S. Williams

jr

TO McD 4/18

FROM E. C. Perkins (one of the lawyers.)

This item was received by me on April 13 through Mr. Shute. I have retained a copy for our files and suggest that perhaps this should be seen by Mr. Murrow.

Mr. M-

April 10, 1954

Points to Consider

1. Importance of exposing the tricks of McCarthy and how they play into the hands of the Soviets regarding the H-Bomb delay and how that might lead to the death of the nation. This can probably best be done by a full treatment of the record, showing what was involved in the decision, who was involved in the discussion and decision, and what were the reasons pro and con in the context of the time. It is vital in this connection to make understandable the reluctance of some scientists to venture into the area of global destruction, and to make it clear that their reluctance did not influence the decision.

2. McCarthy himself said, "The issue is simple: it is the issue of life or death for our civilization.

   "If I am giving comfort to our enemies, I ought not to be in the Senate. If on the other hand, Mr. Murrow is giving comfort to our enemies, he ought not to be brought into the homes of millions of Americans by the Columbia Broadcasting System. This is a question which can be resolved with very little difficulty."

   Consideration should be given to a formulation of a challenge by which this precise question should be put up to a jury in a court of law - which has been and is giving comfort to the enemy by his words and actions?

   Having put the question, McCarthy insists upon being judge, jury and executioner. If he is confident that the record will support him and will convict Murrow, why is he afraid to let the question be decided by due process? Who does he dodge the courtroom?

3. Device used on Person-to-Person with Marx Friday night should be used further to bring out human details of Murrow's past - with the light touch.

4. Some method should be found to forewarn of McCarthy's implied method of changing the subject - of getting off the hot spot. He is likely to claim as the investigation of the Committee gets under way that it must be concluded quickly or set aside so that he may bring in his evidence that Communists and Traitors were responsible for the deliberate delay on the H-bomb, and are even now tying our hands behind our back - "that the nation may well die". He will scoff at the "tempest in the teapot" over subordinates designed by left-wingers to suppress his exposure of their most diabolical plot. At least, he will conjure up one sensation after another to bury the hearings. If he can get a postponement to make a speech in Texas, he can probably manage to derail the hearing while he rushes off to catch some traitor in the act of crippling our H-bomb program. This raises the most serious dilemma, for which some considered strategy should be prepared. See the George Rothwell Brown piece for a hint of one of the lines he might be expected to use.

Suggested Murrow comment - (After first papagraph on p. 10 of April 6 - ~~THIXXXXXXXXXX~~ The last few sentences you have heard from Senator McCathy's April 6th film require close examination. In this passage he has borrowed and employed several Communist tricks.

First comes the "straw man" trick. ~~of the~~ He starts his question with ~~the~~ a phrase he has repeated several times before, "If there were no Communists in our Government..." Who ever claimed there were no Communists in our government? Certainly this reporter has reported ~~[illegible]~~ specific cases where the FBI and Security Boards have found and thrown out Communists. ~~[illegible]~~ McCarthy is simply using the trick of the "straw man", ~~to launch a loaded question.~~

Second, comes the trick of the "loaded question", ~~itself.~~ Without making any assertion or giving any proof, he blandly asks why there was a delay of 18 months on our hydrogen bomb research. Without saying so, he tries to put over the idea that Communists in our government caused such a delay. This is just the type of "loaded question" the Communists used when they first launched the "big lie" that U.S. airmen dropped Germ-bombs on North Korea. They asked this, "If the Americans are against germ warfare, why have they refused to sign the Geneva convention outlawing it?"

You will recall that ~~earlier,~~ early in the speech McCarthy called me "the leader and the cleverest of the jackal pack which is always found at the throat of anyone who dares expose individual Communists and traitors." Then as he led up to his H-Bomb tricks, he accused "the jackal pack of Communist-line propagandists, including the friends of Mr. Edward R. Murrow," of delivering 400 million Chinese to Communism.

~~So he led up to the~~ Third, he used trick of guilt by implication. Without taking responsibility for asserting it, McCarthy planted the suggestion that Murrow was somehow guilty of causing an 18 months delay in our hydrogen bomb research.

Note carefully the fourth trick - the terror tick. He says twice, "our nation may well die". Why? "Because of that 18 months' deliberate delay."

This is the most important passage in the speech. Here McCarthy makes a desperate effort to change the subject - to get himself off of the hot spot he is in. He plays upon the fear of death - not only of the victims of a bombing attack - but death of the nation itself.

He does not name anyone as responsible for the unproved "deliberate delay". He just asks two more loaded questions, and leaves the terror thought to burrow into the subconscious minds of his listeners.

There actually was a difference of opinion over whether to proceed with the hydrogen bomb experiment. Representative Sterling Cole, Republican of _____ and now Chairman of the Joint Atomic Energy Commission was among those who opposed going forward with the H-bomb work. Harry Truman supported by Dean Acheson settled the question with the decision of January 31, 1950 to go ahead.

Following his filmed "loaded questions" on April 6, McCarthy refused to offer any proof of delay or name any persons responsible. But he did say that the Senate Committee of which he is now Chairman took up the matter of possible Communist influence in delaying the hydrogen bomb a year ago - in 1953. One has a right to ask, what did the Committee find? Why didn't we hear about such a dire thing for 12 months? And Why does McCarthy bring up the issue with loaded questions and vague forebodings of national death at this time?

June 21

MEMO: TO MURROW:

I called up Helen Kirkpatrick at Smith last week to confirm a story that David Schine's sister had failed to pass entrance exams; that papa, who owns a hotel at Northampton, had dined with the Smith brass and dropped a suggestion about Smith needing a new dormitory, ~~which~~ but this did not open the gates to the daughter; and either by coincidence or some other power a sister of Buckley (the McCarthy writer) who (and one or two other Buckleys) are alumnae of Smith, sent to the complete mailing list of Alumnae a long anti-Smith diatribe charging that four members of the faculty are Communists and saying Smith was no fit place to educate a girl.

The facts are about as stated. But Helen, while admitting the possibility of cause-and-effect has no proof of it and personally sincerely doubts it. And she hoped that Smith would not be in the middle of sensational publicity about the matter.

Helen is now in town and last night went into details about the matter. But she was more interested in telling me she is marrying in two weeks Robbin Milbank, a Smith trustee, former McCann advertising V-pres in California and a wonderful man. She sounded happier than an 18 year old June bride and asked me to tell you about the marriage, sending you her regards.

Raymond

Received 5/25/54

CBS TELEVISION

Office Communication

to: Edward Murrow

from: A Friend

Due to your best interests I believe you should know or investigate the following:

Harry Truman or one of his assistants was told that if he came to The Radio TV Newsreel affair on June 4, 1954 you would give Mr Truman some sort of an award.

The party in the association who is working on this is a stooge for Walter Winchel who as you know is buddy buddy with McArthy. This party has possibly been responsible for the Irv Kahn article in Winchel's column as he is with other matters concerning CBS and international unions.

Note: Individual referred can only be Larry Racis of CBS-TV News - allegation not true - Zousmer + Aaron say they know how Winchell got info.

EdmcW.

D R A F T

Senator McCarthy attacked me because the Daily Worker on March 9th listed my television program as a "good bet" -- also, that in two subsequent issues this paper praised me. I cannot take responsibility for what the Daily Worker or any other publication has to say about my program or about me personally. I can say that I had no knowledge that I was to be the subject of notice by the Daily Worker or any other Communist publication. This is more than Senator McCarthy can say for the Communist support and the Communist funds he accepted in aid of his 1946 campaign for the United States Senate.

MARCH 11, 1954

and

MARCH 12, 1954

5 C-5

VOL. XLIII NO. 13 MARCH 29, 1954

Newsweek

Registered U. S. Patent Office

THE MAGAZINE OF NEWS SIGNIFICANCE

INDEX

News

THE AMERICAS 44
ART 82
THE BOMB 19
BOOKS 88
BUSINESS 63
EDUCATION 58
INTERNATIONAL 32
LETTERS 2
MEDICINE 76
MOVIES 86
MUSIC 84
NATIONAL AFFAIRS 24
NEWSMAKERS 42
PRESS 56
RADIO-TV 50
RELIGION 80
SCIENCE 49
SPECIAL REPORT 74
SPORTS 78
TRANSITION 59

Periscope Features

THE PERISCOPE 13
WASHINGTON TRENDS 17
BUSINESS TRENDS 61

Signed Opinion

BUSINESS TIDES, Henry Hazlitt 72
LARDNER'S WEEK, John Lardner 79
PERSPECTIVE, Raymond Moley 92
But Who Can Buy Luxuries? Leon Volkov 41

Editorial Board
Malcolm Muir, Chairman
Chet Shaw, Editorial Director
John Denson, Managing Editor
Malcolm Muir Jr., Assistant to Editorial Director
Kenneth Crawford, Senior Editor, National
Harry F. Kern, Senior Editor, International
Frank Norris, Senior Editor, Features
Niles W. von Wettberg, Senior Editor, Copy and Operations
Ernest K. Lindley, Washington Editor and Bureau Chief

Contributing Editors
Raymond Moley · Henry Hazlitt · John Lardner · Leon Volkov
Adm. William V. Pratt, USN, Retired · Gen. Carl Spaatz, USAF, Retired

News Editor: Tom Sears.
Executive Assistants: Tom Malley Frank G. McCusker.
Associate Editors: Charles H. Brown, National Reports; Allen Cleaton, Business News; Russell Countryman, Photos; Arnaud de Borchgrave, Foreign Reports; Ralph de Toledano, National Reports; Gordon C. Hamilton, Foreign Reports; James T. Howard, National Reports; Harold Lavine, Politics; John T. McAllister, Press; Harry B. Murkland, Hemisphere Affairs; Debs Myers, Trends; Charles Roberts, Periscope.
Department Editors: George A. W. Boehm, Science; Robert E. Cantwell, Books; Marguerite Clark, Medicine; Emily Coleman, Music-Dance; Terry Ferrer, Religion-Education; Jack O'Brien, Sports; Archer Speers, Art; Joan Walker, Radio-Television; T. H. Wenning, Movies-Theater.
Department Heads: Olga Barbi, Ralph D. Paladino, Donald O. Hotaling, James W. Wells.
Assistant Editors: August P. Giannini, Wilder Hobson, Clem Morgello, David Murray, Ted Robinson Jr., Sherwin D. Smith, Albert S. Wall.
Senior Editorial Assistants: Jay Brennan, Robert Carlisle, Lois Pearson, Kenneth Sarvis, Ruth Werthman, Barbara Woodman, Gerson Zelman.
Editorial Assistants: Muriel Ahern, John Andreola, Marion Barbera, Evelyn Belov, Judith Birnbaum, Joan Braddon, J. Calamari, Alida Carey, Anne Carroll, Lillian Chiriaka, Joan Daly, Helen S. Davis, Orlando Ditingo, Marianne Doyle, Jean Fishkin, Diana Fitzpatrick, Theodore Fratrik, Stephen Grover, Mary B. Hood, Ann Ivins, Larry Kamarck, Virginia Kelly, John Lynch, Elma S. Nagle, Marvel Purvis, Leonard Ragozin, Vidya Sanger, Joan Seaver, Dorothy Shedlock, Robert Shedlock, Winifred D. Shenkel, Peter Smedley, Alfred Swett, Sheila Walker, Sheldon Zalaznick, William J. Zimba.
Photo and Art Departments: Walter Bensi, Grace Dostal, Charles D. Feeney, Clyde Magill, Paul Melone, Thomas Orr Jr., Anthony Rollo, Jack Rollo, deWitt Walsh, Ed Wergeles (chief photographer).
Business Trends Consultant: Eliot Janeway.

Bureaus:
WASHINGTON, Ernest K. Lindley (chief), Wilbur H. Baldinger, Richard J. Davis, William B. Furlong, A. T. Hadley, Ann Ives, Charlotte Kennedy, John D. Leonard, Norma Milligan, Hobart Rowen, Karen Salisbury, Samuel Shaffer, Paul A. Theis, Mary V. Williams. CHICAGO, Robert H. Fleming (chief), Irwin Goodwin. DETROIT, Norman E. Nicholson (chief). LOS ANGELES, Leonard Slater (chief). ATLANTA, William A. Emerson Jr. LONDON, Edward Weintal (chief European correspondent), William D. Blair Jr. PARIS, Benjamin Bradlee (European correspondent), Richard P. Callanan (European Editions Manager), Robert Cheve (Business Manager). BONN, Robert A. Haeger (chief). TOKYO, Compton Pakenham (chief), Karl Bachmeyer (Far Eastern Manager. CAIRO, Sam Souki (chief).

Board of Directors
Vincent Astor, Chairman
Hoyt Ammidon · E. Roland Harriman · Malcolm Muir
Lewis W. Douglas · Theodore F. Mueller · Roland L. Redmond
Joseph E. Uihlein Jr.

Malcolm Muir, President
Theodore F. Mueller, Vice President and Publisher
Arthur Windett, Advertising Director
Gibson McCabe, Vice President
F. E. Davis, Circulation Manager
Thurber H. Bierce, Treasurer
James A. Richards, Production Manager

Editorial and Executive Offices:
Newsweek Building, Broadway and 42nd Street, New York 36, N. Y.

A Well-Informed Public Is America's Greatest Security

For Your Information

SPECIAL REPORT: One of NEWSWEEK's most popular features is the special report. Over the years our editors have developed a skillful technique for bringing together in one comprehensive story a complete, factually pinpointed picture of broad inclusive topics. This perceptive reporting technique has been used to scrutinize subjects ranging from taxes to American jazz, from air conditioning to cancer. And it has also been employed to bring you an understanding of the development of American cities such as Atlanta; Los Angeles; Portland, Ore.; and Seattle. The response to all these stories was so enthusiastic that we have been expanding our use of the special-report technique across the seas to bring you more and more of these reports from foreign countries. The story on the Netherlands' economic recovery (March 8 issue) is a recent example, and it proved to be a thumping success.

Amsterdam readers quickly bought up NEWSWEEK from newsstands (left), while the story stirred sharp interest among Dutch businessmen (right)

It was particularly interesting to me to learn of the strong impact this story had on people in Holland. For example, Deputy Information Director Francot, of the Royal Dutch Ministry of Economics, commenting on the story said: "We ourselves didn't realize how far we'd come. But now, thanks to NEWSWEEK, we see ourselves in the American mirror and understand that we have come quite far, indeed." And Foreign Affairs Minister J.M.A.H. Luns of Holland cabled: "Your acknowledgment of the tremendous effort made by our people for the rehabilitation of the country is a valuable contribution to the mutual understanding and friendship between our nations."

It is becoming more and more important for us in the United States to understand significant developments in other parts of the world. And to help you do so, Harry Kern, editor in chief of our international editions, plans to follow up the story on the Netherlands' industrial recovery with many other special foreign reports, both from the European area and from the Far East.

THE COVER: Edward R. Murrow's sensational See It Now TV programs about Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy represented a startling development in the use of television in political conflict. The programs also dramatically raised again the controversial question of how far radio and TV should go in editorialized comment, and what the rules should be. To learn the opinions of Murrow himself, industry leaders, and the Federal Communications Commission, turn to page 50.

Theodore F. Mueller
Publisher

Television in Controversy: The Debate and Defense

"Ideally, in the case of controversial issues, the audience should be left with no impression as to which side the analyst himself actually favors."
Paul White, executive editor of San Diego's station KFMB, speaking in 1943 when he was head of the Columbia Broadcasting System news.

"They'll have to rewrite the definition of journalism now. No greater feat of journalistic enterprise has occurred in modern times than that performed by Ed Murrow last Tuesday."
Broadcasting and Telecasting magazine, March 15, 1954.

These two statements suggest the distance that the radio-television industry has traveled as a conveyor of political thought in scarcely more than a decade. Within a matter of hours after Edward R. Murrow (see cover) had finished his now-famous CBS See It Now show on Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy, it was clear to a great many people that the editorial velocity of radio-TV had been suddenly accelerated, that a conspicuous milestone along a somewhat wandering route had been reached.

A Higher Perch: Murrow, once a vice president and still a director of CBS, spoke from a higher perch than run-of-mine radio-TV commentators. He is also a policymaker for a major network, and was presumed by many to be speaking for others as well as himself. There are those who believe that anyone less than a director would never be permitted so much freedom.

The public response left no doubt as to the political opinions of those who made their views known, but they left one big question unanswered:

Berryman—Washington Star

Is it right in principle for television to take a clear stand on one side of a great issue?

Radio-TV, despite all regulations, certainly is not free of any taint of bias. There have been many programs arguing one side or the other, and many commentators have made a good thing out of propaganda. But no political show so damning as Murrow's McCarthy program had ever been done, and no voice had such force of position behind it. And this raised another question:

If it is ethical for TV and radio to line up in favor of, or against, an individual politician or a political wing, then what should be the ground rules under which the reply can be made?

Nothing in the law requires Murrow or CBS to grant equal time for reply in a case like this, but in most such instances, the opposition gets a chance to answer. The Murrow show, however, injected a complication in this respect:

Would McCarthy be able to reply adequately to the drama that Murrow had staged? Murrow could respond to this that he had only used McCarthy's own words and actions (the show consisted principally of film of McCarthy in action, edited to illustrate Murrow's own arguments that McCarthy uses the half-truth and committee-room persecution to gain his ends). But how often would an individual or group that believed itself injured by editorialized television be able to come back with an equally effective dramatic presentation of its case?

A Match for Murrow? No one familiar with McCarthy's sense of showmanship, his nimble reflexes, his superb talent for battle, could doubt his capability to defend himself, especially since Murrow had laid down no conditions on how the reply was to be made. But how many public figures are there who can match a gifted TV man with equally forceful presentation?

Going beyond showmanship, radio and television, while employing many of the techniques of press and theater and offering in numerous cases the same product—information and comment—are in a fundamentally different position. Radio-TV uses the air, and the air is public property.

From the beginning, this difference

Most Major TV Stations Say 'Let's Take Both Sides'

Nine major TV stations polled by Newsweek held to the tradition that the medium should be strictly impartial. Five indicated a belief that radio and television ought to editorialize, at least to the extent of the Murrow shows. The following is a cross-section of the views of local stations queried:

▶"We believe television should not take sides but should fairly present controversial issues. We attempt to offer both sides in the same period and by qualified exponents ..."

▶"Television stations ought not to take any sides in political or controversial issues..."

▶"We believe radio and television should take sides by honest expression of editorial opinion."

▶"Sure, we do it every day ..."

▶"We should adhere to the regulations as set forth by the FCC, and render the best possible service to our listeners. We believe we should not take sides."

▶"Television is a medium to convey the facts on both sides so that the public may reach its own decisions."

▶"As long as opinions are clearly labeled as such I think it is a healthy and progressive step for TV to have an opinion. To have an opinion is to have character."

▶"Presentation of both sides of a major issue wherein the public can draw its own conclusions is deemed highly desirable by this station."

▶"Just as NEWSWEEK, in addition to carrying straight news, carries columns by such men as Raymond Moley, who are identified by their by-lines—and thus express their own opinions over and above those of your magazine—we at this station identify commentators as such, as distinguished from newscasters... and have tried to distinguish between facts and opinion."

▶"Television, the greatest mass medium ever conceived, should not compromise its tremendous possibilities for public service by adopting editorial policies. Instead, the industry should energetically encourage the use of facilities for serious examination of controversial issues by commentators and advocates."

▶"There is nothing in the ... act ... which gives the commission any control on program content of stations. We believe that radio and television stations should share the same freedom of expression and the privilege of taking sides which have been enjoyed by the American press since the founding of our nation ..."

▶"We have never felt that television should take sides ..."

was recognized and the radio industry was based, therefore, on government license, instead of outright ownership. In exchange for the license, the radio people agreed to abide by certain rules, or at least to respect accepted practice where the rules were not clear, and always to operate in the public interest.

The Playing Field: The result, for a long time, was that radio fell over backward to avoid crossing the visible and often invisible lines of the playing field. In 1932, for example, one network blanked out the Lindbergh kidnapping story all through the night it broke on the ground that the news was "too sensational." Up to 1935 no large news service did business with radio at all, and not until 1941 did the Associated Press decide to supply news to the medium which now challenges the press as the chief conveyor of information. In 1943, the year that White of CBS gave his definition of the "ideal" impartial news analyst, another CBS official expressed the considered opinion that the day of the news commentator was over.

These timid advances and hasty retreats simply reflected the public attitude, as expressed in Washington. In the Federal Radio Commission, later replaced by the Federal Communications Commission; in the courts; and in the minds of thoughtful public officials there was no agreement as to how far radio should go in matters of controversy, even whether it should go at all.

Murrow himself appears confident of his ground in the McCarthy case.

The opinions of others in the industry are mixed:

T. F. O'Neil, president, chairman of the board, Mutual Broadcasting System: "We, as station owners, have never attempted to establish an editorial policy analogous to the editorial page of a newspaper, but we feel that any attempt to prevent individual commentators from expressing their interpretation of local, national, or international events would be a disservice to the public . . ."

Robert E. Kintner, president of ABC: "Local station managers still don't editorialize very much, and no network is going to editorialize just because the president or the board chairman has certain views on a subject.

"The situation is not analogous to a newspaper's because there is no one place on the air to editorialize as there is in a paper . . .

"There is more to be concerned about in reaching decisions about television because of its impact. But no one is going to be able to use radio or TV facilities as demagogues."

Willian S. Paley and Frank Stanton, chairman of the board of directors and president, respectively, of CBS: "In the pattern of mass communications as part of the fabric of freedom, we believe that

Murrow Calls It 'Reporting'

Newsweek—Ed Wergeles

Murrow with Radulovich (whom he defended) and McCarthy

Four pretty girls sat under a sign lettered "SIN" (for See It Now), on the seventeenth floor of CBS in New York. They sorted piled-up mail and delegated it to even more boxes. Fred W. Friendly, See It Now's big, loose-limbed coproducer, hurried in and out. Down the corridor, in a small, quiet corner room, sat the man who was the focal point of all the ruckus.

Ed Murrow, whom Variety had just that day called "practically . . . a national hero," looked just the way he does every afternoon—loose tie, solemnity, and all. His office was unchanged except for a long-needed coat of white paint and an extra pile of unanswered correspondence. It was still as unlike most CBS executives' offices as ever. Where the others are carpeted and furnished and picture-hung until they could illustrate any decorating magazine (one is so trim it doesn't even have a desk), Murrow's nook bespeaks the man who uses it. Murrow refers to his office with a wave of his hand as "this pig sty."

No Crusade: Behind his desk, the 45-year-old Murrow talked about himself and the controversy he had sparked. Weighing his words, as always, and shifting around—hiking his feet up, hunching over and inspecting the floor—he explained his thoughts on the controversy raging around him.

He firmly denies that he is conducting an anti-McCarthy crusade: "I am just doing a job of reporting. The last thing I want to do is to take the privileged opportunity I have five nights a week on the radio and two on television to attack this man. The moment I start to use my opportunity to agitate against McCarthy or against antivivisection or against anything else, then I've lost whatever standing I have as a reporter."

He answers his critics, who say he poses in a cloak of objectivity and then slants the news: "See It Now is a weekly documentary for television; it has never been designed to present hard, fast-breaking news. And we followed the CBS policy of fairness. We labeled the McCarthy show controversial and we offered the senator time to reply. We leaned over backward to be fair."

Murrow realizes that television could be an instrument of evil in the wrong hands. "Would Hitler," he muses, "have been bigger and faster if he'd had TV? Would it have helped Huey Long?" But he sees no need for any change in the rules that govern controversy on the air: "The public is alert enough to do its own policing."

'No Violence': "Clever film cutters and trick shots can distort," he admits. "Just a camera angle can. It frightened me at first." But he has confidence in himself and his staff. "We take extreme care in the editing of our film. I did [McCarthy] no violence."

Murrow even professes wonderment at the impact of his McCarthy report. "I didn't say anything I haven't said many times before on the radio and on the Radulovich show [when he successfully opposed the Air Force expelling Lt. Milo J. Radulovich as a security risk]. I imagine it was McCarthy's words and McCarthy's picture that made the impact." And he denies that his program marked "TV's coming of age": "No single show can change the whole medium." He also disclaims any claim to courage: "It's a sad state of affairs when people think I was courageous."

IF you want to know WHY so many Industries come to the Crossroads of the East...YOU must

READ THIS NEW BOOK

WRITE

For your copy of this very complete digest report about New Jersey, write Box A, Public Service Electric and Gas Company, 82 Park Place, Newark 1, New Jersey.

PUBLIC SERVICE
...AT THE CROSSROADS OF THE EAST

a broadcasting station or network has the same right to editorialize and the same right to independent expression as the free press . . . that the suppression of opinion and independent thought—whether it be in print or over the air waves—limits public understanding.

"When a station or network exercises its right to editorialize, however, it is vitally important for it to separate opinion from news. Opinion should be clearly labeled as such. The listener is entitled to know what he is receiving, news or opinion, and if it be opinion, whose opinion . . .

"But the execution of the policy cannot be reduced to a mathematical formula or even to a set of rigid rules which are self-executing and will cover all possible circumstances. In achieving fairness and balance, the exercise of judgment by station or network management to assure fair play must control . . . Fairness is not assured by self-sterilization—by being so frightened or nervous of the powerful impact of the medium that opinions are required to die before utterance . . .

"The fact that the air belongs to the people is irrelevant in this context. So do the mails through which the printed medium finds much of its circulation, yet no one suggests that this warrants a policy of forbidding newspaper or magazine editorials."

Sponsor's Views on Murrow

A spokesman at the Aluminum Corp. of America, which sponsors See It Now, had this to say:

"This is the first time that Ed took an editorial point of view. You could point at the Radulovich story and say he did. But he did that with straight film clips and quotes. It was a straight reporting job. Here it's a little more complicated. It raised two matters: Do you like Murrow? And do you like McCarthy? There's been no pressure to drop Ed. There's been no discussion. There'll be talks held . . . This is not going to be a board meeting to discuss Ed or anything like that. And I suppose a decision of some sort will be made . . . It's something we're going to talk about, but only when it blows over. If we ever drop the show, even two years from now, people will say we did it because of that show. We originally bought the show for an institutional showcase—basically as a prestige thing. If the day ever came when we go to sell products, we'd take another kind of show. If the day ever comes to quit, we'll quit."

▶Ted Bergmann, managing director of the Du Mont Television Network: "On Du Mont news programs, we strive to present a true and accurate picture of men and events of the day. Our news editors and newscasters are under instruction to make their newscasts as objective, as factual, and as comprehensive as is humanly possible... But the bare outline—the headlines of the day—such as can be set forth in a five- or a fifteen-minute newscast is not enough."

▶Rosel H. Hyde, chairman of the FCC: "I believe editorializing on TV is acceptable, consistent with the commission's opinion that it should be fair and impartial. The question of the radio-TV commentator versus anyone who does not have the same skill at using the medium boils down to a matter of fair play."

NBC declined to comment.

The divergence of views within the industry indicates that no hard and fast rules can be laid down for the future. The consensus of authorities is that there are two choices:

1—A law that clearly establishes the rights, privileges, duties, and restrictions applying to the medium in the area of news (instead of changing and ambiguous opinions of a Federal commission) or

2—The continuance of the existing method, which means leaving the police job up to the industry itself.

Chances are the latter course will be followed. No one expects that radio-TV will revert to the early pattern of delivering simple news bulletins to the public.

If anything, the recent Murrow shows are likely to be imitated. Television people follow a winner, and Murrow has won some popularity prizes with his treatment of news and controversy. But there is risk as well as profit in controversy. TV feels the public will decide how far the medium should go. But TV is subject to regulation. Congress has the power to step in, if it chooses, and answer, once and for all, the question: "Should television take sides?"

TV Extravaganza

Bright spot in TV coming:

A Rodgers and Hammerstein 90-minute songfest that could equal the Ford Show of last summer. Sponsored by General Foods, the program—on NBC and CBS Sunday, March 28, 8 to 9:30 p.m. EST—will include tunes from "Oklahoma!," "Carousel," "South Pacific," "The King and I," and "Me and Juliet." The singers: Mary Martin, Yul Brynner, Ezio Pinza, Tony Martin, Rosemary Clooney, and John Raitt. And, for comedy: Jack Benny, Groucho Marx, and Edgar Bergen with Charlie McCarthy.

Humphrey and Charlemane are two in a thousand

Battle in the Morning

There are no time-outs in the fight between the radio-TV chains. Having battled the competition at night and through the normal business hours, CBS is now getting up early in the morning (7 a.m.) to meet the challenge of NBC's Today. The new CBS program, The Morning Show, is a two-hour compendium of the elements that seem to be de rigueur for the early hours—news, features, interviews, remote pick-ups, the time, the weather, a little straight entertainment, and a lot of chitchat.

One difference between the two eye-openers was the critical reception. Today's debut was greeted with nearly unanimous hoots. But by last week the radio-TV editors were inured to reviewing at 7 a.m.; and, though bleary-eyed, they were gentle.

So far, the choice between the two programs is a simple one: Do you prefer Dave Garroway or Walter Cronkite? And which is more fun for breakfast, the chimp named J. Fred Muggs or the puppets manipulated by Bil and Cora Baird?

Ad-libber: Walter Cronkite's admirers, legion since his TV performance during the 1952 national conventions, can now see him in action for ten hours a week—a great improvement over the few moments he's on camera narrating You Are There. And it's just the beginning of his TV spread. Later this spring he will also film a weekly half-hour news show called Eye on the World. On that he will return to his first and chosen profession of newsman. In the morning, however, Charles Collingwood reports while Cronkite ad-libs his way through the lighter stuff. "That's the way this business has gone," he says; "you have to show your versatility." He also has to deliver commercials for the first time in his radio-TV career—and converse with Humphrey the Houn' Dog and Charlemane the Lion.

Scene Stealers: It's no chore to talk with Charlemane (who answers courtesy of Bil Baird). In fact the puppets stole all the rave notices for The Morning Show, just as Muggs sometimes steals the scene from Garroway. Although both Bil, 48, and his wife, 42, had their doubts about being the ideal competition for "that monkey"—"our work is pretty sophisticated, adult stuff"—their puppets' cavorting to recorded music hits just the right note in the morning.

With four routines to think up and work out for each show, the Bairds with their staff of ten spend all afternoon and evening trying to keep ahead. If they're lucky, a routine takes only two or three hours of rehearsal (like their wonderful spoof of Eartha Kitt singing "C'est Si Bon" in which a cat lounges on a couch, picks little men up in her teeth, and spits them out). Others that require more puppets and a lot of dancing can take nine hours to choreograph and rehearse.

With 1,000 puppets hanging all over their home and workshop (a reconverted carriage house near the Hudson River), the Bairds can let up on the designing. But finding the right songs to work with is a time-consuming chore. Love ballads are rejected. "How can you do a love ballad?" Bil asks. "We have to have songs we can satirize." And, working in the morning, the Bairds are sticking to fast music. They're taking no chances on sending anyone back to sleep. It's a safe bet they won't.

A17WX

(SSO) PMS BUDGET

MCCARTHY

BY EDMOND LE BRETON

WASHINGTON, MARCH 12 (AP)-SEN. MCCARTHY (R-WIS) HAS ACCUSED COMMENTATOR EDWARD R.MURROW OF HAVING BEEN CONNECTED WITH A MOSCOW SCHOOL DESCRIBED AS REVOLUTIONARY, AND ADLAI STEVENSON OF DEALING IN UNTRUTHS.

MURROW SAID HE ACTUALLY WAS AN ADVISER IN AN INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION EXPERIMENT THE RUSSIANS CANCELLED IN 1935 BEFORE ANY SCHOOL SESSIONS WERE HELD.

THE ACCUSATIONS CAME IN THE FIRST INSTALLMENT OF MCCARTHY'S REPLY TO RECENT CRITICISM. HE HAS SAID HIS REAL REPLY WILL BE MADE A WEEK FROM TODAY. BUT LAST NIGHT HE FIRED SOME PRELIMINARY BROADSIDES AT MURROW, WHO DEVOTED HIS CBS TELEVISION SHOW TUESDAY TO A CRITICAL REVIEW OF MCCARTHY, AND STEVENSON, DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEE IN 1952, WHO SOUNDED OFF AGAINST "MCCARTHYISM" WHEN HE SPOKE TO DEMOCRATS IN MIAMI BEACH SATURDAY.

MCCARTHY SPOKE LAST NIGHT ON A QUESTION AND ANSWER PROGRAM WITH FULTON LEWIS JR. ON THE MUTUAL RADIO NETWORK.

SAYING THAT MURROW, "WEEK AFTER WEEK, FEELS THAT HE MUST SMEAR MCCARTHY," HE SUGGESTED, "MAYBE MR. MURROW IS WORRIED ABOUT THE EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS."

MCCARTHY, SAYING HE WAS QUOTING FROM A COPY OF THE PITTSBURGH SUN-TELEGRAPH FOR FEB.18, 1935, READ A LISTING OF EDWARD R.MURROW, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR, INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION, AS A MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL OF THE MOSCOW UNIVERSITY SUMMER SESSION. HE QUOTED THE NEWSPAPER AS SAYING MOSCOW UNIVERSITY TAUGHT "THE VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE ENTIRE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER."

MURROW, IN NEW YORK, TERMED THE BROADCAST STATEMENTS "MCCARTHY'S LATEST RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH."

SUN-TELEGRAPH FOR FEB.18, 1953, READ A LISTING OF EDWARD R.MURROW, ASSISTANT DIRECTOR, INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION, AS A MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL OF THE MOSCOW UNIVERSITY SUMMER SESSION. HE QUOTED THE NEWSPAPER AS SAYING MOSCOW UNIVERSITY TAUGHT "THE VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE ENTIRE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER."

MURROW, IN NEW YORK, TERMED THE BROADCAST STATEMENTS "MCCARTHY'S LATEST RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH."

IN A STATEMENT, MURROW SAID THAT HE HAD BEEN ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION, WHICH HE DESCRIBED AS AN ORGANIZATION ARRANGING INTER-COUNTRY EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS, AND IN THAT CAPACITY WAS A MEMBER OF AN ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW. BUT HE SAID THE SCHOOL WAS CALLED OFF BY THE RUSSIANS BEFORE IT BEGAN, AND ALL THAT TOOK PLACE WAS A TOUR OF RUSSIA, IN WHICH HE DID NOT PARTICIPATE.

AS FOR STEVENSON, MCCARTHY CENTERED ON THE 1952 PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE'S STATEMENT THAT THE NEW ADMINISTRATION HAD TURNED UP ONLY ONE ALLEGED ACTIVE COMMUNIST AMONG MORE THAN TWO MILLION FEDERAL EMPLOYES.

THAT, MCCARTHY SAID, ZOF COURSE IS STRICTLY UNTRUE AND EITHER ADLAI KNEW THAT OR SHOULD KNOW IT." THE SENATOR SAID A LONG LIST COULD BE MADE. HE CITED THE NAMES OF THREE PERSONS--"ROTHSCHILD," "LEVINE" AND "POWELL"--HE SAID WERE DROPPED AS A RESULT OF INVESTIGATIONS BY HIS SENATE INVESTIGATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE:

EDWARD ROTHSCHILD REFUSED TO TELL THE SUBCOMMITTEE LAST YEAR WHETHER HE EVER SPIED FOR RUSSIA. HE WAS SUSPENDED FROM HIS JOB AS A BOOKBINDER FOR THE GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

A18WX

RUTH WIENER LEVINE RESIGNED IN DECEMBER FROM HER JOB IN A NUTLEY, N.J., LABORATORY WHICH DOES WORK FOR THE ARMY'S RADAR LABORATORIES AT FT. MONMOUTH, N.J. SHE REFUSED TO SAY WHETHER SHE CONSPIRED WITH OTHERS TO SPY, ALTHOUGH SHE DENIED SPYING HERSELF.

MCCARTHY SAID THE ARMY GOT RID OF MRS.DORIS WALTERS POWELL, A CIVILIAN EMPLOYE, AFTER SHE HAD BEEN EXPOSED AS HAVING SERVED AS SECRETARY TO A TOP U.S. COMMUNIST.

AND FINALLY, THE SENATOR SAID, HE WOULD "PREFER TO AGREE WITH LINCOLN, RATHER THAN FLANDERS."

THIS WAS A REPLY TO SEN. FLANDERS (R-VT) WHO CRITICIZED MCCARTHY IN A SENATE SPEECH PORTIONS OF WHICH LATER WERE ENDORSED BY PRESIDENT

CIVILIAN EMPLOYE, AFTER SHE HAD BEEN EXPOSED AS HAVING SERVED AS SECRETARY TO A TOP U.S. COMMUNIST.

AND FINALLY, THE SENATOR SAID, HE WOULD "PREFER TO AGREE WITH LINCOLN, RATHER THAN FLANDERS."

THIS WAS A REPLY TO SEN. FLANDERS (R-VT) WHO CRITICIZED MCCARTHY IN A SENATE SPEECH PORTIONS OF WHICH LATER WERE ENDORSED BY PRESIDENT EISENHOWER.

MCCARTHY TOOK ISSUE WITH FLANDERS' STATEMENT THAT THE REAL COMMUNIST PERIL COMES FROM ABROAD, AND QUOTED LINCOLN AS SAYING IF THE NATION IS EVER DESTROYED, IT WILL BE FROM WITHIN.

ONE RADIO STATION OWNER, J.P.RICHARDS OF WCEM, CAMBRIDGE, MD., CANCELLED THE LEWIS PROGRAM ON WHICH MCCARTHY APPEARED.

"THE WHOLE THING IS STRICTLY POLITICAL AND IS NOT SOLVING THE COMMUNIST QUESTION," SAID RICHARDS, AND HE ADDED:

"THE PUBLIC IS SATURATED WITH THE MCCARTHY-NETWORKS ARGUMENT."

THE TALK MCCARTHY HAS BILLED AS HIS REAL REPLY TO STEVENSON IS SCHEDULED FOR A WEEK FROM TODAY TO THE MILWAUKEE COUNTY COUNCIL OF COLLEGE YOUNG REPUBLICAN CLUBS.

MCCARTHY HAS SAID THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE RADIO STATION, WGN, AND OTHER STATIONS HAVE OFFERED TO CARRY THE TALK. HOWEVER, HE HAS REPEATED HE WILL TAKE LEGAL ACTION IF NECESSARY TO FORCE THE CBS AND NBC NETWORKS THAT CARRIED THE STEVENSON SPEECH TO GIVE HIM EQUIVALENT TIME.

REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CHAIRMAN LEONARD HALL ASKED FOR AND GOT FREE EQUIVALENT TIME FOR THE PARTY. VICE PRESIDENT NIXON WAS DESIGNATED TO MAKE THE OFFICIAL GOP REPLY TO STEVENSON TOMORROW NIGHT.

BEFORE THE RADIO SALVOS YESTERDAY, MCCARTHY'S SUBCOMMITTEE EXPERIENCED SOME INTERNAL RUMBLINGS. TWO DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS, MCCLELLAN OF ARKANSAS AND SYMINGTON OF MISSOURI, QUESTIONED WHETHER THERE HAD BEEN MISTAKEN IDENTITY IN THE CASE OF MRS. ANNIE LEE MOSS, A CIVILIAN EMPLOYE OF THE ARMY, WHO DENIED TO THE GROUP THAT SHE IS OR EVER WAS A MEMBER OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY.

A19WX

MCCARTHY HAD TOLD THE MIDDLE-AGED NEGRO THE SUBCOMMITTEE WAS

BEFORE THE RADIO SALVOS YESTERDAY, MCCARTHY'S SUBCOMMITTEE EXPERIENCED SOME INTERNAL RUMBLINGS. TWO DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS, MCCLELLAN OF ARKANSAS AND SYMINGTON OF MISSOURI, QUESTIONED WHETHER THERE HAD BEEN MISTAKEN IDENTITY IN THE CASE OF MRS. ANNIE LEE MOSS, A CIVILIAN EMPLOYE OF THE ARMY, WHO DENIED TO THE GROUP THAT SHE IS OR EVER WAS A MEMBER OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY.

A19WX

MCCARTHY HAD TOLD THE MIDDLE-AGED NEGRO THE SUBCOMMITTEE WAS INTERESTED IN LEARNING WHY HER SUPERIORS, KNOWING HER "COMMUNIST RECORD," SHIFTED HER FROM A CAFETERIA JOB TO ONE IN A CODE ROOM.

MRS. MARY S. MARKWARD, A FORMER UNDERCOVER INFORMANT FOR THE FBI, EARLIER TESTIFIED SHE KNEW AN ANNIE LEE MOSS AS A COMMUNIST PARTY MEMBER, BUT THAT SHE COULD NOT SAY FOR CERTAIN THIS WAS THE SAME PERSON AS THE SIGNAL CORPS EMPLOYE.

THE COMMITTEE WAS INFORMED THERE WERE OTHER PERSONS BY THAT NAME IN THE WASHINGTON AREA.

MCCLELLAN AND SYMINGTON PROTESTED AGAINST "CONVICTING PEOPLE BY HEARSAY AND INNUENDO" WHEN ROY COHN, THE SUBCOMMITTEE'S CHIEF COUNSEL, INJECTED A STATEMENT THAT A WITNESS WHO APPEARED AT A CLOSED SESSION "KNEW SHE WAS A COMMUNIST." SEN. MUNDT (R-SD), TELLING COHN HE OBJECTED TO HEARSAY EVIDENCE, ORDERED THE REMARK STRICKEN. MUNDT WAS PRESIDING IN MCCARTHY'S TEMPORARY ABSENCE.

SYMINGTON TOLD MRS. MOSS HE THOUGHT SHE WAS TELLING THE TRUTH AND OFFERED TO HELP HER GET A JOB IF THE SUSPENSION OF HER ARMY EMPLOYMENT BECAME PERMANENT.

IN NEW YORK, JOHN J. MCCLOY, FORMER ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR, TOOK ISSUE WITH A STATEMENT BY MCCARTHY THAT "UNDESIRABLES" HAD BEEN ADMITTED TO THE ARMY UNDER A WARTIME POLICY WHICH MCCARTHY CALLED THE "MCCLOY ORDER."

MCCLOY SAID HE COULD RECALL NO SUCH ORDER HE ISSUED BUT THAT THERE WAS A WARTIME STAFF POLICY WHICH FORBADE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST SOLDIERS "WHOSE LOYALTY TO THE UNITED STATES WAS AFFIRMATIVELY DETERMINED BY THEIR COMMANDING OFFICERS, EVEN THOUGH THEIR PRIOR ASSOCIATION OR THAT OF THEIR RELATIVES WAS KNOWN OR SUSPECTED."

INTERESTED IN LEARNING WHY HER SUPERIORS, KNOWING HER "COMMUNIST RECORD," SHIFTED HER FROM A CAFETERIA JOB TO ONE IN A CODE ROOM.

MRS. MARY S. MARKWARD, A FORMER UNDERCOVER INFORMANT FOR THE FBI, EARLIER TESTIFIED SHE KNEW AN ANNIE LEE MOSS AS A COMMUNIST PARTY MEMBER, BUT THAT SHE COULD NOT SAY FOR CERTAIN THIS WAS THE SAME PERSON AS THE SIGNAL CORPS EMPLOYE.

THE COMMITTEE WAS INFORMED THERE WERE OTHER PERSONS BY THAT NAME IN THE WASHINGTON AREA.

MCCLELLAN AND SYMINGTON PROTESTED AGAINST "CONVICTING PEOPLE BY HEARSAY AND INNUENDO" WHEN ROY COHN, THE SUBCOMMITTEE'S CHIEF COUNSEL, INJECTED A STATEMENT THAT A WITNESS WHO APPEARED AT A CLOSED SESSION "KNEW SHE WAS A COMMUNIST." SEN. MUNDT (R-SD), TELLING COHN HE OBJECTED TO HEARSAY EVIDENCE, ORDERED THE REMARK STRICKEN. MUNDT WAS PRESIDING IN MCCARTHY'S TEMPORARY ABSENCE.

SYMINGTON TOLD MRS. MOSS HE THOUGHT SHE WAS TELLING THE TRUTH AND OFFERED TO HELP HER GET A JOB IF THE SUSPENSION OF HER ARMY EMPLOYMENT BECAME PERMANENT.

IN NEW YORK, JOHN J. MCCLOY, FORMER ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR, TOOK ISSUE WITH A STATEMENT BY MCCARTHY THAT "UNDESIRABLES" HAD BEEN ADMITTED TO THE ARMY UNDER A WARTIME POLICY WHICH MCCARTHY CALLED THE "MCCLOY ORDER."

MCCLOY SAID HE COULD RECALL NO SUCH ORDER HE ISSUED BUT THAT THERE WAS A WARTIME STAFF POLICY WHICH FORBADE DISCRIMINATION AGAINST SOLDIERS "WHOSE LOYALTY TO THE UNITED STATES WAS AFFIRMATIVELY DETERMINED BY THEIR COMMANDING OFFICERS, EVEN THOUGH THEIR PRIOR ASSOCIATION OR THAT OF THEIR RELATIVES WAS KNOWN OR SUSPECTED."

MCCLOY, NOW BOARD CHAIRMAN OF THE CHASE NATIONAL BANK, SAID THIS POLICY WAS "ENTIRELY SOUND" AND THAT AMONG THE MEN AFFECTED HE DID NOT KNOW OF "A SINGLE DEFECTION, AND THERE WERE MANY WHO WERE DECORATED FOR VALOR AND NOT A FEW WHO WERE KILLED IN ACTION."

MCCLOY SAID THAT NOT ONLY SOLDIERS ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN ASSOCIATED WITH COMMUNIST ORGANIZATIONS WERE AFFECTED BY THE POLICY BUT ALSO SOME UNDER SUSPICION BECAUSE OF CONTACTS WITH GERMAN AND JAPANESE GROUPS.

CZ326AES

LB

TXA5 MCCARTHY

BY LARRY AULDRIDGE

WASHINGTON, MARCH 12--(INS)--SEN. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY DESCRIBED CHARGES AGAINST HIM BY ADLAI E. STEVENSON AS "COMPLETELY VALSE" AND DECLARED OPEN WARFARE TODAY ON RADIO-TELEVISION COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW.

HE ATTACKED BOTH MEN LAST NIGHT IN A RADIO INTERVIEW WITH MUTUAL NETWORK COMMENTATOR FULTON LEWIS, JR., AND LATER TOLD NEWSMEN HE WILL HAVE MORE TO SAY ABOUT STEVENSON IN A MARCH 19 MILWAUKEE SPEECH TO BE CARRIED OVER A RADIO NETWORK OF INDEPENDENT STATIONS.

IN LASHING OUT AT CBS NEWSCASTER MURROW FOR CRITICIZING HIM TUESDAY NIGHT ON HIS TELEVISED "SEE IT NOW" PROGRAM, THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN SAID THE COMMENTATOR MIGHT BE TRYING TO "SMEAR" HIM BECAUSE "HE IS WORRIED ABOUT EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS."

MURROW SAID HE COULD "DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH SEN. MCCARTHY'S LATEST RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH" ON HIS CBS-RADIO PROGRAM AT 7.45PM (EST) TONIGHT.

MEANWHILE, THERE WERE THESE OTHER DEVELOPMENTS:

1. A SUSPENDED ARMY SIGNAL CORPS EMPLOYE TESTIFIED BEFORE THE SENATE INVESTIGATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE, WHICH MCCARTHY HEADS, THAT SHE HAD BEEN FALSELY ACCUSED OF BEING A COMMUNIST AND WAS NEVER ASSIGNED TO THE PENTAGON CODE ROOM AS HAD BEEN CHARGED.

2. THE WOMAN, MRS. ANNIE LEE MOSS, WON DRAMATIC SUPPORT FROM DEMOCRATIC SENATORS, AND SEN. STUART SYMINGTON, MO., AIR SECRETARY DURING THE TRUMAN ADMINISTRATION, DECLARED HE WOULD GET HER A NEW JOB IF SHE WERE NOT REINSTATED.

3. SENATE REPUBLICANS WERE REPORTED URGING THE DISMISSAL OF ROY M. COHN AS CHIEF COUNSEL FOR THE INVESTIGATIONS GROUP, AND DEMOCRATS DURING THE MOSS HEARING ACCUSED HIM OF USING "HEARSAY, RUMOR AND UNNUENDO."

4. AN ARMY REPORT TO SEVERAL SENATORS CHARGED COHN HAD THREATENED TO "WRECK THE ARMY" AND FORCE THE OUSTER OF ARMY SECRETARY ROBERT T. STEVENS UNLESS PVT. G. DAVID SCHINE, ANOTHER COMMITTEE AIDE WAS GIVEN PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT.

MEANWHILE, THERE WERE THESE OTHER DEVELOPMENTS:

1. A SUSPENDED ARMY SIGNAL CORPS EMPLOYE TESTIFIED BEFORE THE SENATE INVESTIGATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE, WHICH MCCARTHY HEADS, THAT SHE HAD BEEN FALSELY ACCUSED OF BEING A COMMUNIST AND WAS NEVER ASSIGNED TO THE PENTAGON CODE ROOM AS HAD BEEN CHARGED.

2. THE WOMAN, MRS. ANNIE LEE MOSS, WON DRAMATIC SUPPORT FROM DEMOCRATIC SENATORS, AND SEN. STUART SYMINGTON, MO., AIR SECRETARY DURING THE TRUMAN ADMINISTRATION, DECLARED HE WOULD GET HER A NEW JOB IF SHE WERE NOT REINSTATED.

3. SENATE REPUBLICANS WERE REPORTED URGING THE DISMISSAL OF ROY M. COHN AS CHIEF COUNSEL FOR THE INVESTIGATIONS GROUP, AND DEMOCRATS DURING THE MOSS HEARING ACCUSED HIM OF USING "HEARSAY, RUMOR AND UNNUENDO."

4. AN ARMY REPORT TO SEVERAL SENATORS CHARGED COHN HAD THREATENED TO "WRECK THE ARMY" AND FORCE THE OUSTER OF ARMY SECRETARY ROBERT T. STEVENS UNLESS PVT. G. DAVID SCHINE, ANOTHER COMMITTEE AIDE WAS GIVEN PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT.

5. DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CHAIRMAN STEPHEN A. MITCHELL SAID IN CHICAGO THAT MCCARTHY'S RADIO INTERVIEW WITH LEWIS WAS "DULL AS DISHWATER" AND THAT "APPARENTLY THE SENATOR HAS RUN OUT OF POISON GAS."

6. IN A REPLY TO SEN. RALPH E. FLANDERS (R) VT., WHO DECLARED THAT MCCARTHY WAS DIVERTING ATTENTION FROM THE ETG GA THE MOSS

THE MOSS HEARING ACCUSED HIM OF USING "HEARSAY, RUMOR AND UNNUENDO."

4. AN ARMY REPORT TO SEVERAL SENATORS CHARGED COHN HAD THREATENED TO "WRECK THE ARMY" AND FORCE THE OUSTER OF ARMY SECRETARY ROBERT T. STEVENS UNLESS PVT. G. DAVID SCHINE, ANOTHER COMMITTEE AIDE WAS GIVEN PREFERENTIAL TREATMENT.

5. DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CHAIRMAN STEPHEN A. MITCHELL SAID IN CHICAGO THAT MCCARTHY'S RADIO INTERVIEW WITH LEWIS WAS "DULL AS DISHWATER" AND THAT "APPARENTLY THE SENATOR HAS RUN OUT OF POISON GAS."

6. IN A REPLY TO SEN. RALPH E. FLANDERS (R) VT., WHO DECLARED THAT MCCARTHY WAS DIVERTING ATTENTION FROM THE DANGER OF COMMUNISTS ABROAD AND THE REAL DANGER IS FROM WITHOUT AND NOT WITHIN THE COUNTRY, MCCARTHY CITED A QUOTATION FROM ABRAHAM LINCOLN. HE SAID LINCOLN WARNED: "IF THIS NATION IS EVER DESTROYED, IT WILL BE FROM WITHIN," AND "I PREFER TO AGREE WITH LINCOLN RATHER THAN FLANDERS."

(MORE) 422AKN

LB

TXA6 ADD ONE MCCARTHY (AULDRIDGE) WASHN XXX FLANDERS."

THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN HIT BACK AT THREE OF HIS CRITICS--STEVENSON, MURROW AND FLANDERS--IN HIS INTERVIEW WITH LEWIS AND CHARGED THAT THE CBS NEWSMAN AND COMMENTATOR WAS ONCE A MEMBER OF A LEFT-WING ORGANIZATION.

MCCARTHY CITED A QUOTATION FROM THE PITSBURGH SUN-TELEGRAPH, DATED FEB. 18, 1935, WHICH CONNECTED MURROW WITH THE "MOSCOW UNIVERSITY SUMMER SESSION," AND SAID THE UNIVERSITY TAUGHT "THE VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE ENTIRE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER."

LATER, MURROW SAID HE WAS AN ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION IN 1935, AND IN THAT CAPACITY SERVED AS "A MEMBER OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW."

THE CBS NEWSMAN DESCRIBED THE INSTITUTE AS AN ORGANIZATION "ENGAGED IN THE EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS BETWEEN THIS AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES" AND SAID THE SUMMER SCHOOL "WAS CANCELLED BY RUSSIAN AUTHORITIES BEFORE IT BEGAN."

MCCARTHY HIT AT STEVENSON'S CLAIM THAT THE GOP IS SPLIT DOWN THE MIDDLE AND AT THE SAME TIME RESERVED THE RIGHT TO CRITICIZE FELLOW-REPUBLICANS.

HE SAID: "I DON'T THINK A NATION CAN SURVIVE IF THE TWO GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES SAY WE MUST HAVE CONFORMITY, WE MUST HAVE UNITY, ABOVE EVERYTHING ELSE."

THE WISCONSIN SENATOR SAID HE WAS TAKING ADVANTAGE OF THE INVITATION TO REPLY TO STEVENSON IN MORE DETAIL OVER AN INDPENDENT RADIO NETWORK ON MARCH 19 BECAUSE CBS AND NBC NETWORKS DENIED HIM FREE TIME TO REPLY TO THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER.

BOTH NETWORKS OFFERED TIME FOR A REPLY TO STEVENSON TO THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, WHICH NAMED VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD M. NIXON AS ITS SPOKESMAN. NIXON WILL TALK FROM 10.30 TO 11PM EST., SATURDAY NIGHT.

428AKN

NX9

WITH MCCARTHY

(MURROW)

NEW YORK, MARCH 12--(UP)--EDWARD R. MURROW SAID HE WOULD TAKE TIME ON HIS RADIO PROGRAM TONIGHT TO DEAL WITH SEN. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY'S "LATEST RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH."

MCCARTHY ATTACKED THE CBS NEWS COMMENTATOR ON THE RADIO LAST NIGHT, CHARGING THAT MURROW WAS ONE OF THE "EXTREME LEFT WING BLEEDING HEART ELEMENTS OF TELEVISION AND RADIO."

THE WISCONSIN SENATOR WAS REPLYING TO AN ATTACK BY MURROW ON THE LATTER'S "SEE IT NOW" TELEVISION SHOW ON TUESDAY NIGHT. MURROW HAD ACCUSED MCCARTHY OF REPEATEDLY "STEPPING OVER THE LINE BETWEEN INVESTIGATING AND PERSECUTING."

MCCARTHY, INTERVIEWED BY FULTON LEWIS, JR., ON A MUTUAL RADIO NETWORK PROGRAM, CITED A FEB. 18, 1935, CLIPPING FROM THE PITTSBURGH SUN-TELEGRAPH TO SHOW THAT MURROW ONCE WAS "ON THE ADVISORY COUNCIL OF MOSCOW UNIVERSITY."

THAT UNIVERSITY, MCCARTHY SAID, TAUGHT "THE VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE ENTIRE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER."

"THAT MAY EXPLAIN," THE SENATOR SAID, "WHY MURROW WEEK AFTER WEEK FEELS THAT HE MUST SMEAR MCCARTHY. MAYBE HE FEELS THAT...HE SHOULD WORRRY ABOUT THE EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS."

IN REPLY MURROW SAID LAST NIGHT:

"IN 1935 I WAS ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION, AN ORGANIZATION ENGAGED IN THE EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS BETWEEN THIS AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES. IN THIS CAPACITY I WAS A MEMBER OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW.

"IN ACTUAL FACT THE SUMMER SCHOOL WAS CANCELED BY RUSSIAN AUTHORITIES BEFORE IT BEGAN. THOSE GRADUATE STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS WHO HAD SIGNED UP FOR THE SCHOOL SPENT THE SUMMER TRAVELING IN THE SOVIET UNION, AN ACTIVITY WHICH WAS NOT THEN AND IS NOT NOW ILLEGAL. I DID NOT ACCOMPANY THIS GROUP OF DISTINGUISHED EDUCATORS."

MCCARTHY ALSO CHARGED THAT MURROW HAD "NOT TOLD THE TRUTH" WHEN HE SAID ON THE TV PROGRAM THAT MCCARTHY WRONGLY LABELED THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION AS "SUBVERSIVE."

THAT UNIVERSITY, MCCARTHY SAID, TAUGHT "THE VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE ENTIRE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER."

"THAT MAY EXPLAIN," THE SENATOR SAID, "WHY MURROW WEEK AFTER WEEK FEELS THAT HE MUST SMEAR MCCARTHY. MAYBE HE FEELS THAT...HE SHOULD WORRRY ABOUT THE EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS."

IN REPLY MURROW SAID LAST NIGHT:

"IN 1935 I WAS ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION, AN ORGANIZATION ENGAGED IN THE EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS BETWEEN THIS AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES. IN THIS CAPACITY I WAS A MEMBER OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW.

"IN ACTUAL FACT THE SUMMER SCHOOL WAS CANCELED BY RUSSIAN AUTHORITIES BEFORE IT BEGAN. THOSE GRADUATE STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS WHO HAD SIGNED UP FOR THE SCHOOL SPENT THE SUMMER TRAVELING IN THE SOVIET UNION, AN ACTIVITY WHICH WAS NOT THEN AND IS NOT NOW ILLEGAL. I DID NOT ACCOMPANY THIS GROUP OF DISTINGUISHED EDUCATORS."

MCCARTHY ALSO CHARGED THAT MURROW HAD "NOT TOLD THE TRUTH" WHEN HE SAID ON THE TV PROGRAM THAT MCCARTHY WRONGLY LABELED THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION AS "SUBVERSIVE."

MCCARTHY SAID THE CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION HAD BEEN CITED AS A "COMMUNIST-FRONT" BY THE CALIFORNIA COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES.

IN REPLY TO THIS, MURROW POINTED OUT HE SPECIFICALLY STATED ON THE TV BROADCAST THAT THE ACL HAD NEVER BEEN CITED ON THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S LIST OF SUBVERSIVE ORGANIZATIONS, BY THE FBI, OR BY "ANY OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCY."

AFTER THE MCCARTHY BROADCAST, A DELUGE OF TELEPHONE CALLS HIT MANY RADIO STATIONS ON THE MUTUAL NETWORK ACROSS THE COUNTRY. BY MIDNIGHT, STATION WOR IN NEW YORK HAD TABULATED 934 CALLS SUPPORTING MCCARTHY AND 334 CRITICIZING HIM.

IN WASHINGTON, STATION WWDC, IN WHOSE STUDIOS THE INTERVIEW ORIGINATED, REPORTED 119 TELEPHONE CALLS, OF WHICH 31 SUPPORTED THE SENATOR AND 88 OPPOSED HIM.

HZ432A

A-136

CORRECTION

(NY) WASHINGTON--FIRST LEAD MCCARTHY 15TH GRAF (A134 INSERT) STARTING "A GROUP OF "DISTINGUISHED" READ X X X WHICH WAS NOT THEN AND IS NOT NOW ILLEGAL (INSERTING "NOT").

THE AP

KL1146PES

A137BX

A134

EDITORS:

(NY) WASHINGTON--FIRST LEAD MC CARTHY (A73), INSERT AFTER 11TH GRAF (COUNTING A88 INSERT) BEGINNING "WHEN X X X HALF-TRUTH."

MURROW THEN ISSUED ANOTHER STATEMENT IN WHICH HE SPOKE OF "MC CARTHY'S LATEST RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH."

MURROW SAID HE WAS ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION, "AN ORGANIZATION ENGAGED IN THE EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS BETWEEN THIS AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES" IN 1935.

HE SAID THAT "IN THIS CAPACITY" HE WAS A MEMBER OF "THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW" WHICH WAS CALLED OFF BY THE RUSSIANS BEFORE IT BEGAN.

A GROUP OF "DISTINGUISHED EDUCATORS" INSTEAD SPENT THE SUMMER TRAVELING IN THE SOVIET UNION, "AN ACTIVITY WHICH WAS NOT THEN AND IS NOT NOW ILLEGAL," MURROW SAID, BUT HE DID NOT ACCOMPANY THEM.

MCCARTHY IN HIS BROADCAST ALSO ACCUSED MURROW OF "NOT TELLING THE TRUTH" IN SAYING THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION HAD NOT BEEN LISTED AS A SUBVERSIVE ORGANIZATION. MCCARTHY SAID IT HAD BEEN SO LISTED BY THE "UNAMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE IN CALIFORNIA."

OF THE ACLU, MURROW SAID THAT ON HIS BROADCAST TUESDAY HE "SPECIFICALLY STATED 'THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S LIST,' 'THE FBI,' AND 'ANY OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCY'" HAD NOT LISTED THE ACLU AS SUBVERSIVE.

SOME OF X X X 12TH GRAPH.

KL1141PES

(WASHINGTON)--SENATOR JOSEPH MC CARTHY SAID TONIGHT HE HAS DISAGREED WITH OTHER MEMBERS OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND WILL DISAGREE WITH THEM AGAIN BECAUSE, HE SAID, HE PLACES COUNTRY ABOVE THE REPUBLICAN PARTY. MC CARTHY DID NOT MENTION PRESIDENT EISENHOWER Y NAME, BUT HE SAID... "I THINK WE SHOULD REALIZE THAT NO MATTER HOW GOOD A PARTY IS, IT CANNOT HAVE A THOUSAND BATTING AVERAGE."

-0-

(AGAIN, WASHINGTON)---MC CARTHY MADE THE STATEMENTS DURING AN INTERVIEW WITH RADIO COMMENTATOR FULTON LEWIS, JUNIOR. HE DENIED CHARGES---LABELING THEM "COMPLETELY FALSE"---THAT HE HAS NOT UNCOVERED ANY COMMUNISTS IN THE GOVERNMENT. HE SAID HE HAS FOUND A "LONG LIST" OF REDS AND CITED THREE CASES---TWO OF THEM. PERSONS WHO HAD REFUSED TO ANSWER COMMITTEE QUESTIONS.

-0-

UP135

NSERT

EDITORS:

IN SEVENTH ROUNDUP (MC CARTHY), PLS INSERT FOLLOWING AFTER 5TH PGH X X X HIS FRIENDS."

-0-

MURROW LATER CALLED THIS "SENATOR MC CARTHY'S LATEST RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH." HE SAID THE MOSCOW SCHOOL NEVER WAS HELD. ALTHOUGH THE EDUCATORS CHOSEN TO ATTEND WENT ON A TOUR OF RUSSIA, MURROW DID N O T GO ALONG.

MA1057P3/11

UPR137

(MURROW)

NEW YORK---C-B-S COMMENTATOR AND BOARD MEMBER EDWARD R. MURROW AS ACCUSED SENATOR MC CARTHY OF "RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH" IN C CARTHY'S BROADCAST ATTACK ON MURROW TONIGHT.

MURROW BROADCAST A HALF-HOUR CRITICISM OF MC CARTHY'S TECHNIQUES ON TUESDAY NIGHT---CHARGING HIM, AMONG OTHER THINGS, WITH USING HALF-TRUTHS TO DECEIVE THE PUBLIC. TONIGHT, MC CARTHY ATTACKED MURROW, IN AN INTERVIEW WITH MUTUAL BROADCASTING SYSTEM COMMENTATOR FULTON LEWIS, JUNIOR.

MC CARTHY SAID MURROW HAD BEEN CHOSEN AN "ADVISER" TO THE SUMMER SESSION OF THE MOSCOW UNIVERSITY, WHICH---MC CARTHY SAID---TAUGHT THE VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE ENTIRE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER.

MURROW REPLIED THE SENATOR WAS ENGAGING IN HIS "TOO FAMILIAR TECHNIQUE."

MURROW SAID IT'S TRUE HE WAS A MEMBER OF AN ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW. THAT WAS A RESULT OF HIS BEING AN OFFICER IN AN ORGANIZATION FOR EXCHANGING STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SEVERAL FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

BUT, SAID MURROW---"IN ACTUAL FACT, THE SUMMER SCHOOL WAS CANCELLED BY RUSSIAN AUTHORITIES BEFORE IT BEGAN. THOSE GRADUATE STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS WHO HAD SIGNED UP...SPENT THE SUMMER TRAVELING IN THE SOVIET UNION, WHICH WAS NOT THEN AND IS NOT NOW ILLEGAL. I DID NOT ACCOMPANY THIS GROUP..."

MORE MA1109P3/11

UPR138

THE TWELFTH WORLD-IN-BRIEF

-0-

THE LATEST NEWS FROM THE WIRES OF UNITED PRESS RADIO...."THE WORLD'S BEST COVERAGE OF THE WORLD'S BIGGEST NEWS."

SENATOR MC CARTHY SAYS IT IS A "TRUMAN-STEVENSON THEORY THAT YOU MUST...AT ALL COSTS...PLACE PARTY ABOVE COUNTRY, GO ALONG WITH YOUR PARTY, EVEN AS MAKING MISTAKES." MC CARTHY MADE THE STATEMENT TONIGHT DURING A RADIO INTERVIEW IN ANSWERING RECENT CRITICISM FROM ADLAI STEVENSON, G-O-P SENATOR RALPH FLANDERS AND C-B-S COMMENTATOR EDWARD MURROW. MC CARTHY SAID THAT HE HAS DISAGREED WITH OTHER REPUBLICANS IN THE PAST AND EXPECTS TO "DISAGREE WITH THEM AGAIN."

-0-

OF EDWARD MURROW, MC CARTHY SAID TONIGHT HE SERVED ON THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL OF MOSCOW UNIVERSITY IN 1935. MC CARTHY READ A CLIPPING WHICH SAID THE UNIVERSITY "TAUGHT THE VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE ENTIRE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER." MC CARTHY ADDED---"MAYBE MR. MURROW IS WORRIED ABOUT THE EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS." MURROW REPLIED THAT THE SUMMER SCHOOL SESSION WAS CANCELLED...THAT HE DID NOT GO TO RUSSIA. MURROW CALLED THIS---AND MC CARTHY'S LATEST REFERENCE TO THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION---"RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH."

-0-

PR140

MORE MURROW XXX GROUP..."

MCCARTHY ALSO ACCUSED MURROW OF LYING IN HIS DEFENSE OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, WHICH MCCARTHY HAS ATTACKED AS A SUBVERSIVE GROUP. MCCARTHY POINTED OUT THAT A COMMITTEE OF THE CALIFORNIA STATE LEGISLATURE HAS LISTED THE A-C-L-U AS A "COMMUNIST FRONT."

MURROW REPLIED BY QUOTING THE EXACT WORDS OF HIS BROADCAST, THUS: "THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S LIST DOES NOT AND HAS NEVER LISTED THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION AS SUBVERSIVE, NOR DOES THE F-B-I NOR ANY OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCY." THERE WAS NO MENTION OF STATE LEGISLATIVE BODIES.

MURROW'S QUOTATION ALSO NOTED "THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION HOLDS IN ITS FILES LETTERS AND COMMENDATIONS FROM PRESIDENT EISENHOWER, FORMER PRESIDENT TRUMAN AND GENERAL MAC ARTHUR."

MURROW PROMISED A MORE COMPLETE ANSWER TO MCCARTHY'S STATEMENTS ON HIS REGULAR BROADCAST TOMORROW NIGHT.

CM1125P 3/11

SENATOR MC CARTHY APPEARED LAST NIGHT, AS GUEST ON THE NEWS PROGRAM OF FULTON LEWIS, JUNIOR ON THE MUTUAL NETWORK. HE DENIED CHARGES HE NEVER HAD FOUND ANY COMMUNISTS IN GOVERNMENT...AND CITED THREE CASES OUT OF WHAT HE CALLED A "LONG LIST." TWO OF THEM WERE, WHAT HE HAS LABELED "FIFTH AMENDMENT COMMUNISTS"---PEOPLE WHO CITE THE FIFTH AMENDMENT RATHER THAN ANSWER HIS QUESTIONS.

-0-

HE ALSO ATTACKED C-B-S COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW, OF C-B-S WHO CARRIED A PROGRAM CIRITIZING MC CARTHY ON TUESDAY. MC CARTHY PRODUCED A NEWSPAPER CLIPPING SAYING MURROW HAD BEEN CHOSEN AS AN ADVISER TO A SUMMER SESSION OF MOSCOW UNIVERSITY IN 1935. THE UNIVERSITY, HE SAID, TEACHES "THE VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE ENTIRE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER." MURROW REPLIED LATER THAT HE HAD BEEN SO CHOSEN AS A RESULT OF HIS WORK WITH A STUDENT AND PROFESSOR EXCHANGE PROGRAM INVOLVING ALL COUNTRIES. BUT---MURROW CONTINUED---THAT MOSCOW ESSION NEVER WAS HELD. THE REDS CALLED IT OFF.

LB

TX49N THIRD LEAD MCCARTHY (OPTIONAL)

BY ALVIN SPIVAK

WASHINGTON, MARCH 11--(INS)--SEN. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY (R) WIS., CHARGED TONIGHT THAT ADLAI E. STEVENSON MADE "COMPLETELY FALSE" STATEMENTS ABOUT HIM AND ACCUSED RADIO-TV COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW OF ONETIME MEMBERSHIP IN A LEFT-WING ORGANIZATION.

COMMENTING ON AN ATTACK ON HIM BY SEN. RALPH FLANDERS (R) VT., MCCARTHY ALSO CHALLENGED FLANDERS' STATEMENT THAT THE GREATEST COMMUNIST THREAT WAS FROM ABROAD.

MCCARTHY QUOTED ABRAHAM LINCOLN AS SAYING THE GREATEST DANGER OF DESTRUCTION IS FROM WITHIN AND ADDED THAT "I PREFER TO AGREE WITH LINCOLN RATHER THAN FLANDERS."

THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN'S REPLY TO HIS THREE CRITICS WAS MADE IN A 15-MINUTE INTERVIEW AT 7PM EST WITH FULTON LEWIS, JR., OVER THE MUTUAL NETWORK.

HE QUOTED FROM A 1935 NEWSPAPER CLIPPING NAMING MURROW AS A MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL AT MOSCOW UNIVERSITY'S SUMMER SESSION AND SAID MURROW "SMEARSMCCARTHY" BECAUSE HE MIGHT BE "WORRIED ABOUT EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS."

IN NEW YORK, MURROW SAID HE WAS AN ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION AND IN THAT CAPACITY SERVED AS "A MEMBER OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW."

MURROW, WHO DESCRIBED THE INSTITUTE AS AN ORGANIZATION "ENGAGED IN

DESTRUCTION IS FROM WITHIN AND ADDED THAT "I PREFER TO AGREE WITH LINCOLN RATHER THAN FLANDERS."

THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN'S REPLY TO HIS THREE CRITICS WAS MADE IN A 15-MINUTE INTERVIEW AT 7PM EST WITH FULTON LEWIS, JR., OVER THE MUTUAL NETWORK.

HE QUOTED FROM A 1935 NEWSPAPER CLIPPING NAMING MURROW AS A MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL AT MOSCOW UNIVERSITY'S SUMMER SESSION AND SAID MURROW "SMEARSMCCARTHY" BECAUSE HE MIGHT BE "WORRIED ABOUT EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS."

IN NEW YORK, MURROW SAID HE WAS AN ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION AND IN THAT CAPACITY SERVED AS "A MEMBER OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW."

MURROW, WHO DESCRIBED THE INSTITUTE AS AN ORGANIZATION "ENGAGED IN THE EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS BETWEEN THIS AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES," SAID THE SUMMER SCHOOL "WAS CANCELLED BY RUSSIAN AUTHORITIES BEFORE IT BEGAN."

HE PROMISED TO "DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH SEN. MCCARTHY'S LATEST RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH" ON HIS CBS-RADIO PROGRAM TOMORROW AT 7.45PM EST.

MCCARTHY, HOWEVER, SAID THE SUMMER SESSION WAS "DEDICATED TO VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER," AND ADDED: "THIS MAY EXPLAIN WHY EDWARD R. MURROW FEELS HE MUST WEEK AFTER WEEK SMEAR MCCARTHY."

HE CONTINUED: "MAYBE...HAVING BEEN ON THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL OF MOSCOW UNIVERSITY...IT MAY BE MR. MURROW IS WORRIED ABOUT EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS...I DON'T KNOW."

HE ALSO REPLIED TO STEVENSON'S CLAIM THAT THE GOP IS SPLIT DOWN THE MIDDLE BETWEEN MCCARTHY AND PRESIDENT EISENHOWER," ADDING:

"I DON'T THINK A NATION CAN SURVIVE IF THE TWO GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES SAY WE MUST HAVE CONFORMITY, WE MUST HAVE UNITY ABOVE EVERYTHING ELSE."

MCCARTHY HAS SAID HE WILL ELABORATE ON THIS MARCH 19 IN A MILWAUKEE SPEECH WHICH WILL BE AIRED BY A NETWORK OF INDEPENDENT RADIO STATIONS.

HE SAID HE IS TAKING THIS COURSE BECAUSE THE NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO. AND CBS HAVE REJECTED HIS REQUEST FOR EQUAL TIME TO ANSWER THEIR RADIO-TV COVERAGE OF STEVENSON'S SPEECH LAST SATURDAY.

(PICKUP 16TH PGH SECOND LEAD XXX HE SAID HE HOPED ETC.)

146AKN

TXN31 BULLETIN FIRST NIGHT LEAD MCCARTHY

BY ALVIN SPIVAK

WASHINGTON, MARCH 11--(INS)--SEN. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY BRANDED AS "STRICTLY UNTRUE" AND "COMPLETELY FALSE" TONIGHT THE CHARGES MADE BY ADLAI E. STEVENSON LAST SATURDAY IN AN ATTACK UPON HIM AND THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION.

MCCARTHY ALSO HIT BACK AT COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW'S CRITICISM OF HIM ON TELEVISION TUESDAY NIGHT. HE SAID MURROW MAY BE "WORRIED ABOUT" EXPOSURE OF COMMUNISTS BECAUSE HE FEARS IT MIGHT AFFECT "SOME OF HIS FRIENDS."

(MORE) 721PCO

TXN32 ADD ONE FIRST NIGHT LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHN X X X FRIENDS."

MCCARTHY MADE HIS COMMENTS IN AN INTERVIEW WITH FULTON LEWIS, JR., ON THE LATTER'S 15-MINUTE MUTUAL NETWORK PROGRAM.

ASKED BY LEWIS WHAT HE HAD TO SAY ABOUT "THE STEVENSON STORY" IN GENERAL, MCCARTHY LIKENED THE 1952 DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE TO A FARMER WHO FIGHTS EFFORTS TO CLEAN A BARN BECAUSE HE DISAGREES ON HOW IT SHOULD BE DONE.

MCCARTHY APPEARED ON LEWIS' PROGRAM TO GIVE PARTIAL ANSWER TO STEVENSON'S SATURDAY NIGHT SPEECH BEFORE A MEETING OF DEMOCRATS AT MIAMI BEACH.

THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN ANNOUNCED HE WILL GIVE A DETAILED REPLY MARCH 19 IN MILWAUKEE.

ON THE LATTER'S 15-MINUTE MUTUAL NETWORK PROGRAM.

ASKED BY LEWIS WHAT HE HAD TO SAY ABOUT "THE STEVENSON STORY" IN GENERAL, MCCARTHY LIKENED THE 1952 DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE TO A FARMER WHO FIGHTS EFFORTS TO CLEAN A BARN BECAUSE HE DISAGREES ON HOW IT SHOULD BE DONE.

MCCARTHY APPEARED ON LEWIS' PROGRAM TO GIVE PARTIAL ANSWER TO STEVENSON'S SATURDAY NIGHT SPEECH BEFORE A MEETING OF DEMOCRATS AT MIAMI BEACH.

THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN ANNOUNCED HE WILL GIVE A DETAILED REPLY MARCH 19 IN MILWAUKEE.

RESPONDING TO STEVENSON'S CLAIM THAT THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION HAS FOUND ONLY ONE COMMUNIST OUT OF TWO MILLION FEDERAL EMPLOYES BUT HAS CLAIMED TO HAVE DISCOVERED MORE, MCCARTHY LISTED THREE ALLEGED COMMUNISTS HE SAID WERE UPROOTED BY HIS OWN INVESTIGATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE.

(MORE) 725PCO

MMMMMMMMMMMMTXN33 ADD TWO FIRST NIGHT LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHN

X X X SUBCOMMITTEE.

MCCARTHY NOTED THAT THE TRIO WERE SUSPENDED BY THE ADMINISTRATION AFTER THEY REFUSED TO TELL HIS COMMITTEE WHETHER THEY WERE REDS. HE SAID HE "COULD GO DOWN THE LINE INDEFINITELY" BUT SUMMED UP BY SAYING: "I THINK THAT SHOWS HOW FALSE MR. STEVENSON'S STATEMENTS WERE."

AS FOR STEVENSON'S CRITICISM OF GOP ORATORS WHO SUGGESTED THAT REDS HAD BEEN PLANTED IN THE GOVERNMENT BY DEMOCRAT ADMINISTRATIONS, MCCARTHY ANSWERED BY QUOTING FROM A NEW YORK FEDERAL GRAND JURY'S PRESENTMENT ON ALLEGED AMERICAN REDS WORKING FOR THE UNITED NATIONS.

MCCARTHY SAID THE PRESENTMENT REPORTED THESE SUBVERSIVES HAD COME UP THROUGH THE RANKS OF FEDERAL EMPLOYMENT AS THE RESULT OF WHAT MUST HAVE BEEN "PART OF A DEFINITE PLANNED PATTERN."

MCCARTHY COMMENTED FIRMLY ON STEVENSON'S CLAIM THAT THE GOP IS DIVIDED AGAINST ITSELF -- HALF MCCARTHY AND HALF EISENHOWER.

THE SENATOR SAID: "I DON'T THINK A NATION CAN SURVIVE IF THE TWO GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES SAY THEY MUST HAVE CONFORMITY, MUST HAVE UNITY ABOVE ALL ELSE."

(MORE) 730PCO

TX ADD

TXN34 ADD THREE FIRST NIGHT LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHN X X X

CONFORMITY.

HE SAID THAT WAS THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE "TRUMAN-STEPHENSON" ADMINISTRATION AND INSISTED THAT "NO MATTER HOW GOOD A PARTY IS, IT CAN'T HAVE A ONE-THOUSAND PER CENT BATTING AVERAGE."

MCCARTHY SAID THAT STEVENSON'S IMPLIED ACCUSATION THAT MCCARTHY IS WARRING AGAINST THE ARMY IS "COMPLETELY FALSE IN LINE WITH THE SPEECH"

THE SENATOR REPEATED HIS PAST INSISTENCE THAT HE AND HIS SUBCOMMITTEE ARE "HELPING THE ARMY DIG OUT" THE FEW SUBVERSIVES IN ITS RANKS.

MORE 734PCO

BZ TX

IF MURROW'S CBS RADIO SHOW AT 7:45 HEARD IN TX, PLS MONITOR IF POSSIBLE

RRM HN 3/11/'02/734PBR

TXN35 ADD FOUR FIRST NIGHT LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHN X X X

RANKS.

HE SAID: "THIS IS NO CONTEST AGAINST THE UNITED STATES ARMY."

MCCARTHY REPLIED PRINCIPALLY TO MURROW'S CHARGE THAT HE ERRED IN BRANDING THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION AS SUBVERSIVE. THE SENATOR SAID THE ACLU HAD BEEN SO LABELED BY CALIFORNIA'S UNAMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE.

MURROW OFFERED MCCARTHY EQUAL AIR TIME TO ANSWER THE CRITICISMS LEVELED IN THE PROGRAM, WHICH THE SENATOR HAS SAID HE DID NOT SEE. MCCARTHY HAS SAID HE WOULD ACCEPT THE TIME "IF NO STRINGS ARE ATTACHED."

COMMENTING ON THE CHARGE BY SEN. RALPH E. FLANDERS (R) VT., THAT HE WAS TRYING TO SHATTER THE GOP AND IS DIVERTING NATIONAL ATTENTION FROM THREATS FROM ABROAD, MCCARTHY SAID HE WOULD PREFER TO GO ALONG WITH ABRAHAM LINCOLN, WHO SAID:

"IF THIS NATION IS TO BE DESTROYED, IT WILL BE FROM WITHIN."

THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN BEAT VICE PRESIDENT RICHARD M. NIXON TO THE GUN IN THE "ANSWER STEVENSON" RACE BY SPEAKING TO THE NATION AT 7 P.M. EST ON LEWIS' PROGRAM.

(PICK UP THIRD PARA EARLY BEGINNING X X X NIXON WAS ETC.)

750PCO

SPLIT

K

TXN37 BULLETIN INSERT FIRST LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHN AFTER 4TH PGH X X X BE DONE. (IN TXN31)

MCCARTHY SAID HE COULD NOT ANSWER THE "SPECIFIC ATTACK" MURROW MADE ON HIM DURING HIS NATIONALLY-TELEVISED "SEE IT NOW" PROGRAM BECAUSE HE HAS TROUBLE KEEPING UP WITH "THE EXTREME LEFT-WING . . . ELEMENTS OF RADIO AND TELEVISION."

MCCARTHY QUOTED FROM A 1935 CLIPPING FROM THE PITTSBURGH SUN-TELEGRAPH WHICH, HE SAID, NAMED MURROW AS AN AMERICAN ADVISOR TO A MOSCOW UNIVERSIT SUMMER SESSION WHICH THE SENATOR SAID WAS DEDICATED TO "VIOLENT OVERTHROW OF THE TRADITIONAL SOCIAL ORDER."

MCCARTHY SAID "THIS MAY EXPLAIN WHY EDWARD R. MURROW FEELS HE MUST WEEK AFTER WEEK SMEAR MCCARTHY" AND HE ADDED:

"MAYBE . . . HAVING BEEN ON THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL OF MOSCOW UNIVERSITY . . . IT MAY BE MR. MURROW IS WORRIED ABOUT EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS. I DON'T KNOW."

(END INSERT)

818PCO

TXN38 BULLETIN DIVL MCCARTHY

WASHINGTON, MARCH 11--(INS)--THE TABULATION OF TELEPHONE CALLS WERE RUNNING THREE-TO-ONE AGAINST SEN. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY (R) WIS. TONIGHT AFTER HIS RADIO INTERVIEW.

RADIO STATION WWDC, MUTUAL BROADCASTING SYSTEM'S WASHINGTON OUTLET, SAID THAT AT 8 P.M. EST, 45 MINUTES AFTER THE BROADCAST, ITS TELEPHONE COUNT WAS 82 CALLS AGAINST MCCARTHY AND 30 FOR.

819PCO

HN41N ADD ONE DIVL MCCARTHY XXX 30 FOR.

(AT THE SAME HOUR, MUTUAL'S NEW YORK STATION WOR, SAID THEIR CALLS WERE TABULATED AT 666 FOR MCCARTHY AND 269 AGAINST.

(EDWARD R. MURROW, THE CBS COMMENTATOR ATTACKED BY MCCARTHY DURING THE INTERVIEW, HAD NO IMMEDIATE COMMENT. MURROW MADE NO REFERENCE TO MCCARTHY'S ACCUSATIONS ON HIS REGULARLY SCHEDULED CBS RADIO NEWS SHOW WHICH WENT ON THE AIR A HALF HOUR AFTER MCCARTHY WENT OFF.)

838PBR

TXN39 BULLETIN SECOND LEAD MCCARTHY

BY ALVIN SPIVAK

WASHINGTON, MARCH 11--(INS)--SEN. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY ACCUSED ADLAI E. STEVENSON OF FALSEHOODS TONIGHT AND LAUNCHED A "LEFT-WING" CHARGE AGAINST RADIO-TELEVISION COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW.

THE WISCONSIN REPUBLICAN SAID STEVENSON MADE "COMPLETELY FALSE" CHARGES AGAINST HIM AND THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION IN A SPEECH SATURDAY WHICH WAS CARRIED ON TWO MAJOR RADIO AND TELEVISION NETWORKS.

THE SENATOR QUOTED FROM A 1935 NEWSPAPER CLIPPING NAMING MURROW AS A MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL AT MOSCOW UNIVERSITY'S SUMMER SESSION AND SAID MURROW "SMEARS MCCARTHY" BECAUSE HE MIGHT BE "WORRIED ABOUT EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS."

MCCARTHY MADE HIS INITIAL RADIO COUNTER-ATTACK ON THE PAIR IN AN INTERVIEW WITH FULTON LEWIS, JR., ON THE LATTER'S 15-MINUTE MUTUAL NETWORK PROGRAM AT 7 P.M. (EST).

A HALF-HOUR AFTER THE LEWIS PROGRAM WAS OVER, MURROW BEGAN HIS OWN 15-MINUTE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM NEWSCAST AND READ A NEWS DISPATCH ON MCCARTHY'S COMMENTS AS THE FINAL ITEM. HE SAID HE WOULD "WAIT FOR ANOTHER TIME" TO REPLY.

IN REPLY TO STEVENSON'S CLAIM THAT THE GOP IS SPLIT DOWN THE MIDDLE BETWEEN MCCARTHY AND PRESIDENT EISENHOWER, MCCARTHY SAID:

"I DON'T THINK A NATION CAN SURVIVE IF THE TWO GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES SAY WE MUST HAVE CONFORMITY, WE MUST HAVE UNITY ABOVE EVERYTHING ELSE."

(MORE) 848PCO

TX ADD

TXN40 ADD ONE SECOND LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHN X X X ELSE."

HE SAID HE HOPED REPUBLICANS WILL "NEVER ADOPT THE TRUMAN-STEVENSON THEORY THAT YOU MUST, YOU MUST AT ALL COSTS, PLACE PARTY ABOVE COUNTRY, GO ALONG WITH YOUR PARTY, EVEN (WHEN) MAKING MISTAKES."

THE SENATOR SAID: "I THINK WE SHOULD REALIZE THAT NO MATTER HOW GOOD A PARTY IS, IT CAN'T . . . HAVE A THOUSAND BATTING AVERAGE. IT IS GOING TO MAKE MISTAKES FROM TIME TO TIME."

(PICKUP 4TH PGH FIRST LEAD X X X ASKED BY LEWIS, ETC.)

849PCO

TXN41 BUN INSERT IN SECOND LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHN AFTER FIFTH PGH ENDING X X X TO REPLY.

MCCARTHY HAS ANNOUNCED THAT HE WILL MAKE A MORE DETAILED REPLY TO STEVENSON MARCH 19 IN A SPEECH IN MILWAUKEE WHICH WILL BE CARRIED OVER A HOOKUP OF INDEPENDENT RADIO STATIONS.

HE SAID HE IS TAKING THIS COURSE BECAUSE THE NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO. AND THE CBS HAVE TURNED DOWN HIS REQUEST FOR EQUAL AIR TIME TO ANSWER THEIR RADIO AND TELEVISION COVERAGE OF STEVENSON'S SPEECH.

(PICKUP SIXTH PGH X X X IN REPLY TO ETC.)

902PCO

HN46N BULLETIN INSERT SECOND LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK-TXN39) WASHN AFTER FIFTH PGH ENDING XXX REPLY.

(IN A LATER STATEMENT ISSUED FROM HIS NEW YORK OFFICE, MURROW DECLARED:

("WHEN I HAVE READ THE TEXT OF WHAT SENATOR MCCARTHY HAD TO SAY ABOUT ME I SHALL ATTEMPT TO DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH HIS MOST RECENT HALF-TRUTH.")

(END INSERT--PICKUP 6TH PGH XXX MCCARTHY HAS ANNOUNCED, ETC.)

913PBR

HN47N CORRECTION

EDITORS:

IN ADD ONE DIVNL MCCARTHY (HN41N) PLEASE KILL SECOND PARA BGNG XXX (EDWARD R. MURROW, THE CBS ETC.)

INS NY 3/11/925PBR

L B RUP

HN48N THE WORLD TONIGHT (MARCH 11, 1954)

BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

SENATOR JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY, IN A PARTIAL ANSWER TO ADLAI E. STEVENSON, SAID TONIGHT THAT THE 1952 DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE'S CHARGES AGAINST HIM AND THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION ARE STRICTLY UNTRUE AND COMPLETELY FALSE. MCCARTHY MADE HIS COMMENTS IN AN INTERVIEW WITH FULTON LEWIS, JUNIOR, ON THE LATTER'S MUTUAL NETWORK PROGRAM. HE ALSO HIT BACK AT COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM'S COMMENTATOR EDWARD R. MURROW'S CRITICISM OF HIM ON TELEVISION TUESDAY NIGHT.

MCCARTHY SAID HE QUOTED FROM A 1935 NEWSPAPER CLIPPING WHEN HE CHARGED MURROW WITH BEING NAMED IN A BOOKLET ENTITLED "MOSCOW UNIVERSITY SUMMER SESSION." HE SAID MURROW WAS LISTED AS QUOTE -- ON THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL OF MOSCOW UNIVERSITY. -- UNQUOTE. AT THAT TIME MURROW WAS ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION.

MURROW HAD THIS TO SAY IN REPLY -- AND WE QUOTE -- "WHEN I HAVE READ THE TEXT OF WHAT SENATOR MCCARTHY HAD TO SAY ABOUT ME I SHALL ATTEMPT TO DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH HIS MOST RECENT HALF-TRUTH."

THE WISCONSIN SENATOR SAID THAT MURROW MAY BE, -- QUOTE -- WORRIED ABOUT -- UNQUOTE -- EXPOSURE OF COMMUNISTS BECAUSE HE FEARS IT MIGHT AFFECT SOME OF HIS FRIENDS. MCCARTHY, WHO GAVE PARTIAL ANSWER TO STEVENSON'S SPEECH IN MIAMI BEACH LAST SATURDAY, ANNOUNCED EARLIER HE WILL GIVE A DETAILED REPLY ON MARCH 19 IN A MILWAUKEE SPEECH, BROADCAST BY RADIO.

IN ANSWER TO STEVENSON'S CLAIM THAT THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION HAS FOUND ONLY ONE COMMUNIST OUT OF TWO MILLION FEDERAL EMPLOYES BUT HAS CLAIMED TO HAVE DISCOVERED MORE, MCCARTHY LISTED THREE ALLEGED COMMUNISTS HE SAID WERE UPROOTED BY HIS OWN INVESTIGATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE. THE SENATOR NOTED THE TRIO WAS SUSPENDED BY THE ADMINISTRATION AFTER THEY REFUSED TO TELL HIS COMMITTEE WHETHER THEY WERE REDS. MCCARTHY COMMENTED ON STEVENSON'S CLAIM THAT THE GOP IS DIVIDED AGAINST ITSELF -- HALF MCCARTHY AND HALF EISENHOWER. HE SAID: "I DON'T THINK A NATION CAN SURVIVE IF THE TWO GREAT POLITICAL PARTIES SAY THEY MUST HAVE CONFORMITY, MUST HAVE UNITY ABOVE ALL ELSE." HE ADDED THAT NO MATTER HOW GOOD A PARTY IS, IT CANNOT HAVE A ONE-THOUSAND PER CENT BATTING AVERAGE.

HN51N LATEST NEWS IN BRIEF (MARCH 11, 1954)

BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

WASHINGTON--SENATOR JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY ACCUSES ADLAI E. STEVENSON OF FALSEHOODS IN HIS RECENT SPEECH AND SAYS THAT EDWARD R. MURROW SMEARS THE SENATOR BECAUSE MURROW MIGHT BE WORRIED ABOUT EXPOSURE OF SOME OF HIS FRIENDS.

CMN13 FOLO MCCARTHY

CHICAGO, MARCH 11-(INS)-DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CHAIRMAN STEPHEN A. MITCHELL SAID TONIGHT SEN. JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY'S RADIO-TV INTERVIEW WAS "DULL AS DISH WATER" AND ADDED "APPARENTLY THE SENATOR HAS RUN OUT OF POISON GAS."

MITCHELL, REACHED IN CHICAGO, SAID HE HADN'T LISTENED TO THE BROADCAST BUT MADE HIS COMMENT AFTER INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE READ HIM PORTIONS OF THE WISCONSIN SENATOR'S INTERVIEW WITH RADIO COMMENTATOR FULTON J. LEWIS, JR.

REPLYING TO SEN. MCCARTHY'S STATEMENT THAT THE DEMOCRATS' "TRUMAN-STEVENSON THEORY PLACES PARTY ABOVE COUNTRY EVEN WHEN MAKING MISTAKES," MITCHELL SAID:

"THE DEMOCRATS HAVE MADE MISTAKES AND THEY HAVE ADMITTED THEM.

"THE REAL TROUBLE IS THAT SEN. MCCARTHY IS THE REPUBLICANS' GREATEST MISTAKE--AND THEY WON'T ADMIT IT."

MITCHELL THEN COMMENTED THAT THE INTERVIEW SEEMED TO LACK THE "SENATOR'S USUAL DRIVE EXCEPT FOR THE REMARKS ABOUT (CBS COMMENTATOR EDWARD R.) MURROW." MITCHELL ADDED:

"I TRUST THE SENATOR WILL ALLOW US TO CONTINUE TO LISTEN TO MR. MORROW NOW THAT HIS SUBVERSIVE LINKS HAVE BEEN REVEALED."

914PMC

HN55N INSERT SECOND LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHINGTON AFTER 31ST PGH (2ND PARA TXN35) ENDING XXX CALIFORNIA'S UNAMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE.

MCCARTHY, IN A FILM PORTION OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE HEARING WHICH MURROW SHOWED, DID NOT SAY WHO HAD LISTED THE ACLU AS SUBVERSIVE. THE MOST FAMILIAR LISTING OF SUBVERSIVE ORGANIZATIONS IS THAT OF THE U. S. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

MURROW'S COMMENT ON THE PROGRAM WAS:

"THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S LIST DOES NOT AND HAS NEVER LISTED THE ACLU AS SUBVERSIVE NOR DOES THE FBI OR ANY OTHER FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AGENCY.

"AND THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION HOLDS IN ITS FILES LETTERS OF COMMENDATION FROM PRESIDENT TRUMAN, PRESIDENT EISENHOWER AND GENERAL MACARTHUR."

(END INSERT)

1029PBR

HN59N BULLETIN SUB

EDITORS: IN SECOND LEAD MCCARTHY (SPIVAK) WASHINGTON PLEASE SUB FOLLOWING FOR FIFTH, SIXTH AND SEVENTH PARAGRAPHS BEGINNING: A HALF-HOUR AFTER XXX AND ENDING: RECENT HALF-TRUTH.")

(IN NEW YORK, MURROW SAID THAT IN 1935 HE WAS AN ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION AND IN THAT CAPACITY SERVED AS "A MEMBER OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR A SUMMER SCHOOL IN MOSCOW."

(MURROW, WHO DESCRIBED THE INSTITUTE AS AN ORGANIZATION "ENGAGED IN THE EXCHANGE OF STUDENTS AND PROFESSORS BETWEEN THIS AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES," SAID THE SUMMER SCHOOL "WAS CANCELLED BY RUSSIAN AUTHORITIES BEFORE IT BEGAN."

(MURROW PROMISED TO "DEAL ADEQUATELY WITH SENATOR MCCARTHY'S LATEST RECKLESS HANDLING OF THE TRUTH" ON HIS CBS-RADIO PROGRAM TOMORROW AT 7:45 P.M. EST.)

(END SUB) 1125PJY

REMSEN BIRD

Dear Ed:-

Now McCarthy will attack the networks. We shall watch to see if they knuckle under! Public schools, churches, universities and colleges, departments of government, the army, various liberal institutions with honest intentions, certain distinguished individuals, etc. etc. How he does follow the proved pattern which the demagogues have employed through the ages.

During the pre-reformation days there was a group of gay souls who thought that the best way to break down the claimants to infallibility over state and church was to spoof them.

They wrote imaginary letters to a man named Ortius Gladius under the title of "Letters of Obscure Men". For a time they were regarded as authentic and commended and then the truth came out. They helped a lot in extricating the New Learning from the powers that would destroy the same.

Its an idea; but it would be I think profitable for the saving of those who were born free, to collect letters of such a sort addressed to this strange creature who is, whatever he thinks are his motives, is softening us for an American brand of a pusher around!

Yes.

Anyway if you have a moment you might read the enclosed.

It could be done better, but it helped me on a certain day to release some pent up emotions.

What we really need is someone like the little Saint of the Umbrian Valley. I am enclosing one of his prayers. I am not easily moved to satire for this that is going on moves me rather to tears and prayers than to scoffing and such.

Thank God for you, Elmer Davis, Cecil Brown, -- even Kaltenborn!

Best to Janet

Cordially

Remsen

P02502
Carmel, California
March 9, 1954

The Honorable, Joseph McCarthy
The Senate of the United States
Washington, D. C. (Top Secret!)

Dear Joe:-

We certainly have them on the run now! Now we must be exceedingly careful, for some of these birds may see what is really going on, and it is important that they do not see! My counsel is that we begin at once, and very very quietly to organize the Purple Shirts and I suggest that we call them, when the time comes for us to get the power of such organization into the open, "The Sons of Freedom". I am enclosing a picture of the uniform, insignia, etc. which you will want to look over.

What I would like to see worked out at once, is groups of ten in every community, in every organization, in every school, among the politicos, the business men, even in organized labor if we can get in, and in the churches, who can be absolutely counted on to report, to propagate, and to spread into the larger groups when the time is ready.

You can always learn from those who have sought to get control in other lands and in other days. The organization that Togliatti has produced in Italy is an example, also Hitler, also Lenin, and there are as you well know many other illustrations in the past.

The country is now thoroughly softened. These frightened pigeons are ready to fly in any direction to save the land from the communists and the fellow travelers, they see everywhere. They now distrust everybody except you!

The year 1956 is not far off and we must be ready! By the time it comes around we must be thoroughly organized and whatever these poor saps who back Eisenhower may plan, we shall be smarter. You will be one of the candidates, the Dewey Forces will swing to you. You will be the candidate, and then the President, and all so legal, and all so hunky dory. Remember how Hitler worked it out. You can learn even from the devil. Poor Hindenberg. . Poor Ike!

Where are we now. As your specialist in propaganda, let me give you a kind of reassuring summary;

(1) We have liquidated the egg-heads! Harvard University, that refuge of the sissies and the subversives. Its President you have thoroughly slapped down as well he deserved, for as I recall he was pretty nasty when he was in Lawrence. You failed in getting Conant, but don't worry about that. We'll catch up with him presently. The whole crazy loyalty oath business has well fogged the mind of the Californians and most of the more conservative still think that's a hot bed of communism. And as for the Middle West, good old Red Orange has now liquidated Stoddard, who has been a real power in this effort to keep America in the World understanding groove!

As to the rest of the colleges and universities, we have some pretty powerful trustees and regents and benefactors who are thoroughly suspicious of anyone who presents controversial issues, and fewer and fewer of these so-called scholars want to stick their necks out. Economic necessity is a powerful weapon on our side.

(2) As to Public Education, thanks to Zoll and his campaign against progressive education, and frills and furbelows, and for the three rs, and all that Hearst did in paving the way, and the work of the various sappy patrictic societies over the country, who slap down anybody who has anything to say that isn't right in the groove, and with the little guys needing the money in the monthly check to pay for the new baby, over the country from the superintendents down to the janitors public education is thoroughly intimidated, and soft as butter.

(3) Let us take a look at the Protestant Clergy and the Protestant Churches. There was a time when these were very powerful in this country. They have stiff necks and believe that no one should push them around, and they seem to think that the teachings of this Jesus on love and such guff can be applied to meet the problems which people face in town and country and business and government. They are starry eyed in this but they have been pretty tough when it comes to standing up for the -- what they call, the freedom of the conscience. But we have them now getting soft. There are so many of the trustees and elders of churches who are afraid of all this socialism, which they mix up with what these preachers say, that thousands of them are talking more about theology, pie in the sky and what happens after death and less about politics and what is going on in the world.

These churches are made up for the most part of frightened bourgeois who want to hang on to their investments, who have observed what is wrong in the world and who blame it all on the democrats and among the democrats on the pinkos who are in their minds fellow travelers and as such Fifth Amendment communists, and are not to be trusted. That is the screwy way their minds run, but you old screwer have helped to make them so! Very naughty, Hey what?

The Velde attack built on absolutely nothing threw about a lot of sand and there are some ministers of great power who are completely on our side and who can be counted on to work against us. But watch watch very carefully, this John Mackay, Moderator of the Presbyterian Church who got out a letter to the 8,000 Presbyterian Churches against you and your method, and watch Bromley Oxnam, the top bishop of the Methodist church going over the country shooting his face, and the Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, this man Sherrill. He sits with the rich and mighty and a lot of the rich and mighty are very much more concerned with Christian principles than they are with their accumulated gain. They are very very dangerous.

(4) As to the government, the poor sappy government! There is where you have had your greatest success. The people who are in the State Department are thoroughly cowed. You ever had Acheson cowed, and in this liquidation business and in bringing up opinions expressed long ago, you have something on nearly everybody of any importance in that arm of the government. No one in the State Department now would really dare come out against you.

And who in any other branch of the Federal Government will dare come out flat foot against you. Its all ready for you there, believe me.

(4) Hitler was so smart in getting the patriotic organizations back of him. His technic was superb. The Jews are against our chosen people! The enemy is rings around. Look out for the subversives within. We want our Saar and our Ruhr, and we want to get rid of this Weimar crowd who don't know their right hands from their left. The Sons of the Revolution, give you their plaques! The Daughters of the Revolution swear by you. The Veterans of Foriegn Wars, by and large are on your side, and want everybody every year or thereabouts to take the oath. And there are the Liberty Belles, and the Pro Americas, and the Christian Economists, and the American Legiona chapters — not all of them -- we must look into this.

But wherever you go if the conversation turns to you and your method, always someone stands up and says, "Well he's got the communists on the run. What more do you want!" Very good.

(5) Let us report on the Roman Catholics. We've got to silence the Jesuitical "America" and this Catholic pinko sheet, "The Commonweal". They can do us a lot of damage. But Cardinal Spellman is out and out for you and he is the most powerful priest in the USA and he may be the Pope. It could be. It could be! Talk to any group in any town in America now, that is right of center, and someone will say, "Well, the Catholics are against the communists, and the protestants are wishy washy, so I am for the catholics!" Good, I say, very very good.

(6) Now the Writers and the painters and the musicians and all these other dreamers who get easily cockeyed ideas. I am making for you a catalogue of them. I will list those that are reds, and those that write like reds and those that we can count on. There are writers who have tried out the communist line and have swung over, but they have the same kind of psychology, in whatever category you find them. They who once fall for the guy that tells them what to think are your meat. We need some good writers, commentators, radio announcers, and makers of songs! By the way, we need a good song? I must find you someone to write it, a real bang up song like Giovenezza, or the Horst Wessel thing or the International. Nothing like a song. Think what the Marcellaise did for the revolutionaries in France? Very important that I find you a good song.

(7) Now the Army and the Navy. The Navy will be easy. Those guuys don't know much of what is going on, and they are picked pretty carefully by those who want to be sure that they will be easy on the ship. They can for the most part be counted on. There are stiff necked ones in the Army, but you have them on the run. It got a bit dangerous there for a bit, but very soon the Zwicker affair will be forgotten and the fact that you found a communist promoted and honorably discharged will not be forgotten. When we get this special Purple Shirt organization well oiled, we will filter into the army and they will behave, they will behave. The conflict between the Westpointers, who also don't know much outside the military and the Reserve officers is right down your alley. "There's not to reason why. There's but to do and die!" Well we can use them, living or dying.

(8) The Press! That is easy, easy. There is no real democratic press. The pink sheets, the New Republic for example are struggling to exist. Most of the newspapers of the little towns are republican and on our side. The New York Times, the Herald Tribune, the Washington Post, and a few others we have to watch, but give us time, give us time. As to the Periodicals few read the slicks, Henry Luce has an Achilles heel, and Raymond Moley has a grudge against the New Dealers, his heel! When we take over we will have a list and we will have local leaders who will know when and how to turn the newspapers to shout for you. No difficult job, that!

(9) Commentators, columnists, Radio broadcasters, TV shows and commants, all this sound and fury that goes over the air. The sponsors are shrewd enough to know whose voice wins soap buyers and whose doesn't. Little by little we get rid of the ones that speak out. Fulton Lewis is superb and I should imagine he would be the one we would want to give the whole plan when it seems a proper time to you. Ed Murrow, Cecil Brown, Elmer Davis, even Kaltenborn we must discredit. We haven't been able to get anything on Murrow, but we will.

(10) Nixon, Dirksen and Jenner have what it takes. They are tough, ruthless, and are on your side. They should know that there are top places in the New Government. Nixon certainly grows in Savvy, and he is becoming very popular over the country with the old ladies and the frightened pigeons. I would pull him in close pretty soon.

(11) The Democrats are more and more divided. We can play them against one another. The bogey of the negro is all we need in the South. In the North the New Dealers and the Anti New Dealers are at one another's throats now. Adlai Stevenson is the most powerful force they have, but whenever he speaks we have immediatelythe power of Winchell and Lewis and the Press to show him up as the one who is causing the hatred and bitterness and division of our times. Nixon did a good job in the Campaign in tying Hiss to his tail! But he is smart. We have to watch him.

So much for now.

I have been making a careful study of just how Lenin, Hitler, Mussolini, Franco, and Mao got the countries softened and then took over. I am also making a very very careful study of how it was that Hitler and Mussolini lost out!

Keep at it big boss! Don't bother to answer. Just go on to the next attack. Attack! That is the motto! Throw sand in their eyes and mud in their faces. and in 1956 we take over.

Yours for Freedom!

Dr. George M. Day
5223 Maywood Avenue
Eagle Rock, Los Angeles, Cal.

My dear George:-

Thank you for your letter from San Francisco and the note concerning Harold Fisher and Dr. Timoshenko. You will presently tell me what this is all about! Harold will be down here to-morrow for a Stanford Conference and Helen has invited a few friends in to talk with him. We are at the moment especially interested in the location of the Ford founded, Institute of Human Behavioral Studies. Monterey is an ideal place for it!

The other after noon I met the widow of Walter Lyman Brown, a distinguished mining engineer, associated with Mr. Hoover, William Honnold and others in Belgian relief, friend of the Various famous mining engineers, Harvey Huid, etd.

They lived in Russia in connection with the work of mining explorations and helping Mr. Hoover in the work of relief he undertook there during the famine time! Remember?

She talked to me with great interest and precision concerning the Russian people and she shares completely your ideas. This cruel fearful government will pass. It is the product of some strange philosophy, opportunism, and the accumulated evil that blew up the top.

The Russian people are possessed by and large of great talents and have a tremendous future. The land is rich beyond all compare in minerals and other resources. It is, as she says, as the USA was in the days of Lewis and Clarke

We must be ready to cooperate and to work with these people when the day arrives that it will be possible. That day will come!

This point of view interests me intensely, and especially when I realize that over the hill there are 200 Russians teaching hundreds of Army personnel the Slavic Language and there are Slavic students, especially under your care, spread across the land.

Cruelty, evil, malice, bitterness, mal treatment of various sorts pass in time, but faith, hope and love are eternal!

PO2502 Affectionately
Carmel, California
March 5, 1954

CBS RADIO

Office Communication to: Mr. Church

from: Ted Koop

February 17, 1954

CONFIDENTIAL

A friend of mine, who is in a sensitive government agency, makes this proposition:

A colleague of his has been suspended pending new investigation of disloyalty charges which were washed out a couple of years ago. My source argues that the man is entirely innocent and thinks he could obtain the man's cooperation if Ed Murrow would like to develop the case on the air. If Murrow is interested, my source will endeavor to obtain the consent of the man involved and his attorney to lay open the whole case. I explained that if Murrow should take it up he naturally would expect to cover the other side, and my source said that would be perfectly agreeable.

He would give me no further information until I can give him at least tentative indication that Murrow is interested. I have enough confidence in my source, however, to feel that we would not be getting a pig in a poke.

JFK

693

(Copy - Translation)

"U C H I T E L S K A Y A G A Z E T A" ("Teacher's Gazette")

No. 5, 30th January, 1948.

THE "HIGH AIMS" OF MR. DUGGAN
(Full Summary of 2-1/2 column article) by Prof. M. Bernstein.

The magazine "America" published for Russian readers by the US Information Bureau, kindly lent the pages of its twelfth number to Professor Stephen Duggan and his son, Directors of the Institute of International Education, in New York, on the question of "international exchange of students and scholars". The article is richly illustrated with idyllic pictures of students from Hungary, Mexico, India, Iceland, Greece, and Palestine, relaxing, eating, reading and working in laboratories. The authors are discursively eloquent on the "need for a mutual understanding which would pass the barriers of race, nation and creed" on "the strengthening of good will and community of aims between the democratic countries". They try to convince Soviet readers that their Institute of International Education (IIE) has from its very inception concerned itself only with the attainment of these high aims.

Duggan is trying to extend the activity of the IIE to the USSR. He has made similar attemps not a few times before, but without success, for it is well known in the Soviet Union what Mr. Duggan and the Institute, which he heads, represent.

The IIE came into being literally on the day following the end of the first World War when the most aggressive section of American monopoly capital had placed on the agenda the question of the world hegemony of the USA. The new foreign political tasks of American imperialism called to life new organizational forms of political, economic and ideological expansion. A distinct and important role in the general scheme for the ideological offensive was assigned to the "educational" cadres of American imperialism.

The Institute of International Education was organized under the stamp of the well-known philanthropic Carnegie fund. But this was merely a mask and not a particularly clever one. From the very first days of its existence, the IIE had been the centre of international propaganda for American reaction, the nursery of a special detachment of American residents in all parts of the globe. As from 1926 when the Institute had given practical evidence of its ability to perform the tasks laid upon it, a special conference of representatives of the Morgan and Rockefeller philanthropic organizations financing the Institute and of representatives of the American Education Council which was the ideological and political inspiration behind it, turned the IIE into a monopoly American institution for international pedagogic relations, for training legal "pedagogic" spies and informers and for establishing an "American column" in every country.

Moreover, from 1939 onwards the IIE in practice controlled the entire work of consultation, information and orientation as well as of supervision connected with all foreign students studying in American higher education establishments even of those who do not enjoy the material support of the Institute and who have no need whatsoever of its guardianship. In other words, since the beginning of the '40s, the IIE has held in its hands all the threads of American foreign pedagogic relations.

The annual reports published by the Institute and the writings of Duggan himself, give an idea of the proportions, forms and methods of the work of this outpost of US "pedagogic" aggression and reveal the immense danger which its many-sided activity presents to the independence of peoples, to real democratic peace and cultural progress.

As to the political colour of the Institute, it will suffice to say that one member of its management is the notorious John Foster Dulles - one of the most violent of the warmongers, publicly branded by A. Ya. Vyshinski; others are Thomas Lamont - big banker and director of a number of industrial and transport corporations; E. Morrow - reactionary radio commentator; Paul Monroe, Virginia Gildersleeve, among whom pleiad of such educationalists with long experience in planting American "educational" institutions in colonial and semi-colonial countries.

The chief activity of the IIE is the organization of international student exchanges. In the 25 years of its existence it has sent about 2.5 thousand American students abroad, and placed more than 3000 students from Europe, Asia and South America in American colleges.

The American students have to pass through a two-fold political filter - they are selected by special selection committees attached to the establishments and colleges which have made the agreement with Mr. Duggan in the transaction concerned. The recommendation of their own colleges alone, however, is not enough; candidates must pass before a selection committee in the Institute of International Education itself.

Every student sent abroad must present two reports to the Institute - one during his stay, the other on his return home. These reports are secret and may be used only for the information of other students who are subsequently sent to the same country.

Two important criterions in the selection of candidates are: positive references from "politically reliable" persons and a capacity for getting on with other people. Students sent abroad by the IIE are advised not to confine themselves to their academic pursuits, but to "study the cultural, political and social life of the country to which they are sent, make friends with the local students and visit their homes, and establish friendly relations with the population".

The information which comes in through the Institute, as Duggan proudly declares, is more correct and reliable than that procured by the State Department through its Intelligence agents.

The real nature of the training which the IIE gives to American students staying abroad was "brilliantly" demonstrated during the recent war: in the words of its director the Institute became a reserve from which the American War Department and other state organs could draw trained cadres of occupation experts and colonisers. And one cannot but agree with Mr. Duggan that in this respect "the IIE justified the hopes of its real patrons and friends".

Since its inception the IIE has placed over 3000 foreign students in specially selected US colleges. They, unlike their American opposites, have to pass through a three-fold filter. Besides the selection made in Institutes in their own countries they must also come before a selection board organised in their countries and obliged to include two American residents there who enjoy the confidence of Duggan & Co. The final say belongs to a selection committee in the IIE itself.

When he has finally passed through all these filters and won a scholarship from the Institute, the foreign student comes under its total guardianship and the tireless supervision of its agents in American colleges. In practice he is told which college he must enter. There he is directed by a specially chosen "professor" who "advises" him in all questions, even in the choice of newspapers and magazines to read, meetings to attend, and in the organization of his private relationships. All this is done in order that the student shall form "real enthusiasm for the American way of life and American civilisation".

In the words of Duggan, only very few foreign students fail to yield to this "ideological" suasion. This is very likely, for the "fortunates" honoured with Duggan's "bounty" are naturally the offspring of the families of the ruling cliques in foreign states who are, according to Duggan, "candidates for leading public service" in their own country. Such selection, is, of course, no mere chance. In its work with foreign students the IIE sets itself far-reaching goals; it plans to establish an American core among the ruling classes of the corresponding countries. As the Second World War again showed, in its respect too its calculations have justified themselves to a considerable extent. Duggan maintains that "the majority of foreign students who have passed through the IIE have proved loyal friends of the USA". It is among them that the Americans now seek and find "convinced" supporters of the "Truman doctrine", who fawn to Uncle Sam and are prepared to sell and betray the national sovereignty and the national dignity of their country for a dollar sop.

The second extensive branch of the IIE's activity is its "academic exchanges", i.e., the organization of lectures by foreign scholars in American colleges and by American scholars in foreign colleges. The selection of scholars invited to America, like the selection of American professors sent abroad, has a specific character. Both, as a rule, belong to the openly reactionary camp. In any case they must all be absolutely "reliable" from the point of view of capitalist ideology and "loyal" to American policy.

The IIE has spared no energies to organize "lecture tours" for such venerable "scholars" as ... the former President of the German Reichsbank, Schacht, and the Italian diplomat, Carlo Sforza, as well as a visit of the notorious airman Lindberg to the Latin-American and Far Eastern countries "to study schools, universities and the education systems as a whole".

The Nuremberg trial of the main German War criminals proved beyond doubt the "academic" nature of Schacht's visit to the USA. Evidently Duggan did not foresee such an end for his fascist protege when in 1943 he tried to deceive American and world public opinion by asserting that "Schacht did not receive a cent of credit from America".

Nor could Duggan, evidently, foresee that the secret of the sudden "pedagogic" transformation of Lindberg would be given away by his friend and companion-in-arms, John Barrett, who told representatives of the press that the visit of the "American prince", Colonel Lindberg, to Latin America, had been planned in order to weaken the impression made by the visit of the then Prince of Wales.

On the other hand, Duggan not only foresaw but awaited with impatience proofs of the beneficial influence of the IIE on his friend, Sforza. When, with the aid of his American protectors, the latter attained to the office of Italian Foreign Minister, he instructed his newspaper to declare that "any power which has signed the peace treaty may make any armed landing it please on any part of the Italian coast ...".

After this, how could Duggan not boast of his successes in organising "academic exchanges" and in "strengthening mutual understanding between democratic peoples"...

What is the real attitude of Duggan and his Institute to the Soviet Union? In his last article in "America" he writes that "ignorance and prejudice are the primary factors which give birth to ill-will and conflict between peoples". These words apply perfectly to Duggan himself. All his activity and writings have proved not only his prejudice and ignorance in questions concerning the USSR, but also his complete inability to learn the appropriate lessons from his personal "experience" in this sphere.

The Socialist Revolution aroused in Duggan alarm and terror almost bestial. With the solemn mien of the venerable "scholar" he took to producing vile fictions about the "Bolshevist terror which has deprived Russia of her intellectual forces", the Bolsheviks as disturbers of peace throughout the world", and so on.

With the generous means put at his disposal by Morgan and Rockefeller he has made repeated attempts to prepare an American core for the USSR - through his "Russian Student Fund" mobilising White Russian emigrés and by personal visits to the Soviet Union in 1925 and again in 1934.

He has met, however, with repeated failure. The frontiers of the USSR have proved firmly barred to his agents. Nothing has been left but to return to his old weapon against the Soviet people - slander. And in this respect, in his last, autobiographical book, - "A Professor in the Wildest Sense of the World" - he has excelled himself.

Such is Mr. Duggan, who conceals beneath the gown of "Professor of International Pedagogy" a poisoned weapon of Intelligence and espionage; such is the Institute under his direction.

"Teacher's Gazette", No. 5, 1948.

RECALL McCARTHY and his METHODS

Unfair to Traitors and Red Sympathizers and

GUILTY ON 10 COUNTS:

1. Breaking a baseball bat on a witness.
2. Preventing Lt. Peress from becoming a General.
3. Cause of breaking up a Communist traitor's Club in the Army and the good, hard work of Lt. Peress.
4. Causing loss of sleep to all traitors and injuring the health of sympathizers by backfiring headlines.
5. Causing the shortage of aspirins to left-wing sympathizers in radio, television and newspapers.
6. Causing $9,000,000. to be wasted on a Washington newspaper by new owners, known to all for their views.
7. Causing the curtain to be raised showing traitors in full view running to hide behind the Fifth Amendment curtain.
8. Accusing Ed R. Murrow of being a Red sympathizer; that's worse than a thousand Communist traitors. Why such a nice man should be brow-beaten by a Communist hater like McCarthy. Murrow, like Dean Acheson, could not turn his back on old pals. It's not fair to Murrow, a man who screamed at General MacArthur and helped get him fired.
9. Because he is a Dictator, a Hitler, Mussolini, a scoundrel, revolutionist, radical, villain, anarchist, Fascist, liar, falsifier, Gun man, goon, gangster, Devil, Bum, Mud-row, Julius Caesar, Napoleon, and Huey Long.
10. Causing the Communists to put pressure on stores for selling the following books:

    "McCarthy and his enemies" by William Buckley

    "The Web of Subversion" by James Burnham

    "McCarthyism" by Sen. Joseph McCarthy

    "Red Treason on Broadway" by Myron C. Fagan, P.O. Box 8655 Cole Branch, Hollywood [redacted] 46, Cal.

THE STRONG MEN OF AMERICA

Cooperating with Boston Minute Men

Temporary Address:

30-94 43rd Street

Long Island City, N. Y.

In his attack on me, McCarthy is merely following his now familiar ~~tactic~~ technique of attempting to divert attention from criticism of him, even under conditions of scrupulous fairness, by attacking his critics as Communists or fellow travelers.

Criticism of McCarthy's tactics has resulted in charges that the Milwaukee Journal is "the Milwaukee edition of the Daily Worker; that the Washington Post is "the Washington edition of the Daily Worker; that Time magazine had a purpose to "obstruct the fight against Communists"; that the Commonweal--~~the~~ a leading Catholic weekly-- had done "a great service to the Communist Party"; that the Christian Science Monitor paralleled the Daily Worker in "venemous, distorted" stories.

After former Senator Benton had submitted to the Senate his formal charges against McCarthy (including the charge that McCarthy had lied under oath), McCarthy charged that Benton had "established himself as the hero of every Communist and crook in and out of government." The Alsops' criticism of McCarthy in the Saturday Evening Post for July 9, 1950 was characterized by McCarthy as "almost 100% in line with the official instructions issued Communists and fellow-traveling members of the press and radio by Gus Hall, National Secretary of the Communist Party."

Fortunately, the McCarthy tactics contains within itself a self-destructive force: It cannot survive constant repetition.

While the McCarthy diversionary ~~tactic~~ technique has been adequately exposed by his own acts, the criticism of his tactics remains unanswered. Herbert Philbrick, the FBI counter-spy whose testimony was decisive in the conviction of the 11 Communist leaders, has stated:

> "'According to the leaders of the Communist Party, McCarthy has helped them a great deal. The kind of attacks he has made do three things that the comrades like:
>
> "'1--They add greatly to the confusion, putting up a smoke screen for the party and making it more difficult than ever for people to discern just who is a Communist and who is not.
>
> "'2--They make the party appear a lot stronger than it is.
>
> "'3--They do considerable damage to some of the "stupid liberals" whom the party hates.'"

The U. S. Advisory Commission on Information (composed of Irwin Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, Philip D. Reed, chairman of the board of General Electric Co., Ben Hibbs, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, and Justin Miller, chairman of the board of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters), reported to President Eisenhower on February 3, 1954, that the kind of investigation conducted by McCarthy had seriously crippled the nation's global propaganda effort. "It is not too much to say," the Commission reported, "that the desirable results sought through the activities of the information program are largely offset, if not destroyed, by the constant counter-barrage which is so generously distributed to the peoples of the world."

5-C 6

FOLLOWING INFORMATION HAS BEEN RECEIVED REGARDING

PLANS FOR McCARTHY ATTACK ON MURROW

MOST IMPORTANT: Will use folders of 1933 and 1934 trips to Russia..quoting from glowing reports of what can be seen in "great experiment", etc...Also bringing in sponsorship by Intourist, VOKS, etc...Stephen Duggan, "Father of Lawrence," etc.

EDWARD R. MURROW...and associates (one of writers and at least one ad man, probably from Kenyon & Eckhardt)

Might find it helpful to check some of this material which is being prepared for use by McCarthy:

THEME: Murrow is a long time ally and associate of Communist Russia; he has been closely associated and identified with Commies, fellow-travelers, and subversives.

Material being researched:

1; Institute of Pacific Relations: Report #2050

p. 37: Testimony of Bozolepoy on VOKS (which sponsored Soviet trips)

p. 49: Holland report

2. Indianapolis Star: editorial of Feb. 24, 54: "Daily Worker praises Murrow"

3. The Bulletin, League of Free Nations Association: Vol. 1, No. 3 and No. 4 apparently trying to tie Murrow in with directors, notably Stephen Duggan, Lillian Wald, Owen Lovejoy.

4. William T. Gernacy testimony before Special Committee on Un-American activities 75th Congress, Vol. 2: p. 1482-83; 1494; 1561; 1654; 1658; 1660 (or either of pages which open at these spots).

Vol. 4: 2514 2516

Vol. 1: 90 115 116 125 162 248 250 254 423 424 438 440 462 527 536 570 689

Object: League of Peace and Democracy.

5. THE WORLD CRISIS...OUR WAY OUT...Address given before Annual Meeting of the American Council of Education, Chicago, Ill. May 6, 1950.
   Object: to tie in Owen Lattimore.

6. Publishers Weekly..Nov. 8, 1947. Currents in the Trade. p. 2251.

Other research on: Civil Liberties Union to show that it was cited as subversive by : California Legislative Committee (will use quotes from Roger Baldwin..Harvard Class Book)
Ham Fish Committee in 1930 or 1931

Also attempt to show that hump-backed lady who was great influence on Murrow was either Pink or Communist.

Also tie in with National Students Union.

NOTE: A Dr. Shotwell who testified in IPR hearings that he was in a room with 19 Marxists and one anti-Marxists (himself)..attempt will be to have Shotwell swear Murrow was among 19.

Other themes being studied: Harold Laski
Anti-Conscription Campaign

This raises the serious question as to whether we should take the initiative in "contributing" information to McCarthy's investigator.

THINGS TO BE DONE

Being right is not enough.

And the tears and the handshakes, the mail and phone counts and the publicity clips and editorials of those who agree with you is not enough.

We should know by now that there will be more from McCarthy; that the only proper way to anticipate his next utterance is to magnify the impossible.

It would be blatant stupidity not to spend time and effort and money to anticipate and prepare to defend against his next blast.

Much of this will never see daylight. But it must be ready, in the bank, for immediate use.

The approach to McCarthy needs a strategic and tactical plan. To think otherwise is to ignore recent history.

And it means ignoring McCarthy's warning that he will need "considerable time to put together all the pertinent facts in your record."

He has, I presume, files and, I know, a staff to do this.

You need files and a staff.

You need one person, preferably trained in law, to organise things. You are inclined to scoff at organization, in the sense of orderliness. I think for this issue, at this time, there must be a change.

Your man should be directly responsible for many things; with such assistance as he needs:

1. a complete file, with tape where possible, of everything McCarthy has said or will in the future say about you.

2. a screening of all mail and telegrams to you; to check on the trend, to collect leads for further exploitation, to collect possible evidence that your reputation has been hurt by McCarthy with a view to eventual libel or slander action.

3. to act as a collection agency and evaluator of friendly tips, hunches, fact and rumor from your friends in this city and elsewhere.

4. to direct the preparation of an answer to every statement McCarthy makes about you.

5. to sift all material submitted to you in reference to this episode.

6. to act as your representative where it is physically impossible or impractical for you to appear.

It would seem obvious that there must be some set-up to get quick approval, where approval is necessary, from company officials.

And it would seem wise for someone in the company to decide and then relay to the responsible news officials, just how the continuing story of you and McCarthy is to be handled; whether objectively (as possible) or protectively or argumentatively.

There should be set up now, with as much flexibility as possible, a policy decision on such recurring problems as these: should SIN be made available for re-showing..to whom and when..should there be a continuance of what I understand are now current 'private' showings..should excerpts from the radio show be made available, on tape, to all, a few, none? Should such a decision bind only the past or be reviewed after each SIN or radio mention of McCarthy?

There is a need for research, inasmuch as McCarthy's files will produce whatever his tongue demands. This should include:

1. immediate availability of all matters pertaining to both of you starting with SIN show.
2. a record of all his speeches
3. a specially assigned man to accompany him on this week's speaking trip in which, in all likelihood, you will be a considerable target.
4. as much tape and film of McCarthy, from here on, as is possible to collect. This pertains only to forthcoming activities.
5. a summary of how many minutes, hours, words you have uttered in the past five years on radio, TV, etc. This, to show, how well known, and public your views are.
6. there should be a representative listing of the radio and TV subjects to which you have addressed yourself; a representative series of excerpts on your conclusions, admonitions, etc. I.E. from Harnessing the horse to the hydrogen bomb.
7. this research effort should also quickly collect all anti-Murrow statements by Moscow. All pro-Murrow statements by distinguished citizens in this country and abroad.
8. it should include an analysis, with typical cases, of the "label" file we have collected from the radio fan mail.
9. any correspondence you may have had with McCarthy.
10. a knowledge of what the Daily Worker has had to say about you in general and specifically. (See Indianapolis editorial)
11. a summary of awards you've received..from whom..and for what..in the words of their citations.

There will also be need of some personal research by you for your own personal files.

You must review your present and past friends and associates and decide how much you will say about each and under what conditions. We have had warning that "maybe he (M) is worried about the exposure of some of his firneds."

In addition to this there are other personal matters for personal consideration:
Your work schedule should be such so that you can be free immediately for consideration of last minute McCarthy attacks or plants.
You must be alert on practical matters: phone taps, inquiring unfriendly friends.. public or private attempts to draw you out on matters that had better be left for later.
There must be preparation..perhaps in standby recording from abroad..to make the radio show a minimum burden, should the circumstances warrant it.
There should be consideration of past intimidation and the possible future use thereof.
Quick, short answering of mail. It would be foolish to permit current manifestation of good will and support to be neglected. The unknown "they" might be helpful in the future.
An avoidance, even if contrived, of interviews with reporters either on the current fracas or under pretense of the bigger picture, until this picture is clearer.

Maj Gen Miles Reber ..in ten yrs dealing with Cong never known "greater pressure" than applied for officers commiss for Schine

..from both Mc and Cohn..particularly Cohn

.. Mc says Reber's brother Sam.. then acting high commissh Germ.. made "vicious attacks" cohn-Schine and had them shadowed when toured Europe 1953 investigate Info service and libraries

..army charges improper pressure for prefered treatment Sc ine.. Mc says false.. army tried divert committee

..Reber says thot Cohn effort as personal friend.. and Mc Carthy matter

..Cohn persistently after him to speed up commish for Schine

Reber: "I felt I was being put under defeinite pressure"

"To the best of my recollection, I recall no instance in which I was put under greater pressure"

..Reber was liason officer with army..with Cong for ten yrs

..says he acted without bias toward anyone

..any difs brother Sam may have had with Cohn-schine had nothing do his actions Schine case

Reber now command gen U army forces in wester European area

AFTERNOON wrangle over whether Mc coul ask Reber whether brother Sam had been fired as security risk

Mc suggested Sam left St Dept under cloud..allowed resign when charges made against him that he was bad security risk

Roy Jenkins objects form of question ..Mc withdrew it

Reber: brother retired as was entitled to by law when reached age of 60. Know nothing about any security case involving him"

Reber says: army transport service..provost marshal... office Psyhological warfare all saud he not qualified for commish

R; took all possible steps to get Schine commish army sect stevens

..subjected "persistent, tireless effort" by Mc and aides to get special treatment for Schine

..repeated previous charges that Chn threatened the wreck the army and that Stevens was through as sect

..during my tenure "there is no record that matches this ½p persistent, tireless effort to obtain special consideration and privilegss for this man

..and after Schine unducted more effots se ek preferential trtmt

..said effort included more than 65 phone calls..19 meetings

..informed that reqest on Schines behalf ran all way from bid for direct commish to relief from Kp duties

..in period when new draftees gor 3 passes.. Schine got 15

Sept 16.. Mc asked for commish for Schine.. reminded him application turned down

Oct 2.. Cohn and Francis Carr asked him assihn Schine ny area told impossible excuse him from basic treaining

Stevens advised by John G Adams that Mc irritated by Schine because efforts have pix taken with other Senator and others at Ny hearing

S chine case "an example wrongful seeking of privilege..of the perversion of power"

..dispute has been a distraction that has kept many men from performance of tasks far more important to this country than convenience of a single army private act sect state wb Smith

Smith says Cohn foned..said Schine about be drafted.. said he and Mc thot Schine shud have commish

Smith made inquiries Generak Hull, vice chief staff, told Schine wud get same treatment any other american

Cohn asked possibility Commish for Schine in CIA..tol phone Allen Dulles

Cohn said CIA "too juicy a subject" for future investigations.. wud not be right place Schine in CIA and then investigate it

..did not regard Cohn requestas improper

. . . .

mundt

"the reputations, the actions and perhpa the integrity of responsible public officials under challenge

,, comit. will folo evidence wherever it leads

.. charges and implications--by both sides.. "of such grave and serious nature as to have caused concern on part american people"

MC: objects "attempt make this contest between me and army"

..wants army officials present their case as indivisuals

"a few pentagon politicians are naming themselves Dept of army"

1. McCarthy on Malmedy, Justice, Role of Senator in Interested Case.

****

Congressional Record, July 26, 1949, pp 10160-10175. See "McCarthy, Man, Senator, Ism", pp. 158-164 for background.

On July 26, 1949, McCarthy ripped into Baldwin's subcommittee which had investigated German Nazi-Communist charges that American invesitgators had used torture to extract confessions from Nazi Storm Troopers under Colonel Joachim Peiper, who had murdered 150 American POWs—half of them at Malmedy—and 150 Belgian civilians. McCarthy centered his attack on the American investigators—said they were refugees from Hitler Germany with a vengeance motive—said Baldwin was trying to whitewash an American officer Major Fanton who was Baldwin's law partner and who—according to McCarthy headed the investigation—attacked a man by the name of Ralph Shumacker as another American wrongdoer and tied Shumacker to subcommittee member Sen. Kefauver. (Shumacker 18 years before had been a young law clerk in a firm of which Kefauver was a law member.) MCCarthy's attacks—backed by German conservative and communist press attacks, plus American reluctance to lose a propaganda war in Germany—and despite evidence asto guilt of Storm Troopers—all added up to a stalemate of Malmedy justice.

****

Cong. Record, p. 10160, Sen. McCarthy: "If then we feel it is this important to keep alive in the world the principle of the dignity of man, and our standards of justice and right; if we think it important enough to sacrifice the lives of hundreds of thousands of young men, and jeopardize the economy of our country by giving away billions of dollars, then it is of utmost importance that we demonstrate at all times to the people of the world that our form of government actually is what we say it is—that it is more fair, more honest, more decent than the governments they have known under Hitler and Stalin, and that our form of government stands for the rights of the individual over and above those of the state. In the face of what it has cost us to date to halt the spread of dictatorships and totalitarian governments, it is our duty to demonstrate by our actions the purpose behind these two great conflicts—our firm belief in the importance of the rights of the individual."

****

Cong. Record, Kuly 26, 1949, p. 10163. (McCarthy had demanded that Baldwin step down from the committee because Baldwin's law partner Major Fanton was involved; Baldwin invited McCarthy to sit on committee, produce witnesses, interrogate; Baldwin told his full committee he'd be glad to step down; full committee said, in view of circumstances, no reason for Baldwin to do so. This is background.) SEN. McCarthy: "While I do not doubt that the Senator from Connecticut honestly felt that it was necessary for him to head this subcommittee so as to bring out what he considered to be the truth, it has long been the practice of judges and chairmen of committees to step aside under similar circumstances—not because they themselves felt they could not be fair, but becauseconditions were such that in the eyes of the public a fair hearing would be impossible. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. Baldwin. (Recounts background as above.—p. 10163.)

Mr. McCarthy. (p. 10163) May I interrupt the Senator a moment? Do I correctly understand that the Armed Services Committee was informed that Major Fanton was in charge of the interrogation during all the alleged brutalities, that it was informed that he was the Senator's law partner, that he was the man who was principally to be investigated, and that the Armed Services Committee took the position that it was perfectly proper for the Senator to act as chairman of the subcommittee investigating his own law partner?

******

p. 10166, Sen. McCarthy: "Mr. President, let me make it clear that I am not asking the Senate to discharge the Senator from Connecticut as chairman of the subcommittee. If the Senator from Connecticut thinks it is proper for him to sit in judgment on his own law partner, and do something which I think is completely shameful, I do not believe that it is incumbent upon the Senate to discharge him. I think, however, we should recognize the fact that the work of the committee and its report will be completely useless and worth nothing at all.

"I wish to repeat what I have already said: I do not doubt that the Senator from Connecticut honestly felt that it was necessary for him to head this subcommittee so as to bring out what he considered to be the truth. However, it has long been the practise of judges and chairmen of committees to step aside under similar circumstances, not because they themselves felt that they could not be fair, but because conditions were such that in the eyes of the public a fair hearing would be impossible.

"I understand that the Senator from Connecticut is very shortly to go on the bench. I sincerely hope that when he sits on the bench, if ever a situation like this arises, in which he is called upon to pass upon the rights of someone as close to him as Mr. Fanton is, he will have learned a lesson, and will disqualify himself.

"The Senator from Connecticut has said that no one is on trial today. I submit that someone is on trial. The entire United States Senate is on trial. The American system of justice--if we can call it that--in our occupied area is on trial. We should be engaged in the most soul-searching investigation to find out whether or not all the charges and countercharges which have been made by two disinterested judges who went to Europe are true. ....(cont., p. 10167) It is not a question of whether the Senator from Connecticut can fairly conduct the subcommittee. It is a question of what the people of the Nation will think about the United States Senate. It is a question of what the people of the world will think about this country if we appoint a man to conduct an investigation and make a report on his own law partner, who is now bragging that he himself is writing the report.

(Mr. Baldwin indicated denial that anyone was bragging about report.)

******

P. 10169: (Compare this with McCarthy's opening current speeches on Korea vet who describes communist atrocities.) Mr. McCarthy: I informed the subcommittee that in my opinion the only purpose of calling witnesses to rehash the details of this war crime was to inflame the public mind and attempt to create a blind demand for vengeance on someone in retribution without regard to the question of the guilt or innocence of those being punished.

Mr. Baldwin: "I should like to ask the Senator if it is his position, in the conduct of an investigation by the Senate of these trials of the particular men who were tried and convicted, that a man who had actually been present when one of the massacres occured, who saw his comrades shot, and who escaped, God knows how, with his life, was not a competent witness?

Mr. McCarthy: "The Senator is not as naive as he tries to make out. He knows there was never any question that the Malmedy massacre occured; he knows that the young man who appeared could not recognize any of them men who took part in the shooting; he knows that the young man could shed no light whatsoever on whether the men in charge allowed illegal torture methods. The only purpose, as I told the Senator before he called that witness, was to attempt to wave the flag and try to recreate a situation which he said existed at the time of the tortures and which he tried to use as a justification or an excuse for the tortures."

******

P. 10170: Mr. McCarthy: "The core of the situation we were investigating was, of course, the truth of the charges that members and employees of our military were guilty of applying torture to the accused in order to secure confessions. The four men principally charged with these alleged brutalities were Mr. Perl, Mr. Kirschbaum, Mr. Steiner, and Mr. Thon, at least three of whom were refugees from Hitlerian Germany.....

"I thereupon suggested to this interrogator, Perl, that he submit to the Keeler lie detector which has been proven infallible in hundreds of important criminal cases and which has been used extensively in Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois and other states with the consent of the defendant."

****

P. 10173: Mr. Baldwin: "I say to my distinguished friend (McC), in the burst of his enthusiasm here, he has taken up the side of these Nazi SS troopers. He may do that if he wants to. I say too, Mr. President, my distinguished friend here is prejudging thecase; the evidence is not all in. My distinguished friend is basing his judgment largely--on what? Largely on the affidavits of condemned men, some of whom the shadows of the gallows crossed. Thank God, we were able to hold that up until we had an opportunity to get to the bottom of this thing."

P. 10174, Mr. Baldwin. "But I know there are some influences at work in this case that arouse a grave doubt in my mind. (Baldwin talks about Libby of Society for the Prevention of War.etc) ...Mr. President, I took an oath here in the Senate to do my duty. I expect to do it as long as I am here, without fear or favour to any man, just as I hope my distinguished friend from Wisconsin will do. I sometimes wonder about this case. I sometimes wonder why it is, what other reason there can be, other than the human one of wanting to see justice done. I wonder why there should be such a tremendous interest in the Nazi SS troopers, the cruelest troops of the war." (Baldwin went on to say that role of Major Fanton--his law partner--had been completely blown up--Fanton had spent but 3 months on case.)

Anderson and May in their book "McCarthyism" say that MCCarthy wasbeing fed by one Rudolph Aschenauer, who--Anderson and May say--was reported by Army Intelligence Officers to be a member of a German communist spy ring....The authors also claim: Part of McCarthy's attack was to reach for "German" votes in Wisconsin; they claim that Tom Korb wrote McCarthy's speech; they claim that Korb was an employee of the Harnischfeger Corporation of Milwaukee, that Harnischfeger was an old McCarthy friend; that in 1942 Harnischfeger was accused by President's FEPC of discrimination against Negroes, Jews--advertised for "gentile, white and protestant" help; that Harnishhfeger made frequent trips to Germany, criticized war-crimes trials, protested dismantling of German industries; urged return of Germany's pre-war colonies, had his views reprinted by Upton Close and Joe McCarthy in Congressional record. See pp 158-164 "McCarthy: The Man, the Senator, the 'Ism.'"

*****

from RS

Item:

Two days before the Reed Harris hearing Roy Cohn spoke (officially) at a conference of the ACLU in the Henry Hudson Hotel. This week in Washington Mr. Cohn told Mr.Malan of the ACLU:"We knew the Tenny committee citation of ACLU was a mistake, otherwise I would not have appeared at your meeting and spoken." My attempt to get Malan's consent to use this quotation in your broadcast failed.

Comment:

I believe you should take pains to point out that the Moscow summer school was in connection with the University of Moscow, and not of a propaganda school teaching subversion, that is, not of a school so named and identified. McCarthy gave that impression last night. In saying the Russian authorities cancelled the project you can point out they must have been afraid of capitalist infiltration; at any rate you were not afraid of Communist contamination. etc etc.

Item.

The publication in the Record of the Reed Harris hearing carries a footnote correcting the McCarthy statement about the subverside listing of the ACLU and attributing the charge only to the California committee.

Suggestion.

Can you call the Tenny committee "notorious and discredited"?

Wes Price says he doesn't remember if we looked at his script in advance. He may have given it to you..and got it back from Miss Mac. Just doesn't remember..sometimes he submits script, sometimes not.

(It has been our practise for JZ or JA to look stuff over ~~mmmmmm~~ frequently without you seeing it)

Re Wobblies..Wes doesn't recall if you mentioned it in joking.. was surprised to be reminded that it turned up in script.

also says: hit him again.

jz

p.s its my memory that I read it over in advance without corrections.

On November 17th, 1953 one Don Surine, who I am informed has been on Senator McCarthy's personal and committee payrolls, found a way to acquaint me with the fact that photostates had been made of some pages of a 1935 Pittsb[illegible] newspaper. These photostats were handed to ANOTHER REPORTER (a colleague of mine) in the Senate Office Bldg with the admonition from Surine: "Mind you, I'm not accusing Murrow of being a commie, but why did he do that Radulovitch piece." I once did a television Report on the case of Lt. Milo Radulovitch.

The colleague who relayed to me the Surine message and the photostates handed him by Surine felt that this was a blatant attempt to intimidate me.

~~Tomorrow night on my radio program at 7:45 I shall attempt~~ to deal ~~adequately with~~ the junior senator from Wisconsin's ~~ancient material and half-truths, as they affect me.~~

I was a member of the advisory committee for a summer school in Moscow in 1935 which he refers -- In addition to the newspaper article published 18 years ago -- this information was made public more recently in a broadcast by Fulton Lewis, Junior.

And various versions of both these stories were widely mention in former Senator Frank Graham's campaign in North Carolina in 1950.

In actual fact, the [redacted] summer school was cancelled by Russian authorities before it began. Those [redacted] graduates students and professors who had signed-up for the school spent the summer travelling in the Soviet Union, and activity which was not then, and is not now, illegal. I did not [redacted] this group of distinguished educators. [redacted] the Soviet Union.

The Senator's reference to the Civil Liberties Union is another example of his too familiar technique.

In a recent television broadcast I actually said:"The attorney general's list does not, and has never listed, the American Civil Liberties Union as subversive, nor does the F. B. I, nor any other government agency. And the American Civil Liberties Union holds in its files letters of commendation from President Eisenhower, President Truman and General McArthur."

The Junior senator from Wisconsin now [redacted] accuses me of lying, his contention being that the A.C.L.U. was listed by the California State Senate Committee investigating un-American activities.

I specifically stated---"the attorney general's list"...."the F.B.I.".... and "any other government agency."

I shall attempt to deal adequately with Senator McCarthy's latest reckless handling of the truth on the radio tomorrow night.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE FILES

CBS--Matter of M

D. H. Rivkin April 20, 1954

At the direction of Ned Perkins, I have sent the following documents to the files (attention of Bob Tangel):

1. Cumulative Index to Publications of the Committee On Un-American Activities

2. The McCarthy Record

3. Hart, McCarthy Versus The State Department

4. The Reporter (July 21, 1953) ("The Purgers and the Purged --articles on USIS investigation)

5. The Reporter (April 27, 1954) ("The People Vs. McCarthy" -- pp. 25-28)

6. The Saturday Review (April 3, 1954) (Review of Buckley book-- pp. 15-16, 55, 61)

7. The Commonweal (March 26, 1954) (Cogley article on ERM--p. 618)

8. New Republic (March 30, 1953) ("McCarthy's Money")

9. The Financial Affairs of McCarthy (New Republic reprint, March 30, 1953)

10. Statement of Senator William Benton before the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate Rules Committee, September 28, 1951, Relating to Senate Resolution 187.

11. Note from Elliot D. Pratt to ERM attached to file folder containing series of articles in the Las Vegas Sun by Hank Greenspun ("Is Senator McCarthy A Secret Communist?")

12. Memorandum of conversation with California State Selective Service Director Kenneth Leitch.

13. AFL News-Reporter (March 19, 1954) ("Joe's Record")

14. Letter from Morris Ernst to ERM dated March 16, 1954, attaching editorial from the Trenton Evening Times of February 28, 1954 ("McCarthy a Communist?")

15. Letter from Sanford H. Bolz to ERM dated March 10, 1954, attaching materials relating to McCarthy's Senate voting record.

16. Letter from Ben Custer to ERM dated March 16, 1954, enclosing letter from Julian Boyd relating to appointment of Clapp as Librarian of Congress.

17. Memorandum from DHR to AFM dated March 5, 1953, headed Time--Libel--General, McCarthy Claim, containing a rough index of the McCarthy XBT in the Post-Standard case.

3/25/54 Revised

INDEX OUTLINE

I. MURROW

A. Associates--Professional

B. Associates--Other

C. Attacks
1. V.I.P.
2. Right Wing
3. Left Wing

D. Awards

E. Biography

F. "Counterattack"

G. Endorsements
1. V.I.P.
2. Right Wing
3. Left Wing
4. Press associates

H. McCarthy
1. Statements by McC re ERM
2. Statements by ERM re McC
3. Other Contacts
4. Press Commentary--Current Dispute.

I. Organizations
1. ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union)
2. Carnegie Endowment
3. IIE (Institute of International Education)
4. IPR (Institute of Pacific Relations)
5. NSFA (National Students Federation of America)
6. SPCR (Society for Promotion of Cultural Relations with the Soviet Union)
7. Social
8. Other

J. Programs
1. Communist Party--U.S.A.
2. Democratic Ideals
3. Marxism

4. Satellite Countries
   a. Communist China
   b. Others
5. Soviet-U.S. Relations
6. Soviet--Other
7. Amerasia
8. Fascism
9. Hiss & Chambers
10. Katyn Massacre
11. Lattimore
12. McCarthyism
13. Malmedy
14. Potsdam
15. Radulovich
16. Russian Entry in War
17. Warsaw Uprising ('44)
18. White, Harry Dexter
19. Yalta
20. Other
21. Wire Tapping
22. Indo-China
23. Army-McC Dispute
24. Communism--Latim-America
25. Annie Lee Moss
26. Policy

K. Publications
   1. Collier's Article
   2. This Is London
   3. Other

L. Attitude Toward Communist Scare

II. McCARTHY

A. Specific episodes and issues
   1. Campaigns for political office
      a. 1936
      b. 1939
      c. 1944
      d. 1946
      e. 1952
   2. Military service
   3. Judicial record
   4. Lustron episode
   5. Income tax difficulties
   6. Wheeling speech and "numbers racket"
   7. FBI chart
   8. Waiver of Congressional immunity
   9. Tydings Committee
   10. Tydings-Butler campaign
   11. Duran case
   12. Davis case
   13. Surine incident
   14. Malmedy trials
   15. Financial matters
   16. Benton action
   17. RIAS incident

B. Committee investigation
   1. U.S. Information Service (including Cohn-Schine European junket)
   2. Fort Monmouth
   3. Army "coddling" of Communists
   4. Defense plants
   5. Government Printing Office
   6. Trade-with-China
   7. Other

C. Staff Personnel
   1. Roy M. Cohn
   2. G. David Schine
   3. Donald Surine
   4. Harvey Matusow
   5. Jean Kerr (Mrs. McCarthy)
   6. Other

D. Principal targets
1. Dean G. Acheson
2. George C. Marshall
3. Dwight D. Eisenhower
4. Adlai Stevenson
5. Owen Lattimore
6. Philip C. Jessup
7. Reed Harris
8. Theodore Kaghan
9. Charles Bohlen
10. John S. Service
11. John P. Davies
12. Nathan Pusey
13. The Commonweal
14. Time Magazine
15. James Wechsler
16. Clement Attlee
17. Anna Rosenberg
18. John C. Vincent
19. Other

E. Principal supporters
1. Communist Party
2. Hamilton Fish
3. Col. Robert McCormick
4. Burton K. Wheeler
5. Albert W. Hawkes
6. Frank Gannett
7. Walter Harnischfeger
8. Texas oilmen (Cullen, Marshall, Murchison, Andrade, Keck, Hunt, et al.)
9. E. M. Biggers
10. Gerald L. K. Smith
11. Gen. Robert E. Wood
12. James Burnham
13. William Buckley
14. Press and radio (Sokolsky, Lewis, Pegler, Winchell, et al.)
15. Other

F. Principal critics
1. Democrats
2. Republicans
3. Democratic publications
4. Republican publications
5. Catholic publications
6. V.I.P.'s
7. Other

G. Senate voting record
1. Foreign relations
   a. Marshall Plan
   b. Mutual Security Program
   c. Japanese Peace Treaty
   d. Other programs involving Europe
   e. Other programs involving Asia

2. Domestic Matters
   a. Farm Policy
   b. Off-shore oil
   c. Kerr Bill
   d. Other
3. Absenteeism

III. CBS

A. Attacks
   1. V.I.P.
   2. Right Wing
   3. Left Wing

B. "Counterattack"

C. Endorsements
   1. V.I.P.
   2. Right Wing
   3. Left Wing

D. Personnel
   1. Current
   2. Past
   3. Occasional (includes "talent")

E. Programs
   1. Vulnerable
   2. Patriotic
   3. Policy

F. Security Program

G. Paley
   1. Germany Assignment
   2. Other

H. Awards

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. MAULSBY

Time--Libel--General
McCarthy Claim

D. H. Rivkin March 5, 1953

The following is a rough index of the transcript of the examination before trial of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, held before William B. Mangin, at the offices of Bond, Schoeneck & King, 1400 State Tower Building, Syracuse, New York, on Saturday, March 29, 1952, at 10:10 a.m.:

Pages

2-3 Protest by witness that hearings are closed.

3-6 Preliminary matters such as addresses, occupation, education, etc.

6-7 McCarthy's early political ventures; campaigns for District Attorney of Shawano County and for Circuit Judge.

7-11 Criticism of McCarthy by highest court of Wisconsin for running for the Senate while a member of the Circuit Court.

11-14 McCarthy's military service and the shrapnel episode.

14-38 Personnel of McCarthy's staff in 1950; histories and activities of staff (Driscoll, Alermas, Kerr, Greeley, Nillo, Surine); circumstances under which political contributions were delivered by Miss Jean Kerr; circumstances attending separation of Donald A. Surine from the FBI.

38-46 Fedder incident; "Chicago gangland midnight ride" involving alleged kidnapping by Surine.

Pages
46-52	Surine's investigations at Suracuse University.
52-55	Surine's conference with Charles Davis.
55-61	Sources of Surine's pay and that of other investigators; persons who contributed to pay of investigators.
61-63	Identification of Robert Voorhees and Richard Amberg.
63-75	Circumstances attending publication of the Tydings-Browder composite picture in tabloid "From the Record".
75-79	Further colloquies as to necessity for open hearings and Surine's investigation.
79-87	Miss Kerr's testimony before Monroney committee as to questioning of Browder by Tydings.
87-90	Consideration of testimony of Perry Patterson; consideration of whether McCarthy considered all testimony at Monroney hearings before writing minority report.
90-93	McCarthy's telephone conversation with Mrs. Miller concerning necessity of defeating Tydings.
93-97	McCarthy's activities in Butler campaign.
97-109	Miss Kerr's activities respecting tabloid; method of handling Butler campaign contributions received at McCarthy office; Fedder's role in distributing tabloid; McCarthy's failure to criticize Miss Kerr for her Monroney committee testimony; discussion of whether McCarthy approved of Miss Kerr's taking money to Fedder, knowing that it was to be used to distribute the tabloid.
109-113	McCarthy speech on tabloid on Senate Floor on August 20, 1951.
113-117	Miss Kerr's vacation after Butler campaign.
117-118	McCarthy's speeches during Butler campaign.
118-120	McCarthy's practice of recording speeches.

Pages

120-121 Sources of Surine's income.

121-124 Number of investigators retained by McCarthy.

124-128 Procedure followed in McCarthy office for handling reports and offers of information relating to Communism in government; relations of McCarthy office with FBI and McCarran committee.

128-137 Procedure followed in the case of Davis's offer of information; production of subpoenaed letters and other documents relating to Davis.

137-143 Affidavit of Charles Davis, dated October 21, 1951, relating to relations with McCarthy and Ferrand.

143-144 Letter to Davis from McCarthy, dated August 15, 1950.

144-145 Letter to McCarthy from Davis, dated September 7, 1950.

145-147 Letter to McCarthy from Davis, undated.

147-148 Letter to Davis from Surine, dated November 28, 1950.

148-151 Letter to Irelan (United States Attorney) from McCarthy, recommending perjury indictment of Davis.

151-152 Diary of John Carter Vincent.

152-154 Newspaper clippings relating to Davis case.

154-155 Letter from Hummelstein to Benton relating to Davis case.

155-156 Telegram from Staempli to Vincent in Berne.

156-159 Questioning as to whether McCarthy has further Davis documents; Davis's relations with Ferrand; other contacts with Davis.

159-162 Nature of Ferrand's employment.

162-163 McCarthy's personal contacts with Davis.

163-164 Buckley's connections with Gillette committee.

Pages

164-179 Number of American Communists and structure of American Communist Party; McCarthy's fight against Communists in State Department; tactics used by McCarthy.

179-182 Extent to which McCarthy's activities and investigations conflict with or complement those of FBI, Loyalty Review Board, and Civil Service Commission.

182-198 McCarthy's possession of loyalty files and minutes; sources of McCarthy's information for Senate speeches.

198-199 McCarthy's role in Remington case.

199-202 Sources of McCarthy's information.

202-203 Jessup case; Eisenhower letter.

The following is a rough index of the transcript of the examination before trial of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, held at an Adjourned Special Term at the Court House, Syracuse, New York, before Honorable Jesse E. Kingsley, Justice of the Supreme Court, on Monday and Tuesday, June 23 and 24, 1952:

Pages

3-15 Submission of requested communications between McCarthy and Ferrand; money payments by McCarthy to Ferrand; production of expense vouchers submitted by Ferrand; disbursements to Davis.

15-24 McCarthy's first contacts with Davis; personal contacts with Ferrand; Robert Morris's connections with Ferrand; further request for production of all correspondence with Ferrand.

24-29 Long-distance telephone calls relating to Davis case; telephone conversation with Pfortszeimer.

Pages
29-35	McCarthy's connection with Davis proceedings; transcript of Davis trial; telephone conversations with FBI on Davis case; first letter from Davis to McCarthy; further contacts with FBI relating to Davis case.
35-36	Morris's recommendation of Ferrand to McCarthy.
36-39	McCarthy's use of Ferrand and others to investigate John Carter Vincent.
39-40	McCarthy's receipt of information from Ferrand.
40-42	McCarthy's investigation of John Carter Vincent.
42-43	Statement under oath by Ferrand in McCarthy's files.
43-45	Receipt by McCarthy of FBI or CIA reports on Davis.
45-48	McCarthy's efforts to check on Davis's reliability; McCarthy's decision that Davis was a "phony".
48-49	Telephone calls from Ferrand in Europe in 1950.
49-51	Davis letter to McCarthy; enclosure of Staempli telegram; Davis telegram to John Carter Vincent.
51-56	Davis trial in Lausanne; indictment and findings of Swiss court.
56-58	Ferrand letter to Davis.
58-61	Benton's charges against McCarthy; Veller story in Washington Star re same.
61-62	Press releases from McCarthy as to Davis case.
62-119	Various aspects of the Lustron matter, including: circumstances attending publication of booklet; McCarthy's participation in hearings on housing and formulation of Housing Act of 1948; contacts with various publishers; quality and purpose of booklet; profits realized by Lustron and McCarthy on booklet; contacts with Foley, Goodman, Simon, Denton, Widemer and Byers.

Pages

119-131 Cover story in Time Magazine, October 22, 1951.

131-156 Marking for identification of various articles on McCarthy (a list of the publications cited appears at pages 151-152).

156-158 Benton's speech in Congressional Record of August 13, 1951.

158-166 Attempts by counsel to establish elements of special damages sustained by McCarthy.

166-172 Documents to be produced at future examinations.

172-174 Persons ousted from positions of governmental responsibility as a result of McCarthy's activities.

3/24/54 Revised (6 copies)

~~FILES~~
~~ECP~~
~~JER destroyed~~
~~DHR destroyed~~
~~I file (spare)~~
~~II file (spare)~~
~~III file returned~~

3/25/54 Revised (5 copies)

1. ECP
2. SALANT
3. FILES
4. EXTRA (MEMO DUPS FILE)
5. DHR

3/24/54 (8 COPIES)

~~ECP returned~~
~~FHB returned~~
~~DHR returned~~ ~~JER returned~~
SALANT
~~FILES returned~~
~~1 copy~~
~~extra copy~~
~~extra copy~~

MOST IMPORTANT: Will use folders of 1933 and 1934 trips to Russia..quoting from glowing reports of what can be seen in " great experiment ", etc...Also bringing in sponsorship by Intourist, VOKS, etc....Stephen Duggan, " father of Lawrence," etc

EDWARD R. MURROW... and associates (one of writers and at least one ad man, probably from Kenyon & Eckhardt)

Might find it helpful to check some of this material which is being prepared for use by McCarthy:

THEME: Murrow is a long time ally and associate of Communist Russia; he has been closely associated and identified with Commies, fellow-travelers, and subversives.

Material being researched:

1. Institute of Pacific Relations: Report #2050
   p. 37: Testimony of Bozolepoy on VOKS (which sponsored Soviet trips)
   p. 49: Holland report

2. Indianapolis Star ..editorial of Feb. 24, 54 : " Daily Worker praises Murrow "

3. The Bulletin, League of Free Nations Association: Vol. 1, No. 3 and No. 4 apparently trying to tie Murrow in with directors, notably Stephen Duggan, Lillian Wald, Owen Lovejoy.

4. William T. Gernaey testimony before Special Committee on Un-American activities 75th Congress, Vol. 2: p: 1482-83; 1494; 1561; 1654; 1658; 1660 (or either of pages which open at these spots).

   Vol 4: 2514 2516

   Vol 1: 90 115 116 125 162 248 250 254 423 424 438 440
   462 527 536 570 689

   Object: League of Peace and Democracy.

5. THE WORLD CRISIS...OUR WAY OUT....Address given before Annual Meeting of the American Council of Education, Chicago, Ill. May 6, 1950

   Object: to tie in Owen Lattimore.

6. Publishers Weekly..Nov. 8, 1947. Currents in the Trade. p. 2251

Other research on: Civil Liberties Union to show that it was cited as subversive by:California Legislative Committee (will use quotes from Roger Ham Fish Committee in 1930 or 1931. Baldwin..Harvard Class Book)

Also attempt to show that hump-backed lady who was great influence on Murrow was either Pink or Communist.

Also tie in with National Students Union.

NOTE: A Dr. Shotwell who testified in IPR hearings that he was ina room with 19 Marxists and one anti-Marxists(himself)..attempt will be to have Shotwell swear Murrow was among 19.

Other themes being studied: Harold Laski

Anti-Conscription Campaign

SCRIPTS PULLED OUT OF FILE

Laurence Duggan	December 21, 1948
Harry Dexter White*	November 9, 1953 November 11, 1953 November 12, 1953
Hiss-Chambers*	June 1, 1949 June 2, 1949 June 3, 1949 June 23, 1949 June 24, 1949 June 25, 1949 June 27, 1949 June 28, 1949 June 29, 1949 June 30, 1949 November 18, 1949 January 25, 1950
Owen Lattimore*	May 2, 1950 May 3, 1950 June 24, 1952 April 6, 1950
Dr. Oppenheimer	April 13, 1954
Hollywood Ten	October 27, 1947

* Scripts lawyers have

UNITED STATES INFORMATION AGENCY
WASHINGTON

June 12, 1964

Dear Ed:

Gordon Ewing has just sent me a long article on American television standards which appeared in the Italian weekly Espresso. A paragraph that I thought you would enjoy is enclosed.

We all hope you are having a good vacation. Are you writing the book?

Best regards.

Sincerely,

Bob

Robert A. Lincoln

Enclosure

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Glen Arden Farm
Pawling, New York

Excerpt from article: "TV Journalism in Other Countries: U. S. A." (Espresso, Italian weekly)

We learn from history, however, that neither the best technical apparatus nor the best constitutional and juridical guarantees are enough to create and maintain an atmosphere of true freedom. This can be done only by courageous individuals. Fortunately there were people in the American television who preferred the risk of freedom to an easy life. It is hard to say how much America is indebted to Edward Murrow's courage. In 1954, when McCarthy was at the peak of his terrifying political adventure and even President Eisenhower was afraid to attack him publicly, Murrow prepared a documentary which could have cost him his career. Analyzing with ferocious precision the methods and the ambitions of the senator from Wisconsin, throwing in his face the contradictions of his intimidating and slanderous campaign, Murrow clearly exposed the dangers of McCarthyism. High members of the government, who had seemed paralyzed with fear, began acting; shortly after the Army accepted McCarthy's challenge that the American Forces were a den of subversion. Within a few months the senator who had terrorized thousands of citizens had become a lone man without followers. The McCarthy documentary is however only one of Ed Murrow's memorable shows. His last great act of courage, before Kennedy called him to the office of Director of USIA, was a documentary on the national shame of labor migration.

This reporter stands before family and friends of Edward Klauber, as a result of an undertaking given several years ago. It was a request casually asked, and almost laughingly agreed to, without a thought of the total absence of qualifications to honor the pledge, when it was called. On that happier day Ed Klauber said to me: "When I am finished, I want you to do something for me - just say a few words." Having lightly agreed, I realized his seriousness and inquired as to what I should say. He replied: "That's your problem." And he added: "You'll at least be brief, though not brilliant, and this will give some pleasure to those friends who may be there.

He wanted no eulogy, and I shall attempt none. He fully realized the futility of words, when friends draw together for a few tranquil moments of remembrance and respect.

Being unable to voice what is in your hearts, I shall try to speak of what is in mine.

Ed Kaluber was an intolerant man - intolerant of deceit, deception, distortion and double talk. He was also a man equipped with great curiosity, prepared and eager to pursue the truth wherever it might lead him. He was willing, and indeed determined, that the citizenry should be supplied in abundant quantity, with that most dangerous and explosive force known to mankind - knowledge. He deeply believed, that equipped with this weapon, they would in the end of the day, consolidate and secure the position of tolerance, human dignity, due process and forbearance, the vision of which had sustained and uplifted our ancestors. Democratic processes were to him not something to be jettisoned in time of peril.

Upon one occasion this reporter was unable to finish the draft of a speech. It had to do with these very subjects wo which I have referred. I sought Ed Klauber's advice. He said: "You have it all there, in your fashion." And then he leaned back in that red leather chair, and said: "It is our heritage, and it must remain our habit."

Ed Klauber believed that: "Search for the truth is the noblest occupation of man. Its publication is a duty." He was always willing to "give to every other human being every right that he claimed for himself."

He was a great editor, always insisting that it had to be right, before it was written. He was sparing with his praise and penetrating with his criticism, sometimes satisfied with the best a reporter could do, but always expecting improvement. If there be standards of integrity, responsibility and restraint, in American radio news, Ed Klauber, more than any other man, is responsible for them. Insofar as those elements are lacking, those of us who worked for him have departed from his teachings.

He was not a doctrinaire man. He believed, I think, that a man should be held accountable for everything he said, not throughout eternity, but until facts or events caused him to change his mind. He believed in what has been called the long, sober second look of the American people. He did not, I think, require agreement with his views as aprerequisite for friendship; and he would, I think, have stood with Thomas Moore when he said: "Shall I ask the brave soldier, who fights by my side in the cause of mankind, if our creeds agree? Shall I give up the friend I have valued and tried, if he kneel not before the same altar with me?"

I have said that Ed Klauber was an intolerant man. Someone once said: "It is easy to be tolerant when you do not care." He cared till the last. He believed that democracy was both workable and exportable. He knew that there were mysterious areas in human faith and belief, and he was prepared for them to remain mysterious. But he wanted no mystery about discernible, ascertainable facts and actions. He would, I think, have agreed with Milton, who said: "Though all the winds of doctrine were let loose, to play upon the earth, so truth be in the field, we do ingloriously by licensing and prohibiting, to misdoubt her strength. Let her and falsehood grapple who ever knew truth put to the worst, in a free and open encounter." He believed that the greatest friend of truth is time. Her greatest enemy is prejudice." And the greatest weapon against prejudice is knowledge and yet more knowledge. He knew of no alternative.

I do not know whether he believed in the essential goodness or badness of man, but I do know that he believed passionately that the communication of information, unslanted, untarnished and undistorted, was the only means by which mankind would progress. He knew that just because injustice, indignity and inhumanity was not happening to him - he knew that it was still happening. He was capable of feeling the suffering of others, capable, too, of great confidence in a future that often appeared to him both dim and dismal.

His confidence and friendship were not easily won, and once given were not lightly withdrawn. I do not know that he loved his fellow men, but he trusted them collectively.

It would be presumptuous of any reporter to attempt to express what an old and well-beloved friend believed. But I do know that last year - ill, tired and thoughtful - Ed Klauber cut out of a newspaper and kept, these lines written by Wallace Stegner:

"In all honesty, what I believe is neither inspirational nor evangelical. Passionate faith I am suspicious of, because it hangs witches and heretics, and generally I am more in sympathy with the witches and heretics, than with the sectarians who hang and burn them. I fear immoderate zeal, Christian, Moslem, Communist, or whatever, because it restricts the range of human understanding, and the wise reconciliation of human differences, and creates an Orthodoxy with a sword in its hand.

"I cannot say that I am even a sound Christian, though the code of conduct to which I subscribe, was preached more eloquently by Jesus Christ than by any other. About God I simply do not know; I don't think I can know.

"However far I have missed achieving it, I know that moderation is one of the virtues I most believe in. But I believe as well, in a whole catalogue of Christian and classical virtues; in kindness and generosity, in steadfastness and courage and must else. I believe further that good depends not on things, but on the use we make of things. Everything potent, from human love to atomic energy, is dangerous; it produces ill about as readily as good; it becomes good only through the control, the discipline, the wisdom with which we use it. Must of this control is social, a thing which laws and institutions and uniforms enforce, but much of it must be personal and I do not see how we can evade the obligation to take full responsibility for what we individually do. Our reward for self-control, and the acceptance of private responsibility, is not necessarily money or power. Self-respect and the respect of others are quite enough.

"All this is to say, that I believe in conscience, not as something implanted by divine act, but as something learned from infancy, from the tradition and society which have bred us. The outward forms of virtue will vary greatly from nation to nation; a Chinese scholar of the old school, or an Indian raised on the Vedas, has a conscience that will differ from mine. But in the essential outlines of what constitutes human decency, we vary amazingly little. The Chinese and the Indian know as well as I do, what kindness it, what generosity is, what fortitude is. They can define justice quite as accurately. It is only when they and I are blinded, by tribal and denominational narrowness, that we insist upon our differences, and can recognize goodness only in the robes of our own crowd."

I have attempted no words to describe our collective sense of sorrow, nor our sympathy for the members of Edward Klauber's family, because I do not command such words. And even if I did, they would be altogether superfluous. Those of us who worked for him, and with him, will remain in his debt. We are beholden for what he taught us, for he lived a life and not an apology.

Washington, Feb. 15--1948--General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower said in his final report as Chief of Staff of the Army to Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall that the European Recovery Program (the "Marshall Plan") insures the survival of Western European countries without which "we would [redacted] find ourselves facing across narrowing [redacted] ocean and Arctic barriers a despotic Colossus spread over and beyond the combined Eurasian territories of the Roman Empire, the Persia of [redacted] antiquity, the Germanic kings and the Mongol khans."

Washington, Feb. 15---General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower said in his final report as Chief of Staff of the Army to Secretary of the Army Kenneth C. Royall that the European Recovery Program (the "Marshall Plan") insures the survival of Western European countries without which "we would find ourselves facing across narrowing ocean and Arctic barriers a despotic Colossus spread over and beyond the combined Eurasian territories of the Roman Empire, the Persia of antiquity, the Germanic kings and the Mongol khans."

Words for the Day:

Benjamin Franklin, At the signing of the Declaration of Independece, July 4, 1776:

"We must all hang together, or assuredly we shall all hang separately."

****

Thomas Paine, The Crisis, Number 1.

"These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it NOW, deserves the love and thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph. What we obtain too cheap. we esteem too lightly; 'tis dearness only that gives everything its value. Heaven knows how to put a proper price upon its goods; and it would be strange ineeed, if so celestial an article as FREEDOM should not be highly rated."

******

Paine, The Crisis, Number 1.

"'Tis surprising to see how rapidly a panic will sometimes run through a country....H Yet panics, in some cases, have their uses; they produce as much good as hurt. Their duration is always short; the mind soon grows throug them, and acquires a firmer habit than before. But their peculiar advantage is, that they are the touchstones of sincerity and hypocrisy, and brings things and men to light, which might other wise have lain forever undiscovered In fact, they have the same effect on secret traitors which an imaginary apparition would have upon a private murderer. They sift out the hidden thoughts of men and hold them up in public to the world."

******

Paine, The Crisis, Number 1.

"And what is a tory? Good God! what is he? I shouldnot be afraid to go with a hundred whigs against a thousand tories, were they to attempt to get into arms. Every tory is a coward; for servile, slavish, self-interested fear is the foundation of toryism; and a man under such influence, though he may be cruel, never can be brave."

)))

Paine, The Crisis, Number One.

"Though the flame of liberty may sometimes cease to shine, the coal can never expire."

****

Paine, the Crisis, Number One.

"The heart that feels not now, is dead; the blood of his children will curse his cowardice, who shrinks back at a time when a little might have saved the whole, and made them happy. (I love a man that can smile at trouble; that can gather strength from distress, and grow brave by reflection.) 'Tis the business of little minds to shrink; but he whose heart is firm, and whose conscience approves his conduct, will pursue his principles unto death. My own line of reasoning is to myself as straight and clear as a ray of light."

*****

Paine, The Crisis, Number One.

"Let them call me rebel, and welcome, I feel no concern from it; but I should suffer the misery of devils, were I to make a whore of my soul by swearing allegiance to one whose character is that of a sottish, stupid, worthless, brutish man. I conceive likewise a horrid idea in receiving mercy from a being, who at the last day shall be shrieking to the rocks and mountains to cover him, and fleeing with terror from the orphan, the widow and the slain of America."

words.

Paine, The Crisis, Number One.

"There are cases which cannot be overdone by language, and this is one. There are persons too who see not the full extent of the evil which threatens them; they solace themselves with hopes that the enemy, if he succeed, will be merciful. Is this the madness of folly to expect mercy from those who have refused to do justice; and even mercy, where conquest is the object, is only a trick of war; the cunning of the fox is as murderous as the violence of the wolf; and we ought to guard equally against both."

******

The Crisis, Number 4, Paine.

"Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom, must, like men, undergo the fatigues of supporting it. "

****

Paine, the Crisis, Number 4.

"Men who are sincere in defending their freedom,will always feel concern at every circumstance which seems to make against them; it is the natural and honest consequence of all afectionate attachments, and the want of it is a vice. But the dejection lasts only for a moment; they soon rise out of it with additional vigor; the glow of hope, courage and fortitude, will, in a little time, supply the place of every inferior passion, and kindle the whole heart into heroism."

****

Paine, the Crisis Number 4.

"There is a mystery in the countance of some causes, which we have not always present judgement enough to explain. It is distressing to see an an enemy adanding into a ountry, but it is the only pace in whcih we can beat them, and in whih we have ah always beaten them, whenever they made the attempt."

words.

Paine, the Crisis, #4.

"The nearer any disease aproaches to a crisis, the nearer it is to a curer. Danger and deliverance make their adunces together, and it is only the last push, in which one or the other takes the lead."

***

Paine, the Crisis, #4:

"There are many men who will do their duty when it is not wanted; but a genuine public spirit always appears most when there is most occasion for it."

Paine, the Crisis, #4.

"To argue with a man who has renounced the use and authority of reason, and whose philosophy consists in holding humanity in contempt, is like administering medicine to the dead, or endeavouring to convert an atheist by scripture. Enjoy, sir, your insensibility of feeling and reflecting. It is the prerogative of animals And no man will envy you these honors, in which a savage only can be your rival and a bear your master."

Paine, The Crisis, #4.

"As you have already made your exit from the moral world, and by numberless acts both of passionate and deliberate injustice engraved an "here lyeth" on your deceased honour, it must be mere affectation in you to pretend concerns at the humours or opinions of mankind respecting you. What remains of you may expire at any time. The sooner the better. For he who survives his reputation, lives out of despite of himself, like a man listening to his own reproach."

Senator Leverett Saltonstall is chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. Saltonstall is a Republican. He is up for re-election. He is worried about the votes in Boston. The Boston vote may swing the tide against him if Saltonstall says anything against McCarthy. Saltonstall's friends say that he does not like McCarthy or his methods. But they say Saltonstall must remain silent lest the so-called pro-McCarthy vote in Boston is aroused against him. Many Senators say that the controversy between the Army and McCarthy over the Cohn-Schine case should most properly be investigated by Saltonstall's committee. The argument is that if it is left to the McCarthy committee, McCarthy becomes defendant, complainant, witness, prosecutor, defense attorney, judge, jury. On the other hand, Saltonstall's armed services committee is charged with responsibility for activities conerned with the armed forces. But Saltonstall says he wants nothing to do with the McCarthy-Cohn case. Saltonstall says he hopes and prays his committee will not have to concern itself with the controversy.

Leverett Saltonstall is one of the most peasant, best-liked men in the Senate of the United States. He came to the Senate six years ago with the reputation for decency, righteousness, self-respect. He is regarded as a "middle-of-the-road" Eisenhower Republican. Saltonstall is a New Englander whose American ancestry dates back far beyond the American Revolution. One of his ancestors was a judge in the Salem Witch Trials of 1692. It is rather an instructive story. I should like to tell it.

The Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1692 was sorely beset. The colonists had fallen upon hard times. Smallpox, Indian raids, fear that land rights would be upset because the colony's charter had earlier been revoked (1684); there was also a widespread fear that Doomsday was at hand, that the world would come to an end at the close of the century--8 years away.

Into this climate of fear stepped some of the young, unmarried girls of Salem. The girls had experienced flashes of dizziness, fainting spells, body twichings, fits of epileptic proportions. They said they were being persecuted by withces. At first, some townspeople of Salem said that what the girls needed were a good whipping. But in that climate of anxiety of 1692, there were many Salem townspeople--including the most respectable--who felt that where there was smoke, there was fire. (This was before the days when it became common knowledge that men could make their own smokescreens.) And then, those young girls began to name names.

One after another, the young Salem girls called off the names of the witches--witches who by powers of evil, could cast an evil eye, could cast a Shape and without touching their victims, or saying anything, or doing anything, these witches were capable of great physical and moral evil. The names were called, trials were held, the young accusers rolled in torture on the courtroom floor, the ~~victims~~ accused were brought before trial, they were found guilty, and one by one, they were hanged. They had been accused of witchcraft.

Now there were many decent, self-respecting people in Salem who felt the horror and repugnance of these witchcraft trials. At first they protested, but when they did, the young girls turned their pointing finger at the protestants--and those who protested were also found guilty...and hanged...as witches. At least fourteen were hanged in Salem alone--more elsewhere throughout the collny--dozens if not hu dreds were accused of being withhes, brought to ~~trik~~ prison and condemned by accusation ~~x~~ if not by proof.

One of the judges in the early Salem witchcraft trials was Nathaniel Saltonstall. Saltonstall came from Haverhill, quite a distance--in those days--from Salem. Haverhill had hot yet been subjected to the Salem witchcracft hysteria. Saltonstall--Nathaniel--had a reputation among his Haverhill friends--a reputation for decency, righteousness, fair play.

Here, I should like to quote from "The Devil in Massachusetts," by Miss Marion L. Starkey. (One of Miss Starkey's ancestors was born on the Mayflower--an event we understand which happened before Yalta, Tehran, Potsdam.)

P. 156: "When the (witchcraft) trials were resumed on June 28, (1692) not the closest observer could detect any deviation in procedure. Presently however, there was one. Saltonstall, whose Haverhill home was far removed from the storm center of witchcraft, could not bring himself to believe the pretensions of the afflicted girls or the evidence on which convictions were being obtained; nor on the other hand could he single-handed reform such proceedings. Accordingly he resigned from the bench and the experienced Corwin of Salem took his place.

"Saltonstall did not retreat from such a battle unscathed. His nerves must have been sorely, for in Haverhill he took to drinking heavily, so heavily that Sewall, (another judge) himself no teetotaler, felt obliged to write and reprove him. In the same letter he assured him that he still trusted him in spite of recent reports. For although Saltonstall had withdrawn so quietly that the general public probably supposed that he had no other reason than the necessity of giving his full attention to renewed raids on Haverhill by the Indians, his defection had not escaped the attention of the afflicted girls and their counsellors. Some of them were now crying out on him; they had plainly seen his Shape under incriminating circumstances."

***

The reign of terror that began in Salem in 1692 extended throughout the Bay Colony--and no one was safe from the accusations of the young girls: Everyone was a potential witch--clergymen, a judge--and finally, the accusation of witchcraft was made against a member of the highest family of the colony--against the wife of Governor Phips. It was when this madness reached into such high places that the witch hunt in Salem cracked. The respectable people, the honest people, the decent people whp hadn't believed the accusations of w tchcraft in the first place, finally found their tongue. Restitution began to be made; but the witches who had been hanged on Gallows Hill could be the beneficiaires of retroactive sympathy only. The climate of fear lasted for over ten years; the scars of shame went deep, and even to this day have not been healed. For it was only recently (check this) that the Massachusetts Legilsature refused to exonarate the last two witches of 1692. Not that any legislator thought their ancestorswere witches, but--as one of them said--Salem depended on tourist trade to see the site of old witchcraft... and if all the witches were exonerated, it would be bad for business.

Nathaniel Saltonstall does not seem to be heard from after his defection from the bench. Although he himself was accused of being a witch, he avoided being brought to trial. Miss Starkey notes (p. 222) that in the early days, Saltonstall was the only one in authority who had indicated by some sign that he disagreed with the ~~witxxx~~hunt.for witches. He had given the sign by silence, by withdrawal, by taking to drink. And Miss Starkey adds a comment that may be of value to all/descendants of Nathaniel Saltonstall's--actual and spiritual--

"Silence may have an eloquence of its own, but only in the long run. Opposition can hardly rally around a man who merely withdraws and shuts his mouth."

From the beginning of time we have had Salem witch hunts. They were born in sick minds, and fed upon minds sickened with fear. And like any sickness of epidemic proportions, no one is immune. The difference between animal and man is that man'~~xxxx~~ brain teaches him that sickness can be cured. The good doctor does not ask a sick nation to commit suicide. He brings in medicine, calls on the sick to help cleanse themselves, the better to fight off the disease. In our present case, it would seem that the medicine is in plenty supply, does not cost a penny, and is carried by every single person who wants to use it. That medicine is guts.

*****

Word for the Day: Thomas Paine, The Crisis Papers, #4:

"The hearer any disease approaches to a crisis, the nearer it is to a cure. Danger and deliverance make their advances together, and it is only the last push, in which one or the other takes the lead.

"There are many men who will do their duty when it is not wanted; but a genuine public spirit always appears most when ~~their~~ there is most occasion for it."

Or,

****

Paine, The Crisis, Number One,

"The heart that fee;s not now, is dead; the blood of his children will curse his cowardice, who shrinks back at a time when a little might have saved the whole, and made them happy. (I love a man that can smile at trouble; that can gather strength from distress, and grow brave by reflection.) 'Tis the business of little minds to shrink; but he whose heart is firm , and whose conscience approves his conduct, will pursue his principles unto death. My own line of reasoning is to myself as straight and clear as a ray of light." ******

Who Said That...

Congressional Record, July 26, 1949--

"If then we feel it is this important to keep alive in the world the principle of the dignity of man, and our standards of justice and right; if we think it important enough to sacrifice the lives of hundreds of thousands of young men, and jeopardize the economy of our country by giving away billions of dollars, then it is of utmost importance that we demonstrate at all times to the people of the world that our form of government actually is what we say it is--that it is more fair, more honest, more decent than the governments they have known under Hitler or Stalin, and that our form of government stands for the rights of the individual over and above those of the state."

--Joseph Raymond McCarthy--in his attack on the United States Army for having prosectued German Nazi Storm Trooper (SS) Generals) who had been responsbile for the slaughter of 150 American soldiers and many more civilians in the Malmedy Massacre at the Battle of Bastogne, Christmastime, 1944.

****

(Anderson and May, in their book McCarthy: The Man, the Senator, the Ism, say that a German Commu ist Rudolph schenauer, fed McCarthy material in Mccarthy's onslaught against the US army and defense of the Nazis. McC still hasn't sued.)

****

Who Said That

"The hopes of civilization rest on the worthy sxix shoulders of the courageous Russian army." --Gen. Douglass MacArthur, 1942.

****

"In Russia's fight to survive as a nation lies the great hope of the world for early peace." --Chicago Tribu e, 1942.

***

"Russia is likely to come out of the war the greatest democracy in the world."--Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, quoted in Time, 1943.

1

D.MC

LESIS: Now, Mr. Edward R. Murrow on another television network nade an attack on you, ahalf-hour attack, I believe it was, night before last. Would you care to comment on that attack by Mr. M against you.

MCC: (2) I may say Fulton that I have a little difficulty answering the specific attack he made because I never listen to the extreme left-wing, bleeding heart element of radio and television However, after you invited me to come over here and appear on your program, I started to check into Mr. Murrow's background a bit, and you'll note I have in my hand a copy of the Pittsburgh Sun Telegram. It's dated Feb. 18, 1935; the headline: "American advisors to communist propaganda school". You'll see there is reproduced the front of a booklet entitled: "Moscow University Summer Session". on the national advisory council, Edward R. Murrow, assistant director, Institute of International Education. The story goes on to tell what the Moscow University taught. If I may quote from it; "the violent overthrow of the entire traditional social order".

also - NY Herald Paper

McC: This may explain whey Edward R. Murrow, week after week, feels that he must smear McCarthy. Now, just what distrubed him so much the other night I don't know. Maybe he is worried about the fact that he having been on the natioanl advisory council of Moscow University, having advised people to attend that school, which according to this teaches, again I quote "the overthrow of the entire traditional social order". Maybe Mr. Murrow was worried about the exposure of some of his friends. I don't know.

LEWIS: Now, the American Civil Liberites Union, he said...he quoted you as having said something about the American Civil Liberties Union as being...as having been listed as a subversive organization, and said that that was not so. Do you care to comment on that?

McC; Yes, I don't mind...may I say there are some individuals in the ACLU who are good Americans, but Murrow again was not telling the truth when he said it had not been listed. I have as you see here, Fulton, the fourth report of the un-American Activities Committee in Californai. I quote

1

McC: from page 107...this is a quotation in regard to the organization Murrow said had not been listed, "The American Civil Liberties Union may be definitely classed as a communist-front or transmission-belt organization. At least ninety percent of its efforts are expended on behalf of communists who come into conflict with the law." So that again, Mr. Murrow is not telling the truth.

LEWIS: ...Flanders

re ACLU

53

Times.. Feb 13.. page 9

Feb 12

says Cohn and Robert Morris, counsel Sen subcom internal security among 16 speakers who addr ssed NY Civil Liberties Union Henry Hudson hotel on "Civil Liberties in a world of tension"

~~[illegible]~~

Mc started questioning Harris in Was March 3 4

IE.. two weeks after Cohn at ACLU

Mc attacks Harris re aclu

VOICE OF AMERICA REPORT ON THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

MADE BY ITS SENATE PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

DOCUMENT REPORT #928--83rd CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

PAGE EIGHT, FOOTNOTE 20.

"Testimony at Page 333, Part 5, of instant hearings discloses that Harris, when suspended from Columbia University in 1932, was supplied with an attorney by the American Civil Liberties Union which had been listed as a front of the Communist Party. It is noted that this organization has not been so cited by the HCUA or so listed by the Attorney General. It was so cited by the California Committee on Un-American Activities."

Copy of this document will be given to you this afternoon. It exists.

TRANSCRIPT OF FILMED INTERVIEW WITH SENATOR MCCARTHY - OCT. 23, 1953.

REPORTER'S QUESTION: What is the net result so far of your investigation of possible security leaks at Fort Monmouth?

SEN. MCCARTHY'S ANSWER: It's pretty hard to give you the net result in one minute's time. But some of the good results...number one, the number of suspensions out there indicates the forceful, the intelligent, and energetic attempt being made by General Lawton here who is the commanding officer and by the new Army Secretary Stevens to really do a housecleaning job. I think one of the most encouraging things from the standpoint of men like General Lawton, I know he's not in a position to comment on it, is that they know now that they have a Secretary of the Army now who will back them up when they suspend communists and suspected espionage agents. In the past many of the commanding generals, especially at Fort Monmouth found that when they would suspend a man because of communist activities, because they thought he was an espionage agent, and if the suspension is upheld by the first army it would go down to the political board in Washington.

I'm talking about the old administration, the old Truman Administration. And the case would be reversed and sent back and the generals here and other generals would be ordered to reinstate them....and put them back handling secret work. I think the most encouraging thing we found is the complete, wholehearted cupport of the new Secretary of the Army, of the commanding generals in Fort Monmouth and other points who want to clean communists and potential espionage agents out of the organization.

Edwards: One subject that keeps cropping up at the Hearings is Fort Monmouth--- the McCarthy investigations there....

So we though it might be instructive tonight to return to the source of that continuing story---- Fort Monmouth--- the "home of the signal corps" in New Jersey---- 50 miles outside New York City..

Here on these sprawling acres last fall--- where super-sensitive work goes forward on radar and other secret signal equipment---- Senator McCarthy began his search for spies and subversives...

On the twentieth of October, before the relationship between Secretary Stevens and Senator McCarthy started turning sour, the Secretary and the Senator visited the signal laboratories----

Very amicable that day and all smiles.... that mood prevailing apparently, right up until the moment of departure----McCarthy and Stevens leaving for the return trip to Washington on the same plane...

The investigations were at Monmouth---- the actual hearings on signal corps subversion were held at the Federal Court House in New York---- And there during those hearings, we glimpse (then still a civilian) G. David Schine (in the light suit standing behind the Senator)---investigative aide to the Senator without pay.

Schine walking: Our cameras caught Schine with Monmouth Commander General Lawton, Signal Corps Chief General Back and Senator McCarthy as they left for lunch.

Court house: While the Mohmouth investigations were still underway on October 23rd last, we asked how things were going---

Comm. session and this is what Senator McCarthy told us.

SOUND

Hitler: Mein Kamf: Reynal Hitchcock, 1941. Page 313.

"Therewith, one started out with the very correct assumption that in the size of the lie there is always contained a certain factor of credibility, since the great masses of a people may be more corrupt in the bottom of their hearts than they will be consciously and intentionally bad, therefore with the primitive simplicity of their minds they will more easily fall victims to a great lie than to a small one, since they themselves perhaps also lie sometimes in little things, but would certainly still be too much ashamed of too great lies." ~~Thus such~~ (Hitler here has preceded with an attack on the German ~~communistic~~ "Jewry and its Marxist fighting organization" (presumably German Social-Democratic party) for having blamed Ludendorff with the loss of the war. Hitler called this the great lie, but then went on —above—to explain sympathetically why the Great Lie is useful.) He followed directly, by saying:

"Thus such an untruth will not at all enter their heads, and therefore they will be unable to believe in the possibility of the enormous impudence of the most infamous distortion in others; indeed, they may doubt and hesitate even when being enlightened, and they accept any cause at least as nevertheless being true; therefore, just for this reason some part of the most imprudent lie will remain and stick; a fact which all great lying artists and societies of this world know only too well and therefore also villainously employed."

Russian interests at that conference. There is more to the book than that. I find ~~it~~ in it almost textually exact the blueprint for unlimited, indiscriminate benevolence abroad comprehended in the Marshall Plan. In fact, in 1945 Browder in his book gave almost a complete blueprint of the Marshall Plan and of the administration's point 4 program."

Perhaps neglectfully, McCarthy does not mention that Eisenhower was a firm supporter of the Marshall Plan. (Check Ike's Senate appearance pro Marshall Plan.) Amazingly, we find Senator McCarthy endorsing the widespread reading of a book by a man who was head of the Communist Party in the United States. Musingly, we recall that McCarthy testified as a defense witness for Earl Browder in 1951 (years after Browder deposed as head of communist party.) (check date.) McCarthy had every right to do so, and there is no accusation here of guilt by association—on neither side—although McCarthy's office was not averse to using a composite picture of Browder and Senator Tydings in the successful campaign to defeat Tydings in the Maryald elections of 1950.

******

As the junior senator from Wisconsin is fond of saying: here are the coldly documented facts. The fact is that on June 15, 1951 Joseph Reynolds McCarthy delivered a speech on the floor of the Senate charging a plot in America's Retreat from Victory, "a product of a great conspiracy, a conspiracy on a scale so immense as to dwarf any previous such ventures in the history of man." "How can we account for our present situation unless we believe that men high in this (Truman) government are concerting to deliver us to disaster." And: "It is when we return to an examination of General Marshall's record since the Spring of 1942 that we approach an explanation of the carefully planned retreat from victory." And, when McCarthy examines Marshall's record he finds that Marshall's planning section "was under the command of Colonel Dwight D. Eisenhower." And: "In all these attitudes (on Sicily versus Second Front) Eisenhower, who had become commander in chief in North Africa, was Marshall's firm supporter." And: "In Tunis, Churchill brought to bear upon Marshall and Eisenhower, who invariably sided with Marshall...."

edit. note

****

If we were Joseph Reynolds McCarthy, we would be tempted to draw a conclusion from this socalled immense conspiracy against America which McCarthy links to Marshall and then links to the man who is now the President of the United States. We are not Joseph Reynolds McCarthy—but McCarthy is—and his capabilities would appear to be endless. It is of course possible that the junior senator from Wisconsin will produce secret witnesses to testify that he never wrote this speech. And many might agree that while the language of June 14th, 1951 may have been the voice of Joseph Reynolds McCarthy, the words may have been put in his mouth by others. The Senator may produce secret witnesses to prove that a group of men around him have been urging him over the past few years to use the slogan of anti-communism to: Demoralize the state department; divide our allies; charge treason against a party of 27 million voters; demoralize our armed forces; imply that any one who ever had an idea, thought or association that was unpopular in the past, can be linked with treason through the alien processof guilt by association; instilled in our population the fear that fascism at home is becoming more dangerous than communist imperialism abroad; and charged that elements of treason can be linked directly to the present government. We submit that any one man who can so divide his country and weaken its position in face of the communist enemy abroad, is a man who would enjoy the fullest approval by that enemy—Soviet communist imperialism. As Republican Senator Flanders has said: Senator McCarthy no longer claims or wants any support from the communist fringe which may have been active in his primary victory in 1946. It appears that Joseph Reynolds McCarthy never actually joined the communist party, nor ever actually paid any dues. And we would be willing to stick our necks out and defend him against any such charges by any secret witnesses who might suddenly appear on the scene. Consciously or unconsciously, it would seem that someone has been following the communist line of dividing America at home, and dividing America from its allies abroad.

****

Adolf Hitler—Mein Kamf, quoted in St. Louis Post Dispatch, Feb 18, 1951 (checking book now

"The greatness of the lie is always a certain factor in being believed; at the bottom of their hearts, the great masses of a people are more likely to be misled than to be consciously and deliberately bad, and in the primitive simplicity of their minds, they are more easily victimized by a large than by a small lie...Some part of even the boldest lie is sure to stick."

Hitler—Mein Kamp—Reynal and Hitchcock edition, 1941, p. ~~235~~ 234

"The great masses' receptive ability is only very limited, their understanding is small, but their forgetfulness is great. As a consequence of these facts, all effective propaganda has to limit itself only to a very few points and to use them like ~~xxxxxxx~~ slogans until even the very last man is able to imagine what is intended by such a word. As soon as one sacrifices this basic principle and tries to become versatile, the ffect will fritter away, as the masses are neither able to digest the material offered nor to retain it. Thus the resultis weakened and finally eliminated."

Jefferson.

Mr. Hurlow

Jefferson to Thomas Jefferson Randolph, his oldest and favorite grandson, Nov 24, 1808.

"In stating prudential rules for our government in society, I must not omit the important one of never entering into dispute or argument with another. I never saw an instance of one oftwo disputants convincing the other by argument. I have seen many, on their getting warm, becoming rude and shooting one another. Conviction is the effect of our own dispassionate reasoning, either in solitude, or weighing with ourselves, dispassionately, what we hear from others, standing uncommitted in argument ourselves. It was one of the rules which, above all others, made Doctor Franklin the most amiable of men in society, "never to contradict anybody." If he wasurged to announce an opinion, he did it rather by asking questions, as if for information, or by suggesting doubts. When I hear another express an opinion which is not mine, I say to myself, he has a right to his opinion, as I to mine; why should I question it? His error does me no injury, and shall I become a Don Quixote, to bring all men by force of argument to one opinion? If a fact be misstated, it is probable he is gratified by a belief of it, and I have no right to deprive him of the gratification. If he wants information, he will ask ~~for~~ it, and then I will give it in measured terms; but if he still believes his own story, and shows a desire to dispute the fact with me, I hear him and say nothing. It is his affair, not mine, if he prefers error. There are two classes of disputants most frequently to be met with among us. The first is of young students, just entered the threshold of science, with a first view of its outlines, not yet filled up with the details and mondifications which a further progress would bring to their knowledge. The other consists of the ill-temepered and rude men in society, who have taken up a passion for politics. (Good humor and politeness never introduce into mixed society, a question on which they foresee there will be a difference of opinion.) From both of these classes of disputants, my dear Jefferson, keep aloof, as you would from the infected subjects of yellow fever or pestilence. Consider yourself, when with them, as among the patients of Bedlam, needing medical, more than moral counsel. (Our itals.) Be a listener only, keep within yourself, and endeavour to establish with yourself the habit of silence, especially on politics. In the fevered state of our country, no good can ever result from any attempt to set one of these fiery zealots to rights, either in fact or principle. They are determined as to the facts they will believe, and the opinions on which they will act. Get by them, therefore, as you would by an angry bull; it is not for a man of sense to dispute the road with such an animal...My character is not within their power. It is in the hands of my fellow citizens at large, and will be consigned to honor or infamy by the verdict of the republican mass of our country, according to what themselves have seen, not what their enemeies and mine shall have said. Never, therefor, consider these puppies in politics as requiring any notice from you, and always show that you are not afraid to leave my character to the umpirage of public opinion.

******

Jefferson to Dr. Benjamin Rush, Sept 23, 1800 (Jeff attacked clergy which had slandered him.)

"The returning good sense of our country threatens abortion to their hopes, and they believe that any portion of power confided to me, will be exerted in opposition to their schemes. And they believe rightly: for I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man. (itals ours.) But this is all they have to fear from me: and enough too in their opinion... (underlined words appear in Jefferson Memorial in Washington.)

******

Jefferson's first inaugural address, March 4,1801. (Background: Alien and Sedition Acts,1798, in moments of frenzied fear of French Jacobinism, led Federalists in power to pass acts making it crime for an citizen to criticize American govt, and stripping aliens of right to stay in America if they were found guilty of un-American Jacobinist ideas. Jefferson fought laws, country in 1800 election threw out Federalists and made Jefferson president.)

Jefferson spoke for: "...the diffusion of information and the arraignment of all abuses at the bar of public reason; freedom of religion; freedom of the press; freedom of person under the protection of the habeas corpus; and trials by juries impartially selected—these principles form the bright constellation which has gone before us, and guided our steps through an age of revolution and reformation. The wisdom of our sages and the blood of our heroes have been devoted to their attainment. They should be the creed of our political faith--the text of civil instruction--the touchstone by which to try the services of those we trust; and should we wander from them in moments of error or alarm, let us hasten to retrace our steps and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty, and safety."

***

Also from Hefferson's first inaugural address, March 4, 1801.

"All too, will bear in mind this sacred principle, that though the will of the majority is in all cases to prevail, that will, to be rightful, must be reasonable; that the minority possess their equal rights, which equal laws must protect, and to violate which, would be oppression. Let us then, fellow citizens, unite with one heart and one mind. Let us restore to social intercourse that harmony and affection without which liberty and even life itself are but dreary things. And let us reflect that having banished from our land that religious intolerance under which mankind so long bled and suffered, we have yet gained little if we countenance a political intolerance as despotic, as wicked, and capable of as bitter and bloody persecutions. During the throes and convulsions of the ancient world, during the agonizing spasms of infuriated man, seeking through blood and slaughter his long-lost liberty, it was not (surprising) wonderful that the agitations of the billows should reach even this distant and peaceful shore; that this should be more felt and feared by some and less by others; that this should divide opinions as to measures of safety. But every difference of opinion is not a difference of principle. We have called by different names brethren of the same principle. We are all republicans--we are federalists. If there be any among us who would wish to dissolve this Union or to change its republican form, let them stand undisturbed as monuments of the safety with which error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it. I know, indeed, that some honest men fear that a republican government cannot be strong; that this government is not strong enough. But would the honest patriot, in the full tide of successful experiment, abandon a government which has so far kept us free and firm, on the theoretic and visionary fear that this government, the world's best hope, may by possibility want energy to preserve itself? I trust not. I believe this, on the contrary, the strongest government on earth. I believe it is the only one where every man, at the call of the laws, would fly to the standard of the law, and would meet invasions of the public order as his own personal concern. Sometimes it is said that man cannot be trusted with the government of himself. Can he, then, be trusted with the government of others? Or have we found angels in the forms of kings to govern him? Let history answer this question.

*****

Jefferson to Dr. William Backe, Feb 2 1800.

"Our citizens...should...rally firmly and in close bands round their Constitution. Never to suffer an iota of it to be infringed. To inculcate on minorities the duty of acquiesence in the will of the majority; and on majorities a respect for the right of the minority. (Itals Jefferson's.)

******

Jefferson to John Dickinson, March 6, 1801.

"The storm through which we have passed, has been tremendous indeed. The tough sides of our Argosy have been thoroughly tried. Her strength has stood the waves into which she was steered, with a view to sink her. We shall put her on her republican tack, and she will now show by the beauty of her motion the skill of her builders. Figure apart, our fellow-citizens have been led hoodwinked from their principles, by a most extraordinary combination of circumstances. But the band is removed and they now see for themselves. I hope to see shortly a perfect consolidation to effect which, nothing shall be spared on my part, short of the abandonment of the principles of our revolution. A just and solid republican government maintained here, will be a standing monmument and example for the aim and imitation of the people of other countries; and I join with you in the hope and belief that they will see, from our example, that a free government is of all others the most energetic; that the inquiry which has been excited among the masses of mankind by our revolution and its consequences, will ameliorate the condition of man over a great portion of the globe."

*****

Jefferson to Samuel Adams, March 29, 1801.

"I hope we shall once more see harmony restored among our citizens, and an entire oblivion of past feuds. Some of the leaders who have most committed themselves cannot come into this. But I hope the great body of our fellow citizens will do it. I will sacrifice everything but principle to procure it. A few examples of justice on officers who have perverted their functions to the oppression of their fellow citizens, must, in justice to those citizens, be made. But opinion, and the just maintenance of it, shall never be a crime in my view: nor bring injury on the individual. Those whose misconduct in office ought to have produced their removal even by my predecessor, must not be protected by the delicacy due only to honest men."

******

Jefferson to Dr. Benjamin Rush, Aprl 21, 1803 (on religious freedom.)

"It behooves every man who values liberty of conscience for himself, to resist invasions of it in the case of others; or their case may, by change of circumstances, become his own. It behooves him, too, in his own case, to give no example of concession, betraying the common right of independent opinion, by answering questions of faith, which the laws have left between God and himself."

*****

Jefferson to Judge John Tyler, June 28, 1904.

"...No experiment can be more interesting than that we are nowtrying, and which we trust will end in establishing the fact, that man may be governmed by reason and truth. Our first object should therefore be, to leave open to him all the avenues to truth. The most effectual hitherto found, is the freedom of the press. [It is, therefore, the first shut up by those who fear the investigation of their actions. The firmness with which the people have withstood the late abuses of the press, the discernment they have manifested bewtween truth and falsehood, show that they may safely be trusted to hear everything true and false, and to form a correct judgment between them.]. I hold it therefore, certain, that to open the doors of truth, and to fortify the habit of testinf everything by reason, are the most effectual manacles we can rivet on the hands of our successors to prevent their manacling the people with their own consent. The panic into which we were artfully thrown in 1798, the frenzy which was excited in them by their enemies against their apparent readiness to abandon all the principles established for their own protection, seemed for awhile to countenance the opinions of those who say they cannot be trusted with their own government. But I never doubted their rallying; and they did rally much sooner than I expected. On the whole, that experiment on their credulity has confirmed my confidence in their ultimate good sense and virtue...."

****

Jefferson to John Wyche, May 19, 1908. (on need for general education.)

"The people of every country are the only safe guardians of their own rights, and are the only instruments which can be used for their destruction. And certainly they would never consent to be so used were they not deceived. To avoid this, they should be instructed to a safe degree."

****

Jefferson to Rev. Samuel Knox, Feb. 12, 1810.

" ...The boys of the rising generation are to be the men of the next, and the sole guardians of the principles we deliver over to them. That I have acted through life of those on sincere republicanism I feel in every fibre of my constitution. And when men who feel like myself, bear witness in my favour, my satisfaction is complete....The times which brought us within mutual observation were awfully trying. But truth and reason are eternal. They have prevailed. And they will eternally prevail, however in times and places they may be overborne for a while by violence, military, civil, or ecclesiastical. The preservation of the holy fire is confided to us by the world, and the sparks which will emanate from it will ever serve to rekindle it in other quarters of the globe, numinibus secundis...(with the help of the gods--ed. note.)

****

Jefferson to Col. William Duane, Mar 28, 1811.

"The last hope of human liberty in this world rests on us....Our dearest rights (are) the trial by jury, the freedom of the press, the freedom of opinion, civil or religious, (we should oppose) the opening on our ~~mix~~ peace of mind or personal safety the sluices of terrorism..."

****

Jefferson to Marquis de Lafayette, Feb 14, 1815.

"I urged...securing freedom of religion, freedom of the press, trial by jury, habeas corpus, and a national legislature...."

****

Jefferson to Sameul Kerchival, July 12, 1816.

"...I am not among those who fear the people. They, and not the rich, are our dependence for continued freedom."

****

Jefferson to Charles Thomson, Jan 29, 1817.

